THE HYGIENIC VALUE OF MAGNETISM AS A MEANS OF INVIGORATION.

It is apparent that the habits of the present century, whether among toilers at business or votaries of pleasure, tend to produce the nervous derangements already spoken of, and we see that although hygiene and attention to sanitary precautions will do much to remove the tendency, there is a necessity for the employment of other means, not only for protection, but for the purposes of recuperation. Drug medication, in various forms, was, until recently, the most popular, if not the only recognised remedy: but, as the medical profession became better acquainted with the delicate machinery of the human organism and the therapeutic effects of the agents employed, the conviction gained ground that in cases of nervous debility medicine was uncalled for, and produced neither good nor permanent results. Natural influences alone can accomplish this restoration, for they radically affect the entire system. The ozone of the sea, the free Electricity of mountain air, are well-known healthful influences, but, unfortunately, not within the reach of all classes. These very elements, in their most penetrating and permeating character, are supplied by Odo-Magnetic influence. It penetrates and permeates every atom and tissue of the living organism, every deep-seated gland; but it cannot injure the finest capillaries in the most delicate membrane. Every corpuscle of the blood is impregnated with its vitalising influence, consequently every organ of the body is simultaneously energised.

Some months since we received from a Wesleyan Minister particulars of a severe case of sciatica, the sufferer being a member of Society.

The ailment was caused in the first instance by a damp house, and constant exposure in attending upon a sick parent, and it set at defiance all efforts to alleviate it, the pain being so excruciating that she endured, to use the minister's own words, "a living martyrdom;" her screams frequently attracting the attention of passers-by. The case was considered quite hopeless, and the patient was altogether unable to walk, one leg having so contracted that the foot was two inches from the ground. Magnetic help was sought as a last resource, and after the lapse of a few months, the following report has reached us:—

REV. W. WATSON, Higham Ferrers, Oct. 12, 1883, writes:—

"This was a peculiarly difficult case, and from its complicated and chronic character, well calculated to test the efficiency of any remedy to the uttermost, but, by the blessing of God, I am thankful to say your treatment has been of wonderful service to the patient. Her distressing and incessant symptoms from which she suffered, when about nine months ago I applied to you on her behalf, are all well known to you, as I minutely described the case to you at the time. She tells me she has written to you stating the benefit she has received, and that her 'health is quite restored,' and it is very evident that her pain is all gone; but to my own mind the most remarkable and unexpected benefit of all is that the leg, which had gradually contracted until the foot was two inches from the ground, has been already so far benefited that the patient can now touch the ground with her toes, and is, not without reason, expecting this last and most stubborn feature of her diseased condition to be, at no distant period, a thing of the past. A few Sundays ago, to my surprise, I overtook her aided by a friend on her way to chapel, where she had not been for two years previously.

"You are at liberty to refer any one to me who, in this age of imposture, is naturally cautious, and may wish to inquire as to the bona-fide character of the benefits to be derived from the use of your remedy before trying it for themselves or applying on behalf of suffering friends."

On receipt of particulars of any case in which advice is sought, the fullest information will be given, and the required treatment suggested by Mr. B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

DEALING WITH ANXIOUS SOULS.

I NOTE that Mr. Moody and his fellow-labourer have again reached our shores, shortly to enter upon their work of evangelisation in London. As we have "One Lord" and the Kingdom is one, we in the provinces are prayerfully anxious that a mighty outpouring of the Spirit may accompany this effort, and that a great harvest of souls may be gathered in your great and wicked city.

Might I venture to direct the attention of friends in London to one of the greatest difficulties, in my judgment, in connection with all such meetings, namely, to secure spiritual and experienced workers in the after-meetings. Pretty intimately acquainted with such work for many years, I hesitate not to say, viewing the matter manward, that countless thousands of awakened sinners have failed to enter the Kingdom, from the ignorance and coldness of multitudes of so-called "workers." It is difficult to preach the Gospel, as one has said so to lay down the Gospel offer, that a sinner may pick it up; more difficult to deliver an evangelistic address fitted to awaken the careless; most difficult of all, wisely to lead an anxious sinner really to Christ.

Many years ago, when God was greatly owning the labours of his servant Reginald Radcliffe in the North of Scotland, while, no doubt, the Gospel was preached faithfully from many pulpits, it was a rare thing to find a man, lay or clerical, skilled in this work of personal dealing; and, therefore, though much fruit was gathered, and abides till this day, to the glory of God, it is equally true, to my knowledge, that untold multitudes, from lack of persons able to guide them, lost their convictions, and were not led to Christ.

Not long after this period God raised up another lay servant whom he greatly honoured in awakening sinners and leading many of them to Christ; yet, powerful as he was in this work of awakening, he learned but slowly and after sore discipline the divine art of speaking savingly to the anxious. His manner at first (for I often heard him) was somewhat thus: "Do you believe you are a sinner?" "Yes." "Do you believe Christ died for sinners?" "Yes." "Do you believe Christ died for you?" "Yes." "Then if you do, don't you see you are saved?" Many receive the word with gladness and have no root in themselves and so endure but for a time. Ah, not thus! not by logical propositions merely, are sinners led personally to embrace a personal Saviour.

In 1859 God mightily poured out his Spirit on the people in the North of Ireland. Having visited the scene, I left with mingled feelings of gratitude to God for the amazing riches of his grace, and of profound sorrow that much of it (to speak after the manner of men) was in vain, because that so few had skill to gather the sheaves into the Lord's garner. On the one side might be heard men crying "Fire! fire!" in the ears of awakened sinners, already terrified almost to unconsciousness through a sense of "the wrath to come," while on the other, equal numbers were crying "Peace, peace!" to those who had never been brought face to face with God and his broken law.

During Mr. Moody's first visit to Belfast an earnest effort was made to procure "workers" of the right kind. Workers' cards were distributed to the different pastors, to be given to such in their congregations as asked for them. It were vain to say from what a variety of motives many of these cards were asked and obtained. It is no sufficient qualification for such work to be of an unspotted life, a church member, a Sabbath-school teacher, or even to be a Christian! As the result of all, while many souls were gathered in and remain witnesses to this day, many more died in the wilderness of their awakenings, having found no one able to guide them into rest. The same might have been observed in the meetings in Dublin. While there were many workers taught of God "to speak a word in season to him that is weary," I observed multitudes for whom there was no guide, or else, such as led them back into the wilderness. It seemed with many of the workers rather to be their great aim to increase the number of the names on their list of inquirers, than to have another name added to "the Lamb's book of life."

You may, and I trust will, have in London great gatherings and deep impressions made by the Spirit of God through the truth; but if a rich harvest is to be gathered the work of selecting those who shall guide anxious souls to the Saviour will require care and attention, abundantly beyond what has hitherto been bestowed upon it.

To bring God and his broken law clearly before the awakened sinner, to show him his helplessness as well as his guilt, to find out the line on which the Spirit of God is moving in his heart, to follow on in the same line, thus co-operating with the Spirit, to bring clearly before him a crucified, risen, present, personal, and free Christ, and to urge him without compromise to accept this Christ fully, and to accept Him now, is an art learned only by continued fellowship with Him who said "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men."

It may be asked, in cases where suitable workers cannot be obtained, what should be done? Let me reply, some of the most fruitful after-meetings I have ever witnessed were conducted, some years ago, in Aberdeen, in this manner: The address being ended, and earnest prayer offered, the anxious were separated from all others; the women were removed to one apartment, the men to another. No one was allowed to remain in either place save the anxious and a few picked workers.

Let me here remark that an onlooker, in an anxious meeting, is as great an anomaly, and as hurtful, as a stranger in your closet when you would commune alone with God.

In these meetings to which I have alluded, the doors being locked, all went upon their knees and a few short earnest prayers were uttered for the Spirit's presence and power in leading the anxious to Christ; then a few words were spoken as to the way of salvation, and where difficulties still remained the anxious were spoken to, while the rest continued in prayer; the issue being, that the fruit was gathered by handfuls.

I could give many and deplorable instances of the effects of ignorant, unspiritual, or inexperienced workers, but your space is more than exhausted. Nowhere is the Spirit of God more easily grieved than in an anxious meeting. Nowhere is holy reverence more becoming. Light and darkness, heaven and hell, Christ and Satan, are there in conflict; eternal life and everlasting punishment, in relation to many who may be present, are in the balance. There is no place in such a meeting for any one who is not in personal and near and fresh fellowship with Christ. Before engaging in such a meeting the worker should by faith enter the eternal world, and stand before the Great White Throne. He should visit Gethsemane and Calvary, and, receiving a fresh unction from the Holy One, the Risen Lord, be filled with tender compassion for lost sinners, and with holy zeal for the glory of his adorable King. Then may he hope to be used by the Spirit in bringing sinners to Christ. W.

REVIVAL IN TOKIO.

A LADY resident in the capital of Japan thus describes in a letter to her relatives some of the indications she has recently witnessed of the present religious awakening in that country. Her testimony may be all the more interesting as coming from one who is not connected with Christian Missions. It is dated Tôkiô, May, 1883:—

"All this last week there has been a conference of Japanese Christians, and wonderful earnestness has prevailed throughout. They numbered six hundred, I am told. There were delegates from all parts of the country. One missionary said that he had never at any conference seen greater earnestness, or the manifestation of a more living Christianity.

"Sunday was Pentecost, and it was proposed that they should spend the day in prayer, for a special outpouring of the Spirit in Japan. This was at once agreed to, so they went to a lovely spot a little past Uyeno, and turned their proposed pic-nic into a long prayer-meeting—a sort of camp meeting. It was a beautiful sight to see the hundreds of people in the lovely garden, praising and praying to God.

"The sight was so touching that it made the tears spring to one's eyes. It must have cheered the missionaries' hearts, especially as it was all the doing of the Japanese that they had met thus. At one tea-house would be a prayer-meeting for the women, conducted by some lady missionaries, many of the Japanese leading in prayer; at another, a meeting conducted in English, composed of those who understood that language; at a third, the jinrikisha men would have a meeting, after having deposited the people; then there was the general meeting in the largest tea-house.

"One present remembered seeing, eleven years or so ago, the proclamation against Christianity at Nihon Bashi, and the baptism of the first Christian Japanese. You may understand her feelings to-day, when she saw this large, earnest assembly, many of those present being representatives merely of large congregations in other parts of the country. It was a lovely spot in which to worship God. Let us pray that the prayers of these people for their fellow-countrymen may be answered, and a great outpouring of the Spirit be experienced.

"Last Sunday afternoon we went to a great religious meeting in one of the theatres. It was a grand sight to see that great place crowded with eager men and women, all come to hear of Christ; there were over 3000 present. The people sat on the floor in little boxes and in small galleries, with faces turned up to the speakers, eager and intent, varied with the expressions of approval or the opposite. A Japanese presided over the meeting and a native played the organ and led the singing. The missionaries were only visitors, as Japanese would be in a meeting at home. Many priests were present and listened eagerly to the new doctrine they would have to contend with, if their livelihood was to remain with them. I shall never forget that great sea of faces, all so much alike and all so earnest. The result of all this meeting was that the churches were crowded the next Lord's Day. There is certainly a great outpouring of the Spirit in Tôkiô at present; many are coming to the truth. The Korean, of whom we wrote a long time ago, has confessed Christ and been baptized. His father was crucified in Korea for his adhesion to the Roman Catholic faith."

OUTCAST LONDON.

THE Committee of the London Congregational Union have assuredly entered upon a work in accordance with the mind and will of God, in taking up the cause of Missions to the thousands of miserable outcasts to be found in our great Metropolis. The facts revealed by their recent inquiries into the real condition of things in many parts of the City are set forth in a pamphlet just issued by them, entitled, "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London," and they bring to light such a mass of moral corruption, social misery, and utter godlessness, as to fill the heart with sadness, and the whole soul with a sense of shame and deep concern that such things can be possible in a land where wealth abounds, and the religion of Christ is supposed as nowhere else to have made its home. Dwellings unfit for mere animals to occupy are inhabited by crowds of squalid occupants, who have no possible escape from the vermin, stench, and filth by which they are surrounded. Whole families are found dwelling in one room, often a cellar or underground kitchen; father, mother, grown-up sons and daughters, and little children, all herding together, and learning to regard immorality and grossest vice as among the necessities of life.

What wonder that gin-palaces in these districts thrive, and sins we blush to name are committed with impunity. Let the report just published speak for itself on this head. Take two extracts:—

"'Collier's-rents' is the name of one of the districts selected, and is thus described: 'Collier's-rents' stands in a short street leading out of Long-lane, in the Borough. There are around it some 650 families, or 3,250 people, living in 123 houses. The houses are occupied by bird-catchers, street singers, liberated convicts, thieves, and prostitutes. There are many low lodging-houses in the neighbourhood, where men and women are allowed to herd together without any attempt to preserve the commonest decency. Turning out of one of these streets you enter a court nine yards square. Here are twelve houses of three rooms each, and containing altogether thirty-six families. The sanitary condition of the place is indescribable. A large dustbin, charged with all manner of filth and putrid matter, is on one side of the court, and four water-closets on the other."

"Incest is common; and no form of vice and sensuality causes surprise or attracts attention. The only check upon communism in this regard is jealousy and not virtue. The vilest practices are looked upon with the most matter-of-fact indifference. Entire courts are filled with thieves, prostitutes, and liberated convicts. In one street are 35 houses, 32 of which are known to be brothels. In another district are 43 of these houses, and 428 fallen women and girls, many of them not more than 12 years of age. A neighbourhood whose population is returned at 10,100 contains 400 who follow this immoral traffic, their ages varying from 13 to 50; while the moral degradation of the people is deplorable."

All this to many of us, alas! though true, is not new, and the sad fact is, society has come to look on it all with indifference and cold unconcern. The Editor of the Pall Mall Gazette, last week, thus commented on the case as represented by the pamphlet before us:—

"What a satire it is upon our Christianity and our civilisation, that the existence of these colonies of heathens and of savages in the heart of our capital should attract so little attention. It is no better than a ghastly mockery—theologians might use a stronger word—to call by the name of One who came to seek and to save that which was lost those churches which in the midst of lost multitudes either slumber in apathy or display a fitful interest in a chasuble. Why all this apparatus of temples and meeting-houses to save men from perdition in the world which is to come, while never a helping hand is stretched out to save them from the Inferno of their present life. Is it not time that the churches, forgetting for a moment their wranglings about the infinitely little or the infinitely obscure, should concentrate all their energies on a united effort to break this terrible perpetuity of perdition, and to rescue some at least of those for whom they profess to believe their Founder came to die?"

The writer of these scathing words is just enough to add, "It is unfair to lay all the blame on the churches," and admits the fact that efforts, inspired by the compassion born of faith in Christ are being made. But after allowing for all that is done, the truth remains, the Christian Church is not half awake to the responsibility which rests upon it in relation to the social wrongs and miseries that prevail so extensively around us. Every follower of Christ, before whose notice the facts are brought, has some measure of accountability for it all, and when every one professing to look with Christian pity and concern upon the world for which the Saviour died, shall lay these things to heart, praying, giving, working, and pleading for the relief of the suffering millions who are existing under these frightful moral and social conditions, we shall soon see possibilities of remedy springing up beyond what at present we dare hope for or expect.

We have a right to look to the State for prompt and energetic action in preventing by compulsory legislation the continued existence of slums such as those which abound in the centre of our cities and large towns. The Artisans' Dwellings Acts has, it is said, made matters worse in some respects by driving numbers of the abject poor to take refuge in the courts and alleys, the tenements in which were already crowded to suffocation. The heart sickens at the thought that there should be amongst us numbers of men who, as landlords of such dens, by grinding rents and penurious indifference to every consideration of health, and even decency, are content to enrich themselves at the expense of virtue and humanity. Let us hope that this fresh voice uplifted on the matter may serve to awaken many hitherto slumbering consciences, and meanwhile we cordially bid God-speed to the efforts of the Union thus energetically addressing itself to a task so sure to be blessed of God, because so accordant with the spirit and work of Him "who came to seek and to save that which was lost."

CHINA.

FROM a recent letter from Mr. Parker to Mr. Broomhall, of the China Inland Mission, we extract the following:—"There is a very inviting field presented before one with Tsinchau as a centre, and embracing ten counties, the capital of the nearest being two days' journey and the furthest only three. I long to take a few of those whom God has given me into the villages and towns around, and establish churches on every hand. Had I been able to confine my labours to a small area about as large as a quarter of England, there might have been little flocks now where one or two individuals at present are groping in the dark.

"I don't think God will require these souls at my hands, but at those who only sent one where they could have easily sent four. If the province were divided into three mission districts, an inquirer living a hundred miles away could be visited once a year, and every market town in the province once in five years."

At the Tuesday and Thursday noon prayer-meetings at Aldersgate-street last week, Miss Malpas and Miss Seed, now on their way to China, briefly stated how they were led to decide for Mission work among the women of that country, and were commended to God by those present.

THE PUBLIC MINISTRY.

THE Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, of Oxford, spoke at the meeting of the Evangelical Alliance at Norwich last week, on "The Public Ministry of the Word of God—How can it be made most effectual, in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance"?

I would answer the first question by saying that we must make our ministry effectual by preaching, not the Gospel of the nineteenth century or the fourth century, but the original Gospel as delivered by the Apostles of old, that Gospel of which it was said, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel, for it is the power of God unto salvation." Mr. Frederick Harrison has recently said that the great want of the time is a lifting power; and surely the want is supplied by the primitive Gospel and not by Agnosticisms and "isms" of that kind. Now-a-days, it needs a good deal of humility on the part of clever men—who may be favoured with the approval of the Press as representatives of modern thought—to simply lift up Jesus Christ, and leave self and modern thought out of the question. The Gospel is the power which will lift men out of sin; and if the light of the Sun of Righteousness were allowed to shine forth, it would swallow up all noxious flames. Let the minister bring the sinner to his God, and then disappear as soon as possible; let self utterly disappear.

Furthermore, we must preach the entire Gospel, not the Gospel decorated, not the Gospel "improved." We must assert Christ as our Example and our Redeemer; we must preach the whole Gospel, and nothing but the Gospel. Let us reserve for another place all doubtful controversies and speculations, and the power of our ministry will be in proportion to the extent of the concentration of our preaching on Christ Jesus. Without the unction of the Holy Ghost we can do nothing; we must seek a disinterested catholicity of spirit; we must not put our own church in the place of that which is higher, for the greatest success in saving souls has never been given to sectarian bigots. Such bigots may have secured human fame, large sums of money, and crowded audiences, but the Holy Ghost has never given the highest blessings in the salvation of souls. There is no more fatal way of limiting God than by restricting his beneficent dealings to our own ecclesiastical operations.

Many a minister has sacrificed a sublime and immortal future at the shrine of ecclesiastical intolerance and bigotry. God meant such a one to be a benefactor of mankind; but he degenerated into the apologist of a sect. Then the Christian minister must derive his power from personal experience of religious truth, and from realising what he preaches. There are many unconverted men in the pulpits of Christendom; when men began to enter the pulpit for worldly reasons, a poison was introduced into the Christian churches. Until a man has a plain message from God to utter to his fellows, he has no right to stand up and insult a Christian congregation with his speculations and fancies upon matters religious. Some may say they are trying to feel their way to a creed; but to any one who may be doing this, I would say, "Get out of the pulpit at once; and in your own closet, by fasting, prayer, and meditation, try to find your creed there." Such men have no right in a pulpit, and it is an iniquity to ventilate their doubts and fears and speculations in public to the injury of their congregations. Christianity is not a speculation—it is a realised fact.

Until a man enjoys a living fellowship with Christ he has no right to enter any pulpit; such a man has quite mistaken his vocation. In the writings of Christ there is no "if," and every public teacher must first firmly grasp the Divine certainties ere he goes forth to publish God's message to the world. Dr. Parker once said, "Talk about preparing your sermons, prepare your selves." There should also be a healthy dogmatism in our preaching; we should not stand up and blush, stammer, and "hum and hhw," and say there is some lack of harmony between the antiquated Gospel and what is called "modern thought." We must never in this way deny our Lord. The old Gospel is at the present time the power of God unto salvation; there is nothing better for weak aad sinful man. The end of the public ministry is the result produced; and every preacher should deem his sermons a failure except as they accomplish in saint and sinner the practical object for which he preaches. As the great John Wesley once said, "Our business is to save souls, not to preach so many sermons."

It has been said by a returned missionary that in English services there is a conventionalism and want of elasticity; for here the congregation are expected to remain till the sermon is ended, whilst in China the audience get up and go out if the sermon does not satisfy them. An introduction of that custom into England might not do much harm; at any rate it would do much to promote the efficiency of preaching. I would urge that English preachers introduce the good old principle of open-air preaching, and then everything conventional would fall away. When the Methodists give up open-air preaching Methodism will cease. They did give it up to a great extent, and they began to lose ground. Now they are reviving the practice, and it is being followed by blessed results. In spite of the vagaries and eccentricities of the Salvation Army, that organisation had taught the Christian churches that they could get the ear of the masses if they had enough pluck and Christianity to go amongst them. As to the Luther Commemoration now coming on, I would suggest that on a certain day the evangelical ministers should preach in the open air, for they have allowed the devil to shut them up in their churches and pulpits too long. Christ and St. Paul, and the great leaders of the Reformation, preached in the open air. The evangelical preacher only requires his sling and a few stones from the Gospel brook, and he is equipped; and he can go on his way of usefulness without the accessories and ceremonies which in some quarters are deemed necessary. This is our great opportunity; and it is a masterstroke of the powers of evil that this field has been so long left to the ignorant and eccentric. Those who stay at home cannot fairly condemn those who do go forth into the world; and if our Christian churches awake to this fact we shall take the working classes by storm, and no Skeleton Army will be big enough to keep us back. Our sermons will be more real and practical, and if we cannot read our discourses, so much the better. The pulpit is not growing weaker, nor is it less efficient. There is a great future before the Christian ministry of England, if the right methods are adopted and the men are imbued with deep and earnest principles.

In conclusion, I will quote the words of Wesley, "Give me a hundred teachers who fear nothing but sin, and desire nothing but God, and I care not a straw whether they be laymen or clergymen, such alone will shake the gates of hell, and set up the kingdom of heaven upon earth."

THE LAD AND THE HUNGRY MULTITUDE.

"There is a lad here which hath five barley loaves and two fishes, but what are they among so many?"—John vi. 9

AS we read over the story of the way Jesus fed the five thousand, we cannot help wondering how this little boy came to be in the great company. Here was a crowd of people who had left their homes and sought out the Saviour that they might hear more of his gracious words. And yet, without much forethought, they had, it seems, brought no lunch or food with them; so that the question arose, How shall they be fed? Two hundred pennyworth of bread (about six pounds five shillings' worth), says Philip, one of Christ's disciples, would not be sufficient. Another disciple, Andrew by name, ventured the rather strange suggestion that there was a lad present who had five loaves of coarse barley bread, such as the poor people in that country used to eat, and two small fishes, probably caught in the lake near by.

(1) The interest a boy can have in Jesus.—This lad was undoubtedly desirous of hearing and seeing Christ. He may have heard his parents or acquaintances tell about the wonderful things the Saviour did, and, boy-like, he probably made up his mind that, when an opportunity came he would go where He was, and look and listen. There was evidently something about Jesus that interested little people. We know that He loved them, and if He loved them He would be apt to talk to them in a way to please and do them good.

(2) Another lesson taught us is the use Jesus can make of even a boy.—No one in this multitude, it seems, except this lad, brought anything to eat. Whether this was a lunch his parents put up for him, or that he brought along with him to sell, we do not know; but we are greatly interested in seeing how useful he became. The fact that he had the loaves and fishes is mentioned to Christ by one who seemed almost ashamed afterwards that he said anything about it. Jesus, however, did not consider it of no importance. For He called the boy to Him, and then took what he had, and made his few loaves and fishes answer for the wants of all.

(3) And then we also learn that it is always best to keep in good company.—This boy would have missed a great deal if he had not gone out that day to see Jesus. If he had given himself up to having some fun with his comrades, he would not have been honoured as he was by Christ. There is a time appropriate for everything. And one secret of a happy, useful life is, be careful as to what you get interested in.*

CHATHAM.—Meetings of the fallen of this town were held on the night of Wednesday, the 17th inst., and the following morning. Ninety women were entertained at night, and at breakfast the next day. There were a number of penitents, and some were removed to the Chatham Temporary Home to await removal to metropolitan or other institutions. Canon Jelf, Vicar of Chatham, Rev. W. Duke, Prison Chaplain, Col. and Mrs. Cooper, Mr. Edwards, J.P., Mrs. Payne and Mrs. Wilby, of London, took part in the proceedings. The meetings were arranged and conducted by Mr. John H. L. Christien, of the Midnight Meeting Movement Society, Red Lion-square, London.

* From an interesting volume of "Sermons to Children," price 6s., just published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, 27, Paternoster-row, E.C. We heartily commend this book to our readers. There are ninety-seven sermons, by nearly thirty writers.

CONFIDENCE.

"Be ye sure that the Lord He is God."

On being told that the above expression was out of place, except in the region of the exact sciences.

I AM SURE! O gracious Father:
I can lift my head to-day;
And the words, where once I faltered,
With full confidence can say.
Though I know my guilt was boundless,
I am sure that Jesus died;
And I plunge my sin-stained garments
In that cleansing crimson tide.

I am sure that strife and striving,
Helped me not in days gone by:
Fainting, failing, struggling, crying,
Nought I knew of victory.
Foes unnumbered pressed around me,
Struck me dying to the sod;
But the sword that I relinquished,
Conquered, in the hand of God!

I am sure He will not fail me,
All the way I have to tread;
Dwellers in his land of promise,
None shall lack their daily bread.
What tho' long the way and lonely,
Counsel, comfort, help, denied;
Jesus' voice is heard the clearer,
When no other speaks beside.

I am sure that He has saved me;
I am sure He leads me still!
I am sure that if I hearken,
He will teach me all his will.
I am sure that pain and sorrow,
Anger, scoffing, words of scorn,
In the strength of Christ my Saviour,
May most peacefully be borne.

I am sure! No less believing
Would my soul from sin assoil;
I am sure! No less receiving
Would repay for search and toil.
Mists and shadows fall around me,
Wandering voices call and lure,
But I know the Guide who leads me,
And of his great love am sure!

I am sure! my life is passing,
Death's dark day comes on apace!
Yet in this Divine "assurance,"
Its dread terrors I can face.
Clamly, gladly, through the mazes
Of life's journey I will press:
Jesus, I am sure, is waiting,
At its close, my faith to bless.

MR. QUARRIER'S WORK.

THE work carried on by Mr. Quarrier at Glasgow is known to our readers. From a letter he has recently written to the Daily Mail, on the subject of the removal of the Govan-road Houses to Bridge-of-Weir, we extract the following:—

"To take the place of these Homes on the Govan-road we will need four new houses at Bridge-of-Weir to accommodate 140 children, and also extra school and other appliances. The cost of each house is £1500. Towards the £12,000 needed we have received money to pay for two of the houses, and these are now building. The £9000 required is to complete the design of housing 650 children, and to enable us, with the outlet here and in Canada, to deal with 365 new ones annually—in all over 1000 children every year.

"For the keep of our large family of nearly 500 children we need £25 every day, but as we are desirous of rescuing one or two hundred more during the coming winter, increased means will be necessary.

"The work is undenominational in its character, and the Homes are open to receive destitute children from any part of the country, from one year old upwards, without subscriber's line or voting-paper. While we have a vacant bed we never refuse cases that come under the conditions on which we receive them—namely, that they must be destitute."

Glasgow Addresses.

By Pastor THEODORE MONOD, of Paris.

IV.—What is Consecration?

I HAVE had a request for prayer put into my hands, which runs as follows: "A sister asks prayer for her brother, that he may be led to consecrate himself fully to the Lord." Now, what does this mean? Very likely a few years ago such a request would have been worded somewhat differently. Perhaps it would have been: "A sister prays that her brother may be truly converted." Or, perhaps, if the sister looked upon her brother as converted, she would have asked prayer that he might "advance in the knowledge and service of the Lord." But, for the last ten years or so, a word—not exactly a new word, but a word that was seldom employed—has got into general use. That is the word "Consecration." Such meetings as these, for instance, have often been called "Consecration meetings."

I inquire again, What does it mean? I dare-say many are asking the same question. "What," they ask us, "is this new thing, 'consecration'? We do not know that we have ever made any special act of consecration, yet we consider ourselves as believers, as Christians. We know many who never talk about consecration at all, but whom we know to be consecrated to the Lord, if that means set apart for Him, and devoted to his service." What, then, is this new thing? What does it signify, to begin with? What is the use of it? What are the fruits of it?

We read in the book of Acts, that as Saul of Tarsus was on his way to Damascus, suddenly there shone round about him a light from heaven. He fell to the ground, and in reply to the voice that spake to him, saying: "I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest," he replied: "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" We call this the conversion of Paul, and rightly so; but in what chapter of the book of Acts, or of any other book, do we find anything about the consecration of Paul? We answer that the Apostle's conversion was so genuine and so thorough that it carried with it at once an entire consecration. He understood at the outset that if this was his Lord, if he had been persecuting the Son of God who died for him, there was only one thing to do: that was, to spend the whole of his remaining life—all he was and all he had—in the service of that Master. There was only one question to be asked: "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

Of course he went on and took further steps; he received the Holy Spirit a little while after that. He went on from strength to strength, from knowledge to knowledge, from love to love, there is no doubt; but anything that looks like a renewed act of what we are accustomed to call consecration, we do not find. He was so converted that he never had to retrace his steps. He does not appear ever to have been in the slightest degree a backslider.

If we had all been converted out and out, as Paul was, I think it would have been the same with us as it was with him. There would be no occasion for insisting upon consecration as an act subsequent to conversion. But what are the facts of the case? Very generally we do go back more or less. Yet we are trying to live what we call a Christian life, without truly and practically admitting that we belong altogether to the Lord. If so, what is the first thing to be done in order to enter into a life that deserves the name of "spiritual," a life that can be "deepened," that can be strengthened, that can go on from faith to faith, taking hold of one promise after another, and being led forward to more efficient service? We have to return to the fundamental fact that we do belong to God. We acknowledge it, but we want to realise it practically. Therefore we have to come to Him and beg forgiveness, and place ourselves again in his hands. It is a very simple thing.

If anybody should say, "That's nothing new; we all know that we belong to God, and that we should live for Him;" I answer, "Very well, are you doing it? If you are, I have no controversy with you. If you consider yourselves really, practically, on Mondays as well as Sundays, at other times as well as at the time of prayer, as belonging to Christ alone, that is all right. Call it what you please, we are perfectly agreed. But if you have not done it, why should you have any controversy with me because I am urging you to do it?" That is the whole question.

Suppose that after this meeting a man should come to me and say, "I would like to have a little talk with you." "Willingly, what is the matter?" "Come here into this corner." "Here I am, what is the point?" "I want to ask your advice about a difficult question." "Well, I will do my best; what is it?" "As I was coming into the meeting a gentleman before me took his note-book out of his pocket and happened to drop a five-pound note; but he never saw that he had lost it." "Well, you saw it, and picked up the note for him, I dare say." "Yes—that is to say, I picked it up, but I put it into my own pocket." "You did, indeed! And now you require a little conversation about the matter?" "Yes." "Do you consider the money yours?" "No, it is hardly mine; but do you not think it might be enough to return one-half of the sum to the owner? Suppose I give him back £4, or say £4 10s. Would not that be enough?" "Not enough to save you from being a thief, surely." If the man should, after further talking and listening, come to this conclusion, "Well, let me see, I really think I will do a rare thing, and will consecrate these five pounds to their owner,"—what would you think of him then?

My dear friends, that is what thousands of Christians are saying. They admit—who can help admitting?—that they belong to God, who is our Maker, our "faithful Creator," as the Apostle puts it, and our Saviour, who has given his tears and his blood to redeem us. Now, then, do we not belong to Him altogether? The Apostle says our bodies, as well as our souls, belong to Him. 'Ye are not your own; ye are bought with a price." Every Christian in the world admits that. Well, then, how much of you belongs to Him? Is it not all you have and all you are—body, soul, and spirit? There are no two answers to the question. Then are you using for your own objects what does not belong to you? If it were a paltry matter of five pounds you would call it stealing. But when it is your life, belonging to God, that you are using for yourself, what do you call such conduct? Why make so much ado about giving it back to God? Mark you, it does not read: "You ought not to be your own," but "you are not." You can never be right or be happy until you acknowledge the fact that you are not your own, until you give God what belongs to Him, saying, "I have been a thief—'robbing God' (as the Prophet Malachi says), but I will be so no longer."

You now place yourself in his hands. And what happens then? Oh, when you place yourself in God's hands, you are where you should be. God receives his own, and can use his own and can keep his own. Then He can put, and He does put at your disposal all that He has. It is little enough that we can give Him; but who can measure his gift to us? It has been well said: "Give God your hands full and He will give you his hands full." All that belongs to God is at your service. Does that mean that all things belong to me? Of course it does. "Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come: all are yours." All, mark you, but one thing; that is yourself, "ye are not your own." As long as you are your own, or imagine you are, or act as though you were, how can God put anything at your service? You are defrauding Him, making war against Him; could He encourage you in your rebellion? In that position, what belongs to God does not belong to you. All things are against you. The very "stars in their courses" are making war against you. Why? Simply because you are not in God's hands. You want to live without Him, to live for your own purposes, according to your own wisdom. "Well," God says, "let him try it." Just as if a little child were silly enough to imagine that he would be happier by being independent of his father's will and away from his father's home. So he walks out into the street, until somebody picks him up, and he returns to the arms of his father. He then finds out that so long as he was independent he was miserable; but just as soon as he came back to his father all that was in the house was his at once. We have it in the words of the parable: "My son, all that I have is thine." So there is nothing in the universe that does not belong to the child of God, just because he is the child of God, because God is his father, and all things are in God's hands for them that are willing to serve Him.

And what a beautiful life it is! Oh, that I might, by the grace of God, persuade many among you, especially the young men, that there is no life worth having beside the life of consecration. To belong to God, to belong to the King of Kings, to be his messenger, to be his witness, to be his servant—ah! to be his child!—can you conceive of anything greater or more blessed? Then God can let you have all things—anything that will be good for you, anything that is lovely, that is pure, that is honest, that is of good report. Perhaps you young men sometimes think that Christians shut themselves up into very close quarters, as it were; you want a little more space in which to spread your wings. Very well; give yourselves to God, and you will have the whole breadth of the heavens open to you. The reason why Christians are sometimes a little cramped, is because they are not altogether at God's disposal. God is ready to use their every faculty, their will, their mind, their affections, their education, culture, imagination, everything. He would have them serve Him in all that is true, and beautiful, and good.

We return to the one question: Are we in God's hands? Has He given us our place our work, our measure of grace for the work? Then shall our lives be truly holy and happy, grand, and glorious and mighty, seen and felt and envied by all beholders. Not the least wonder of that life shall be the ease and spontaneousness of a second nature coming from God. It is, I think, a German writer, who quaintly says: "First, the natural man must be converted into a spiritual man, and then the spiritual man has to become a natural man." That is to say, spiritual life has to become natural to us; we must live in it as in our own atmosphere; desiring, not wanting, not seeking anything outside of it; not casting side glances at the world, thinking that this forbidden thing must be so sweet, and that other thing so nice; but that we dare not touch them, because we are Christians. No, that is not the true life. We look to Christ and see what He is, what He gives, counting all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Him. This, however, implies that we are living in Him, and, to begin with, that we have surrendered to Him.

You remember—to return to our starting-point—the first thing Saul of Tarsus had to do when he was converted. It was a very simple thing; he had to go into the city, and there he would be told what he had to do next. Some of you may be afraid of thus making yourselves over to God as a practical thing, as a definite transaction between you and Him. But it has to be done. If you remain in a haze, always wishing and admitting that you ought to do it, but never doing it, it will be no easier in a month or a year than it is to-night; it will be more difficult. If we do it God will give us something to accomplish for Him to-night. Perhaps it will simply be to go home quietly and rest. People think they will doubtless have at once to perform some very extraordinary feat, such, for instance, as to speak of salvation to every person they may meet with to-morrow. Is it not enough for you that the Lord, the loving, gentle, wise Master, will appoint your task for you? Can you be afraid of Him? Do not lay out plans for extraordinary things, and say: "I will have to do this or that." The one thing you will have to do will be to walk according to God's Word, and obey the Holy Ghost. He will show you his will. He has promised to do it. He has come for the purpose. Only place yourself in his hands, and cease to retain that which is not your own.

CONVERSION AND TESTIMONY.

THE following short account of aggressive and progressive work in the "far East" may serve to stimulate and encourage the Lord's remembrancers among the many readers of your widely-circulated and useful paper; knowing as we do personally many dear friends in England and China who are constantly praying for blessing.

Permit me to say that since engaging in the work carried on amongst seamen in this port we have had frequent cause to rejoice over trophies won for the Master under the preaching of the Gospel; but we confess to a deeper and fuller joy when, as in the letter received, we hear of progress in the Divine life and aggression in the camp of the enemy, proving that the faith professed is possessed, and being tested, has borne fruit, as it assuredly will in the lives of all who are in vital union with the Son of God. Our sailor friend, writing from Pagoda Anchorage, near Foochow, states that many of the men who were brought to the Lord in Shanghai have been transferred to other ships, and several have gone home to England; but the Lord has raised up other witnesses to carry on "his work" on board. Writing of himself, he says: "I was a Catholic; and when you visited our ship for the purpose of speaking and singing to the men, I used to persecute you by causing as much annoyance to you as I dare on the lower deck; but, praise the Lord! I have long since given up the broken cisterns of this world, which never satisfy, and applied to Him who is the 'Living Fountain.'

"'My thirst was quenched, my soul revived,
And now I live in Him.'"

He adds: "There are eight of us, and we have liberty to use the captain's lower cabin to meet in an hour every evening, and are having much blessing."

May the Lord multiply abundantly officers of a like stamp in H.M. Navy who have the wisdom to see and encourage amongst their men the study of that book which gives to those who follow its precepts nobility of character, manifested in loyalty to Queen and country because faithful to God.

That the souls of those men are being blessed is proved, I think, by the fact that they have secured a place on shore where they can hold services and write to me for hymn-books. I sent two dozen Songs and Solos, and a quantity of little books and tracts for distribution. The vessel was ordered home before the package reached the place; however, the package was forwarded to Hongkong, where the books, &c., proved useful among the seamen in that port. We may learn from this simple record "that true life is reproductive," and tested facts ought to be recorded for the encouragement of fellow-labourers, and to the glory of Him who has said: "So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth; it shall not return unto Me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it."

A GOOD WORK IN GERMANY.

I WISH to make known the work of one who is a most prominent home missionary of Germany, and whose work will meet with great sympathy among British Christians—Friedrich von Bodeschwingh, one of the very few belonging to the gentry who have entered the ministry in Germany. He was born in Westphalia. His first field of labour was among the poor Germans in Paris, where he now lives, and where he has founded the Institution of which I desire to speak—viz., Bielefeld—an Institution for epileptic patients, and a training hospital for deaconesses. The former has grown year by year, as the need for such an asylum for the nearly 60,000 epileptics of Germany became apparent. Every year the applications for admission to "Bethel," as the asylum is called, became more numerous, so that no less than 600 poor sufferers are now within the different houses belonging to it, and yet many are refused. Last year the admissions numbered 201, while 110 left, of whom only 21 were thoroughly cured, a great many apparently being incurable, but living in Bethel in comparative ease, and clinging affectionately to their home there. Pastor Bodelschwingh has shown wonderful ingenuity, not only in providing work for them in different trades—book-binding, book-selling, gardening, &c.—but also in collecting funds for the buildings, and for the maintenance of his large and growing family. The secret of his immense success seems to be in his irresistible love and his full disinterestedness. He has added at least one new institution every year, giving to each some good Scriptural name, till he appears to have exhausted the list: Bethel, Bethlehem, Ebenezer and Zoar, Hermon and Hebron, Bethsaida and Carmel, Sharon, Mamre and Bethphage.

Along with all these, the Training Hospital for Deaconesses has grown so much that it is now, amid many similar institutions, almost the largest in Germany, Kaiserswerth alone surpassing it in the number of deaconesses sent out. The sisters of this "Westphalian Deaconess House" do not go abroad so much as those of Kaiserswerth, working chiefly in Westphalia and the adjoining provinces. In Bremer there are about forty, and all the public hospitals are under their care, to the great satisfaction of the leading medical men. On this part of Pastor Bodelschwingh's work, so similar to Kaiserswerth and other German institutions, I need not enlarge further.

There remains to be mentioned his third work, which was at once his most original and ingenious, and his most successful—the Workmen's Colony of Wilhelmsdorf. Since 1873, among our many needs in Germany, the question, what ought to be done for the multitude of vagabonds (numbering about 200,000 two years ago, and growing at an ever-increasing ratio) was one of the most pressing and the most difficult of solution. There exists, not far from Bielefeld, a large tract of barren country called a "Senne," whose soil, although bad, can by hard labour be reduced to tolerable arable ground when the substratum of stones is removed. Pastor Bodelschwingh, with a number of friends who entered into his idea, bought an extensive piece of land in that district, being anxious to secure a place where all could be set to work without delay. Wilhelmsdorf was founded there about two years ago, cheap buildings being erected as workmen's lodgings, and superior, trustworthy men appointed as superintendents.

No man is ever compelled to go to Wilhelmsdorf nor kept there against his will. Applicants come there because told by men that they will find work and a home. An indispensable part of Bodelschwingh's idea is that all the neighbours must combine in a resolution against giving even a penny to any unknown stranger able to work. In the first year the inmates numbered no less than 482; about 300 left before the end of the year. The number during the second year is expected to reach 800. The effect of the plan has been wonderful. Not only have all the men, with hardly an exception, behaved exceedingly well, many turning out afterwards good men and useful, but, what is more remarkable, vagabondism seems to have been swept away from the whole province. Pastor Bodelschwingh is therefore quite right in asserting that the small sum paid to him for its support by the adjacent provinces does not amount to one-twentieth, nor even one-thirtieth of the money formerly given away indiscriminately and quite uselessly. No wonder that this success has attracted the interest and won the sympathy of almost all Germany, so that not only the Prince Imperial visited Wilhelmsdorf a few weeks ago, and seemed much interested and pleased with all he saw, but the remedy discovered by the good Pastor has been so universally acknowledged as the effectual one, that there is hardly any province of at least North Germany where institutions of exactly the same kind are not being built or projected.

BELLEVILLE MISSION, PARIS.

HAVING just returned from spending a week with Miss de Broen at Belleville, I wish I could convey to others the impression left on my mind in that deeply interesting Mission. I can say with truth it far exceeded my expectation, though I did not see it at its best, as it was the opening week of the season. I shall never forget the intense listening of the poor people at the dispensary, as the doctor and Miss de Broen spoke to them in simple, powerful words, of the one great remedy for the soul's fatal malady, before the consultations for the body began. The doctor told me that he sees 1000 new patients every month, and when one realises that all these hear the Gospel, and how many families may be reached through a blessing to one member, it gives one some idea of the extent of this work and its fitness to the wants of the people for whom it is intended.

I can hardly imagine a better training for a young Christian worker, while at the same time there is the fullest scope for the wisdom and sympathy that age and experience give. There is almost every variety of work. There are day, night, and Sunday-schools, evangelistic meetings, and a great many families are visited in their own homes; sewing classes, during the winter months, attended by 300 aged and destitute women, who for three hours' work receive bread or meat tickets—value, fivepence.

The children of the training home are girls of all ages, whom Miss de Broen has gathered from unhappy homes. There are generally from eighteen to twenty-four, carefully-taught and trained to become useful women, and brought under every Christian influence.

To undertake the expense of one girl, for which Miss de Broen asks £15 a year, would be a delightful way of contributing to the Mission; only very few are supported in this way.

If I could hope that any suitable worker would be led to offer herself to Miss de Broen, or that any not able to do this would send her larger contributions to carry on the Lord's work through the reading of these lines, it would be a cause for thankfulness. Communications should be addressed to Miss de Broen, 3 Rue Clavel, Belleville, Paris.

A YOUNG MEN'S MEETING IN LIMERICK.

(From our Special Reporter in Ireland.)

IT was Mr. Moody's last evening in Limerick. He had preached to a mighty audience in the theatre on the danger of being "so near and yet so far" from the Kingdom of God. As he drew towards his peroration, the silence and strained attention of the crowd were almost painful in their intensity. The fear of God seemed to have taken hold of every soul. I sat, on this occasion, at the very back of the topmost gallery. When Mr. Moody's call sounded forth that those who were fain to enter the open door into the Kingdom should rise in their places, there was a general movement all over the house. Many stood up in the gallery where I sat, but as it was in semi-darkness, probably the evangelist did not observe them. Presently he announced that he would meet the general body of inquirers in the Wesleyan Chapel; the children would have a meeting in the theatre, and the young men would gather, as before, into Mr. Russell's upper room.

As I passed out, I invited several young men who had stood up to cross the street with me. Some at once assented; others wanted to go with Mr. Moody to the Wesleyan Chapel. When I reached the room, Major Whittle was already there; he had abruptly closed his "overflow" address in the chapel, in order to make room for the inquirers from the theatre. The young men were rapidly flocking in, and the room was nearly full. While the corners were being filled up, we sang "Still there's more to follow," and then "Stand up for Jesus."

Major Whittle briefly related an incident connected with this latter hymn. In the American Revival of 1857-8, Rev. Dudley Tyng, a Philadelphia minister, was greatly used of God in the commencement of that wonderful work that spread to Ireland and almost went round the world. Mr. Tyng was visiting a factory one day, when his arm got caught in the machinery and was dreadfully torn. A painful amputation was performed, but he only lived a little while. He was a great favourite with the young men; he was a young man himself—a very manly man. The last message he sent to them was: "Tell them to stand up for Jesus." This hymn was written shortly after his death and has gone around the world as a Christian watchword for young men. I had a letter to-day (added the Major) from one of the young men who has come out on the Lord's side these last few days. With all the earnest enthusiasm that seems to mark your young men here in Limerick, he says: "May we all rather die than be afraid to stand up for Jesus, and own Him as our Lord."

Some more verses were sung, and then a tall young Irish clergyman prayed that God would speak to every heart by his still, small voice, and that all hindrances to his working might be swept out of the way. Several verses of "The Great Physician now is near," and the Major addressed his youthful brethren to this effect:—

We want this to be a night of blessing. God has already been working in our midst, accompanying the preaching of his word with power. Some of those here have had Christ revealed to them and have accepted Him as their Saviour. Others have been awakened and are seeking the Lord. I had a note to-day from one for whom I had already prayed; he is anxious because he thinks he is not anxious. Now we want all who are like him to understand that there is no satisfaction or help to be got from looking at your feelings. Go straight to Christ, without considering your feelings at all, and He will take you just as you are. If you were to wait for twenty years mourning over your feeling, or want of feeling, you would then have to come just as you are. In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by virtue of what He has done on your behalf, "repentance and remission of sins," are declared to all who will to-night believe on Him.

I remember an inquirers' meeting in Arkansas, in the church parlour, at the close of the service. A gentleman came in; the minister told me he was one of the leading lawyers of the town; he had not been to church for years, and was considered to be a sceptic who cared for none of these things. As he came in and sat down on the sofa, I was trying to present Jesus to the inquirers and get them to see that all they had to do was simply to accept Him as their Saviour. Till they had done that, they might look in vain for right feelings. I told them a little incident about a young man in America, the son of a widow, who was growing up to be a very wild young fellow, getting into bad company, and well-nigh breaking the heart of that loving mother. He had not stopped to think very much about it. One night he came home from some place of bad association, and let himself into the house with his night key. He was creeping upstairs, and going by his mother's room found that she was on her knees praying to God and sobbing out her sorrow of heart. The boy stood there looking in at his grey-haired mother and heard the tale of her sorrow. He crept into the room, got down on his knees by her side, put his arms round her neck, and said, "Mother, will you forgive me, and ask God to forgive me?" He was brought to repentance by looking there on the sorrows of her who loved him so dearly. So, said I, it is as you look at Christ on the cross, bearing your sins and atoning for your guilt, that you are constrained towards repentance and faith. I noticed that while I was talking the lawyer turned round, and with a little laugh buried his head in a corner of the sofa. I thought he had probably been drinking, but the moment I finished he sprang to his feet and said: "Years ago I tried every way I could to repent and become a Christian. My father was a prominent Christian, and President of the Methodist College. I used to try and work up my feelings, but never got any light or blessing. Years ago I came to one of two conclusions: Either there was no reality in the religion of Christ, or if there was I felt I was shut out. Thank God, I see to-night that it is a simple acceptance of Christ without reference to feeling or repentance on my part; that as I see Him and take Him for my Saviour I have repentance." This man has been for the last seven or eight years one of the most active Christian workers in that place. Now we shall throw the meeting open that we may have testimonies from those who have accepted Christ, and have something to praise God for. Mr. Moody's last evening has come. What have you to praise God for in connection with his meetings? Let us confess Christ, and praise Him for all He has done for us.

Without a moment's hesitation a young man, wearing a badge that proclaimed him one of the "ushers" of the meetings, stood up and said he counted it a privilege to say that on Friday night he had accepted Christ as his Saviour. He was followed by a thick-set, somewhat rough-looking man of the artisan class: "I have been away from God. The devil has been my master for many a long year, and I know him to be a hard master. I have sinned against God and man, and I am like one who has been plucked from the jaws of hell. The first night I went to Mr. Moody's meeting I was very near persuaded, but I held on till the next night, when Mr. Moody's discourse convinced me very much. He spoke of the young man who complained of his feelings, and to whom he pointed out that it was not Noah's feelings that saved him, but the Ark. That went like an arrow to my heart; he was simply describing my own case. I said: 'Lord Jesus, here I am.' Immediately it seemed as if the devil whispered to me, 'If you tell anybody you are saved you will be a hypocrite.' I said, 'Get thee behind me, Satan.' This is the first time I have ever spoken about it; may God give me strength: my cry will ever be—

'I the chief of sinners am,
But Jesus died for me.'"

When he sat down others started up: "Last Friday night, on being spoken with by Mr. McGranahan, I gave myself to the Lord."

"I feel it a high privilege to tell that on Friday night the Lord blessed my soul. The three days that have passed since then have been the happiest of my life. A particular friend of mine received blessing here last night. He has had to go away from town, and will have much to contend with this week; he asked me to desire that the friends here should remember him in their prayers." Whereupon, Mr. McGranahan prayed that the Great Shepherd of the sheep might watch over and protect this young disciple.

A sturdy countryman, past middle life, next took the floor: "My dear friends, I never felt myself more at home than I do here this night. It is fifty years since I began to pray; but up to last night they were the prayers of a hypocrite. I was asking with my lips, but never with my heart. Last night, in this meeting, I could think of nothing but the beautiful words that fell from the lips of our young friends who testified for Christ. I was then led to accept my Saviour, and I trust He will keep me to the end. I have also the privilege of telling you that without any prompting my two sons here have done the same thing. My little girl, too, was in the theatre to-night, and wept bitterly; she is now at the children's meeting there." The broken utterances of this good man at the young men's meeting of the previous evening were most touching to hear; when, in a voice almost choking with emotion, he called on his two sons—fine, handsome fellows of twenty or thereabouts—to rise and testify, and when they got up in succession, declaring that they had embraced the truth of the Gospel, the heart of the meeting was deeply touched. It was a scene over which the angels must have been hovering, ready "to carry the tidings home to the new Jerusalem." "God be thanked," said Major Whittle, "for this dear man's confession, and for the salvation of his two sons. How real is the work of God in our midst."

The stream of testimonies flowed on:—"Since last Friday night, I accepted Christ as my Saviour, and desire your prayers." "I, too, have much reason to thank God that on Friday night I was led to the Saviour. For years I have been looking to my feelings. I would advise all here who are in the same condition to accept Christ now." "I thank God for the privilege of again testifying to his wonderful work in me. On Friday night Mr. McGranahan showed me that if I came to God as my Father He would not turn me away. Satan came to me with his temptations before I got home, but as soon as I reached my room I threw myself on my knees and committed myself to my Saviour. I would say to every young man here, This is the only way of escape; get on your knees, and Satan is sure to go. He has not troubled me since, and I hope he never will."

"Indeed he will," said a more experienced brother sitting near by. The Major backed up this remark: "Satan will trouble you, but then you have found out the way to defeat him. I remember when a boy I used to have some trouble at school, because another boy—an Irish boy, too—wanted to thrash me. I was afraid to go there. But I had a big brother who rather liked a scrimmage, and I felt safe when I was with him. That Irish boy always let me alone when my big brother was with me. So when you meet with temptation keep close to your big Elder Brother, the Lord Jesus Christ, and you will be safe. Now go right on; we want to hear many more testimonies."

And so we did; thick and fast they came, so fast that I could scarcely note them down. They were all to the same effect as before, only now the date was slightly altered. Instead of "Friday night" it was "last night" that was given as the time when they set their faces Zionward. Some indicated that their resolve had only just been made. "I am so glad," said Major Whittle, "to hear these new voices confessing Christ. We are not here to make speeches to one another, but just to take our stand and witness for the Master." The responses continued to roll out. One fine-looking fellow said, "All the week I have been battling with my feelings. Yesterday I saw my way clear, and I have been very happy since." The next testimony was of a different but no less welcome sort: "If there are fathers here, it may be helpful to them to say that I believe it has pleased the Lord to save two of my children at these meetings."

Now the stream went back to the old channel: "These meetings have been a great blessing to me. It was not until yesterday that I fully resolved to give myself to the Lord. Two words mentioned by Mr. Moody greatly helped me. The first was, 'Trust Him;' the second was a prayer, 'Lord, help me.' Since yesterday it seems as if the devil has often been trying to bring some word or thought between me and Christ, but this watchword, 'Lord, help me!' has driven the enemy back."

Said the Major: "That is a good word—'Lord, help me.' One word for the Lord, one for me, and help, the link that binds the two. Some of us repeat that prayer a great many times a day. I would not have missed this brother's testimony for a good deal. There are many of these short prayers in the Bible, if you will hunt them up."

Among the many brief utterances that followed was this one: "It was Mr. Moody's speaking about the Ark that led to my salvation." Major Whittle: "That has brought a good many people to the Lord, all over the world. Look to Christ, not to your feelings."

A Christian brother from Dublin, at this point, gave some leaves from his experience of twenty years, and very earnestly exhorted his young friends to give themselves much to prayer and the study of the Word if they would become strong and useful Christians. He advised them not to enter into argument with sceptics, but tell them their own experience of God's pardoning and keeping grace. Then the venerable Dr. Wilson, of the Limerick Presbyterian Church, briefly lifted up Christ as the One through whom alone they could come off more than conquerors. "He is able to save to the uttermost:" that means, "all the way through." The good Doctor prayed for any who might not yet have come to a decision, and we all struck up the hymn:—

"Just as I am, without one plea,
But that Thy blood was shed for me,
And that Thou bidst me come to Thee,
O Lamb of God, I come."

Between the verses Major Whittle called on those who were desirous of being saved now, to lift the hand, and about a dozen obeyed the call. "What a happy place this is!" he exclaimed; "the angels are rejoicing, and we are entering into their joy." Everybody must have felt the truth of that as they passed out into the starry night, but scarce anyone spoke to his neighbour. It seemed as if the joy was too deep and too sacred for words.

NATIONAL THRIFT.—A series of meetings in connection with the National Thrift Society has just been brought to a close in Birmingham. The principal speakers included the Mayor, Mr. S. Insull, and Mr. T. Bowden Green. A large amount of thrift literature has been distributed, and penny banks, in connection with the Post-office Savings Bank, have been opened in various localities.

CHURCH AND LIQUOR TRAFFIC.—At a meeting of the Temperance societies in the Vale of Leven Bailie Selkirk said he considered the public-house traffic should be the most respectable trade in the country, for every party in it is selected. A system which required so much interference must be bad, and ought to be swept off the face of the country. They must call on the Church to come out and wash itself clear from this traffic. Any one in it ought to be outside the Church, and when that day comes the Church will have taken a bound forward which will greatly promote every Christian and philanthropic work in our midst. In the Vale of Leven a good work has been done, and the position held by the Temperance party is a very influential one. Much of the blessing can be traced to the recent religious awakening which visited the locality.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

MEETINGS AT NORWICH.

THE Annual Conference of this useful institution was held in Norwich last week, at the invitation of the Committee of the Local Branch recently formed in that city. A Conversazione, as usual, inaugurated the meetings, which was presided over by Mr. Henry Birkbeck, an address of welcome to the members and friends of the Alliance being given by the Rev. W. N. Ripley, the earnest and truly evangelical Vicar of St. Giles. Mr. Donald Matheson, Treasurer of the Society, acknowledged the address, as did also the Revs. E. Clarke, of Spezzia, and J. McCarthy, from China, as representing foreign churches. Addresses on the work of the Alliance, at home and abroad, were given by Lieutenant-General Field, one of the secretaries, and the Rev. Dr. Murray Mitchell.

The first meeting of the Conference was held on Wednesday, the 17th inst., Mr. Donald Matheson presiding in the absence of Lord Polworth, who was at the last moment unable to attend. Addresses of a devotional character were given by the Revs. J. Patteson, Rector of Thorpe, and T. Romaine Govett, late Vicar of All Saints, Newmarket, Dr. Oswald Dykes following with an address of rare power and beauty of expression, on the "practical resolutions" of the Alliance. The address, by special request, is to be published and circulated as widely as possible; certainly nothing could be better adapted to set forth the purpose and spirit, or to promote the success of the work the Alliance seeks to perform. It was full of Christian feeling, and of argumentative force, and cannot fail to be of eminent service to the cause of union and co-operation among the various churches of Christ wherever it finds its way.

The annual report was read by Mr. A. J. Arnold, the secretary, and showed that much had been done during the year on behalf of religious liberty abroad, and to secure united prayer and effort at home.

In the evening of the same day a large audience assembled to hear addresses on subjects connected with the Luther Commemoration from the Revs. Drs. Stoughton and L. Barrett White, J. J. Coleman, Esq., M.P., in the chair. The influence of Luther upon the Protestant Reformation, and the present condition and needs of of the Reformation Churches, were the topics dwelt upon.

At the Devotional Meeting on Thursday morning the Rev. G. S. Barrett, B.A., presided, Admiral Sir William King Hall taking the chair at the after Conference. The Revs. Prebendary Anderson, M.A., of Bath, and E. Smith, Wesleyan Minister, of Manchester, spoke on "The Religious Indifference existing among various classes, and how to meet it," the Revs. H. Price Hughes, of Oxford, and W. Fuller Gooch, of Norwood, following on "The Public Ministry of the Word of God: How can it be made most effectual?" Afternoon meetings were also held, addressed by Captain Chapman on Wednesday, and by the Rev. Horace Noel on Thursday, many others taking part in open discussion on both occasions.

The closing meeting was presided over by Major Cubitt, President of the Norwich Branch, Dr. Sinclair Paterson speaking on the "Divine authority and sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures," and the Rev. J. Aston, Vicar of Deptford, on "Christian usefulness dependent on a close walk with God."

The meetings were unmistakably permeated by a large measure of the Divine presence and blessing, although the attendances were by no means what might have been expected in a city so full of Evangelical Churches of all sections as Norwich is well known to be. We are sorry space does not allow us to give resumés of the various addresses, but we must refer our readers to the forthcoming issue of "Evangelical Christendom" in which full reports will be given.

A TRUE MISSIONARY.

DEAR SIR,—In THE CHRISTIAN of the 13th, I observe, under the heading "Mission Appeals," a notice that Mr. Arthur Foy, of Cawnpore, seeks help to buy a building in that heathen city, to be used for the Lord's work amongst soldiers and others. Will you kindly allow me to assure your readers that in helping Mr. Foy they will be conferring a great honour upon themselves. Three years ago it was my privilege to spend a few days under Mr. Foy's roof at Cawnpore, and I was thus brought into closest contact with him, and a truer, nobler, more consecrated man of God I never met. Though he is at the head of a large business he is a splendid missionary for Christ. If all our countrymen in India were like him it would not be possible for a Brahmin to use the words concerning them to which you call attention in your "Notes and Comments."

Never shall I forget the family worship under Mr. Foy's roof. Not a few of his heathen workmen were seated round the room, and heard him sing and pray and read the Divine Word in their mother-tongue. Neither shall I ever cease to remember our brother's readiness to embrace every opportunity of witnessing for his Master. He took me one morning to the bathing-place by the Ganges, but as we stood on the steps, the sight of a poor old man presenting his offering to the idols, placed under a sacred tree, so stirred his soul, that he could not refrain from telling him of the only worship really able to satisfy the soul. The bathing-place was very crowded, and in a very few minutes a large number of heathen were standing round, to whom, for upwards of half an hour, he gloriously preached Jesus only.

From the bathing-place we made our way to a large Hindoo temple, thronged with worshippers. As we stood on the outer platform, a Brahmin desired my wife, who was with us, to take off her boots, as the place was sacred. Of course she declined, but the request furnished Mr. Foy with a text, from which, to a crowd of attentive listeners, he discoursed, after the pattern of our Lord's reply to the Pharisees, respecting the washing of hands, of the nature of true defilement—the defilement within, which can only be removed by the precious blood of Christ. From the Temple we drove to the massacre Ghaut, where Nana Sahib gathered the women and children from General Wheeler's entrenchment prior to their death at his treacherous hands. Here we met a soldier of the Gordon Highlanders, who told us that he was passing through the station from Afghanistan. "Are you a soldier of the Lord Jesus Christ?" was almost the first words from our brother's lips.

I mention these incidents, which come to my memory as I write, merely to indicate the sort of man your readers are asked to help. I rejoiced greatly when I saw Mr. Foy's appeal, and felt constrained to take the first opportunity of giving this testimony concerning him.—Yours affectionately in Christ, JOHN STUBBS.

GREEK AND HEBREW CLASSES.—The Sunday-school Union has two classes at 56, Old Bailey, E.C., for elementary instruction in Greek and Hebrew, to which both sexes are welcome. The Greek class meets at 7.30 on Monday evenings, and the Hebrew class at 7.30 on Thursday evenings. The classes are practically open to all who wish to be Bible students. There is an entrance fee of 1s., and a small outlay for books needed.

JOHN R. CHEYSE.

MR. D. COOPER.—The prayers of your readers are entreated on behalf of Mr. D. Cooper, of the Rescue Society, who was, when last heard of, lying prostrate and suffering in a log hut in the interior of Queensland, to which remote region he journeyed a few months back in search of new health. He touchingly relates the wonderful dealings of God with his soul during this time of severe discipline. As temporarily in charge of the work, I would emphasise the need of such spiritual care and oversight as we have lost in his removal, and beg the constant remembrance of his case in the prayers of God's people. JOHN D. COOPER.

Notes and Comments.

A NEW church, built to commemorate the work of Robert Raikes as founder of Sunday-schools, has just been opened at Gloucester, the Bishop of the diocese performing the consecration ceremony.

The death is announced of the venerable Rev. Dr. Acworth, for many years the President of the Baptist College at Rawdon, and prior to that Theological Tutor and President of Horton College. He died at Scarborough on the 13th inst., in his eighty-sixth year.

We are sorry to have to announce also the death of the Rev. Thomas Nicholson, of the Forest of Dean, which occurred on the 17th inst. In him the people of that extensive district, many of them in circumstances of much penury and want, had a warm and sympathising friend, one they will greatly miss, from every point of view. He was ever foremost in efforts for their moral and social welfare, a Christian minister of dauntless courage and fidelity to truth, as well as a man of tender heart and sound judgment. It may truly be said of him as a busy toiler in the field of Christ, his "works do follow him," and his name will long be remembered by those among whom he laboured, with grateful affection.

The death of Mr. Thomas Coats, of Paisley, long and honourably known as a Christian philanthropist, will be heard of with deep regret by many on both sides the border. As we think of the many who are being taken from the front ranks of Christian service, we are led to breathe the prayer of the Psalmist, and say: "Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, the faithful fail from among the children of men."

The abominable want of principle shown by many of our modern speculative builders of suburban and other residences continues to occupy public attention, and to elicit, as it deserves, severe censure and stern criticism. The following smart lines from the columns of Truth present the matter so aptly that we print them; they may serve to arouse keener attention to a much needed reform:—

"And here's the Reform that must come at last,
When Bumble down from his throne is cast
By the Public, ready no more to pay,
In its usual old long-suffering way,
For the valueless Blue-Books—tomes immense—
That exhibit the lack of common sense
Of the Special Commission (sitting yet)
At the Local Mis-government Board, that met
'Bout the Epidemic that widely spread
Till scarcely a villa but had its dead,
And its Widow, and, may be, Orphans twain
That were left alone in this world of pain
By the cruel Fever, dark and grim
That quickly seized on the every limb
Of the luckless Bread-winner, thin and pale,
That, taken in by the Agent's tale,
Had secured the Lease, spite the Stenches foul
That began like ghosts through the rooms to prowl,
Because the Inspector, highly paid,
Had winked at the tricks of the Building Trade,
And approved the Drains that were made to pass
Throughout the premises Sewer-gas, [tight,
With the aid of the Doors that would not shut
And the Window-frames that defied one's might,
That were made of Timber green and new,
That were used for the Joists that warped askew
'Neath the worthless Tiles in their cracked array,
That let in the Rain that washed away
The immiscible Mortar, made from muck,
That, spread so lavishly, never stuck
The broken Bricks, purchased second-hand,
That were put in the Walls, too thin to stand,
That were raised on the Site—a refuse pit,
Where Rubbish was shot and Filth unfit—
Of the brand-new House that 'Jerry' built!"

The following incident, taken from a contemporary, is rather smart in its way, and points a moral to an oft-repeated complaint on the part of church and chapel-goers:—

"At a church meeting some of the members complained that nobody spoke to them, whereupon a brother submitted to their attention this emendation of Dr. Watts:—

'Whene'er I take my walks to church
How many folk I see;
And 'cause I never speak to them,
They never speak to me.'"

It is a hopeful sign of the times that so much attention is being given to what has been called the lost ministry—that is, the personal action of every believer in making known to others the way of salvation. The churches seem all to be waking up to the fact that it is not ordained ministers alone who should proclaim the Gospel of Christ, but that the great commission extends to all who know for themselves "the joyful sound." We have too long left the work of evangelising men to the pulpit, and so our rate of progress has been far slower than it ought to have been. Surely everyone who has been reconciled to God should be eager to share in the ministry of reconciliation.

Peter says we have a prophetic word more sure than the spoken words they heard upon the holy mount when Jesus was transfigured before them, and when they were given an anticipative vision of the Son of Man coming in his Kingdom. Peter proposed to build three tabernacles, for he wist not what to say—not knowing what he said; for they feared as they entered the cloud, and were sore afraid. Their eyes were heavy with sleep while Jesus spake with Moses and Elijah of the death, and the exodus out of death, which He must accomplish at Jerusalem, and when they were awaked they saw no man save Jesus only with themselves. We need not wonder that Peter declared the word of prophecy, written by holy men inspired of the Holy Ghost, was more sure than their memory of that wondrous scene; and that he, also inspired by the Holy Ghost, should tell us that we do well to take heed to it in our hearts, until the day-dawn and the day-star shall arise.

But those who obey this injunction are sometimes taunted even by their brethren with having "Daniel on the brain." Well, better that than "Darwin on the brain." Better to elevate our souls by meditation on the Son of God (who is not ashamed to call us brethren) coming to receive us to Himself, than to degrade them by imagining our origin from apes, and frogs, and worms. Better revel in such a certain future than grovel in such an unlikely past.

An ill and mischievous seed was tossed into the air when that jest, often since repeated, appeared first in Punch, "To those about to marry—Don't." Remembering that marriage is the foundation of society, that the family is the basis of the nation, that the first gift of God to the man He had created was a wife taken from his side, to be bone of his bone, flesh of his flesh, and a type of the mystery of Christ and his Church, must not every depreciation of what our forefathers deemed "holy matrimony" be displeasing to God and mischievous to man? Yet scarcely a number of any comic or "Society" paper appears which does not in some way or other mock at marriage.

Not seldom even in religious papers have we found in the column devoted to "Gleanings" anecdotes or witticisms of the same reprehensible character. As surely as winged thistle-seeds take root so surely will these winged witticisms bring forth evil fruit.

"I will therefore," says the holy Apostle, "that the younger women marry, bear children, guide the house, give none occasion to the enemy to speak reproachfully." History bears witness that there is no surer sign of national decay than the indisposition to fulfil these behests. But not only is child-murder an everyday occurrence, but there are professing Christians—husbands and wives—who conspire together for the anticipative destruction of their infant children. That this cowardly iniquity, rife in France and in the Eastern States of America, is now infesting our own land, is enough, if anything is enough, to awaken the watchmen who do not wish to appear before God guilty of the blood of souls. It is a terrible calamity for a country when Isaiah's words of Israel's prophets can be applied to it: "His watchmen are blind, they are all ignorant [of the condition of things around them]; they are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark; sleeping [margin—dreaming, talking in their sleep], lying down, loving to slumber." Is not a great deal of our pulpit oratory, when compared with the terrible facts of life, like that of men dreaming and talking in their sleep?

The need of legislation in reference to social reforms is becoming more and more urgently felt, as indeed it must continue to be, until our legislators are compelled to pay due attention to the subject in its manifold claims. Mr. Francis Peek has just written a letter to the Pall Mall Gazette, in which he says, referring to the fearful condition of the very poor in our East London and other districts:

"Nothing but wise laws, wisely administered, can reach the evil. By such means much might be done, and an opening made through which philanthropic and Christian effort might flow. But so long as the law allows parents to bring up their families under the conditions now existing, so long as the law permits them to spend their money upon drink instead of the support of their children, so long as the law allows vestries of property-owners to defeat the law itself—so long the case is hopeless."

The law is bound, surely, by every consideration of its intention to guard citizens of all classes from oppression and injury, to regard the neglect of house property so as to render it unfit for habitation, as a crime, and it ought to see that authorities, independent of and beyond all suspicion of personal interest, are appointed to inspect the condition of neighbourhoods and dwellings where vice and disease are bred by shameless neglect on the part of landlords and builders too rapacious and greedy of gain to care for those who are dependent on them for shelter. Public opinion requires to be more thoroughly stirred and roused on such matters than it has yet been.

The little pamphlet, entitled, "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London," to which reference is made in one of our columns to-day, may be had of J. Clarke & Co., 13, Fleet-street, for one penny. It should be read by all who desire to be acquainted with facts such as demand the attention of all who would follow in the footsteps of Him who for our sakes became "a Man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief." We trust it will be distributed largely. (6s. per 1000).

We are very glad to learn that "Garfield House," Ryde, has been secured for a seaside Home for young women from London and elsewhere needing rest and change. Particulars will be found in another column.

It is with ill grace churches and ministers who resort to such devices as those named in the following cutting from an advertisement just issued can rebuke worldliness and carnality. It is hard to believe it can be in connection with religion at all, or on behalf of chapel funds, and yet it is really the case:—

"Mr. Charles Godfrey's String Band (Royal Horse Guards Blue) will perform selections of music on Wednesday afternoon from two to five, and on Saturday afternoon from two to six.

"Each evening Mr. A. E. Beddow will give his popular and amusing ventriloquial entertainment, in which Master Tommy Tart will be both seen and heard, and several other mysterious individuals will be heard, but not seen.

"Mr. Russell Budden has kindly consented to give an interesting optical and illusionary entertainment, with experiments."

It is humiliating to feel that such things are possible in the sphere of Christian work, and accompanied with references to sacred things. And yet multitudes of professing Christians see no evil in them, and call them harmless and innocent. Surely the Spirit of God is grieved by them, and He who drove out the money-changers from his Father's house would regard them as unworthy of his name and cause.

Dr. Moir Porteous has issued a pamphlet of much real merit on the duty of Christians in reference to theatrical and other amusements of a decidedly worldly character. He has been led to do this by recent occurrences in Scotland which have tended to bring the subject before the public mind, and his effort to show, that tried both by the Word of God and by general experience, the theatre is entirely outside the pale of Christian liberty is certainly eminently successful, and calculated to be of much service. The pamphlet, entitled "Theatres and Christians," may be had of W. F. Gibson, 38, Parliament-street, S.W., price 3d.

The Rev. William Reid, of Edinburgh, has pleaded in The Christian Leader for the importance of giving special attention to interesting and instructing children in the lessons to be learned from the Reformation. He urges that it will be well in the demonstrations connected with the Luther Celebration to give them a prominent place. Dr. Reid reminds us of an important fact when he says of the little ones:—

"The attentive reader of history cannot fail to mark that from the time their shout, 'Hosanna to the Son of David,' sent dismay to the hearts of Christ's foes, down to the Band of Hope movement, they have borne no undistinguished part in the public events which have intervened, and hence the more they know about them the better."

The annual meeting of the interesting work among sailors carried on at the "Strangers' Rest," Ratcliff Highway, will take place on Thursday, November 1. This is usually a most profitable gathering, and it is hoped many friends of sailors will attend. Those who have collecting cards are kindly requested to bring or send them. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe and others will give addresses.

[The Treasurer for the past year is anxious to relinquish his office free of debt and with a balance to his successor. Will those who love the sailor join in this? £200 is needed. If £190 is contributed he will give the remainder.]

A "Three Quiet Days'" conference is to be held at St. Matthew's Church, Bayswater, on October 23, 24, and 25, the subject of which, with list of speakers, will be found among "Forthcoming Meetings."

It is always gratifying to find the public Press using its influence to uphold and commend Christian endeavour and distinctly Christian agencies. The Eastbourne Standard sets a good example in this respect by thus referring to the work of Young Men's Christian Associations:—

"So many of the youth of this and other towns delight in vulgar talk and tastes, and hold such a low moral ideal of life and duty, that all thoughtful persons should encourage the refining influences of these Young Men's Christian Associations, which are the centres of exemplary personal culture."

A volume of Luther Anecdotes, compiled by Dr. Macaulay, editor of The Leisure Hour, has just been published by the Religious Tract Society. Its appearance just now is so opportune, and its contents are so varied and well arranged, that we think our readers will be glad to have their attention specially directed to the fact of its publication.

We are sorry to have to announce that the Archbishop of Canterbury is seriously indisposed, and ordered by his physicians to cease from all work for a time. It is also said that the Bishop of London is about to resign his See on the ground of ill-health. Canon Wilberforce also has been compelled to relinquish his long-continued and exhaustive labours until his strength shall have been restored.

Earthquake has again produced its horrors of consternation and distress, this time in Asia Minor, where some thousands have been rendered houseless, and some hundreds have been killed. The news from Smyrna has doubtless been much exaggerated, but the visitation has been of a nature to excite much sympathy, and to cause great need in the classic district which has been the scene of the disaster.

A strange sight was witnessed at Westminster Abbey the other day, a number of pilgrims at the close of the usual service prostrating themselves for prayer around the tomb of Edward the Confessor. It has been spoken of by the public Press as a striking testimony to the liberality of the Cathedral authorities. An old tradition says that in the reign of Edward VII. the Mass will be restored in England, it having been abolished in the reign of Edward VI. Certainly, at the rate of progress towards Rome which is being made just now, many things might be spoken of as far more improbable.

Speak gently! A good illustration of the wisdom of this course, and of the harm done by harshly crushing the feelings of the young, is found in Anthony Trollope's recently published autobiography. When a boy of seven years old he was at school at Harrow. Dr. Butler, then master, meeting him in the street, spoke most contemptuously to him on his personal appearance as a disgrace to the school. He says: "I remembered constantly that address from Dr. Butler. Dr. Longley might have said the same thing with equal justice, but he never in his life was able to say an ill-natured word. Dr. Butler only became Dean of Peterborough; Dr. Longley, his successor, lived to be Archbishop of Canterbury."

In an article on preachers and preaching, the Daily Telegraph has thus practically dealt with the question how the masses are to be brought under the sound of the Gospel. Admitting the indifference and apathy which prevails, and referring to the many rival influences at work, the writer says:—

"Against all these forces the conscientious preacher has to strive; how is he to 'take the working-classes by storm' until he has induced them to enter the church door? He must, if he is to reach them, go out into the street and look for them, and he must avoid anything savouring of patronage or conceit; and, when he has attracted a congregation, he can easily keep it together by preaching carefully, earnestly, and intelligibly."

The same writer comments on the dulness so often characterising modern sermons, and thus speaks of the theme preachers are charged to present to their hearers:—

"To put it on the lowest ground, never was a more interesting religion started in the world than Christianity. It is incomprehensible how the average preacher manages to throw a flood of dreariness over the burning words which he is always quoting; or how utterly, in too many cases, he fails to rise to the height of the majesty of the teachings which it is his duty to promulgate."

It is not a little suggestive to find the secular Press thus wisely instructing the modern pulpit. Clearly the Gospel is not worn threadbare yet, although some learned pedants would have us think otherwise.

PRISON MISSION WORK.

ON the 16th inst. a new iron room was opened by Mr. Geo. Hatton in connection with his work among discharged prisoners at Wandsworth Prison. It is situated on the side of the road leading from the prison gates to the main road. On this occasion about forty poor men and women just discharged sat down to a good mug of coffee and bread and butter, and had kind words spoken and the Gospel preached to them by Rev. G. Gilbert, Captain Colville, and Mr. Hatton, after which a number signed the pledge, and made their way to their friends.

This is the third place now occupied for breakfasting those who leave the prisons, and for which the St. Giles' Christian Mission is dependent upon God and the liberality of Christians for support. It is a noble work, resulting in rescuing hundreds, yea, thousands, from the paths of crime and helping them to help themselves.

Mr. Hatton commenced work among the criminal classes February, 1877, and started prison-gate work at Coldbath-fields June, 1878. The estimated number of men discharged from there up to December 31, 1882, was 36,244; 19,525 of whom accepted an invitation to breakfast, and 8000 signed the Temperance pledge. At Holloway, from May 4, 1882, to the end of the year 3649 were discharged, 2144 of whom came to breakfast, and 751 signed the pledge.

The number of cases taken in hand by the society and assisted during the year 1882 was 1263, dealt with thus: Sent to sea, 70; employment found for, 191; fares paid home for, 21; sent to Colonies, 24; relieved with money, clothes, tools, &c., 957 — total, 1263. Two hundred convicts after serving long terms have been sent to them from the various convict establishments since January, 1883. Their gratuities have been used for them to the best advantage, and employment found for the greater portion. There is a comfortable Christian Home at Brooke-street, Holborn, to accommodate men on discharge, having in connection with it Bible classes, experience meetings and Gospel services, &c.

THE REVIVAL IN IRELAND.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.]

THE WORK AT LIMERICK.

MY communication of last week embraced five out of the six days originally fixed as the limit of the Mission in Limerick. Happily, however, for the good cause in that city, the meetings have been carried on by Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan, after the other evangelists took their leave, an arrangement which has been attended with the happiest results, as will be seen.

Mr. Moody's last day was perhaps the crowning day of all. Two crowded gatherings in the theatre, a second meeting and one for inquirers in the afternoon, an overflow and three after-meetings in the evening—all these make up a good total for a single day's work. Mr. Moody's words on each occasion were with demonstration of the Spirit and with power. To see the dense throng in the evening hanging on the stirring and solemn words of the preacher as he warned those who, like Agrippa of old, were but "almost persuaded" of the terrible danger of their position; then to see so many all over the congregation stand up for prayer in response to the closing invitation, was to witness a spectacle of rare and indescribable interest. I do not think the scene will ever be effaced from my memory. On another page I have given some account of the meeting that evening for young men, conducted by Major Whittle.

Mr. Moody's meeting with the inquirers in the Wesleyan Chapel was by far the largest yet held, and probably the most fruitful. The meeting for children in the theatre, under the guidance of Mr. Baxendale, Congregational minister, was also one of great interest.

Owing to slight indisposition, Mr. Sankey was unable to be in his accustomed place on the two closing days at Limerick. Mrs. McGranahan was also suffering from an affection of the throat, and was kept a close prisoner. The burden of leading the song thus fell on Mr. McGranahan, who, I need not say, was equal to the occasion. He had the very competent assistance of Miss Harriet Longbottom, a leading member of the choir, whose rich, penetrating voice and clear enunciation materially helped in presenting to the people the Gospel in song. The choir, I may add, was a very excellent one; their singing and deportment elicited Mr. Sankey's hearty commendation. He will not soon forget his helpers at Limerick, nor will hey easily forget him, all the more that he was privileged to be the channel of spiritual blessing to several of their number. What I have said of the capability of the choir applies with still greater force to the active friends who undertook the general arrangements of the meetings; the unobtrusive yet complete and effective methods adopted for securing the comfort of the audience and the good order of the proceedings, added to the business-like promptitude with which suggestions were carried out, contributed in no slight degree, as I believe, to the success of the meetings. I could say much more on this subject, but in deference to the feelings of Mr. Ferguson, Mr. Fitt, and the rest, I forbear: the singular devotion and sagacity they displayed will have full reward in the overflowing tide of blessings which they prayed, and worked for, and expected.

Since their arrival in Cork the hearts of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey have been cheered by the good news that has come to them of the continued growth of the revival in Limerick. A friend there wrote on October 17, the day after Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey left for Cork: "The work here goes on well. Last night the theatre was quite well filled at the evening meeting, and, 'best of all, God was with us.' The word spoken by Major Whittle was with power. At the close of the sermon the inquirers were divided, Mr. McGranahan taking the women to the Wesleyan Chapel, the men remaining at the theatre. Scores testified for Christ, many saying that Monday night (Mr. Moody's last meeting) was the time of their decision. Many others said they would then and there decide. There were also a large number of cases of decision at the women's meeting, most of them apparently young ladies from the county families round about. The text from which Major Whittle spoke was, 'Be sure your sin will find you out;' and the Lord seemed to be searching many hearts. Some came to the evangelists to talk about how to make confession of secret sins and restitution of false gains. More middle-aged men seemed reached than any other class. Almost all the young men who have attended the meetings give good evidence of having been converted."

Another Limerick friend writes to me on Friday last:—"On Wednesday the afternoon meeting was good, and the night meeting largely attended. I think about three hundred men must have remained for the after-meeting, and the bulk of them stood up, and professed to have received Christ as their Saviour. Last night the city was rather disturbed, canvassing for election having begun yesterday. It was thought right to hold no meeting in the Wesleyan Chapel. All were invited to remain that could in the theatre, and very many rose for prayer. Major Whittle gave a number of texts, making short comments on each, and it was a very solemn, happy meeting. Conversions are very numerous. Sometimes my office is turned into an inquiry-room; at other times I have to listen to young converts confessing some fault committed against God and man. Yesterday one dear young fellow came to say, 'You are the last man I would wish to know that I committed such and such a fault. I thought that telling you would do me good, and it has done so.' I am cheered every hour by hearing or seeing someone brought into the light. It is the best time that has ever come for Limerick that I know of."

A NOBLE CALLING.

In the course of the meetings at Limerick, I became acquainted with a circumstance that will, I am sure, be of interest to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN—possibly it may convey a message to some of them. A gentleman—I am not authorised to give his name— has lately made it his business to follow up Messrs. Moody and Sankey as they go from place to place, in order to help in directing the inquirers to an intelligent acceptance of Christ. Out of the twenty-one towns in England visited by the evangelists last winter and spring, this good friend put in an appearance at seventeen, paying his own expenses and giving himself heart and soul to the work of harvesting in the inquiry-room. He keeps a list of those who he has reason to believe are converted, and endeavours by correspondence to encourage and strengthen them in the divine life. I have heard that he has been known to go fifty miles into the country to look after one individual case. At the time I met with him in Limerick he had over 200 names on his list, and as he was busy at work there the catalogue must by this time have received many additions. What a noble and glorious calling! Are there not at least a thousand well-to-do Christians throughout Great Britain without special home ties who could go and do likewise? The following letter received by this friend from a young man in Limerick will be read with interest on its own account and also from the glimpse it gives of what may be accomplished by this kind of service:—

"My dear Sir,—Your kind letter to hand this morning after the early meeting in the theatre, I felt a little out of sorts, but on studying your letter I felt much comforted. You seem to have taken note of my weak points and given me appropriate texts for my guidance. I can never thank you enough for being instrumental in leading me to Christ. On reaching home on Friday evening I told my brother all about the inquiry-meeting, and of my having stood up to be prayed for. On Saturday evening I told my mother, and to-day, at the meeting for young men over Mr. Russell's office, I openly confessed Christ. I thank God for giving me courage to do so, and you for so earnestly entreating me to do it. My brother stood up to be prayed for to-day at the afternoon meeting, and has promised to stay for the inquiry-meeting to-night. If he accepts Christ we will all be in the fold, as I found out last night that my sister, who is only thirteen years old, has been a Christian for some time. How can I thank you for the time and trouble it must have taken you to select so many texts suitable to my case. It is the Master's work, and He will reward you.—Your grateful friend, ——."

One cannot well help being thrilled by the perusal of such a letter as that; how rare must be the joy that now pervades that Christian household. I am glad to be able to supply the postscript that is needed to make the story complete. I was told by one who knows him that the brother referred to in the letter was among those who declared their acceptance of the Saviour at the young men's meeting that I have elsewhere endeavoured to describe. In the writer's own simple but expressive words, all are now "in the fold."

THE OPENING DAYS AT CORK.

Said one friend to another as the first morning meeting in Cork was dispersing: "That Moody is a wonderful man." "To be sure, yes; a thousand men rolled into one." "His words are so simple and so direct." "And what is most remarkable of all is this: he seems always to be at white heat; the fire never burns low." I do not repeat this conversation to glorify the evangelist; that were as abhorrent to him as it would be distasteful to your readers. I only give it as a feasible explanation of the great things that God uses him to accomplish. His advice to young converts to "go right at it all the while," is nothing more than he carries into practice for himself. The opening of the Cork Mission has furnished an illustration of this. It was at first intended that Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan should be at Cork throughout all the ten days, and that the former should conduct early morning meetings on the week days, allowing Mr. Moody to reserve his strength for the afternoon and evening. As the awakening in Limerick assumed such proportions, it was deemed essential that Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan should abide in that city for some days longer and help to consolidate the work. But the announcements for Cork had been publicly made, and rather than seem to break faith with the community, Mr. Moody at once stepped into the breach, and undertook all the three meetings daily.

Cork has a Protestant population, I am informed, of some 9000, out of a total of 70,000. Taking this into account the attendance at the meetings has been somewhat remarkable. The very first afternoon the spacious Assembly-room in South Mall, enlarged as it is by the erection of a substantial gallery, was quite filled up. The audience seemed to represent, from a social point of view, the best people in the community. In the evenings the room has been packed almost too closely, and an adjoining ante-room has been brought into requisition. No doubt there have been goodly contingents from the country towns and districts. At one of the morning meetings a local pastor prayed earnestly for those who had come or were coming from Tralee, Mallow, Skibereen, Bandon, Bantry, Kinsale, and elsewhere. This influx of strangers, from more or less distant parts, is one of the most interesting and encouraging features of the work of these evangelists. Much good springs from the meetings in this way that is never generally known, or only comes to light by accident. As for instance, the other day here in Cork Mr. Sankey, on coming out of the afternoon meeting, encountered a tall, well-favoured stripling, whom he recognised as having seen at Mallow Junction when returning by rail from Limerick to Cork. Almost at the same moment he entered into conversation with a young lady who turned out to be the sister of this youth. Mr. Sankey was deeply interested and touched when he presently discovered that these young people, with other two of the same family, had gone from Mallow to the Dublin meetings last January, and that all four had then and there been converted. Now they had come to Cork to share in the blessing and receive a fresh impetus for the Christian testimony they may be enabled to bear in their own circle. Facts such as these are constantly cropping up, and their accumulated force is overwhelming, as proving the permanence of the work. In one of the Limerick meetings a man was met with who had come a long distance to be present, and who said he was converted some thirteen years ago by reading one of Mr. Moody's sermons in a religious newspaper. All these things are of course very cheering to the evangelists, and help to sustain them in their arduous endeavours.

The morning meetings to which I have alluded have been seasons of much spiritual refreshing. As Mr. Moody one day remarked, people would not come out at eight o'clock on a week-day morning unless they desired and expected blessing. He has certainly done his part in rendering them helpful. Morning after morning he has urged his fellow-Christians to the exercise of unwavering faith and untiring zeal in the effort to reach those who are without. He has strongly emphasised the importance of individual effort. "This world is not going to be saved wholesale. Single out your man and go for him. If one is not enough to reach him get forty; why not? We can afford to work day and night for ten days, if we only get one soul brought to the Saviour. Eternity alone can reveal the results that may come from the saving of a single soul." On the second and third mornings God's power to do the humanly impossible, was illustrated by an exposition of some of Christ's miracles, as recorded in the Gospels, as well as by striking cases of conversion that have come within his personal knowledge. In the requests for prayer, read at these morning meetings, the burdens of many hearts for the salvation of those dear to them have been revealed and presented to God. I hope, before the Mission closes, to find this stream of petitions changed into an ascending volume of praise.

Mr. Sankey, I am glad to say, has fully recovered from his temporary indisposition, and has been in splendid voice all the time since coming to Cork. Not having the aid of Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, or even of a local Christian singer, he has been thrown upon his own resources, but these are ample enough for any contingency. Many of the newer Songs and Solos have been sung by him with much acceptance and effect, but none of these seem to be so potent in reaching and moving the hearts of an audience as "The Ninety and Nine," which still holds a unique place in the proclamation of the Gospel through the channel of tuneful melody. One day at Cork he sang a solo that was perfectly new to me, though it is in the published collection —No. 290—"Hide thou me." It came with very marked appropriateness. Mr. Moody had been dwelling in his sermon on the promise by Christ of rest to the weary and heavy-laden. He had related, with that inimitable skill and pathos that give such a charm to his narratives, even though heard for the hundredth time, the incident about a dying child who said she was so tired she would not care to hear the music of heaven or walk its golden pavements; when her grief-stricken mother placed the head of the little sufferer on her bosom, and pressed it to her breast, the response came, "Oh, mamma, that is what I want: if Jesus will only take me to his bosom and let me rest." How fitly came in the beautiful lines of Miss Fanny Crosby in this hymn, especially the closing verse, which runs:—

"In the lonely night of sorrow,
Hide Thou me;
Till in glory dawns the morrow,
Hide Thou me.
When we're nearing Jordan's billow,
Let thy bosom be my pillow;
Hide me, oh Thou Rock of Ages,
Safe in Thee."

The preliminary half-hour of sacred song that is now almost an integral part of these meetings has been a very happy and profitable season from time to time. Many of the less known hymns are sung over till the congregation are familiar with them, the variations in the method of singing introduced by Mr. Sankey adding to the interest of the occasion. The icy reserve that too often pervades a strange audience is broken down, while the hearts of the people are softened and prepared for the more direct Gospel messages that follow. The wonderful acceptance that these Gospel songs have found all over the land had a striking and unexpected illustration here one day last week. Mr. Sankey was taking his walks abroad in the early part of the day when he chanced against an elderly man, with whom he entered into conversation. This friend conducted the evangelist to a Mission school, in some remote part of the town, where he found a number of poor children being taught by a bright Irish lass. Mr. Sankey asked if the children would sing to him; to his surprise these waifs of the city at once sang out in succession, without reference to book, several of the newest and best hymns in his collection, one of them being the solo he had given in the Assembly-rooms the previous night.

The impression made at the meetings by Mr. Moody's earnest expositions and appeals and the sermons in song, has been visibly deepening as the days passed by. On the principle of "slow but sure," the Gospel net has not been too quickly drawn. Three evening after-meetings have been held this week in the Scots' Church, which is near by the rooms. The number of inquirers has probably appeared small compared with the size of the audiences, but there is every indication that the work is deepening, and that the later meetings will see a great flocking into the kingdom.

Much cannot be said in favour of the intelligence of the local newspaper reports of Mr. Moody's addresses, except in the case of the Cork Constitution, whose representative has given excellent summaries of the words of the evangelist. Mr. Moody's person and manner of address have been described often enough, but the following sketch given in the Constitution will, I am sure, be read with interest, even by those who know him best:—

"Upon this, his first visit to Cork, a short description of his appearance and manner may not be out of place. In stature he is considerably above the middle height, and his frame, powerfully built, seems capable of immense toil. His voice is strong, clear, and ringing. He speaks with remarkable rapidity, and his utterance exhibits that peculiar intonation which is associated with the other side of the Atlantic. His style is simple, forcible, and practical. He enforces his point with the energy of a lawyer pressing conviction upon the mind of a jury. There is no attempt at ornament or eloquence so called, or rather there is a natural eloquence capable of carrying away the hearer by its simple unadorned power. Mr. Moody uses anecdotes, always telling, and bearing upon his argument. Some quaint and vigorous expressions provoke a smile by their picturesque imagery, and it is evident that Mr. Moody thinks but lightly of dignity. He is a man possessed of great natural powers both of mind and body, and the simple grandeur of untaught eloquence, burning zeal, self devotion, and untiring energy, command an admiration and respect which has increased more and more since his arrival in this country eight years ago. Of course no report could give anything like an adequate representation of Mr. Moody's addresses. All that which came from the magic power of the living voice, the earnest appealing tones, the quaint touches of humour, the untaught genius of one of nature's born orators and leaders of men, the magnetism of that strong, powerful, rugged frame, are, and must be, wanting in print. A man of the people, sprung from the people, and appealing to the heart and consciences of the people, he must be heard and seen by one who would desire to see the power he possesses."

SUNDAY'S MEETINGS.

In a short telegram I cannot possibly convey any just idea of the meetings of Sunday last, and their importance in relation to this special effort. Like the previous Sunday at Limerick, it proved to be the turning point of the Mission; it was a time not only of much sowing, but of gladsome and abundant reaping. The early morning meeting was a good beginning to an ever memorable day. Mr. Moody's winged words on Grace, for pardon, for holy living and fruitful service, strongly affected all hearts. These impressions were deepened by Mr. Sankey's song sermons, "Are your windows open towards Jerusalem?" and "Must I go empty handed?"

The afternoon meeting in the Assembly-rooms was crowded with a magnificent audience of nearly two thousand women, a truly remarkable sight in catholic Cork. The evangelist's address on "Trust" was a model of simple yet powerful and skilful presentation of Gospel truth. The after-meetings in the Scotch Church were large; many hearts, melted by the power of the message, determined henceforth to trust and not be afraid. It was a time of the right-hand power of the Most High. The evening meeting of men was equally crowded, and the sermon on "Excuses" had a wonderfully subduing power over the audience. Numbers flocked to the after-meeting, and boldly signified their intention to accept the invitation to "the marriage supper of the Lamb."

There were some very interesting cases among the inquirers, but I must reserve details for my next communication. Many visitors from the country places were at the meetings during the day who will carry back to their homes and districts new-found light and life. Monday morning's meeting was the largest yet held on a week-day. Mr. Moody spoke on "Confession" and "Restitution," showing the peace of mind that comes from repairing wrongs done to others. Major Whittle conducts the morning meetings the rest of the week.

ZENANA MEDICAL MISSION.

ON Monday, the 15th instant, a valedictory meeting was held at Mildmay Conference Hall to bid farewell to ten ladies who have devoted themselves to Mission work in India, and are sailing in a few days.

Rev. Prebendary Wilson, D.D., referred to the present condition of women in India, and more especially ladies of the upper class, who are kept in complete seclusion in what is not so much a home as a prison to them. Quickly and steadily the Zenana Mission has been working for thirty years amongst these women and ladies of India, bringing the influence of education to bear upon them, and establishing schools.

Mr. W. T. Paton read the instructions of the Committee to the missionaries regarding their appointed field of labour and their co-workers in India, and the Rev. J. Edmond, D.D., gave a parting address, and referring to the story of the little Israelitish maid, who was taken captive by the Syrians and carried to the house of Naaman, where she served her Lord, and her earthly master. In a blessed sense, these ladies are captives, for they go there drawn by Christ, they are taken captive through the heart. They go to a strange land taking with them the blessed light of the Gospel, to illumine the homes and brighten the lives of the women in that heathen land.

Rev. Gordon Calthrop, M.A., also gave an address. He based his remarks on Acts i. 8, and said that these were words of the deepest importance to all who were engaged in the Master's work and seeking the advancement of his kingdom on earth, and he wished them to ring in the ears of the missionaries now going to India. Mr. Paton then referred to the financial condition of the Society, and said that another lady was ready to go to India, but the necessary funds were wanting. If £200 were raised, this missionary would also be sent. From all parts the cry comes to sends more labourers.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

THE usual monthly meeting for workers at the Home of Industry was a time of great refreshing from the Master's presence.

Mr. G. Soltau spoke a few words on "I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, the God of Jacob." The God of Abraham, the man of extraordinary faith; a nobleman by birth, and grand by nature. A man who always surrendered himself and all he had to God, but was no loser, as none are who do so. In Gen. xii. he left country, kindred, father's house, but got (in v. 2) the promise of three rewards. For country, "I will make of thee a great nation;" kindred, "I will make thy name great;" father's house, "In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." On one side of the scale he put country, kindred, father's house; in the other God, and down went the scale on God's side. "The God of Isaac." An ordinary man; nothing particular about him; a plodder, working on silently; but whatsoever his hand found to do, he did with his might. "The God of Jacob." The faithless, bargaining man; he could not believe that God could be so kind as to bless him for nothing. He valued God's blessing at a tenth of all he was and had; but he passes off the scene a dear old pilgrim blessing God. The Lord make us like Abraham, who believed in the living God. Those who know God best agonise the least, have the least toil, and the most success in their work.

Prayer was offered for Miss Macpherson, who is hoping to sail for England the end of this month. Extracts from her letters we give below. Two ladies about to sail for China as missionaries were commended to God in prayer.

"My Dear Comrades,—I trust it is well with you, and that you are realising the truth of Prov. viii. 21: 'I will fill their treasures.' He became poor that you might be rich. Step out you wealthy ones into the great pool around you, and the Holy Ghost make you wise to win souls. It was my plan to have been again in the front of the battle with you ere this, but the removal of the Home has given two full months' work. The Lord willing, my hope is to be with you ere Workers' Meeting in November.

"We are praying for grace and wisdom to be given you in rescuing another band of destitute little ones for the farm-house homes in Canada. God bless the little girls you have already taken in; their lives, if spared, will henceforth be no more sad and lonely. Mr. Thom has just returned from a six weeks' tour among our children, and has visited many of those who were once neglected and lonely. L. W. was one, a motherless child, whose father, a sad drunkard, left her and her brother to get food how they could. Now, Mr. Thom meets her on her way to school, neatly and comfortably clothed, laden with bag and basket, full of material for mind and body; he dismounts, and by the wayside has a little talk with her about the children's Saviour, and asks for his blessing to rest upon her. He then proceeds to the house of the kind people who have adopted L.; they are sincere Christians, and he is confident she will be trained in the fear of the Lord. He bids us be cheered in our rescue work, for God is in it on both sides of the sea.

"Here is another case: J. D. was born in one of our London workhouses; when at the age of nine years his drunken mother took him out to tramp the streets and assist her in begging. J. did not like this, and threatened to run away from her. He came to us a bright, intelligent little boy, delighted at the thought of going to Canada. When he had been a twelvemonth on the other side the mother suddenly turns up and seeks to get the boy at all costs under her influence again. J., however, settles the matter himself; the remembrance of her ill-treatment, contrasted with his present happiness in a well-disciplined home, enables him to say to his mother, 'I have been a year with these kind people, who treat me well and send me to school. I shall stay where I am.' J. is no longer a wee pale-faced boy, but rosy and hearty, and growing in intelligence day by day.

"We were delighted in hearing of another boy, G. J., who has grown into a fine tall lad of fifteen years. His master is postmaster in the village, and at the same time carries on the trade of blacksmith. Whilst helping in the work of the post-office, G. has become a favourite with all in the district, and he now has the offer of learning to be a blacksmith, which is a very profitable trade in this country.

"As our boys attain to manhood, supervision from the home ceases, and they are on their own responsibility. One such is C. B., the son of a poor widow, who, at the age of nine years, was mixed up with bad companions, who had taught him to swear, and were leading him speedily on the road to ruin. A miserable and most unattractive-looking boy. On arriving in Canada, he was placed out with a kind-hearted farmer, and in this homestead he has been sheltered and watched over for eleven years. At the age of nineteen years, he is now receiving twelve dollars a month as wages, besides board and washing."

THE PURITY CRUSADE.

DEAR SIR,—May I be allowed to appeal, through the columns of your paper, to all Christians throughout our country to take part in "The Purity Crusade"? I have for the last eighteen months, as opportunity offered, been giving addresses to men only; but after much more careful investigation and actual personal experience in the terrible evils now besetting our country, I am more than ever convinced that there is but one course, and that is, to appeal to the manhood of England to rise up against this hydra-headed serpent-evil, whilst yet there is time to save God's England—as Milton delighted to call her—from becoming the land of child-harlots.

I have forwarded you a copy of my pledge-card, which I shall be much obliged if you will insert under this letter, and by which you will see that I contemplate an aggressive, not a silent policy. I believe that with God's blessing we shall rouse such national indignation, that it shall be made hard, instead of as now, easy to do wrong, and that sin shall be marked, instead of, as now, hushed and covered over.

I appeal to all who value and love the honour of the women and girls of England, to enlist under this banner, and if they will properly arrange men's meetings (none under eighteen years of age admitted) and invite me to address them, I will endeavour to respond to the call, and I will bring before them, to the best of my ability, the state of affairs and of the English law, and the proposed remedy for this evil. I shall be glad to address women's meetings also, as to their part in this great crusade.

I am thankful to say we are now making arrangements for a meeting of men on a very large scale for Southampton and neighbourhood early in December. It is a question which concerns every minister of the Gospel and every right-thinking man throughout our land. I appeal as an Englishman to every brother Englishman, both as patriot and Christian, to side with me, for God's sake and for woman's sake.

THE PURITY CRUSADE.

"Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life."—Prov. iv. 23.

"For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, ... these are the things which defile a man."—Matt. xv. 19.

Pledge.

(1) I promise, by the help of God, that I will keep myself pure.

(2) That I will discountenance and protest against all obscene jests, songs, and conversation.

(3) That I will protect the honour of all women, as jealously as I would guard that of my mother or sister.

(4) That I will do all in my power to enlist others in this Crusade against impurity, and the shameful degradation of women and children.

Signed, ...

A PLEA FOR WORKERS.

FROM various quarters of France, where we have stations in full operation, we hear a call for lady workers. The evangelists, in Brittany, in Montauban, in Toulouse, in other cities, write that their hands are full, they have more to do than they can well accomplish, they need help. The women, especially in the provinces, can hardly be reached except by ladies: in quarters where it is not allowed to a woman to attend a public meeting without being suspiciously looked upon, it is necessary that there should be meetings especially for them, held by persons of their own sex. For house to house visitation, for children's work (now of such importance in France with the new laws concerning public instruction), for teaching the hymns to the people, for visiting the sick in the hospitals, and in a thousand other ways, the ministry of Christian women will be as successful as that of the men among us.

We have had proofs of it. Many are the English, American, and even French ladies, who can testify to the blessedness of their work, the encouragement they have found in it, and the very few hindrances they have met with.

Whether in Paris or the provinces, ladies will be treated politely by everyone. The fiercest freethinker, who, perhaps, would beat out of doors the Christian minister who would dare to come and speak to his wife, will allow a lady to speak to her, and will perhaps listen also.

In Marseilles, a beautiful work is being carried on among the soldiers by a lady. She has a room opened for them, with 50 to 80 attendances every night. They read and write. She never interdicted smoking, yet they never smoked in her presence. When, in one or two instances, one of them came in with his lighted pipe, they soon put him right—without being told—merely out of respect for the lady. She certainly has more authority over them, and a deeper influence, than ministers could have.

We therefore earnestly plead with the Christian women of England, so many of whom have means of their own, and no special work to do. We lay the cause of the women of France before them. We ask, is it not your duty to come and help us, seeing that, at this time, there is no country more open to the Gospel than this. Come, not to Paris only; but be also willing to go into the country towns, where there is as much work to do, and where, as far as visiting is concerned, the work is easier. Be willing to go wherever the Master sends you.

France is not a wild country. Many are those who come and dwell among us for pleasure sake. The last census shows that there is a population of one million of foreigners in France; i.e., 2·60 per cent. If only the half of those foreigners were Christians, what a blessed invasion this would be! Come, come in large numbers, with great faith and great expectations, come and help us to conquer this country for our own God and his Son.

SANDHURST.—A new Mission-room has just been opened at Sandhurst, Kent, by Mr. Spencer Walton, whose labours have resulted in sinners being converted and believers built up. Many stood up at the close of the Mission to bear thankful testimony to the blessing they had received.

NEW FRENCH MAGAZINE.—La Bonne Nouvelle is a new French monthly journal that we most cordially recommend for distribution among the French people, and also to English families where the French language is even but slightly known. It proclaims the Good News in the clearest and most attractive manner. It also records the progress of the McAll Conférences and the work of the missionary boat. As far as our knowledge goes this paper meets a want that must have been felt, inasmuch as it aims mainly at showing the way of salvation in a simple, clear, and persuasive manner. It may be obtained for 3 fr. 25 cent., about 2s. 8d., at 86, Boulevard de Versailles, à St. Cloud, près Paris.

ALONE WITH THEE.

ALONE with Thee in the busy throng
Of crowded mart that rings with song.
Alone with Thee when music swells
Along the arches, or softly dwells.

Alone with Thee in the whirl of life,
'Mid daily pressure and daily strife;
In the quiet home, with its hourly care,
With its constant calls, its leisure rare.

Alone with Thee ere the morning breaks,
And the busy world to life awakes;
Alone with Thee when the shadows fall,
And darkness bringeth a hush on all—
When work is over and Nature still,
And silence reigneth o'er vale and hill.

With Thee, my Lord, when life is done,
When toil is ended—the battle won;
When the golden city is reached at last,
And before thy Throne the crowns are cast.
Then the endless days of Eternity
Shall be ever spent, my Lord with Thee.

NEW BETHEL, GLASGOW.

ABOUT 1,000 people assembled on Saturday last to witness the interesting ceremony of laying the memorial-stone of the new Bethel for sailors now being erected in the Govan-road, on the south side of the Clyde. The sailors in port took a lively interest in the proceedings, and formed themselves into a procession at the Sailors' Home, and marched to the place where the new Bethel is being built. They got a large lifeboat fixed on a truck, and it was manned by a dozen of the boys from the Cumberland training ship, which gave quite an additional interest to the proceedings. The building was then dedicated to God in prayer, after which, Captain Smith, in the name of the Directors of the Glasgow Seamen's Friend Society, presented Mr. Alexander Allan, of the "Allan Line," with a silver trowel, and he laid the stone in the usual manner.

Rev. Dr. Somerville, who has recently returned from Africa, Rev. John Riddell, and others, afterwards gave short addresses commending the work carried on by the Society. The new premises are intended to replace a rented hall which has become far too small for the numbers attending. On the ground floor there is a large reading-room and library, a recreation room, and accommodation for a handsome coffee room, while the upper floor is entirely occupied as a chapel, fitted up to seat 500 to 600 people; a missionaries' house is also provided at the premises, and rooms which may be used for distressed seamen. There are upwards of 1000 sailors' families living within a few hundred yards of the new premises, many of whom do not attend any place of worship, and it is expected that not only the sailors but many of their families will be brought under the sound of the Gospel, and be led to Jesus through this extended effort.

The cost of the building will be £3000, ground £2000, and furnishing £500, in all £5500. Towards this sum the shipowners and merchants have already contributed upwards of £4000, leaving £1500 still required to open the premises free of debt. There are many Scotchmen throughout the world who are interested in the sailors visiting their native land, and it is hoped they will lend their aid in erecting this place of refuge for the sailors.

The chapel on the north side of the river, which has been open since 1824, is still proving a place of great blessing, and the institute and free reading room adjoining are much appreciated. Eight agents are constantly employed among the sailors of the port. Any help will gladly be received by Mr. Richard H. Hunter, Hon. Treasurer, 27, Jamaica-street, Glasgow.

AMONGST THE KABYLES.

NOW and then we go forth into fresh regions, amidst the savage grandeur of the scenery of this country, so wonderfully diversified with mountain and valley, and having a character so peculiarly its own. We started, ere sunrise, with mules, and our two faithful guides, both of whom we consider to be sincere inquirers; one insisted on coming from attachment to us. After morning prayer in Kabyle in the open air, we passed along the foot of a range of mountains to observe the position of villages, many of the inhabitants of which we knew, and who had pressed us to visit them and eat couscous.

Our principal inquiries were as to their accessibility, and the supply of water, and the grouping of villages, so as to find a convenient centre for further work; prudential reasons lead me to omit the names of places we pass through. After these observations, we turned our way towards the magnificent and weird and still wilder scenery of the Jur Jura range. When the sun was at the hottest, we sought rest and shelter for man and beast, and found a wide-spread tree, tethered the mules, and gathered forage, whilst the men went to a distant stream for water; there they found a group of Kabyles, and they brought them all back with them, men, women, and children, who seated themselves under our tree. We treated them first for various maladies, and then preached the precious Gospel to those who had never before heard it. We pushed forward, but the heat was almost unbearable. I cried unto the Lord, and suddenly He raised a breeze, which helped us along. Blessed be his holy name for loving-kindness and tender mercies; but, being much fatigued, we were glad to arrive at a village and find shelter under the shade of a gourbi, or hut made of branches, similar to all those of the village. Their houses had been destroyed during the insurrection, and they were not able to erect better. Our faithful helpers went into the village, and invited all the sick that they could find, and we had another large open-air gathering for healing and preaching.

As the "evening shades prevailed," we pushed on our way, as no food, not even a cup of coffee, was to be had there. Amidst the darkness and along the edge of precipices the Lord guided us on our way; our mules never once stumbled, and after our fifteen hours' journey, we were thankful to find a refuge, rest, and food. After parting with men and mules, we determined to climb some of those villages poised on the top of steep hills. We break in upon them to their great astonishment; we ask for the Djemaâ, or native parliament-house, where the elders are mostly found; the men gather round us, and the children too, whilst the women and girls look on at a distance, and presently they hear the Gospel of John read in their native Kabyle, from the mouth of an Englishman. We then get the help of a French-speaking young Kabyle to interpret our words, and after singing Ased rér aisa, our "Come to Jesus," which greatly impresses them, I conclude with reading the Lord's Prayer in Kabyle. This kind of intercourse, and these little meetings, we repeat in other villages, and find how remarkably accessible the people are. We never meet with objections.

At one village we were invited to enter the mosque, but we preferred gathering them under the wide shade of vine trees supported by trellis-work. We shall never forget the scene. The old men sitting on the ground in the middle, the young men next, and the boys standing, forming a circle around, whilst the women and girls looked on over a wall. Oh, what a grand opportunity to get at Mohammedans in this way; to have the precious Word of God read in their hearing, and a prayer uttered, and a hymn of invitation to the Saviour, and explanations by one of themselves, all received with marked respect and deep attention. The women smile, and frequently kiss my hand, and thrust their babies into my arms. Some of the children fly from fear, but a soldi exhibited soon brings them near. What a work among the Kabyles for an itinerant medical missionary! I have found it very hard work for a woman, but, praise the Lord, I am used to rough it, and thus suffer less than others would, and the Lord refreshes our souls in his work. Distances, however, are very deceptive. We love and pity these neglected, though noble people. We give a Gospel in Arabic to Marabouts, and everyone who can read it. We stop groups on the road, and repeat at least John iii. 16 once or twice over. A keeper of a mosque reads and prizes it, and says, "Our lands pass away, our bodies perish, but," keeping the book, "this endures for ever."

Here are some of the remarks we have heard from the lips of Kabyles, after talking and reading with them: "You know better than I do; tell me how sin is to be forgiven." Another keeper of a mosque said: "I believe Jesus is the Son of God." A Kabyle: "Tell me, then, what am I to do to be saved?" A diligent attendant at the mosque said, after hearing of the love of Jesus, "How I long to see Him; I will leave my work at any time to come and hear you." Another: "What you tell me makes me tremble; I never heard anything like it before in my life; it penetrates me like a knife." One said: "We are very ignorant, you can teach us; we regard you (speaking to my husband) as a father." "Thank you! thank you!" is always repeated when the Gospel is explained. It was asked, "We have, then, no need to fear offending Mohammedans?" "Oh, no; what you say is what we want." "We love you, because you satisfy the wants of our aching souls." "Our ideas are being thoroughly changed.' L'Agha, Algiers, will always reach us.

THE SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

MEETINGS in support of this old Society, which has renewed its youth under the vigorous secretaryship of Capt. J. Kearney White, were held in connection with the Clifton Conference, and subsequently at Weston-super-Mare.

The Earl of Cavan presided on each occasion, and the meetings were also addressed by Canon Ffoliott, of Portrush, Rev. J. Ormiston, Mr. R. C. Morgan, and Capt. Kearney White.

Testimony was borne by the other speakers to the tact, efficiency, and Christian character of the Scripture-readers, and the Society was earnestly commended to the sympathy, prayer, and support of all who desire the welfare of Ireland.

Canon Ffoliott said that the Scripture Readers' Society, in the providence of God, was a great work. The Reader went out early in the morning, and he spent his whole time in reading the Bible in the cottages of Romanists and Protestants alike. A Roman Catholic would sometimes not meet the reader in his own house, but meet him in some other place. The work was carried on in a spirit of love, not of controversy. The readers were men who were selected after close examination, and to whose characters excellent testimony was borne; and they were men who were known to have done the work voluntarily before they were engaged by the Society. They were men of humble position in life, and consequently could do work that clergymen could not do. They were admitted at all hours to the cottages, and the people knew what they came for. If they wanted to give liberty to Ireland, if they wanted to raise the people in the scale of civilisation, they could do no better thing than educate them from the Word of God. The people would never be regenerated by coercive measures and penal laws; the proper way was to bring them under the influence of the Bible. That would make them attached to England, and that would be the way to make them fellow-soldiers under the banner of Christ.

WALSALL Y.M.C.A.—We are glad to report that this association has secured the services of Mr. Walter Jervis as general secretary, who has for several years been connected with the West Metropolitan Branch. Meetings were held for reception by the Committee and the public on Thursday, October 18, when Mr. Hind Smith, Exeter Hall, London, introduced Mr. Jervis and delivered an address on the objects and field of the Y.M.C.A.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

HASSOCKS, SUSSEX.—Mr. J. J. Scroggie has lately been holding a series of meetings at this place, which have been well attended, and resulted in a great spiritual awakening and blessing.

MRS. GILCHRIST, a lady who is well known in the south and east of Scotland for her Bible-readings, is holding a series of farewell meetings preparatory to leaving for Africa, where she intends to labour.

TAIN, ROSSHIRE, N.B.—Messrs. Milne and Robertson recently concluded a month of evangelistic meetings in their Gospel-tent here. They were well attended. Many souls were born again, and believers revived, a marked feature being the addresses to believers, part of every evening being devoted to them.

MR. BARRON, missionary to the Jews in Glasgow, himself a converted son of Israel, says that many of the Jews of that city are in a dissatisfied state. They fast and pray, but get no relief from sin. Many of them welcome him to their homes, but think that he can make Christians of them by some mechanical means.

ROECLIFFE.—At the request of the Vicar of Roecliffe, a lady evangelist from London, Miss Bassett by name, came down on the 11th October, and for nine nights the schoolroom has been filled with most attentive audiences, while with great power and yet with great tenderness this lady has proclaimed the truth as it is in Jesus. Many have been convinced of sin, and led to the Saviour. Heartily did the congregation sing on the last evening—October 19—"O happy day that fixed my choice." After-meetings were held each evening, and during the singing of hymns the anxious were spoken to. It is rarely in the Church of England that clergymen avail themselves of such help, but if anyone wants an awakening and revival in his parish, the best thing he could do would be to secure the services of such a lady.

GREENOCK.—A very interesting series of meetings for the young has just been concluded at Greenock, conducted by Mr. Alex. Mackeith, of Glasgow, and Messrs. Steel and Pratt, and were the largest they ever had. The first week was in the Town-hall, and the attendance of boys and girls averaged about 2500, while the second week was devoted to the West-end. The handsome new church of Dr. J. J. Bonar was filled by about 1200 of the youth of both sexes each evening of the services. The "Pilgrim's Progress," illustrated by limelight views, was the theme of Mr. Mackeith's addresses, pleasingly varied by hymns and texts. The after-meetings were very large, and more particularly at the Town-hall meetings, believed to be much blessed. Numbers professed to give their hearts to the Saviour, and some appeared to be deeply anxious, listening with tearful eyes as the sympathetic worker pointed them to the Saviour. Some who accepted Jesus about fifteen months ago were present to testify their unabated confidence in Him who loved them and gave himself for them.

DUNTOCHER.—I have just come from Duntocher, where we have had a wonderful time of blessing. Our first week was in the Established Church—Rev. John Rae's—and from the commencement we had the power and presence of the Lord awakening and saving precious souls, and as the meetings went on the interest deepened every night; and the Christian workers had the joy of pointing many to the Lord Jesus Christ. The second week we were in the United Presbyterian Church—Rev. Mr. Stark's—where we had large and fruitful meetings. Some nights two rooms were filled with anxious souls, and many most interesting conversions took place; one pleasing feature in connection with the work was the rich blessing the Christians got; many gave themselves up freely to the Lord to be possessed by Him and used more and more for his glory. We had a splendid beginning in Annan—crowded meetings on Lord's Day—and much blessing to the praise of his glory. Kindly ask the saints to pray for us. We are looking up to the King for rich blessing to come upon London this winter through your united effort. W. D. DUNN.

GRANGEMOUTH, N.B.—Mr. Richard Weaver has been labouring at this place, where there has been much blessing given; many souls have been brought to the Lord. He left there for Polmont, to work among the colliers, and thence to Leek, in Staffordshire, and on November 4 goes to Macclesfield.

GLASGOW.—Mr. Williams has been conducting a fortnight's evangelistic meetings at Partick, which have been the most remarkable, successful, and fullest they have ever had. On week nights the meeting was a full one, and on Sunday packed, every available space being filled. Many conversions have taken place and the Lord has shown his presence and blessing. The greatest change has been among the workers, numbering over eighty, who have experienced in the work a great deepening of spiritual life from the fervour and powerful teaching of Mr. Williams.

ALNWICK.—We have had times of blessing in connection with services held in the open air on Sunday evenings during the past months. We are a proverbially hard people in this northern district, but it has been delightful to see the eagerness manifested in hearing Gospel addresses from various friends on these occasions. Very considerable crowds have always gathered, and numbers of the openly careless have mingled among them. Mr. Wolfe has been the chief speaker, and he has exercised a remarkable power in connection with his labours as an evangelist here. There are changed lives in many ungodly men, and several have become regular attendants at the house of God. We trust to continue the services on suitable evenings, and look for the Lord's blessing in the quickening and ingathering of souls. J. B.

BANBURY.—A ten days' Mission has been conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne in connection with the Y.M.C.A. of this town, from the 6th to the 15th inst. The meetings during the Mission were well attended. A prayer-meeting was conducted daily from twelve to one o'clock. Numbers of Christian men and women met in the Y.M.C.A. rooms to ask for blessing. A series of Bible readings were well attended and richly blessed to many of God's children. About thirty have given in their names as having yielded their hearts to God, and we have every reason to believe that many who had not come within the range of figures have been awakened to a sense of their need of a Saviour. Mr. Thorne has also visited Duffield Y.M.C.A., and held a meeting to further the efforts of the Association.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

THE Synod of the Old Catholics, who seceded from the Church of Rome after the Vatican Council of 1870-1, assembled at Mayence, has passed a resolution recommending the celebration of the fourth centennial anniversary of the birth of Luther.—Le Christianisme au XIX. Siècle.

MONTMIRAIL.—The French Moravian Church, says the Journal Religieux de la Suisse Romande, has recently held its annual conference at Montmirail, and has come to the following resolution: "While recognising that the Lord sometimes uses extraordinary methods for the advancement of his kingdom in the hearts of men, and that there are in the Salvation Army sincere and living Christians, the Church of the Brethren cannot, however, under any condition, unite with this Corporation, whose system and methods seem to it contrary to the spirit of the Gospel. Faithful to its traditions,* it resolves to be subject to all human order for the love of the Lord. Consequently, it advises its members not to take part in any meetings forbidden by the Government, and invites them to seek edification elsewhere than among the Salvation Army."

* Count Zinzendorf wrote to the King and to the Minister with regard to the Herrnhut Colony: "As soon as the Government sees the least inconvenience from the Moravian Establishment in the country, or the least advantage from their removal, it has but to make it known to them, and they will be ready to leave the country in such a manner that the Court shall remain entirely free from the reproach of persecution."

THE Synod of the Reformed Churches of Bavaria has decided to celebrate, on Jan. 1, 1884, the fourth centennial anniversary of the birth of the Swiss Reformer, Zwingle.

UNDER a church belonging to the Franciscan monks, at Latrun, about three miles N.W. of Jerusalem, a Baptistry has been discovered. It is built in the form of a cross, being about five feet deep and ten feet long.—Der Wahrheitszeuge.

KING HUMBERT has on several occasions shown his sympathy with Protestant Mission-work in Italy. He has received missionary deputations very cordially, giving great attention to their representations, and making himself acquainted with their methods of teaching and working, giving a friendly shake of the hand, and wishing them God-speed on their departure.

THE Journal Religieux, published at Neuchâtel, contains an address to the Swiss people, signed by the Presidents of the Swiss Evangelical Alliance, in which, while refraining from any expression of opinion as to the mode of action of the Salvation Army, they protest against the treatment which it has received in their country, and urge upon their fellow-citizens the duty of maintaining the rights of conscience and of discountenancing any violation of religious liberty. They say that "liberty of conscience is one of the noblest conquests of civilisation, and the people who permit it to be interfered with seem to put in doubt the power of the truth."

RIO GRANDE, BRAZIL.—Rev. E. Vanerden writes on Sept. 7:—"Last Sunday a negress made a public profession of her faith in Jesus; her husband, who will obtain her freedom in a few months, as soon as he returns from the country, will also be received as a member. The church services are very well attended. Inquirers multiply, and the Gospel is spreading from one family to another. New faces are seen at every meeting. One man testified that he never had heard the truth before, and that he thanked the Lord for having shown him the simple way of salvation. An old woman, a slave, is always present and seems to take in everything that is said. A captain of the infantry has also been converted. The whole family is interested in the truth, and they are very zealous for the Lord. Friends, pray for us!"

JAPAN.—A remarkable conversion recently occurred in Japan; that of a Corean noble, named Ridjonteï. About a year ago a revolution took place in Corea, when Ridjonteï saved the life of the Queen, and the King proposed to reward him by elevating him to any rank he wished, to which he replied: "I desire only to be authorised to visit Japan, in order to become acquainted with the civilisation of that and other foreign countries." He went to Japan, and there he paid his first visit to a Japanese Christian, to whom he had a letter of introduction from an Ambassador, desiring to be informed about Christianity. What he heard interested him; then his first impressions were changed into profound convictions, and soon after he was baptized upon a confession of Christian faith. His greatest desire now was to take the Bible to his fellow-countrymen, and he courageously set to work to translate it into Corean. On being pressed to return home, he said, "I have a great work to do here; I have found something which will be worth, to my country and to myself, much more than railways, steamboats and telegraphs."—L'Evangéliste.

WELCOME HOME, CARDIFF.—Mr. George Lawrence thanks our readers for gifts of Gospel tracts and cards received for distribution among the sailors who visit his Home. He has many encouragements in seeking the salvation of the men of many nations who attend the meetings and lodge in the "Welcome," and will be glad of the prayers of Christians for a continuance of blessing amid many drawbacks and difficulties. He has room for eight more beds, and will be glad to possess them should any of the Lord's people be led to help him. A further supply of Gospels, &c., will be appreciated and acknowledged, if address be given. The address is, The Welcome Home, Cardiff.

Notices of Books, &c.

THE LITTLE PREACHER. By Mrs. PRENTISS. 1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. A story, charming for its simplicity, yet full of wisdom gained from the knowledge of God and of the human heart. A little book worthy of the author of "Stepping Heavenward."

KATHLEEN: THE STORY OF A HOME. By AGNES GIBERNE. Nisbet & Co. An excellent book for young ladies. Very attractively written, and inculcating lessons of self-denial and faithfulness to duty. "Kathleen" presents an example worthy of imitation.

We have received from Messrs. HILDESHEIMER & FAULKNER, 41, Jewin-street, a very large assortment of Christmas and New Year's cards. They contain a great variety of floral and other designs, humorous and serio-comic, artistic and æsthetic, sentimental and religious; few, however, of the latter character. Some of the designs are exceedingly tasteful and pretty, others we scarcely think justified the expense of production.

THE HIGHWAY OF HOLINESS. By W. HAY M. H. AITKEN. Shaw & Co. These sermons, by the well-known Mission preacher whose name they bear, are published as helps to the spiritual life, and are admirably suited to answer that end. They are none of them evangelistic, but all aim at the instruction and building up of believers. The order of their arrangement is such that, although preached at different times and places, they yet present a consecutive view of the important subject of Christian holiness in its source, nature, means, and end. Their style is argumentative, and yet deeply experimental and heart-searching, earnestness being stamped on every page. The book has our hearty commendation, as calculated to guide its readers into paths of true holiness, and to incite them to right action in seeking to attain it. The sermons on "The Perils of Antinomianism," and the "Peril of Worldliness" are specially worthy of careful attention.

DUSTY DIAMONDS CUT AND POLISHED. A Tale of City Arab Life and Adventure. By R. M. BALLANTYNE. Nisbet & Co. Mr. Ballantyne is well known as an attractive writer of books for boys. This volume, however, will be acceptable to both boys and girls. The "city arab" passes through most of the painful experiences common to his class, but at length finds his way, through the influence of a "chum," to Miss Macpherson's "Home of Industry" (spoken of in the book as the "Beehive"), and after a brief stay is taken out to Canada, eventually becoming a Canadian farmer. When young people read an interesting story, they often wistfully ask, "Is it true?" In the present case let the author answer the question for himself: "This tale is founded on well authenticated facts."

A DRUG IN THE MARKET; being some of the Songs of Zion that are not wanted. Written by JACOBUS, and published by Passmore & Alabaster. A book of good poems under such a title could not fail to make its mark; but although gorgeous binding, artistically designed, and the perfection of paper and printing go a long way to make a book attractive, the bulk of these poems are of too mediocre a quality to do more than prove the title to be aptly chosen. It is but right to add that they breathe a truly devotional spirit, and here and there may be found verses of merit. The pathetic preface, in which the author details the difficulties and discouragements he met with in getting his poems before the public, is alike amusing and instructive.

LUTHER AND THE CARDINAL. A Historic Biographical Tale. Price 5s. Religious Tract Society. This is a splendid contribution to the literature of the approaching Luther Celebration, being a story of engrossing interest from the German of Pastor Nietschman, of Halle, rendered into English by Julie Sutter. It is the history of Luther's conflict "with the most powerful of his adversaries, the Elector, Archbishop Cardinal Albrecht, of Mainz, Primate of all Germany, and next to Pope and Emperor the greatest man in the realm." Without a single fictitious character, this book is more history than most tales of its class; the biography is rather that of the Cardinal than of Luther. The memorable scene where the great Reformer boldly confronted his assembled enemies at the Diet of Worms is powerfully delineated, and it is shown how his straightforward boldness in denouncing crime and wrong, wherever found, checkmated the Cardinal in his schemes for self-aggrandisement, till Luther's power and influence so increased among his contemporaries, that his manly appeals to the pure Word of God were finally triumphant over the wily Cardinal, and ended in the ascendancy of Gospel preaching throughout the land.

CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE. By Rev. JAMES KING, M.A. Religious Tract Society. Contains a translation of the inscriptions, with a complete key to the hieroglyphics, comprising an explanation of the meaning of each symbolic character, as well as a life-sketch of the two famous monarchs under whose auspices they were executed. The latter of these, Rameses II., is usually identified with the Pharaoh "who knew not Joseph," the Sesostris of Greek writers. The book concludes with a graphic account of the recent discovery of the tombs of Egyptian monarchs at Deirel Bahara, among the treasures there discovered being the mummies of the two great emperors whose praises are sounded on our Needle.

NATURAL LAWS IN THE SPIRITUAL WORLD EXAMINED. By WM. WOODS SMYTH. Elliot Stock. This is a brief critique of Mr. Drummond's recent, but already well-known work We do not think it will seriously affect the highly favourable estimate of it which has been so generally formed among Christian people. That Mr. Woods Smyth has not even grasped the main thought of the book seems evident, from his attempt to set it aside by showing that the new dispensation is one, not of law, but of grace. He does not appear to perceive the difference between law as setting forth the duty of man, and law as the order of the Divine procedure. It is, of course, in the latter sense only that Mr. Drummond speaks of law in the spiritual world, and one of the excellences of his work is the clear light in which he sets the grace of the Gospel.

Starting as he does with this fundamental misconception, we need not wonder that Mr. Smyth should find objections along the whole course of the author's reasoning. We shall not follow these in detail, but shall only remark in general that his chief objections really lie not against what is new in the book, but against the old doctrines of grace which the book attempts to set in a new light. As an illustration of this, it is enough to call attention to the doctrine he sets in opposition to the "Biogenesis" of Mr. Drummond. He says that we "must make to ourselves a new heart and a right spirit; and God makes them, by furnishing us with all the moral suasion, by his truth and his spirit, necessary to accomplish these things" (p. 9). This is manifestly a different theology, not only from that of Mr. Drummond, but from that of him who prayed, "Create in me a clean heart, O God," and of the Apostle who wrote, "By grace are ye saved, through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God."

We are not prepared to assent to all that is in Mr. Drummond's book; but we regard it as a most valuable contribution to Bible theology, and we certainly think none the less of it after reading the strictures of Mr. Woods Smyth.

PURITY LECTURES.

IN connection with his evangelistic work, Mr. Henry Varley continues to give lectures to men on the obligation and advantages of Chastity, and against the State regulation of immorality. During a month's stay at Southampton he addressed no less than three crowded audiences on this subject, one numbering about 2500. From Southampton Mr. Varley went to Bradford, where, under the auspices of the Y.M.C. Association, he delivered a series of Bible-readings and addresses, one of which, for men, was held in the Mechanics' Hall, when fully 1000 were present. In regard to the State regulation of vice, Mr. Varley asked what right the Legislature had to regulate vice. The action of the law should be repression and punishment. To regulate vice was simply lawlessness sought to be endorsed by legislative sanction.

From Bradford Mr. Varley went to Leicester, where, in the course of evangelistic services, he addressed, on the 12th inst. a large audience of men in the Melbourne Hall, and then proceeded to Willenhall, Wolverhampton, and Walsall, holding similar meetings for men. His next places are Plymouth and Dartmouth, which he will visit in company with the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, M.A.

MR. E. C. NEWBERY, whose article on "Ischia" appeared in our columns of Sept. 13, has just arrived from that place, and will be glad to give an account at any public meeting of the disaster there on July 28, and his labours among the sufferers. His address is 127, Portsdown-road, Maida Vale, W.

THE FRIENDLY LETTER MISSION.—The American missionaries have translated and published in Arabic 2000 of Miss Skinner's "Friendly Letters," at the request of Miss Proctor. She now asks for help in publishing others, especially the one to "Donkey Boys." Miss Proctor's address is, Shimlan, Mount Lebanon, Beirout.

PARIS.—Lord Radstock writes on the 20th inst.: "There have been meetings of workers here twice a day this week. The Lord's presence has been realised in power. They will be continued next week. Ask for special blessing that not only a few but all the Lord's children may get fresh anointing, and hold up his Name as a banner—'He must reign.'" Lord Radstock asks for praise to be given for blessing received, as well as prayer for more.

CHARLBURY.—Gospel Temperance, experience, and prayer-meetings, are held in the Y.M.C.A. rooms, at eight o'clock every Saturday evening, and, except the third Tuesday in the month, when meetings are help in the large hall. Gospel meetings are held in the same place, at the same time, on Sundays. They are both open for strangers to take part, and their presence is very acceptable. S. BECK.

CONFERENCE HALL, MILDMAY-PARK. — The daily prayer-meetings have special reference during this month to the approaching visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey; and the following ministers and others take part—viz., Oct. 25, Rev. Frederick Greeves; Oct. 26, Mr. W. T. Paton; Oct. 27, Rev. Edw. A. Stuart; Oct. 29, Rev. John Wilkinson; Oct. 30, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor; and Oct. 31, Mr. R. C. Morgan. The meetings are held from 12 to 1 o'clock; and on Saturdays from 5 to 6 p.m.

WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE.—The first of a series of weekly lectures, &c., for working lads, took place at the Mount, Whitechapel, on Wednesday evening, the 17th inst., when addresses were given by the Rev. W. Tyler, Mr. Henry Hill, jun., and Mr. T. Bewden Green. Allusion was made to the proposed new Institute, and the hope was expressed that by the commencement of next session the building would be ready for use. A vote of thanks to the Lord Mayor and other supporters of the new Institute was carried with enthusiasm by the boys who were present.

BRIDPORT, DORSET.—A week of successful Gospel Temperance Meetings, conducted by Mr. Philip J. de Carteret, of Jersey. Prayer-meetings were held at noon, public meetings in the evening, and addresses were given at the various factories during the dinner-hour. On a recent Sunday the Town Hall was crowded, both afternoon and evening, and large numbers had to go away. More than 140 pledges were taken, and many who had left off the blue ribbon put it on again. There is reason for believing that the cause of Christ, as well as the cause of Temperance, has been much advanced.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE NOTES.

WOODFORD.

Major and Mrs. Evered Poole have just closed a very successful eight days' Gospel Temperance Mission in this village on the borders of Epping Forest. The meetings were held in the Mission hall attached to The Wilfrid Lawson Coffee Tavern and Hotel. The hall in which the Mission was held will contain 500 at a pinch, and the meetings have been well attended, on some occasions full to overflowing. The well-known feature of Major Poole's Gospel Temperance Mission has not been less marked in Woodford than elsewhere, namely, his earnest appeal to his hearers to give themselves, first of all, wholly to Christ and his work, and for his sake, and the sake of their fellow-men, to join the Blue Ribbon Temperance cause and fight against the terrible sin of drunkenness in our land.

Mrs. Evered Poole's beautiful address on Acts v. 15, "The shadow of Peter passing by," brought home to her hearers the truly solemn subject of the inalienable power of personal influence. One of the most striking features of the Mission was the meeting for "men only," when Major Poole spoke on the subject of "National Vices and Individual Responsibility." The hall was filled with men over eighteen years of age, who listened with deep attention, and of whom 115 signed the pledge of purity.

Several of the meetings were followed by deeply solemn after-meetings, when considerable numbers remained, and were earnestly appealed to, to surrender to Christ, and follow Him. This part of the work is very important, as it gives an opportunity to those who are impressed to come to a decision.

MR. T. E. MURPHY IN LONDONDERRY.

Under the auspices of the Irish Temperance League, Mr. T. E. Murphy has been addressing large and deeply interested audiences in the Union hall, Londonderry. Although little preparation had been made for the Mission, a large number of people assembled on the evening of Monday, the 15th inst., the opening night of the Mission. Mr. Murphy gave a powerful address, and at the close of the meeting upwards of sixty signed the pledge for the first time. On Tuesday evening, despite the counter attractions of a circus, a diorama, and a local concert, the audience was considerably larger than on the first night and at the end many signed the pledge and donned the blue. On Wednesday evening 177 gave in their names. This was increased by more than 200 on the following night, and on Friday night over 500 became abstainers for the first time. At this, the closing meeting, the hall was packed, over a thousand people present, while hundreds were turned away.

So much interest was evoked by the addresses of Mr. Murphy, that at the close of the Mission a request was immediately tendered for a return visit as soon as his engagements would permit. Much of the success of the Mission was doubtless due to the largely-attended Prayer-meeting, held every forenoon during the week in the Union Hall. Quite a number of the worst victims of drink have been rescued during the week, among whom was a wretched woman, who had a shawl and bonnet given to her to attend one of the meetings. Her last drink had been obtained by the sale of one of her little girl's shoes, and her home, when visited, was destitute of nearly every necessary and comfort. The cause of Gospel Temperance has received a great impetus in Londonderry, and the meetings are being carried on for another week by the local friends of the movement.

Canada.—Mr. W. Forbes closed a series of Gospel Temperance meetings and evangelistic services at Shaftesbury Hall, Toronto, on Sunday, October 7. A large number donned the blue ribbon, and there is good reason for believing that several were converted to God.

Evangelistic Mission—Per C. R. H.: Anon. (Newport, Oct. 9), 5s.

Y.W.C.A., RYDE.—The Committee of the Ryde Young Women's Christian Association have secured "Garfield House," for the purpose of carrying on their work, and also for establishing a Seaside Home for young women who may come from London or elsewhere, either for rest or in search of health. The committee are anxious to make the association a comfortable and cheerful home for young women, and to introduce them to the society and friendship of Christians connected with the association, to give them the advantages of a reading-room, library, and classes. They affectionately ask for sympathy and help. They will gratefully receive any articles towards the sale of useful and ornamental work in the Ryde Victoria Rooms, on December 12. Any information will gladly be given by Mrs. J. T. O. Johnston, Hon. Secretary, Caithness House, Ryde.

OUR WINTER'S WORK

AMONG NEGLECTED GIRLS AND POOR STREET BOYS.

Dear Friends,—Until quite lately we have been able to receive every case of real destitution making application. Now we have to hesitate—to delay—and soon shall have to refuse admission to many whom we must then

TURN AWAY FROM OUR DOORS.

Our Funds are, however, so low, that unless the Lord whom we serve lays our needs on your hearts, no other course will be open to us.

Very earnestly do I plead, therefore, that we may not be compelled to close the door in the face of any poor homeless little one seeking admission.

Yours, in much sorrow of heart,
T. J. BARNARDO.

THIS Society has been formed for the purpose of establishing a Christian Settlement in South Africa, the intention being to continue, and, as far as it is possible (with God's help) complete, the noble work begun by those Institutions which shelter the children and orphans in this country by emigrating them to a land where, under the supervision secured by the family system (besides obtaining places for these children in Christian families residing in South Africa), it is hoped they will continue to develop in moral character, and earn for themselves the advantages of an honest livelihood.

The Government of Natal has given a tract of land in Alexandra County, on Umzimkulu River, opposite Port Shepstone, of about 3,400 acres, on most favourable terms, and will grant free passages for our settlers and children. The climate of Natal is one of the healthiest in the world.

We require for our work just now about £700 for our settlement or depot.

It will take £360 to build our houses at the Settlement. Are there six to be found willing to come forward to build these houses? We do look forward to that time when Men shall go forth from this Settlement into the "Dark Continent" to tell of Jesus' love.

Our first winter party of girls sailed on the 9th for Durban, Natal.

This is a time when much distress prevails in our cities.

Donations and Subscriptions (for even the smallest sums) will be thankfully received by any of the Society's Bankers, or at the office of The Christian. All Cheques and Postal Orders should be crossed.

A Series of 4 two-page Leaflets, each containing a collection of stirring Pieces, admirably adapted for use at "Gospel Temperance" and other Meetings. Price 9d. per 100, or 7s. 6d. per 1000.

CONTENTS OF NO. 1.

Where is my wandering boy to-night?
One there is who loves thee
The mistakes of my life have been many Long in darkness we have waited
Are you coming home, ye wanderers?
A ruler once came to Jesus by night
Fierce and wild the storm is raging
Why do you wait, dear brother?
Say, where is thy refuge, my brother?
Why perish with cold and with hunger?
From the riven Rock there floweth

CONTENTS OF No. 2.

What can wash away my stain?
Come, thou weary! Jesus calls thee
Should the death-angel knock at your chamber
The Gospel bells are ringing
Have you any room for Jesus?
Oh come, sinner, come! 'tis mercy's call
Make room for Jesus! room, sad heart!
Oh, do not let the Word depart
Brightly beams our Father's mercy
O Christ, in Thee my soul hath found
Light in the darkness, sailor!

CONTENTS OF No. 3.

When my final farewell to the world I have said
Standing by a purpose true
When the storms of life are raging
I have read of a beautiful city
Ring the bells of heaven! there is joy to day
I have heard of a land far away
"Land ahead!" its fruits are waving
Oh, tender and sweet was the Master' voice
'Tis the promise of God full salvation to give
When storms around are sweeping

CONTENTS OF No. 4.

Of course you know that to and fro, throughou our glorious land
She only touched the hem of His garment
Our Master has taken His journey
Tempted and tried
Father, don't you hear the angels
The prize is set before us
There is a Fountain filled with blood
Would you lose your load of sin?
Yield not to temptation, for yielding is sin

CASE FOR THIS WEEK

PHTHISIS—

CASE of J. M., of ROTHERHAM.

In deference to special reasons assigned by this patient, I do not publish the full name; but he says he shall be happy privately to corroborate the testimony he has given.

It was at a critical period, and in a very weak state, he wrote me first, nearly two years ago. All the symptoms indicating disease of the lungs were present. I corresponded with him and his father, on his behalf, at intervals during last year and the present Spring, the letters showing a gradual process of recovery.

April 23, I received a letter, in which J. M. says:—"Through God's blessing on your treatment I am as strong and well as ever I was in my life. I shall be delighted to give you a testimonial."

July 18, he says:—"I feel it a duty to add my testimony to the great good of your medicine. I have taken it for over a twelvemonth, and am therefore in a position to judge. I am strong enough to walk over twenty miles in a day. If your medicine does not afford relief to any chest sufferer, I know of nothing that will."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

GREAT SALE OF HEARTHRUGS.

TWO years ago we determined to offer our special Hearthrugs, 72 inches long by 36 inches wide, at 3s. 9d. each, carriage paid to any address. Since that time we have sold over 50,000 of these Hearthrugs, which is in itself a testimony to the value we offer the public. In addition to this we have had repeat orders and testimonials almost every day. No part of the United Kingdom is too distant, and no village or hamlet or home is too remote for us to send to. We have supplied these Rugs to the Queen's Palace at Balmoral, as well as to the humblest cottage in the land, and the testimony from rich and poor alike is that, whether for drawing-room, bed-room, dining-room, or kitchen, no rugs have ever been sold at once so handsome, cheap, and useful. They have now been before the public and in many homes for over two years, and we rely on this fact as a great testimony in their favour. In order that every home in the land may possess one or more of these beautiful Rugs, we will send

THE HYGIENIC VALUE OF MAGNETISM AS A MEANS OF INVIGORATION.

Magnetism has the power of penetrating and permeating every portion of the human organism, and imparts renewed strength to nervous and debilitated invalids. By its action upon the blood it is carried to the deepest-seated gland as well as to the nerve-centres, relieving congestion and promoting a uniform circulation. It induces a regular functional action in all organs, soothes palpitation, induces refreshing sleep, imparts elasticity and vigour to the entire nervous system, gives tone to the muscular ramifications, and by its energising effect in the physical economy restores the equilibrium of the mental forces. It is, therefore, no surprise that we desire to see the Magnetic method of treatment become more generally recognised and popular; and are prepared to rejoice at the success of anyone who uses the means successfully. But a word of caution to the wise is sufficient. The treatment to which we refer, and from which such decided and permanent results may be anticipated, is not comprehended in the purchase of any galvanic, electric, or magnetic charm, which may come under the notice of the sufferer, only to disappoint. This is not testing what the great restorer can do when properly applied. The degree of Magnetic power over or upon each organ or nerve-centre, should be carefully considered and provided for; to do this successfully requires special study, and experience of the most varied character.

"It seems very ungrateful on my part to have kept silent so long after receiving such benefit from your treatment, but I was anxious first to give it a fair trial of twelve months. This I have done, and now, with thankfulness to God, I must tell you that I passed through the whole of last winter, and up to the present moment, free from cold on my chest. This is something new in my history, and it seems almost too good to be true. I do not mean that I have never caught cold, for I have done so on three or four occasions, but the cold, instead of settling on my chest for several months, as formerly, has, in the course of a few days, vanished altogether. As a natural result, my voice and general health have greatly improved. I feel that I must thank you as the instrument, but as a Christian, I give the glory alone to God."

Mr. Garratt will always be happy to confer with any scientific or medical gentleman, either personally or by letter, upon any phase of the subject, or any case for treatment, and will send a private list of 850 names as referees to any address.—B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

THE BIBLE AND THE POOR.—I.

THE condition of the poor, to which attention has afresh been called by the publication, by the Congregational body, of "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London," suggests the question whether the views of Christian England, of the Christian Church in England, as to our responsibilities to the poor, are in accordance with the will and Word of God. And no sooner do we begin to search the Scriptures on this subject than we are confronted with a succession of commands and precepts, exhortations and examples, showing unmistakably that modern Christianity has departed widely from the ancient standards of both God and man.

Job and his friends lived, says Eusebius, two ages before Moses. It is of great interest, therefore, to know what thoughts obtained with regard to the poor in that early age of history.

When the friends of the smitten patriarch came to condole with him, they came to the conclusion that his calamities were judgments from God on account of his iniquities. They, therefore, endeavoured to fix charges of unrighteousness upon him, and these charges largely consisted in lack of kindness to the poor. Thus Zophar says: "He hath oppressed and forsaken the poor; he hath violently taken away a house which he builded not." Eliphaz asks:—

"Is not thy wickedness great and thy iniquities infinite? For thou hast taken a pledge from thy brother for nought, and stripped the naked of their clothing. Thou hast not given water to the weary to drink, and thou hast withholden thy bread from the hungry. . . . Thou hast sent widows empty away, and the arms of the fatherless have been broken."

And Job, in maintaining his own integrity, does not for a moment seek to change the ground on which they argue, but in the most absolute way maintains his righteousness by his conduct to the poor:—

"My righteousness I hold fast, and will not let it go: my heart shall not reproach me so long as I live.

"If I did despise the cause of my manservant or of my maidservant, when they contended with me; what then shall I do when God riseth up? and when He visiteth, what shall I answer Him? Did not He that made me in the womb make him? and did not One fashion us in the womb? If I have withheld the poor from their desire, or have caused the eyes of the widow to fail; or have eaten my morsel myself alone, and the fatherless hath not eaten thereof; (For from my youth he was brought up with me, as with a father, and I have guided her from my mother's womb;) if I have seen any perish for want of clothing, or any poor without covering; if his loins have not blessed me, and if he were not warmed with the fleece of my sheep; if I have lifted up my hand against the fatherless, when I saw my help in the gate: then let mine arm fall from my shoulder-blade, and mine arm be broken from the bone."

It was manifestly the public opinion in those days that a man could not hold up his face to God unless he helped the poor and the fatherless and the widow; and Job did not go beyond the requirements of the general conscience, when he said, "I was a father to the poor, and the cause which I knew not I searched out."

Could the inhabitants of the land of Uz have believed that in the later ages of the world—when the Redeemer, the Days-man, the Interpreter, the Messenger, whom they so dimly foresaw, should have come, and brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel—such heresies would have grown up concerning the poor? Could they have believed it possible that in the country and the city which led the van in sending out the Gospel to the darkest places of the earth, that their own poor could be shaken together and pressed down and running over, neglected, miserable, oppressed, destroyed, and that "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London" would go up into the ears of the Lord God of Sabaoth, while the promised signs of the coming of the Son of Man should be multiplying and intensifying day by day?

Were Job and his friends all wrong as to God's judgment of those who oppress and forsake the poor? If they were right in this (though the friends were wrong in condemning Job), is there not a fearful judgment impending over London, England, Christendom, on account of this widespread unrighteousness?

LUTHER'S PLAN.

WHEN Satan disputes with me (if God is gracious to me), I dare not use this argument against him, that "he who loves God with his whole heart, whole soul, and whole might, shall possess the kingdom of heaven;" for Satan then says, "Thou hast not so loved God," to which my conscience bears witness; but I must take up this proverb, "Jesus Christ has died for me, and through Him I have a gracious Father."—LUTHER.

Ah! Luther, since thy day how many thus
Have foiled the tempter's wit.
Thy happy plan commends itself to us;
Thanks for the holy beacon thou hast lit.

We cannot look upon our hearts, and say
That we have loved our Lord [nay,
With all our soul, and mind, and strength. Ah!
Our fickle hearts in other paths have trod.

Then the shrewd tempter whispers, "Ye have failed,"
And distant seems the sky;
We wonder how the summit can be scaled—
For Sinai frowns above us, steep and high.

But faith removes the mountain, and beholds
In thy suggestion, friend,
A Jacob's ladder, reaching where unfolds
The rent cloud-curtain, whither we ascend.

I cannot prove my saintship; but I know
That Jesus died for me:
To this in simple trust I cling, and so
Find reassurance in thy goodly plea.

Not what I am, but what He is and did,
Secures my Father's kiss:
So is my tempted, troubled spirit, rid
Of every fear, enjoying peaceful bliss.

God taught thee, Luther, and while we revere
Thy honoured name, we look
To One whose Word to thee was ever dear,
And find thy thoughts confirmed by his blest Book.

THE UNITED KINGDOM ALLIANCE.

THE Annual Meetings of this vigorous and powerful body have just been held in Manchester, and for determined, enthusiastic, and practical spirit and purpose, have proved successful to an almost unprecedented degree. So far from being shaken in its resolution to push forward the local option scheme with which it has been so long identified, a more united and solid front than ever was presented in its favour, the apathy of the Government in the matter, and Mr. Bright's recent speech on the subject, only serving to increase the ardour and zealous action of the executive in labouring to secure its triumph. Sir Wilfrid Lawson, as President of the Alliance, was supported by a host of veteran Temperance advocates, as well as by not a few political celebrities well known for their interest in social reform. After full discussion, during which their importance, as bearing upon the political future, was clearly recognised, the following resolutions, among others, were unanimously carried:—

"That this Council expresses its unshaken resolve that, whatever licensing authority and machinery for regulating and restricting the liquor traffic may be proposed, the United Kingdom Alliance will continue to demand for the people the power to exercise a direct veto on the liquor traffic wherever and whenever they so determine within their respective parishes and other localities; and this Council urges patriotic citizens everywhere to demand the concession of this power as the condition of their votes at all future parliamentary elections.

"And, that having regard to the enormity of the evils inflicted upon the nation by the liquor traffic, the Council deplores the inaction of the Government in permitting four sessions of the present Parliament to pass without introducing a measure to remedy the evils, and to give effect to the now thrice expressed will of the House of Commons; and the Council is of opinion that should the next session be allowed to pass without the enactment, or the introduction by the Government of a measure of efficient local option, embodying a full and direct popular veto on the issue of licences for the sale of intoxicating liquors, it will become the duty of Temperance men seriously to consider whether they can support any Government which refuses thus to empower the people to protect themselves from a system fraught with such appalling results."

The question of Sunday closing was also dealt with in the same practical manner, the friends of Temperance being called upon everywhere to use their utmost exertions to obtain for every part of the United Kingdom deliverance from the curse of liquor-traffic on Sundays, and to look upon such questions of national morality as above mere party consideration. An immense concourse of people assembled at the public meeting held in the great Free-trade Hall, under the presidency of the Right Rev. E. Wilberforce, Bishop of Newcastle, when addresses were given by Mr. P. McLagan, M.P., Sir W. Lawson, M.P., Mr. A. M. Sullivan, Mr. Theodore Fry, M.P., Mr. R. Whitworth, M.P., Revs. Charles Garrett, Dr. Chadwick, of Armagh, and others. A large overflow meeting was held at the same time in the Association Hall. The annual report of the Alliance is altogether a remarkable and valuable document, and should be read by all who are any way interested in the Temperance cause. It forms the supplement of The Alliance News for Oct. 20, published at the office, Cross-street, Manchester, and is crowded with a mass of information on the political, social, and moral aspects of the Temperance movement. Looking at the vast importance to the nation of the issues involved, we heartily congratulate the Alliance on its position and progress, and bid it God-speed on its widening way.

"The Christian" Pulpit.

SOCIAL WRONGS AND THEIR REMEDIES.

[The following abstract of an admirable sermon preached by Dr. Allon, at Islington Chapel, on Sunday, October 21, is quoted from The Nonconformist and Independent.]

"He shall judge the poor of the people, He shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor."—Psalm lxxii. 4.

THE assumption of the Gospel of Jesus Christ that the world needs redemption is, said the preacher, abundantly justified by the condition of men and women wherever we turn. In great cities and towns evil festers and intensifies, until it takes forms that are bestial on the one hand, and demoniac on the other. But this is only because it is evil; were it good instead of evil, it would not fester and intensify. In great cities good intensifies, as well as evil, is moved to greater pity, constrained to more strenuous help, excited to more self-sacrificing service. In duller, but equally base forms, you see the evil in country villages and hamlets, in stolid, unexcited individual life. The root of the evil is in the man himself, not in his conditions. The conditions simply aggravate the evil—which if it do not find one form it will another. Individual men and women and children are the involuntary victims of the evil, and unwise or unjust social laws and regulations may aggravate it. The tyranny of circumstances may become terrible, poverty and vice may environ a man like an atmosphere from which he cannot escape—but it is a pitiful short-sightedness that simply fixes upon circumstance—and thinks that if it could only be altered—if laws could be changed, if money could be distributed, if relations of one class to another could be regulated, a cure would be found for men's evils; much might be done to improve circumstance, to lessen the pressure of poverty, the temptations of vice, and that we are imperatively called to do. But we cannot exonerate ourselves from solicitude about the outward circumstances of men, because circumstances are not everything; we are bound to give men every help that the remedy of wrongs, that the alleviation o disadvantageous circumstances can give, only in doing the secondary thing we must not be guilty of the blindness of ignoring the primary thing. Adjust the circumstances of men as nicely as you will; make all men equal in property and comfort and favourable condition to-day, they will, through the diverse characters of men, be all deranged tomorrow, and very rapidly the evils of human life will all be reproduced again. The only radical remedy is to change personal character; if you can produce character, moral industrious, decisive circumstances will do very little harm to a man; he will conquer the worst circumstances and improve the best. Of course, there are the thousand accidents of life—sickness, misfortune, old age, bereavement, which even character cannot ensure men against, but were the character of the social community redeemed, these would be easily provided for. It is a sorrowful world, mainly because it is a sinful world, not because of accident, or circumstances, or ignorance, or mistake, but because of sin—sins of the body, destroying health and substance, or sins of social lawlessness, violating the conditions of well-being—or sins of the individual trampling upon the distinction of right and wrong. It is chiefly the evil passion and greed and immorality of men that cause human suffering. Half the organisations of social life are protections against crime and vice and wrong. The problem then is, How are the evils of life to be redressed? One indisputable reply is, nothing will redress them that does not neutralise and reverse their causes. No cure can be effected by dealing with mere symptoms.

(1) Communism comes with its legislative regulations, its equalisation of wealth and comfort. It does not even attempt to touch the evil of individual men. It deals only with symptoms. No communism is so radical, even on its own lines, as the communism of Christ. He enjoins a brotherhood, a benevolence, a practical helping of men that goes further and deeper than any political economy has ventured to dream of; but He does not enforce it by civil legislation, the external compulsion of law. He changes the selfish heart of the individual man, and makes it his religious obligation and passion to do good to all men as we have opportunity.

(2) Rationalism comes with its philosophy—its laws of ethics—the drunkard is to take the pledge, the ill-tempered man is to count ten before he speaks, the liar is to speak the truth, the thief to be honest, men are to consider the beauty and to balance the advantages of virtue; men are to learn what a right life is by exercises of reason and social experiments. But unfortunately men's need has not been a knowledge of right, but a motive and a power to do it. Unfortunately, wrong-doing has so emasculated myriads of men, that their moral power is destroyed. Tell a drunkard to be sober. Tell a profligate to be pure. Tell a liar to speak the truth—as well tell a man in the rapids of Niagara to row. Jesus Christ comes and creates a new power of life in the man—gives him the moral force that he needed, makes virtue his desire and passion, changes the very affections. Which is the radical cure? Which is the only possible cure?

(3) Some people prescribe the Church, an ark into which men are to get, and they are saved from the flood of the world's sin. It will rock you, and protect you, and absolve you, and administer sacraments to you. Even outside the Church of Rome one hears a great deal that approaches this. But how impotent a church is to gather the myriads of London, or even to keep those it gathers. It breaks down just where we the most need its help. It has no power to quicken inward life.

(4) Clearly the only remedy for the evils of human life is the Gospel of Christ carried to individual man, received into personal hearts, preached to men everywhere. This is a power which, cast into the bitter waters, makes them sweet, takes away the love of sin, and vice, and selfishness, makes a man victor over all that is evil within him, a law to himself, so that all that he desires and strives to do is right. Not theological beliefs, not attendance upon this or that form of worship, not dependence upon theories of any kind; the simple love of Jesus Christ as the personal Redeemer from sin; sorrow for sin against such holiness, for unthankfulness against such love: this is our working force, this is the only radical and efficient remedy for human evil.

For the Young.

PRAYER.

I SHOULD like to say a few words to you, dear children, on the subject of prayer. What is prayer? A little girl was once asked this question, and her answer was, "Asking God for what we want." That is it exactly; simply asking your Heavenly Father for what you want, just as you would any earthly parent.

But there are four conditions which God says we must fulfil if we want our prayers answered. The first is in John xiv. 14: "If ye shall ask anything in My Name I will do it." That means that God our Father will give us anything we want if we ask in the name of his Son Jesus Christ; that is why we end all our prayers with the words "for Jesus Christ's sake."

The second is to be found in Matthew xxi. 22: "All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." When we pray we must believe that God will answer us, that He has already sent an answer, and not be surprised when it comes and say, "Oh, I did not expect this."

The third condition is, "If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you" (John xv. 7).

We must belong to Christ, and be his alone.

Then, lastly, "If we ask anything according to his will, He heareth us." Everything we ask will be granted to us if it is in accordance with the mind and will of God. Do then let us be encouraged to ask for more than we have hitherto done. The Lord likes us to ask Him for what we want. He said once to his disciples, "Hitherto have ye asked nothing in My Name: ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full." If your prayer is not at first answered, persevere. Go on praying. If it is offered in the name of Jesus, if you ask believing you will receive, if you abide in Him, and if you ask in accordance with his most holy will, it must be answered.

REV. W. HASLAM AT BUXTON.

A TEN days' Mission has been held in the parish of Fairfield, which includes a great portion of Buxton, so noted for its mineral waters. Two services were held daily, at one of which Mr. Haslam gave addresses on the Christian life and at the other Gospel addresses, while Mrs. Haslam conducted meetings daily for women only, all of which were very largely attended. Great blessing resulted from the services, and especially among the many visitors that visit Buxton during the summer. Not a few will have carried home with them an influence which will make itself felt in many parts of the country.

At the service on the last day a thank-offering was asked for, when the sum of £50 4s. 4½d. was given. The sale of Mr. Haslam's books during the service was almost unprecedented, over 600 volumes being sold. Thus the facts demonstrate not only the interest awakened but the profit derived by a large number from the services.

The blessing which has attended this visit to Buxton will not only have cheered, but also strengthened the hands of the Vicar, the Rev. F. W. A. Wilkinson, whose appointment to the living some twelve months ago was the advent of an Evangelical ministry, which is already bearing fruit in increased congregations, growing Sunday-schools, &c., and the banding together of laymen for evangelistic work in the large and scattered parish. It is gratifying to know that Mr. Haslam intends to visit Buxton during next summer, when the Vicar hopes to have an iron church in the more central and growing part of the parish.

PARIS OUVRIERS AND THE GOSPEL.

AN article of peculiar interest and timely suggestiveness appeared in The British Quarterly for July, from the pen of Mr. R. Heath; it is entitled, "The Religion of the Paris Ouvrier." The principle asserted is that the spirit of the French Revolution, and the origin of the innate love of right, indicated by the famous motto "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity," still so prominent in the creed of the Paris populace, is identical with the Gospel proclaimed by Christ and his Apostles. That, although misdirected, and overlaid with erroneous ideas, the underlying basis of the earnestness with which the Parisian working classes hold the fact of the universal brotherhood of man is a religious enthusiasm born of Christianity, and enshrining within itself some of its deepest truths. The terrorism connected with its maintenance he considers to be owing to the influence of Catholic education, the relentless tyranny of the Roman Church, mingled as it ever has been with evangelical sentiments, having coloured and formed to a great extent the spirit of modern Socialism. "Red Republicanism," Mr. Heath argues, "is but Ultramontanism turned inside out. Its spirit is the same; pharisaical, intolerant, tyrannical, sanguinary." At the same time, Catholicism is credited with having given to the revolutionary spirit a bright side as well as a dark; its "spirit of equality and fraternity, of devotion and disinterestedness," is said to have impregnated the national mind with love of and thirst for human freedom and brotherhood. Thus the ouvriers of to-day, although so fearfully materialistic and hostile in their attitude toward all religious belief, really, though blindly, endorse the Christianity of the New Testament, and are but stretching out their hands to the Kingdom of God. A religious instinct, he affirmed, spite of all appearances to the contrary, possesses the working classes in France, Jesuit rule alone being accountable for its present alienation from Christian faith and its enmity to God.

The way in which this argument is wrought out is exceedingly instructive and ingenious. We refer to it, however, more especially to call attention to the writer's concluding statements as to the fitness and power of French Protestantism to reach the heart of the people of France: to meet the demands of the age in reference to satisfying the desires, and to educate the minds of the masses in Paris and elsewhere, who are truly "without God and without hope in the world." Weaknesses are revealed, and defects pointed out in the extracts we print below, which call for earnest consideration; weaknesses and defects, however, which are by no means peculiar or limited to French Protestantism. The spirit of Christ is essential to make Christianity, and the absence of this on the part of many of its representatives, and in connection with the practical working of our Protestant Church organisations, accounts largely for the alienation of the working classes at home and abroad from the systematised Christianity of our day. If in the Western World, under the name of class distinction and clerical or social superiorities, a principle as alien from the spirit and mind of Christ as that embodied in Eastern caste is to be perpetuated, then farewell to any hope of bridging the gulf which daily widens between the poor and the Gospel which is emphatically to be preached to them. In that Gospel, simply and faithfully preached, lies the only hope of bringing the restless minds and agitated spirits of men, galled by want and discontent, back again to faith in God, the only source of strength and hope in time of need. To the poor among men that Gospel has a mission of special directness and encouragement, for "Hearken my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love Him?" A severer rebuke to modern Christianity (perhaps we ought rather to say, Churchianity) can be hardly given, than to confront it with its own confession of inability to deal with the very class of society Christ placed in the fore-front when He declared the mission of his Gospel to men. Mr. Heath says:—

"It may pain many who are deeply interested in the religious welfare of France, and who have proved it by a multitude of sacrifices, to be told that Protestantism has not the slightest chance of winning the heart of France. In saying this, we have no intention for a moment to disparage the importance of the efforts at evangelisation made with so much zeal and disinterestedness in all parts of France. There are few movements which have our deeper sympathy. These Missions, we believe, have done incalculable good, good impossible to formulate in reports, since it consists in the dissipation of prejudice, ignorance, and superstition, in the renewal of hope, in the strengthening of virtuous resolution, in the awakening of the religious sense, and perhaps more often than can ever be known in the entire conversion of souls to God. It is, then, far from our desire to lessen interest in these works. Let us support them with more energy, and try and render them many times more successful. But as a propaganda on behalf of Protestantism they clip their own wings, and fly in the face of the genius of France.

"Respectability is indeed the greatest weakness of French Protestantism.

"Protestantism is too wealthy, too aristocratic in its tendencies, ever to have any perceptible influence with the Parisian democracy. If, then, the spirit of France is still so Catholic, how is she to be saved from becoming once again the thrall of the Catholic Church? By not attempting to contradict her genius, but by cultivating it in the light of its original idea. I have often thought that if you could one by one divest the Roman Catholic Church of the accretions which have grown around it age after age, you would come at last to the primitive Gospel and the primitive Church. And if I were asked what that primitive Gospel would be which I suppose imbedded under eighteen centuries of ruins, I should at once reply, the Gospel preached by Jesus Christ—the Gospel of the Kingdom of Heaven.

"What appears, then, to be wanted, is not to offer Paris ouvriers a new religion, or even to reform the old one in a radical sense, but so to strip the Roman Catholic Church of its accretions as to present the Church founded by Jesus Christ and the Gospel He preached. For that Gospel is not only wonderfully in harmony with the principles which lie at the heart of the faith of the Paris ouvrier, but its proclamation and actual realisation in the lives of believers is the only means of preventing those principles becoming a source of terror rather than of blessing to the world, and of transfiguring them and giving them perpetual vigour, because brought into connection with their source.

"Doubtless if this Gospel were preached among Paris ouvriers, many would seek to materialise it, and to turn it into a revolutionary force. Then undoubtedly would come the moment of trial when its preachers would have to choose between popular rejection and popular power, or perhaps between martyrdom or becoming the tools of reaction. But if avoiding errors into which men as great as Savonarola and Luther have fallen, they refused, like their Master, to identify themselves with any material interest, they might suffer a temporary rejection and even extinction, but the germs they would have brought into existence would produce that better Church and that new Europe we are longing to see established."

The importance of presenting the Gospel to France in a pure and full-orbed light, such as is thus pleaded for, is manifest from the fact that in a most remarkable way the country is now open to evangelistic effort. On all sides there are indications of readiness to receive the truth if only workers imbued with the right spirit can be multiplied. These very ouvriers are accessible in a most hopeful degree. Moreover, as Mr. Heath in another and subsequent article on the same subject in Good Words says, education is spreading in France at an enormous rate. The artisans are receiving with eagerness gratuitous art instruction, the Municipality of Paris this year spending in educational directions, on its population of under two millions, double the amount expended on London with its four millions. The result is that the working classes are getting acquainted with literature and displaying avidity in seeking to gain information of all kinds. To quote from Mr. Heath's statements on this subject:—

"If in the present adult population many may be found with literary and artistic tastes, the ouvriers of the next generation will be educated men, in the vulgar sense of the word; for it would be difficult to give adequate expression to the fury with which the instruction of the people is pressed forward. All classes combine: the Republicans because they sincerely believe that popular instruction is the great panacea for all the ills of the world; Conservatives, because they hope that it will make the people reasonable; Catholics, because they fear to lose even those who still hold to the Church."

Surely in all this we may see a pressing claim upon Christian zeal and evangelical fervour. To lay hold of this popular thirst for knowledge, and to help to supply it with streams from the Fountain of the water of life, is an aim to which all mere sectarian efforts to bolster up old and effete systems and formalisms may well give way. Voltaire, Rousseau, and Corneille are at present the choice and most ready to hand text-books of modern French artisans. Let teachers who present Christ and Christianity from the true standpoint be brought before their notice, and let them be shown by every possible means the glory and excellence of the pure Gospel of God, whether judged by its intrinsic character or historical fruits Everything combines to urge the present time as the great opportunity for making a crusade upon the lower strata of Parisian society, only it must be a crusade not of sect and party, or of a formal and aristocratic type; not patronising and condescending in its tone, but broad, open-handed, and warmly sympathetic in its spirit; its leaders and workers imbued with the love of Him who, though none other than the Son of God, became the Son of man, and "the friend of publicans and sinners."

KEPT.

1 Peter i. 5.

KEPT when the mighty billows rolled
Over the pilgrim feet,
Kept, when the heart was quivering
Within the furnace heat.

Kept, when the wilful heart had bruised
Itself in bitterness,
And He had grappled with the pride
That would not let Him bless.

O God, these lives of ours
Are locked within thy heart,
And we do praise Thee for the love
That will not let us part.

O God, these hearts of ours
Are beaten, bruised and weak,
And we do praise Thee for the keeping
We need not even seek.

We praise Thee that the power
Is thine, not ours—we know
The One, though not the way—and still Must praise Him as we go.

Praise Him whatever comes,
Praise Him whatever goes,
Our Home, though many wanderings,
Our Friend, though many foes.

HINTS FOR THE INQUIRY ROOM.

Addressed to Christian Workers by

Mr. GEORGE SOLTAU.

"WHAT AILETH THEE?"

AS a company of workers desiring to engage in the solemn and important work of dealing with the anxious in the Inquiry-room, we are all agreed at the very outset that the Holy Spirit alone can lead a sinner to the Saviour; that each of us must look to Him for the right word, the fitting text, the wise counsel, and that we are to be but the mouthpieces through whom He will speak. Our constant attitude must be one of communion with God, and our memories and minds must be well stored with Scripture, so as to be ready for the Master's use.

Before entering into the special details suggested by the text, the following general suggestions may be found of great use:—

(1) Be not too eager to lead a soul into peace. See Jer. vi. 14, and viii. 11, 12. It is not desirable to use the expression, "Have you found peace?" seeing that the anxious soul needs a Person rather than a blessing.

(2) Avoid the expression, "You have only to believe to be saved," until you have very fully stated and explained the facts and promises to be believed, and then point out that it is a Person in whom the soul's trust is to be placed, and not in your statements about Him.

(3) Always read your quotations from the Bible, turning to the passage, so that the inquirer may be able to distinguish between your statements and the Word of God. The latter has an authority that your statements cannot possess.

(4) Avoid telling your own experience or that of others, as the inquirer must lean on the Word of God, not on your experience of it.

(5) Do not try to apply to the need of inquirers texts the truth of which you have not yourself experienced.

(6) Make it clear that at conversion the Lord Jesus claims possession and control of the entire being. Show that it is not merely the salvation of the soul that is needed, but also deliverance for mind and body from all the power of sin in every direction.

(7) If you find an inquirer baffles you with difficult questions, hand such a one over at once to a more experienced Christian.

(8) As far as possible, converse only with persons of your own age or younger; your own sex and walk in life.

(9) Do not tell a person he is saved; leave that with the Lord to tell him.

Let us compare the inquiry-room to the out-patient ward of a large hospital, in which are gathered a multitude of sick folk, afflicted with various diseases and complaints, waiting to be dealt with by the physician. Each case must be attended to by him personally, the special malady inquired into, and the fitting treatment prescribed. Were the physician only a quack doctor, he would prescribe one patent medicine for all his patients, regardless of the variety in their diseases.

The great Physician here is the Lord Jesus; the workers in the inquiry-room are like the assistants and nurses in the hospital, receiving from Him directions for the treatment of each wounded and suffering one. Let us suppose we had before us these different cases. The first might say, "I can't see my way at all"—that is a case of blindness. The second, "I am afraid to die, my sins are so many"—that is like a bad pain. The third, "I can't break off my sinful habits, and I want to be a Christian"—that is like a case of crooked limbs and distorted joints. The fourth, "I don't feel very bad, but I know I am not all right"—that is like numbness produced by paralysis. The fifth, "I have fallen into an awful sin, and I am afraid God cannot save me"—that is like a case of broken limbs. An inexperienced worker, with a few favourite texts, would probably speak to each one in this way: "You must just believe that the Blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, cleanseth from all sin. You know He said, 'Him that cometh to Me, I will in no wise cast out.' Can't you believe that now is the accepted time, that now is the day of salvation? 'For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son.' Just kneel down, and say from your heart, 'Take me as I am.'" We would not say that none of them would get any blessing through such treatment, but the chances are more against it than for it. What we must do is first to ascertain the cause of this blindness and lameness, and numbness &c., and then by God's help apply the right remedy.

Our first inquiry then should be, "What brings you into the inquiry-room? What do you think you need?" The answer may be, "I want to be saved," or, "I want to become a Christian," or, "I don't feel I am quite right," or, "I think I ought to turn." In none of these replies is there any very definite statement concerning sin, or any apparent consciousness of sin. Therefore the first thing to be arrived at is to convict deeply of sin. The Gospel is not designed primarily to make people happy, and give them peace, but to deliver them from sin, its presence, power, and penalty, and to bring them into communion with a Holy God. Sin is not an accident or misfortune, but a disease, active in principle, permeating every fibre and tissue of mind and body, hideous and loathsome as a foul leprosy, abominable and irremediable, not to be dealt with piecemeal, but to be attacked at its root. All the restlessness of soul, the craving for excitement, the love of the world, the dislike of holy things, the reluctance to come forward for Christ, are the effect of sin dwelling in the heart.

What, then, is the state of the heart of a sinner? See Jer. xvii. 9, 10; Matt. xv. 19. When did sin begin? At birth. Ps. li. 5. What are the propensities of sin? Rom. iii. 10—15. A true definition of a sinner is found in Is. i. 5, 6. The seat of sin is the heart, hence the injunction of Prov. iv. 23: "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." As in the physical nature so in the spiritual, a diseased heart impairs the functions of all the members of the body. What is needed? A change of heart, according to Ps. li. 10, and with a change of heart will come change of mind. Sound speech, sound judgment, and sound thoughts will surely follow.

Again, what is the Scripture definition of sin?

(a) 1 John iii. 4. Sin is the transgression of the law.

(b) 1 John v. 17. All unrighteousness is sin.

(c) Rom. xiv. 23. Whatsoever is not of faith is sin.

(d) Prov. xxiv. 9. The thought of foolishness is sin.

(e) James iv. 17. To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin.

Turn to Romans v. 6—10, and the following expressions will be found:—

(a) Sinners. That is, by nature and habit.

(b) Enemies. Sin in activity against God.

(c) Without strength. Helplessness produced by sin.

(d) Ungodly. Sin manifesting itself in contrariety to God. Let inquirers learn as fully as possible what ails them, that they may be ready to accept the remedy to be offered to meet their need.

The following hints are suggested for dealing with the following kind of inquirers:—

(1) The Listless Inquirer, whose eye wanders all round the room whilst you are talking to him, and who is more curious than anxious, needs to be taken to Heb. ii. 1—3, and iv. 1. Read these or similar Scriptures, say a few solemn words and bid him good-night. He is not yet ready to accept the Gospel.

(2) The Proud Inquirer, who is thankful he has not fallen so low as many others, should be pointed to such Scriptures as Prov. vi. 16, 17, xvi. 5, xxx. 13. So long as he thinks more highly of himself than does God, it is not wise to give him encouragement in the Gospel.

(3) The Reticent Inquirer is more difficult to deal with. Emphasise the need of confession of sin fully and frankly, according to John i. 9; Prov. xxviii. 13; to be followed by obedience to James v. 16. Then the Confession of Christ according to Rom. x. 9. Explain that secret sin, unconfessed withholds all hope of blessing (Ps. lxvi. 18). The indulgence of secret sin also keeps out the Lord from having full possession, and if not now dealt with solemnly in his presence it must be hereafter, to the soul's condemnation, according to Rom. ii. 16; Mark iv. 22.

LA SOCIÉTÉ BIBLIQUE DE FRANCE.

WE have before us the annual report of this most interesting Society, one which ought to be better known by English Christians, especially by those interested in evangelistic work among the French people. The number of Bibles, Testaments, and Portions circulated by this Society during the year 1882 was 33,386. As is usual, a large number of these volumes were distributed gratuitously, the remainder being sold at very reduced prices. The success of the first edition of the revised Ostervald version of the entire Bible, which was exhausted in a few months, necessitated the bringing out of a fresh supply of a larger size.

It is to be regretted that the funds received are by no means adequate to the increasing demands made on the society, and that the close of the year found it with a deficit of 15,000 francs, or £600. We are ourselves greatly indebted to this Society, which lately gave us a liberal grant of 600 new Testaments for free distribution, and we can particularly recommend their French Bibles, both for type and binding. It would be a kind and gracious act if any English friends could come to the rescue and help to give a fresh start to so necessary a work.

The agent of the "Société Biblique de France" is M. le pasteur F. Vermeil, to whom all communications should be addressed, at 22, Rue d'Astorg, Paris. P.

"WELCOME HOME," LONDON, E.

THE work among sailors at "The Welcome Home," 173, Ratcliffe Highway, London, E. (Miss Child's), deserves the prayers and help of all the Lord's people. Never did I feel the force of those words, "Rescue the perishing," as while spending a few weeks there. The "Welcome Home" is a haven of rest. Sailors, foreign and English, can have board and lodging, with home comforts, for a small sum. There is a meeting every night, when opportunity is given for any sailor to tell what the Lord has done for his soul.

One sailor spoke as follows: "Dear friends, I'm not much of a speaker, but I can tell you to-night that I am saved. I don't hope I'm saved, but I know that I am, because God says so in the Scriptures. In John iii. 36, we read, 'He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life.' And, mates, it's a fine thing to be a Christian. When I used to come ashore, my first visit was to the public-house, now I come straight to this place. I do find a pleasure in reading my Bible, and singing those beautiful hymns. I know if we should get wrecked, and our ship go down, my body may go to the bottom of the sea, but my soul would go up to be for ever with Jesus."

Another said: "Well, mates, it gives me great pleasure to-night to tell you that I have found the Lord, or rather that He has found me. One night someone asked me to come down to this place; so I came, and was saved; and one of my mates was also saved. Then we tried to bring others; and now there are four of us on board believing in Jesus. We have Jesus with us, and are so happy. There is one of our mates here to-night anxious to be saved, and we want him to find Christ, then there will be five of us, and what cannot five praying ones do?"

One Sunday some of the workers took me to the infirmary, where was a young man far gone in consumption. We asked him how long he had been there; he said, "six months." "And do you know Jesus?" "Oh, yes," he replied, "I found Christ at 'The Welcome Home.'" He was a German, and far from home, but he was ready, and has since died, happy in the Lord.

MESSRS. MOODY & SANKEY IN IRELAND.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.]

OPENING AT WATERFORD

"THE Lord hath done great things for us" is the language of every Christian heart here. Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey were greatly helped at the three opening services in the rink on Sunday. The interest grew at each successive meeting. In the evening the preacher was in desperate earnest as he entreated the crowded congregation to seek the Lord at this favourable time. The fear of God seemed to rest on the people in a wonderful way. At Mr. Moody's call about a hundred rose for prayer, more quickly than he could count them, many cases of definite decision amongst them, four brothers belonging to an influential family. This was the best opening day yet known in Ireland. Many were present from the surrounding country, and received blessing. At the early prayer-meeting on Monday notes of praise, mingled with fervent petitions for greater things during coming days, were offered. Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan come here on Thursday.

THE WORK IN CORK.

Twice a day the tide comes up from the sea and raises the water-ways of this city bank-high; sometimes at spring tide it overflows into the streets. Which things are a simile of the wave of spiritual blessing that is now passing over the south of Ireland. There is this difference, however, that the influx of spiritual power has during these past days in Cork been showing itself thrice a day instead of twice. For the morning meetings, though quieter and smaller than those of the afternoon and evening, have been times of much soul refreshment, and even of manifest saving grace. These "wondrous gatherings," taken altogether, have headed a new and hitherto unknown and undreamed of chapter in the Christian records of Cork. The morning meetings are one of the most striking phenomena of the Mission. On St. Patrick's Day in past years united prayer-meetings have been held by the Protestant Churches of the town. One of these is fixed for the morning of the day, and it is deemed a great thing if the upper room, holding 300 persons, is well filled. But here, day after day, at eight o'clock, the area of the Assembly Rooms has been three-fourths or five-sixths full, with an ever-growing and deepening interest.

The meetings of Sunday-week are worthy of more detailed notice than could be given in my brief telegram in your last issue. Passing by the morning gathering—which, by the way, would have been much more numerously attended if it had been known that it was open to all, and not to "Christian workers" only—further allusion may be made to the afternoon assembly of women. I have hitherto refrained from making any pointed reference to the attendance at these meetings of Roman Catholics; but it is a matter of such common observation here, that there need be no further reserve. I understand that in Cork there has been no formal embargo laid on their presence at the meetings by the priests, as was the case in Limerick. At any rate, if there has, it has been disregarded in a pretty wholesale way. I am informed by one who knows, that shoals of young women owning at least a formal allegiance to the Romish Church were at the Sunday afternoon meeting. The same friend states that next day great numbers of young women engaged in the shops throughout the town, were found in a state of serious spiritual inquiry, craving for further light. By the religious system in which they are born and bred they are kept in such mental ignorance as to Scripture truth that the Gospel messages heard in the Assembly Rooms have come to them like a new revelation. It is, of course, difficult to gauge or follow the course of this awakening in such cases, but there may surely be the confident hope that the Spirit of God, having begun to move in these young, honest hearts, will, in some way or other, lead them on to a safe foothold of trust in the finished work of the Lord Jesus Christ, whose way of salvation is so obscured and encumbered by the traditions and observances of their religious communion. There were some cases of great interest at the inquiry-meeting held on Sunday afternoon in the Scots' Church. In some respects in the evening on the same day, was the most wonderful of the entire Mission. There was a large Roman Catholic element, with, I believe, a good sprinkling of the Cork "Corner boys," who are unusually gifted with the Irish proclivities for "a row" on any pretence. Some of the best informed workers were not without serious fears that there would be an explosion. It was evident, even to a stranger and simple onlooker, that very little indeed in the way of excuse would be required to bring to the surface some outburst of feeling that might have been fatal to the profit of the occasion. One of the ushers tells a rather amusing story of what happened in his own experience. After Mr. Sankey had sung one of his most effective solos, either "The Ninety and Nine" or "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by"—I forget which—an enthusiastic Irishman exclaimed, sotto voce, to the official, "That was a splendid stave! Could we not give him an encore?" The usher whispered back that such a thing was not desirable, as it would disturb the course of the meeting, and his seemingly irrepressible querist at once relapsed into attentive acquiescence. Mr. Moody's discourse was on "Excuses," and he kept a firm grip on his singular audience throughout; the mention of the bare fact that over ninety men rose for prayer at the close would alone testify to the power of the Word on this memorable evening.

The responses to Mr. Moody's call for decision in the inquiry-meeting were really grand. Entering into personal conversation with several afterwards, I came across a case of peculiar interest. A stalwart, handsome young man, of about thirty or thirty-five, had his head bowed on the book-board in front of him, and was evidently in deep soul concern. I elicited from him that he belonged to County Clare, in the West. He had been to some of the Limerick meetings, and got thoroughly aroused to his condition as a sinner, but had not found his way into the haven of simple trust. Determined to have the question settled, he had come on to Cork in order to attend the meetings. He said he had been a great sinner, and seemed to fear that his case was beyond the pale of Christ's saving grace.

AN INCIDENT OF DOUBLE CONVERSION

that occurred on this day of wonders is worth relating in some detail. A devoted lady, Miss Sandes, has done a great work among the soldiers in Cork in connection with the Institute in King-street. Among those she frequently visited and conversed with at the military depot here were a sergeant-major and his wife. For more than a year she has prayed, and watched, and laboured for the salvation of this couple, but they showed no signs of spiritual concern; the husband particularly evaded her efforts and laughed at the whole business, so that she felt somewhat discouraged. On this Sunday morning, however, she invited them to attend the meetings in the Assembly Rooms, and they consented to go. The wife went to the women's meeting. Coming to Miss Sandes, after its close, she said, with a beaming face that told its own tale: "I have found Christ, or rather Christ has found me, at last." She went on to say that as soon as she had decided to trust the Lord for her own salvation, she began to pray for the salvation of her husband. In conversation with Miss Sandes she added, "I know God will save him to-night." Meanwhile the husband had gone to the men's meeting, not knowing at all what had happened to his wife, as there had been no opportunity for them to meet in the interval. Though it was a men's meeting, the wife was able somehow to gain admission, and sat on the platform with a friend, the man being in ignorance of her presence. He was among the ninety-one who rose for prayer. When his wife saw him rise she was overcome with emotion, much to the surprise of the lady who sat by her side, and who was unaware of the circumstances. In speaking of it afterwards the sergeant said that when the call came to rise for prayer he thus communed with himself: "If I am to be saved at all, why not now? It may be now or never with me." So he started to his feet, and settled the question without further delay. The wife left the meeting before him, and on his way his thoughts were about her and how he should break the news. They met at the Soldiers' Institute, and the speechless joy that possessed them when both came to know the whole truth cannot be expressed in words. The story not only shows how real is the work of God in these meetings, but is a great encouragement and assurance to workers that in due season they shall reap if they faint not. There can be little doubt it is but typical of very many cases of equal interest if all the facts were known.

This work appears to be such an absolute novelty in Cork, on any extensive scale, that have suffered greatly from the scarcity of workers. Indeed, many, well known as professing Christians, have not shown that readiness and aptitude for personal dealing with the anxious that might have been looked for. This Mission, however, will probably be instrumental in snapping some of the fetters of routine and reserve that have bound and paralysed the churches, as well as those that have held sinners in the bondage of sin and unbelief. The set time to favour God's Zion in the south of Ireland really appears to have come; it will depend on how this great and general awakening is followed up, whether it will herald the dawn of a brighter and happier day, or whether the churches will relapse into more slumberous indifference and more pitiful jealousies and estrangements than ever. It is a critical time in the spiritual history of the County of Cork, and there is much call for earnest prayer that the flood tide of blessing which has for the present swept away all sectional barriers, may never be allowed to recede.

SINS BROUGHT TO REMEMBRANCE.

The arrival of Major Whittle from Limerick on Monday week relieved Mr. Moody of the conduct of the subsequent morning meetings. At this last early meeting, Mr. Moody expounded those grand opening verses of Psalm ciii. While dwelling on the blessedness of sins forgiven, he touched on the necessity of confessing faults committed against one another, and of repairing past wrongs, before there could be the peace that comes from an assurance of God's forgiveness. His searching words about making restitution went home with the swiftness of an arrow to one heart at least in that assembly. At the close of the meeting, a man at once took the train and went some distance out of the city, in order to restore certain sums of money of which he had become possessed, years back, in an unrighteous way. He did more than that. Though now in good worldly circumstances, he had at one time failed in business and compounded with his creditors. The message of the evangelist so deeply awakened his conscience on those matters, that though not at all legally bound to do, he is now refunding the amount — a considerable sum — due to these creditors, but which his estate did not realise at the period of his failure. A case of still more painful interest which has happened, is that of a woman who came to confess that some years since, I cannot exactly say how many, she had caused the death of her child through wilful neglect. These things prove how true it is that the Word of God, when faithfully and fearlessly proclaimed, is like a hammer and a two-edged sword, breaking in pieces the stubbornness of the human will and cutting deeply into the secret places of the soul.

A PERVERTER OF SCRIPTURE.

One incident of a more public nature has caused a good deal of what I may call "sensation." The Church of Ireland clergy in Cork and the country round about have been very favourably disposed to the work; there have been no more constant attendants at the meetings or more hearty helpers than Canon Harley, of Cork, Canon Daunt, of Queenstown, and many others. One ecclesiastic in Cork, however, has made himself unenviably notorious by a violent and vulgar attack, in a week evening address, on what he is pleased to call "The Poison of Revivalism." He, or some of his sympathisers, has taken care to have a lengthy report of this tirade inserted in the local broadsheets. A single extract from the address will show the deplorable ignorance of the speaker, and the extraordinary distortion of Scripture of which prejudiced men are capable. Speaking on the words in Colossians iii., "That ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness," he thus referred to the revival movement:—

"I have selected this passage of Holy Scripture for my text, chiefly for the purpose of warning you against a kind of 'new man' which 'Revivalists' and such persons ask us to put on, and which is eminently distinguished from the 'new man' of which the Apostle speaks. The 'new man' of which the apostle speaks is one that is 'after God created in righteousness and true holiness;' the 'new man' of the 'Revivalist' is one that is really after Satan, created in malignity and true wickedness. I have, indeed, given my best attention from my very youth to this 'new man' of the 'Revivalists,' and I am persuaded there is nothing used by the devil with more success in the Church of God against all true virtue and godliness of living than this very 'new man' of the fanatic."

As such attempts usually do, this attack has quite overleaped the mark. Instead of damaging the work of the evangelist it has served only to draw attention to it, and to evoke the sympathy of many who have made haste to disavow all agreement with such a perversion of Scripture. Interesting letters on the other side have been published in the papers, one of them, the strongest of all, being from one who avows himself a Roman Catholic. The action of this fiery parson has had some other results that he probably did not anticipate. I am told on excellent authority that on the publication of this address, certain of the parishioners of the offending cleric went immediately to his church, which they were wont to attend, and rolled up the cushions in their seats (their own property), and shook off the dust of their feet against the ministrations of the foolish man. Furthermore, it is stated that one of these said parishioners was about to send a donation by cheque to the schools in connection with this church. When this manifesto appeared the donor tore up his letter and cheque, and sent one of the same amount to the Committee of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Mission towards the expenses of the meetings. Such a remarkable instance of being "hoist with his own petard" is worthy of being placed alongside the experiences of Haman of old.

Last week the annual business meeting of the Cork Diocesan Synod brought numbers of clergy into the town. On the Tuesday Mr. Moody, with several of his fellow-labourers, happened to visit the fine new cathedral while service was proceeding. The bishop was informed of the fact by some of the clergy present, and Mr. Moody was invited to join them in the participation of "the Holy Communion." This he and his friends were, of course, glad to do. The circumstance, accidental in itself, has created a favourable impression among these Episcopal brethren, and has served as a very effective counterpoise to the ecclesiastical explosion to which I have referred.

LAST DAY AT CORK.

The last day and the last hour of these blessed ten days came, as last things will, in spite of every fond desire that they should not. But I am anticipating a little. Before referring to the last hour, it may be said that the afternoon meeting of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's closing day had a special interest of its own. The Cork ecclesiastic, to whose vagaries I have already alluded, thought fit to give a second address in his church on the Wednesday evening on "The Poison of Revivalism." It was less objectionable than the first, and, indeed, as one friend remarked, if you could grant the premises on which it was based there could be little objection to some of the conclusions. But the fact was, he was arguing from an imaginary standpoint, so his strictures as to the danger of making salvation too easy, and a matter apart from personal character, fell to the ground. However, the Cork dailies were wise enough in their generation to print the second fulmination as they had done the first. One of them, The Cork Constitution, had a paragraph in the same issue stating that, in justice to Mr. Moody, it would, in its issue of Saturday, give a full report of his afternoon address the preceding day. This was brought to Mr. Moody's notice; but instead of making the smallest allusion to the attack, he gave an address on "What Christ is to us," setting forth in glowing words, and under varied similes, the work of our Lord and Saviour. This address was duly reported, and as duly appeared at considerable length in the Saturday's Constitution. I heard, in the course of the day, that a gentleman in the city had determined to reprint the address in pamphlet form to the number of 2000 or so, and that he intended sending a copy of it to each member of the congregation, of which this doughty opponent of revivals is the pastor. How true it has been in this case, as in so many others, that God maketh the wrath of man to praise Him!

Dismissing this subject, let me now briefly tell about "the Last Hour." The three meetings were in full swing at once, being conducted by Mr. Moody, Mr. Sankey, and Major Whittle respectively. Mr. Moody concluded his last public address in the Assembly Rooms—a very solemn and powerful appeal on being "almost saved, but lost!"—amid a deathlike hush that brooded over the vast audience and gave a tragic import to the occasion. Then the men were sent away to their own place. Those of the women who were stricken in soul by the message, were gathered into the ante-room, and the after-meeting there was the largest that had yet been held. Who can tell what and how many decisions were come to that will affect the future course and destiny of human spirits far beyond the radius of County Cork! I cannot attempt to estimate the matter, but will content myself in saying that it was not an unworthy climax to the ten days' faithful sowing in these rooms. Mr. Sankey's after-meeting at the Wesley Chapel was also, I understand, a deeply interesting, fruitful one.

The men's meeting, which was the very last I attended, presented "a truly grand and wonderful sight," as Mr. Moody himself expressed it. The church was packed up and down. If I had the necessary local knowledge I might be able to give an idea of the composition of the audience. When I say that an ex-Mayor and Knight sat in the body of the meeting next to a very ordinary type of man who stood up to testify for Christ, it will be seen that "all sorts and conditions of men" were represented. The proceedings took the usual form of rising to confess spiritual decision or spiritual concern. I could not, within the limits at my disposal, even begin to record these confessions. I am getting so accustomed now to these testimony-meetings that probably the edge is rubbed off my appreciation of their solemn import; but I could not fail to be thrilled by the sights and sounds at this closing hour. Mr. Moody had joined Major Whittle, and had got the young converts to tell something of the manner of their conversion, as well as the simple confession. With one of these testimonies I must conclude my letter, already too long, I fear. The speaker was a middle-aged Scotchman, holding a good and responsible position in the town. He had been trying for the last two or three years, he said, to break off from his sins, by attending to religious observances, but in vain. He was present at one of the men's meetings, when Canon Daunt of Queenstown, described how he had entered into the full enjoyment of peace when walking through a Dublin street, by simply looking away from his feelings to Jesus Christ, as the One who had settled the matter by his atoning death and resurrection. This Scotchman determined to follow the Canon's example, but the light did not break in at once. He went home and spent the greater part of the night in agonising prayer; at length he fell asleep, without his burden being consciously removed. When he awoke, about seven in the morning, what passed through his mind as he jumped to the floor was, "God has set me free!" His burden was gone. This was the first time he had ever attempted to speak in public, he said, and if anybody had told him a few nights before that he would then be found confessing Christ before his fellows, he would have scouted the idea. This is but a sample of what has been happening at these happy meetings. Still greater things are looked for in the five days during which Major Whittle and Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan remain in Cork to follow up the work.

CONCLUSION AT LIMERICK.

A friend wrote, Oct. 17: "The work goes on well. We had about one-third less than your usual audience at the afternoon meetings, but in the evening were quite well filled. The best of all is, 'God is with us.' Scores testified for Christ, many saying that Monday night was the time of their decision. Some thirty at the close expressed that they decided then for Christ. Mr. McGranahan had about forty cases of decision among the women, most of them seemingly young ladies from the families in the country round about. We are all much encouraged by last night's work. 'Be sure your sin will find you out,' was the word used, and the Lord searched many hearts. Some came to talk about how to make confession of their adulteries, and make restitution of false gain. More middle-aged men seemed reached than any other class. Indeed, all the young men who have attended the meeting seemed to have been converted. My prayer is now that God may use us to establish them in the truth, and leave them organised for the future work to be done, and send in new material."

After Major Whittle came the Mission assumed a fresh development, as far as the evening work was concerned. Before proceeding further, I may, however, mention that the wind-up at Limerick on the previous Lord's day was in accord with the whole course of the meetings there. I cannot do better than quote the following paragraph from the Limerick Chronicle of Tuesday, October 23:—

"On Sunday the remarkably successful Mission of the American evangelists was brought to a conclusion. In the evening, long before eight o'clock, the hour at which the meeting was to commence, the theatre was exceedingly well filled. The service of song, which was very impressive, was led by Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, and the new hymn, 'I will,' was joined in by all with great earnestness. This hymn was suggested the first evening of the meetings by the answer 'I will' to Mr. Moody's appeal, 'Who will serve the Lord?'* The words were written by Major Whittle, and the music by Mr. McGranahan. Major Whittle's sermon on 'Christ saving the lost' was one of great power, the audience being evidently deeply impressed. At the close an unprecedented scene was witnessed. During the singing of a hymn, Major Whittle asked all who had 'taken Christ as their Saviour' during the Mission to stand up. 'Young men and maidens, old men and children,' to the number of some hundreds, then stood up. All the new converts were requested to go to the Methodist Church, upon which about six hundred adjourned there, where they were briefly addressed by Major Whittle. Those who remained in the theatre were addressed by Revs. Dr. Wilson, Dr. Campbell, W. Nicholas, and W. Baxendale. When Major Whittle returned, he expressed his gratification at the reception he had met with in Limerick, and at the hearty co-operation of the choir and the clergy of all Protestant denominations. The doxology was sung, and Dr. Wilson offered the concluding prayer, and with deep feeling farewells were uttered. Devout thankfulness fills the hearts of those interested in the work, for one of the most gracious revivals of religion that ever visited the South of Ireland."

* I find I was in error in a previous letter in attributing the authorship of the hymn, "Behold, what manner of love," to Major Whittle.

The work among the young men in Limerick, to which I have so frequently referred, bids fair to furnish a lasting monument of the Mission. They have banded themselves together and are meeting at seven o'clock every morning for half an hour of prayer and praise before entering on the duties of the day. I am given to understand that a suitable building will soon be erected as a centre of mutual fellowship and aggressive effort. Major Whittle, as the chief instrument in this branch of the work, has earned the greatest esteem of all these brethren. His bright, cheerful, free and easy way of conducting the meetings, combined with his intense earnestness, his wealth of graphic incident, and his remarkably lucid presentation of the way of life, easily account for the success that has followed his labours.

The "fresh development" in Cork, to which I allude in a foregoing paragraph, is the men's meeting in the Scots' Church each evening, at the close of Mr. Moody's address in the Assembly Rooms. From the first this has been a genuine success, under the conduct of Major Whittle. Though not equal in some respects to its Limerick predecessor, it has night after night served to bring to a point, in the case of a large number of men, the process of conviction wrought in the larger gathering. The call for open confession of Christ has been responded to with the utmost readiness and with evident sincerity. Others have expressed an earnest wish then and there to begin the Christian life. The number of middle-aged and even old men who have thus stood up in presence of their fellows has been somewhat remarkable. Very varied positions in social life, as well as different ages, have been represented, thus showing the general and widespread character of the awakening.

With the advent of Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan there came also

THE "OVERFLOWS."

These meetings were held in Wesley Chapel; it stands at some distance from the Assembly Rooms, but nevertheless there have been good congregations and much interest shown. Mr. McGranahan has, unfortunately, been suffering from cold on the chest, and has not been able to sing much during the week, but Mr. Sankey has come to the rescue. After holding the great company in the South Hall meeting place enthralled by his song sermons, he has proceeded each night to the Wesleyan Chapel, taking up the reins there when Major Whittle was obliged to leave for the men's meeting. The bare statement of these arrangements will indicate that the later evenings have been very busy and very blessed seasons of sowing the seed, and of reaping, too. On the two last evenings, many of the Christians have, by a little gentle persuasion, been "evicted" from the Assembly Rooms, and have gone to the overflows, in order to make room for the crowds of outsiders clamouring for admission.

On Thursday evening, when I attended the overflow meeting, Major Whittle delivered a stirring address to Christians on having Christ-like compassion for the lost and needy, and on dealing out to them the bread of life. Later in the evening Mr. Sankey gave a homely and persuasive talk to the anxious and the wavering, and many hands were held up when the testing-time came at the close.

In the Assembly Rooms, meanwhile, Mr. Moody has each evening been putting forth efforts, almost Herculean in their scope and measure, to deal with the masses of men and women around him. Such torrents of burning, searching, rousing speech! One good man at the men's meeting, in a humble walk of life, with whom I conversed, insisted upon it that Mr. Moody was "a second St. Paul." Without instituting any fruitless comparisons of that kind, I may remark that it is wonderful how he is able to stand such a strain as each succeeding night has put upon him. Take for instance the evening of Monday week. His address was on "The Prodigal Son." Those who have heard that address, will understand me when I say that it alone would be a sufficiently exhausting effort for one meeting for any man. At its close the male portion of the audience were weeded out and sent across to the Scots' Church. But the congregation appeared to be not a whit smaller than before. So Mr. Moody must perforce give them another address. Then he asked all to retire except

INQUIRERS AND WORKERS.

These filled the area of the hall, and as personal dealing was hopeless they had to be talked to a third time. Again the sifting process was applied, and an adjournment was at last made to the ante-room, where, however, there was a deplorable lack of workers; this, indeed, was the defect throughout the Cork Mission. Mr. Moody has had, more or less, to go through the same experience each evening. On Thursday evening he was speaking (and such speaking!), almost without intermission, for two hours at a stretch! Even with his giant constitution, and his quenchless zeal, this is too much, and the London friends will have to see to a more rational distribution of the work, otherwise the proposed campaign of eight months may have an unexpected termination.

The work in Cork was, in a measure, brought to a definite focus on Thursday afternoon. At the close of a trenchant address to Christians, especially young converts, on "Overcoming the world," Mr. Moody asked all who had received blessing at the meetings, and all who were anxious about their salvation, to step across to the Scots' Church. The area of the church was packed, and it was a time of wonderful interest both for confessions and decision. The younger people were drafted into the schoolroom attached to the church, and addressed in simple and attractive words by Major Whittle. Throughout the entire day, I may add, an inquiry-meeting was held in the Scots' Church, the evangelists being present in turn to converse with any that chose to come for the purpose. The numbers were not large during the intervals between the meetings, but there were not a few good cases, and the arrangement was amply justified.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Mr. Scott, of the Glasgow Evangelistic Association, while in some of the outlying and rural districts in the south of Scotland, says that wherever he went he saw that the cause of Temperance had made remarkable progress during the past few years. In one village where there were formerly seven public-houses, there were only two now, and the people thought they would get these shut up by and by. Among many of the young farmers abstinence was the rule.

South Africa.—Perhaps you wonder at my ordering so much Temperance literature. The fact is, drink is the most terrible curse here. Without our seeking or desiring, our Gospel Temperance work comes very much more to the front than I ever wished or expected; such ignorance prevails on the points I have mentioned, I have much correspondence in the newspapers to carry on, and many questions to answer publicly and privately. The whole subject of Temperance in this country is perhaps even more important than it is in England. While, therefore, our evangelistic work is our chief work, the Temperance reformation occupies much of our time and strength. I am sorry to inform you that at length I must recognise that my health is broken down. I have been trying to patch myself up for the last two months, but at Lovedale, after several days of most encouraging meetings with Dr. Stewart, my voice utterly failed me, and for a week I was able only to speak in a whisper.

ONCE A CITADEL OF SATAN.

DEAR SIR,—May I draw attention to a brief extract from an article which appeared in your columns in September, 1872? Referring to the Edinboro' Castle, a well-known writer thus described the case:—

"The Edinbro' Castle has an imposing frontage; its situation is open, central, excellent. It contains eighteen rooms, a large drinking saloon, pleasure gardens, and an extensive concert hall, seating over 1000 persons. At present it is used as a trap for souls—a great hell-trap! In company with Dr. Barnardo and Miss Macpherson I glanced in it one evening this week, when the tent-meeting was over. We had come from the midst of a congregation assembled to hear the word of God; but within that hall was another congregation gathered for a very different purpose. Men, women, and boys were there in hundreds yielding themselves to the evil influences of a low harangue from a black man on a platform at the further end.

"We did not, dared not, stay to listen to his words. We saw enough to convince us of the true character of the place. Now, here is a glorious opportunity of striking a blow for Christ. Here is a Satanic stronghold. A Mission Hall is wanted immediately just where it stands. That stronghold of Satan can be obtained for money and changed into a Mission Hall. Who will do it for us?"

It is now well known that within five weeks after the article from which the above is taken appeared in The Christian, the whole of the money required to make the purchase was received from God's servants connected with almost every section of the Church.

The work carried on since has fully justified the purchase, and indeed has exceeded all our hopes. Literally, thousands of souls have been brought to Christ within those walls. Now, as your article of October 18 stated, the Preaching Hall has had to be pulled down, owing to its dangerous condition, and is being rebuilt upon the enlarged site to accommodate fully 3000 persons. Of the money required, better than £3500 is in hand, but we still need £2500.

I dare not so appeal for this money as to divert funds from the "Homes," which are in very great necessity just now; but I felt I must let the readers of The Christian, who have had such blessed partnership in the past with the work carried on at the Edinboro' Castle, know what we are doing and what we are required to do, and give them an opportunity of further co-operation in this ministry of the Gospel.

It is a significant fact that the chief Magistrate of the City of London for the new year, and the Sheriffs, have been long identified with Christian and philanthropic works, and it seems to me a delightful thing that the period of their entrance upon their responsible civic duties should be inaugurated as it were by their co-operating to lay the foundation and memorial stones of the to be rebuilt Edinboro' Castle, on Monday (D.V.), November 26, at three o'clock.

I need hardly say, my own dear working folk, to whom the Edinboro' Castle has been, and is, a spiritual home and sphere of usefulness, are unceasing in prayer that the undertaking may have God's richest blessing. Indeed, never were walls laid in the foundations of such prayer and praise; and I am satisfied that a work of evangelisation such as we have not hitherto dreamed of lies before us in the future, through the goodness of our God. Brethren, pray for and help us!

I will only add, that those who desire tickets for the ceremony on November 26 should apply at once to this office, sending 1s. in postage stamps for each ticket required.—Your faithful servant in the Gospel, Thos. J. Barnardo.

LUTHER AND MELANCTHON.—We have received from Messrs. Müller & Lohse, Dresden, two beautiful portraits of these two great reformers. The price is 2s. They are well executed, and worth much more than the price.

Notes and Comments.

THIS number may fall into the hands of some of our London readers in time to inform them of a Conference on Foreign and Continental Mission work, at which Mr. Reginald Radcliffe and other friends are expected, at the Y. M. C. A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on Wednesday, Oct. 31, at 7.30.

The Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, have undertaken to conduct the Sunday services at the Grand Theatre, Islington, through December, commencing at 7 p.m., and are very anxious to strengthen their Sacred Song Association. Will male and female voices meet for choir practice at 186, Aldersgate-street, on Friday evening at eight?

An expedition, consisting of Professor Hull, F.R.S.; his son, Dr. Gordon Hull, M.D.; Mr. H. Hart, naturalist and botanist; and Mr. R. Lawrence, has just gone out, under the auspices of the Palestine Exploration Fund, for the purpose of a geological survey of the country lying between the Dead Sea and the Gulf of Akaba. Capt. Kitchener, R.E., is to join the party at Cairo. The objects are purely scientific, but the results of the survey will be looked forward to with much interest, as likely to throw light upon the question of the practicableness or otherwise of the Jordan Valley Canal scheme. It is proposed, after reaching the Dead Sea, to include the whole length of the Jordan Valley, from Jericho to the Sea of Tiberias, in the line of route.

The dawn of a new era in the history of Temperance reform appears in the meeting held a few days ago in Manchester, for the purpose of considering the propriety of forming a grand confederation of all the great Temperance associations, so as to secure united action in legislative and other directions. Could this be done, such is the hold Temperance principles have taken upon society, that nothing could withstand their influence. The British Temperance League, the United Kingdom Alliance, Good Templars, Sons of Temperance, and several other societies were represented, and a committee formed to consider the basis of further action in the matter. Divided, the forces ranged on the side of total abstinence are comparatively weak; united, they will carry their triumphs into the very heart of the enemy's citadel.

There are not many now living who can recall the early days of the ministry of the Rev. Charles Stovel, so long pastor of the Baptist Church at Commercial-street, E., but those who can, know how closely it was associated with the struggles then being made on behalf of civil and religious liberty all the world over. For more than fifty-seven years he has laboured in the Gospel, for fifty-one years in London, but at last his end has come, and one more of the few remaining veterans who took part in the Christian conflicts of the first half of the present century, has been removed from earthly toil to heavenly rest. No man has more deserved or enjoyed the respect of those who knew him than Mr. Stovel, those who differed from his convictions, admired the courage, eloquence, and fidelity, with which he maintained and defended them. His last public act was to preside over the Monday prayer-meeting, a fortnight before his death, which occurred on the 22nd October.

Dr. Monro Gibson's Lectures on "Rock and Sand," which were suspended on Monday last, will be resumed next Monday at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, at 8 p.m.

A correspondent writes suggesting that the boxes placed at many railway-stations for the reception of papers for the inmates of workhouses and hospitals afford a good opportunity for sending them copies of The Christian, tracts, and other religious literature. Doubtless truth might by this means be conveyed to many minds otherwise unreached by evangelical effort.

We have to record the departure, to be with Christ, of Lord Congleton, who for very many years has served his Lord and Master with loving fidelity. He had been in ill health and failing strength for some months past; but going to Llandudno, in August last, he seemed to recover somewhat. Upon returning to London, about a fortnight since, he was soon prostrated again, and on Tuesday, 23rd inst., at about 6.30 a.m., passed peacefully away in his sleep. The funeral took place at 3 p.m. on Monday last, at Kensal Green.

The foundation stone of the New Congregational School was laid by Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., at Caterham last week. The removal of this deserving institution from its old quarters at Lewisham has become a necessity, and probably no better site could have been found for it than that obtained in the lovely Caterham valley. The new buildings will be capable of accommodating fifty additional boys, a fact which will make a larger subscription list an actual necessity, but one which will no doubt be cheerfully met by the large constituency of friends the School has secured. £6000 is yet required to complete the sum to be expended in the erection.

It is not often we can disagree with Mr. Spurgeon in his utterances either from the pulpit, the press, or the platform; but his strong protest against undenominationalism at the meeting of the Ragged School Union does not appear to us well-timed or in harmony with Catholicity, which it is more than ever desirable and essential to promote. We are not sure what he aims at when he speaks of "that colourless, indistinct amalgamation of nothing at all so current in undenominational circles." Those who are unsectarian in their type of Christian thought, are not necessarily without a creed; indeed, as a rule, such hold the non-sectarian character and spirit of the religion of Christ as a distinct and important principle of Christ's own inculcating, while on other points of Gospel truth they are no less pronounced and clear than those who are more sectarian in their tone.

If the force and fervour which are employed for sectarian purposes to-day were thrown into the scale of direct Gospel work for the salvation of souls, we should soon see results in the outside world such as at present the Church only deplores the lack of. As a matter of fact the greater part of the success achieved in dealing with the moral and social evils which confront us, attends the labours of men who are either outside all denominations, or, if in connection with them, make very little of them as such, or of their shibboleths of opinion and practice. Unity, not division, is strength; and this feeds on Christ, not on denominationalism.

To a large number of our readers residing in London and the neighbourhood, the mention of Mildmay recalls hallowed seasons of spiritual blessing received at the Annual Conferences held in the great hall. It is with unfeigned sorrow that we learn, indirectly, that the funds for the maintenance of the Mildmay Missions to various parts of London are completely exhausted; nay more, that the Mission has been compelled to go into debt to keep all the various agencies in full activity. With an empty exchequer, an overdrawn account, and the Christmas bills not very far off, the faith of those in charge of this great work must be sorely tried. Will not some of the Lord's people, who owe much to Mildmay, come forward at once to relieve by generous offerings the present pressure? We cannot believe that in the midst of so much fresh effort now being made on all sides, the old interests will be allowed to die out.

Comparatively few are probably aware of the wonderful ramifications of this Mildmay Mission. The work attempted is almost entirely spiritual; there is nothing sensational in it to attract attention, consequently it is often unnoticed. Moreover it has been a rule, we believe, not to make public appeals for help. This burden presses most heavily on Mrs. Pennefather, whose name is so dear to the hearts of hundreds of Christian workers, and whose health, we fear, is now suffering somewhat from this additional weight of anxiety.

For further information we heartily recommend to the prayerful notice of our readers the monthly periodical issued from Mildmay, entitled "Service for the King," published by Messrs. Shaw & Co., Paternoster Row. The Treasurer of the Mission is James E. Mathieson, Esq., Garden House, Mildmay-park, N.

The reflex influence of Missions to the heathen is an argument in their favour by no means to be lost sight of, although their obligation and importance rest upon higher grounds. The South American Missionary Society's agent at Orange Bay, Hoste Island, has just furnished another illustration of this in a letter dated August 25. He says: "You will rejoice to hear our Mission has been the means of saving the lives of twenty-two men." It appears that a German ship laden with coal for San Francisco caught fire when off Cape Horn. Her crew took to boats, and for eight days were tossing about amid the islands of the South Pacific, but feared to land lest the natives should be unfriendly. At length they fell in with one who piloted them to Ooshooia, where for sixteen days they were cared for, and the sick among them nursed and tended. Ultimately a French vessel calling at the port received them, and took them on their way.

The Secretary of the Society with which Mr. Bridges is connected writes to The Times, stating that a great change has been effected in the character of the natives of those regions generally, so that the Yahgans from Cape Diego to Cape Horn, and round to Brecknock Peninsula, can be trusted. The same can be said of many other parts of the world: once savage and inhuman, the dread of all who had to pass their coasts, they are now the home of not only civilised but Christianised inhabitants—all, under God's direction and blessing, traceable to Mission enterprise and effort. Such facts should be remembered with abounding thankfulness and praise.

At the Conference on International Law, held at Milan last month, the question of the internationalisation of the Congo was very prominently considered; Sir Travers Twiss, Q.C., D.C.L., ably advocating it as a necessity in order to prevent the inroad of European civilisation upon Central Africa becoming a curse rather than a blessing. An international protectorate of the mighty river which forms the link between the Dark Continent and the civilised world is a sine quâ non if the interests of peace, of trade and commerce, of social advancement, and of religious liberty are to be secured. It is surely to the advantage of all the Great Powers concerned, to see that such a solution is quickly made of a difficulty which otherwise threatens to be a fruitful source of contention, as well as a barrier to the progress of millions of our race.

At the same Conference resolutions were passed by acclamation, expressing desire that the slave-trade should be assimilated in international law to piracy, and that every State should prohibit its subjects, under heavy penalty, from participating directly or indirectly in any traffic in slaves. A printed copy of these resolutions, signed by the President, was ordered to be sent to all the Powers represented at the Court of St. James, the cost and supervision of so doing being undertaken by Mr. C. H. Allen on behalf of the Anti-Slavery Society.

A correspondent complains of the abuse of the power, in some cases, of the daily Press, and instances the refusal to give adequate reports of statements concerning social questions; e.g., a large and important meeting of men and women was held in St. James's Hall, Plymouth, at which a motion in favour of the absolute repeal of the C. D. Acts was unanimously passed, and yet the Western Morning News refused either to report the admirable address of the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, or to give publicity to the testimony given in a crowded meeting against these pernicious measures. It is said that the editor of the above paper is in favour of the legislation, but that should not prevent him, in his position as a daily journalist, giving a fair account of public questions which are being discussed, or of public meetings which are held.

THE CONGO.—Much attention has for some time past been directed to the Congo and South Western Africa. The Graphic of October 13 commenced a series of illustrated articles on the Congo. Both the letterpress and illustrations are by Mr. H. H. Johnston, F.Z.S., who has recently made a journey in the Congo district, and who during his visit stayed some time with the well-known African explorer, Mr. H. M. Stanley.

WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE.—We are trying to secure one hundred persons to give or collect £10 each; this will bring £1000. But some may not be able to do so much, and we therefore ask for another hundred to give or collect £5 each, making £500. If this is done by the end of the year, we should have the £1500 necessary, and be able to begin the building with the new year. I have no doubt many of your readers will gladly take part in thus helping so important an effort, and I shall be pleased to provide collecting cards, papers, &c., upon hearing from them. We need some help with our evening-classes, and should be glad of the services of three gentlemen. We only ask for one hour, one evening weekly. The subjects to be taught are, Bible study, French, and Elocution. The work affords opportunities for earnest Christian influence.—Henry Hill, jun., 38, Bow-lane, E.C.

[The remarks of Mr. Spurgeon to the Ragged School Union respecting the boys of London give great emphasis to Mr. Hill's appeal. The condition of our growing lads is one of the perilous signs of the times.—Ed.]

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

At the conclusion of our summer's labours, we have great pleasure in telling our friends of the encouragement we have had in connection with tent-work, though that forms but a small proportion of our operations, even in the summer-time. During the last six months we have frequently had as many as twenty-five tents in various parts of the country; some of them in towns and others in remote country districts. They have been widely welcomed, and large numbers of people have been drawn to hear the Gospel preached in them by our evangelists. Would that we could convey some idea of the great need, and the blessings given, in many directions. We can only state that tens of thousands have been reached with a clear and faithful Gospel message, and that our correspondents have frequently been full of gratitude to God for the evident impression made upon many who usually attend no place of worship. Notwithstanding the many evangelists laid aside from overwork, the number of meetings supplied with preachers between April 1 and September 30 amounted to 8674, an increase of 214 over the corresponding months of last year.

All who wish to communicate with the Society on the subject of organising meetings, &c., are requested to write to the Honorary Secretary, 21, Surrey-street, London, W.C. Cheques and Post-office Orders, G.P.O., should be made payable to W. E. Smith, Honorary Secretary.

MR SCROGGIE IN GLASGOW.

At the beginning of October, the readers of The Christian were requested to pray for a blessing on a series of special meetings to be conducted by Mr. J. M. Scroggie in the south-east of Glasgow. That series has now been brought to a close in circumstances that call for thanksgiving.

It may be noticed that, in the way of conducting the meetings, every effort was made to make them as attractive as possible. Prayer and pains were united. Several of the ladies of Glasgow, to whom God has given a large measure of musical talent, came to lead the singing; they were joined by a section of the trained choir of the Mizpah Band, and the singing of God's praises was thus made the sweetest singing ever heard in this quarter of Glasgow, and brought Divine truth before the minds of the people in a way fitted to arrest the attention and move the heart towards Him whose salvation was thus sweetly sounded in their ears.

The attendance at the meetings was large from the commencement. On Sabbath evenings the large church was crowded in every corner; and on week-day evenings the area was filled, and sometimes the galleries had to be opened. Mr. Scroggie's great theme was regeneration—the need of it, and how to obtain it. This subject he illustrated in connection with such texts as the Conversion of Saul; the Jailor of Philippi; the Woman of Samaria; the Voice of Wisdom, &c. His fund of stories seemed inexhaustible, sometimes humorous, sometimes tragic, but always illustrating and supplying divine truth.

The last part of every night's proceedings was the inquiry-meeting. The results of the preaching were gathered up there; and on each night a number of individuals, sometimes more and sometimes less, was found in that inquiry-room, like so many wounded doves, not able to flee away to the Rock of Ages and be at rest, but with broken wings, mourning, and fluttering towards the clefts of the rock. And of those dealt with in that inquiry-room, many did give evidence of having entered into the Lord's rest, and peace and joy. As many as eighty-two were personally dealt with, and of these a large proportion professed to have entered the Lord's peace. May the Shepherd of Israel keep them for the remainder of their lives below, and make them a blessing.

EAST-END Y.M.C.A.

On Thursday, October 25, the first annual meeting of this Association was held in the Poplar Town-hall, under the presidency of Mr. Henry Green, J.P. There were between five and six hundred members and friends present. The report showed that the Association had made rapid progress during the year. From thirty members last March the membership was now 175.

The agencies employed are prayer-meetings, Bible-classes, evening services out-door and in, tract distribution, and a lodging-house Mission. During the week there are Temperance meetings, and various classes. Great stress was laid upon the smallness of the premises, and the need for a new building, as the rooms again and again were uncomfortably filled.

The Chairman, having commented on the favourable state of the Association, Mr. W. Hind Smith spoke on "The Connection between the Y.M.C.A. and the Church." Mr. H. E. Lester and others followed. We are sorry to find there is a balance of £16 due to the Treasurer.

LONDON CITY MISSION.

The first Annual Meeting of City Police work by Mr. Thomas Russell, missionary, was held at the Young Men's Christian Association, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on Thursday, October 25, at 7 p.m., when two hundred of the police and friends enjoyed a social cup of tea together, and had a long and pleasant talk on the trials of the past and the joys of the future. The large hall was soon filled, and Mr. George Williams expressed the deep interest the Committee of the London City Mission felt in the spiritual welfare of the police, and thought that they needed physical force, intellectual force, and heart force—when all the heart's force is devoted to the Lord, and all its faculties and thoughts are filled with the love of Christ, there must be good results.

Mr. Thos. Russell said that the glorious missionary enterprise whose highest interest we had assembled to promote was born in prayer, nursed by the hand of faith, ordained by the love of God, and sent forth by the Lord Jesus Christ. Twelve months had swiftly passed away since he was called, in the providence of God, to succeed that grand old man, Mr. C. J. Hilder, who laboured for thirty-one years and in another district for twelve years. His friendly visits by day and night at the stations, police courts, and Newgate, the old City prison, have always been received with pleasure, and he had enjoyed many opportunities of speaking the truth in love. He had given away 19,951 publications and 91 Bibles and New Testaments, and conducted 244 meetings during the year. One of the most interesting gatherings was the Missionary Recognition meeting on March 5, held at the Lecture Hall, City Temple, when Mr. F. Bevan kindly invited 400 of the police and their wives to tea.

A Bible-class was commenced on June 15, with fifteen students, and now met together weekly for the study of God's Word. A Christian Policemen's Association was established at the residence of Miss C. Gurney, 11, Ladbrooke-terrace, W., at the beginning of the present year.

On the 10th May a City branch was formed at 186, Aldersgate-street, and has thirty-two members. This Association has extended its usefulness to the east, west, north, and south of London, and now possesses seven branches and nearly 500 members. On the 1st September a monthly journal was published for policemen, entitled On and Off Duty.

Rev. R. Dawson, B.A., Secretary of the Society, spoke on the close union that existed for many years between the London City Mission and the City Police. Mr. A. C. P. Coote, Mr. R. Burns, and Mr. Superintendent Foster having said a few words, the meeting closed.

PENZANCE.—Mr. Spiers has been labouring among the children here with good success. Large numbers have attended the meetings, and many teachers have been led to see that the salvation of the children should be their aim.

IRISH NOTES.

A RECENT run through Ireland, and a brief visit to the western coast and the adjacent islands of Achill and Arran vividly brought to my recollection two painful facts of history —that England is largely chargeable with having forced Romanism on her sister island, and with having discouraged and ruined her industries. We are in duty bound, therefore, from motives of justice and indeed of self-interest, to seek to repair these evils by giving her the Gospel and by promoting industries. For Popery and want of employment are two chief reasons why Ireland is such a thorn in England's side.

To speak of the latter first. The land is the source of wealth which both classes in Ireland—landlords and tenants—seem exclusively to think and talk about. Nothing of a secular character seems more necessary than to occupy them with some other means of livelihood. Emigration is no panacea for Ireland's trouble. We cast her people out of their country as from an Indian boomerang, only to bring the weapon with deadly effect back upon ourselves. Whereas, if they were employed they would be content, or if they emigrated they would go with kindly feeling instead of with bitter hate towards England.

There is at least one industry which it would need little capital or effort to develop. The ocean teems with fish. Off the Isles of Achill and Arran I saw the sea alive with shoals of mackerel, while other fish also abounds. Yet we were fed with tinned salmon from America, and were told that a gentleman in Dublin had gravely asked whether the parcels post would not enable him to get fresh fish from London? A friend who was with me in Ireland tells me that the Great Eastern Company, with which he is connected, has just made at Lowestoft a new basin for a hundred fishing boats, while off the coast of Achill we could only see a few flimsy canvas-covered coracles, whose occupants were taking fish singly with a line and hook, instead of sweeping them in by thousands in nets. Yet fish are much more plentiful there than off our own shores.

Those who are tired of fashionable watering-places may make a note that at Blacksod Bay, Achill Island, there are the finest bathing beaches in the kingdom, with islands full of antiquities and living curiosities within a few hours' sail. Mr. Sheridan, of Slievemone Hotel, Dugort, is a self-taught naturalist and botanist, and a most interesting companion. His mother will provide for them with homely Irish hospitality. There will be ample opportunity of shining for Jesus among a simple population, Romanist and Protestant.

One of the crying sins against the poor of our cities and towns is the high price of fish, kept up by the fish ring. It is to be hoped that the Fish League, which brings fresh fish in refrigerating cars, will be a success, and that Ireland as well as Scotland may share in its advantages. At our own seaside place, fish is often exorbitantly dear. A prospectus of the Fish League may be obtained from D. Tallerman, Esq., 26, Gracechurch-street, London.

On Arran Island, the fine appearance of the inhabitants denoted care and kindness on the part of the managers and proprietors. The middle island, with several hundred inhabitants, had neither police nor coastguard station on it. These islands are a grand site and centre for fishing stations.

As regards the Gospel, it seemed very evident that Scripture-readers and colporteurs and other like humble missionaries were the agencies by far the most suitable to the needs of the Irish peasant population.

Very emphatically I would say that what is needed is not the arguing of Protestantism but the preaching of Jesus. It makes an amazing difference whether we hold forth a system or a person. And in this Romanism has a decided advantage over Protestantism. The watchword of Protestantism is Justification by Faith; the watchword of Romanism is Mary, the Mother of God. The former is true, the latter is untrue. Yet the heart is drawn to the untruth cunningly linked with the person of the mother of Jesus, while the doctrine of Christ exercises no saving influence until its value has been learned through the knowledge of the personal Saviour, Jesus.

For illustration. The people learn more perhaps from the hymns they sing than from the sermons they hear. This certainly is true of the multitude. But the hymns which live are always intensely personal. "Jesu, Lover of my soul;" "Rock of ages, cleft for me;" "I lay my sins on Jesus;" "I love to tell the Story." These are the hymns that are sung, not abstractions, such as—

> "Faith is a very simple thing,
> But little understood."

Faber seems to have understood the power of this principle, for when he set himself to write hymns for the avowed purpose of doing for Popery what Wesley and Newton and Cowper had done for the Christian religion, he centred the doctrines in persons, and taught the dogma of the immaculate conception, not by abstract reasoning but after this sort:—

> "O Mother, I could weep for mirth,
> Joy fills my heart so fast;
> My soul to-day is heaven on earth,
> Oh, could the transport last!
> I think of thee and what thou art,
> Thy majesty, thy state;
> And I go singing in my heart,
> Immaculate! Immaculate!
> "When Jesus looks upon thy face,
> His heart with rapture glows;
> And in the Church, by his sweet grace,
> Thy blessed worship grows.
> I think of thee, and what thou art,
> Thy majesty, thy state;
> And I go singing in my heart,
> Immaculate! Immaculate!"

It is easy to see how doctrines, taught in a way which fastens the attention and the affection upon a person, are received with eagerness and jealously maintained, by an imaginative, superstitious, impulsive, and affectionate people, while doctrines argumentatively set forth make little impression. Arguments may make Protestants, but only the lifting up of Jesus can make Christians.

We might ask, like Paul, Was Justification by Faith crucified for you? or were ye baptized into the name of Protestantism? No. The men who turned the world upside down were those who determined to know nothing among them save Jesus Christ, and Him Crucified. The doctrines are indeed essential, but, as arguments, they appeal only to the head; connected with the Lord Jesus, they affect the heart. "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy."

A PLEA FOR IRELAND.

We have received more than one plea for Ireland, of which the following may be taken as the gist:—

Dear Christian Friends,—Do you not think it behoves us, at this present time, to make a special effort for Ireland? We see her distracted by internal dissensions, rioting, and discord, chiefly brought about by political agitators, who misguide and mislead the ignorant—is it not a time to bestir ourselves on behalf of our sister Isle, and to see if we cannot do something to stem the torrent of agitation which is going on there? Every Christian knows there is but one remedy for all this evil, —and that is, to spread the Gospel of peace among our fellow-subjects there.

There are many earnest labourers in Ireland. Suppose we each strengthen their hands by doubling our subscriptions to the various branches of Christian work there? Let us do twice as much (and more than that, if we can) as we have hitherto done. We know there are powerful foes in poor, priest-ri den Ireland, but "who art thou, O great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain." Let no one refuse to carry out my proposal; if some sacrifice has to be made, let us do it cheerfully, for what has the Saviour done for each one of us? What did He sacrifice for us? Even his life-blood, upon the agonising Cross.

Dear friends! arouse yourselves, and send to Ireland a "double portion"; a Benjamin's portion; that, while the adversary is "coming in like a flood," the standard of God's truth may be raised against him, on all sides.

THE LATE MR. T. B. SMITHIES.—A memorial service will be held in the Wesleyan Chapel, Wood Green, N., on Thursday, November 1, at 7.30 p.m., conducted by Rev. W. Hudson.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Greenock.—Mr. Moody, the soldier evangelist, has been conducting a three weeks' meetings here with great success.

Macclesfield.—Mr. Henry Varley will conduct a special Mission here, commencing on Lord's Day next, November 4.

Kirkcudbright.—Mr. James Scott, of Glasgow, has been in this district, which has not been visited by any evangelist for seventeen years. There is a spirit of hearing among the people. At one meeting held, it was intimated that there would be an after-meeting for inquirers, and all remained.

Bramley.—Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wiggan, of London, closed a fourteen days' Mission services at Bramley, Leeds, on Sunday, October 21. The Primitive Methodist Chapel was crowded. The meetings have been a means of blessing to scores of Christians, and about seventy persons have found peace.

Swindon.—The anniversary of the evangelistic Mission at this place was held on October 24, at which an excellent report was given by Mr. E. Hurditch of the great things the Lord had done and is still doing among the men employed by the Great Western Railway, and other inhabitants of Swindon. This work is a branch of Mr. C. R. Hurditch's Mission, which has been so signally blessed of God in the conversion of souls.

Lancashire.—Messrs. Fullerton and Smith have just finished their campaign in North-East Lancashire. The last places visited were Burnley and Preston. At Burnley the various services were largely attended, in some instances two being held at the same time, and the interest manifested lasted to the end of the Mission, not one of the least interesting features being the presence of not a few who decided for Christ during a similar Mission held four years since at Preston. The meetings have been held at the Guildhall, also at several chapels, good congregations have assembled and much good has been the result. During the eleven weeks of the Mission many have found peace, and they, with the various Christian bodies, have testified their appreciation of the services rendered by the evangelists by sending £200 as a thank-offering to Mr. Spurgeon for evangelistic work.

New Barcombe, Sussex.—There has been a blessed work carried on in this place lately. Mr. R. J. Pope, of Brighton, has built a Mission Hall in his grounds, in order to meet the convenience of the ever increasing numbers which have, through the summer and autumn, met in a tent. Many souls have come out to witness for Jesus. The new building was opened on the 11th October, when a most touching address was delivered by the Rev. John George Gregory. On the 24th October the room was crowded to excess, and at the close some young men surrendered their hearts to God. One of the converts has been instrumental in inducing one hundred persons to sign the Temperance pledge during the past twelve months. It is much to be desired that many other Christian people who are rich might follow Mr. Pope's example. The result would be that many parishes where Ritualism has barred the light would soon rejoice and blossom as the rose. Will your readers pray that this work may redound to the glory of God and the salvation of souls.

Bradford.—A week's Mission has been conducted by Miss Bernard, of Bristol, in connection with the Y.W.C.A. of this town, from October 20 to 26. The evening meetings have been fairly well attended, and good work has been done. A few very special cases have brought great joy to the workers, some abandoned ones have been reclaimed. The afternoon Bible-readings were very well attended, and richly blessed to many of God's children.

Glasgow.—For the past three weeks we have had the privilege of listening to the Gospel from the lips of our dear brother, Mr. George O. Barnes, from America, and the Lord has been greatly using him in leading many to accept Jesus as their Saviour. Mr. Barnes came to Glasgow on the invitation of Mr. Quarrier, and has preached nightly in the Orphan Home Hall to large and most attentive audiences. The freshness with which he presents the truth is most striking. At times he says things which seem to go against all our former teaching, but when his statements are brought to the test of the Word of God, you find they are strictly in keeping with it, and that it is just the "old, old story," told in a way which arrests many who seem to have got Gospel-hardened. He makes the Gospel so simple that the very children seem to take it in as he is preaching, and it has been most cheering to see the numbers who have confessed the Saviour and are now living for Him. The Christians who have had the opportunity of being present at the Bible-readings given by our brother in various drawing-rooms have greatly enjoyed them. They are most instructive and accompanied with great power. He commences work next week in the Burgh Hall, Partick, for a fortnight, and afterwards goes to various parts of Glasgow and Scotland. He is accompanied by his daughter, who conducts the singing, and her sweet solos and songs of invitation have been much used in leading wavering ones to come to Jesus. R. H. H.

THE THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

ON Friday evening last Mr. E. J. Mather, the Secretary of the above Mission, spoke to a large audience at the Assembly-rooms, Putney, on the work in the Thames among emigrant ships, collier brigs and oyster smacks, among the vessels in the West India Docks, and the navvies in the Mission-room at Tilbury, as well as the North Sea fishermen, was vividly described. There appears to be no doubt that God is graciously owning the work of the missionaries, with whom it is always pleasant to talk, because of their unaffected simplicity and earnest faith that their Heavenly Father will bless his own message.

One of the missionaries present told of a young Norwegian whom he had prevailed upon to take a copy of the Bible before going out on his voyage. Perhaps to get rid of his importunity as much as for any other reason the young sailor took the Book and threw it into his box. Apparently it would never be taken out again, and with the Word of Life within his reach he would pursue the road to death. But on the voyage the Bible was taken from the chest, and its truth went home to the heart of the reader. He became a changed man from that hour. On his return to the neighbourhood of London to his great delight he met the good missionary who had prevailed upon him to take the Bible which he had thrown into his chest. He saluted him with joy beaming in his face, and begged him to present to the Society two Mexican dollars which he placed in his hand as a small thank-offering, he said, for the good he had received. This was but one of many instances of good narrated, and Admiral Fishbourne, who presided, might well say that the work which the Committee of the Society are bravely extending was in importance second to none, and truly deserving of hearty support.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.—On Thursday, November 1, the Open All-night Refuge, 37, Manchester-street, King's-cross, will be re-opened by a meeting for prayer at 6.30. Friends will be heartily welcomed.

LECTURES.—The out-door summer season at watering-places being over, Mr. John Hambleton is now free to lecture six, eight, or ten nights during the winter months, wherever the people are willing to hear of the coming judgments upon Christendom, and the coming of the Lord, from the books of Genesis and the Revelation, where he can have the hall or place free of expense, and pay his own expenses from the circulation of his own book "The Caldron of Christendom." Each Sunday evening he preaches the Gospel free.—John Hambleton, 15, Maple-grove, Lodge-lane, Liverpool.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

WEST AFRICA.—The Bâle Missionary Society has lost seven missionaries on the west coast of Africa; the last of these, M. Pretorius, died in April of this year while making a tour of inspection. In spite of these trials, the Society and the missionaries decide not to abandon their African posts.—Témoin de la Verité.

PARIS.—M. M. Loyson (Father Hyacinthe) has just said farewell to his flock in Paris, for a few months. For some years he has been asked to go and preach in North America, and now he responds to the reiterated appeal. He intends to preach from Montreal to San Francisco, without regard to communities or pulpit. "All the churches," he says, "have fallen, and therefore are so divided."—Christianisme au XIX. Siècle.

BELGIUM.—Three Swiss pastors have recently been appointed to Belgium, through whom much additional help and strength in evangelistic work is expected. Pastors, evangelists, Scripture-readers, and colporteurs are pursuing their work with zeal and with blessing in many parts of the field of labour. During the last five months 88,835 tracts, in addition to Bibles, portions, and religious books, have been distributed. Sunday evening meetings for the reading of the Bible are held in private houses. In some of these from twenty to fifty Roman Catholics have been present. The Bible is also read and listened to with respect and attention in workmen's lodgings. One of the readers says: "I find no difficulty now in this work, and what is done is grand, but I wish I could see more conversions." The seed sown will, doubtless, spring up and bear fruit. God's word shall not return unto Him void.—Le Chrétien Belge.

VIENNA.—We are still here in Vienna, because the Lord has given us favour with the pastors, and we hope to have a united prayer-meeting to-morrow afternoon at four o'clock; also I have applied for permission to give a public address on Saturday next, then on Sunday I have been asked to speak in the Presbyterian Hall in English and in German. We hope, however, to leave this for Buda-Pesth, on October 22. It is the day of small things in Austria, yet there are many hopeful signs that the Lord owns the efforts of his servants in this land, and that prayer for Austria is not given to the wind. Liberty is very limited, but the power of the Lord finds an entrance even through the very narrow door. I have had a very loving reception from some of the pastors of the Lutheran and Reformed Churches. F. W. BAEDEKER.

Hotel Metropole, Vienna, Oct. 17.

FRANCE.—Rev. R. W. McAll, of Paris, has sent forth a second letter to his fellow-workers on the "Mission Populaire Evangélique de France." He desires that they should all use the best means for leading sinners to the Saviour, and with this object in view he asks all the workers to make the following trial for six months, namely, "to put aside in all their addresses, not only ecclesiastical controversy and political allusions, but prolonged arguments against materialism and free-thought, as well as complaints and discussions on the moral state of the country. Let us be resolved each time we speak in the meetings to address our fellow-men in a direct manner as to their own state, pleading with them in the name of Christ to be reconciled to God, or endeavouring to dissipate the darkness which obscures the appreciation of Divine truth in those who have already begun to seek their Saviour." Of course, exception to this rule is to be made in case of special conferences, as well as in Bible studies and addresses intended to nourish spiritual life where it has already been implanted. We heartily commend this plan to the consideration of our own Mission workers during the coming winter.

GENEVA.—"The public pillars are ours and we will not allow them to be used as means of attacking us!" Such are the terms in which the Superintendent of the Department of Justice and Police refuses to permit the appeal of the Evangelical Alliance to the Swiss people to be posted up. This appeal, then, has only appeared in those journals that have consented to publish it. On the same day in the same columns, appeared another manifesto which cannot fail to make an impression on the people. Forty-three adult, Genevese citizens, each giving their addresses and profession, declare themselves members of the Salvation Army, and demand publicly, in the most respectful terms, that the State Council shall assure to them the free exercise of worship, conformably to the constitution and laws.—Journal Religieux des Eglises Independantes.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

THE annual meeting of this excellent Mission was held at Exeter Hall on Thursday, October 25, when Mr. S. D. WADDY, Q.C., M.P., presided, and a number of gentlemen who had been labouring at various seaside resorts gave some deeply interesting accounts of their work amongst the little ones, and mentioned a number of cases of conversions which had come under their own observation. At no less than a hundred and ten different places picture leaflets and loving messages were distributed and services were held at forty different seaside resorts.

The large number of people who attended on this occasion, from a great many places in the provinces, was a proof of the practical sympathy, and one might almost say unbounded interest, in the work of this Mission, so admirably managed and fruitful in its results. Unbelief in the conversion of children is happily fast disappearing, and on every hand Christians are being stirred up to preach the Gospel to the little ones.

Mr. C. H. BOUTFLOWER gave a splendid account of the work at Scarborough, where the meetings had been large and the conversions not a few. He spoke in very forcible language of the deep desire in the hearts of young people for something that would ennoble their character and help them to live a life worthy of living. The letters he and others had received, as well as the joy experienced in the work, were an abundant reward for all that had been done.

Mr. E. J. KENNEDY began the meetings at Bridlington Quay, with an audience of fifteen hundred, increasing night after night to two thousand. The lantern services here, as elsewhere, were very successful. One child, who had an infidel father, requested Mr. Kennedy to write her name in her Bible, as she had promised her mother she would ask the person whom God used to her conversion to do so.

Mr. SEAGROVE detailed the work at Littlehampton, where advertising had done much towards giving them good audiences, and a great number of cases of conversion were found, and Mr. E. T. M. DENNES issued a circular-letter at Weymouth which brought him about thirty helpers. The meetings were productive of good here also, and the lamplight services were of real value. A good-bye letter was given to the children, and a promise made to write to as many as possible on their birthday.

Mr. E. ARROWSMITH, whose enthusiasm in the children's cause knows no bounds, pleaded earnestly for more workers, and real ones, and for more monetary support. He invited any of the audience to come to 48, Paternoster-row and see the Mission Library, toward which they would be glad to receive help. He had many letters which told of blessing received, and others which displayed a sad ignorance of the Gospel among the higher and middle classes.

Mr. W. M. CARRUTHERS spoke of blessing at Lowestoft, of a daily increasing audience and of the unity of the workers. A thank-offering of £27 was given, and many testimonies also.

The CHAIRMAN spoke of the work at Eastbourne, which was by no means the least encouraging. He likened these workers to the seventy that "returned with joy" to tell what the Lord had done by them. The work had been so pleasing that they wanted to go again.

We are sorry our space forbids our giving other interesting details of this meeting. We heartily commend it to the support of our readers. The address is 48, Paternoster-row, E.C.

SHELTERING HOMES, LIVERPOOL.

DEAR FRIENDS,—We have had a busy summer in placing out our large families, amounting to 180 boys and girls, in their respective homes and situations in the New Land, and then in visiting in every direction, travelling many thousand miles, giving a glad smile of encouragement to those who are doing well, and a word of advice or occasionally reproof to those tried with sulky or untruthful dispositions. Oh! how wonderfully the life in this grand new land supplies the lack of advantages and openings for the young ones of our overcrowded cities who seem to all appearance trodden down, crushed out, placed on burial clubs, so that a small sum can be realised when they drop off altogether. I say again, oh! how marvellously God has blest us with the children, so that it has become a pioneer work indeed for thousands of young souls to be rescued from poverty, vice, and woe, and set upon a new, happy, safe path.

Before me lies a letter from a little lad, the eldest of seven fatherless children and the nephew of a brave first officer who lost his life in saving others. While the papers were ringing with accounts of the calmness and courage of the captain and mate of the Cyprian in the time of danger and total wreck, the poor, heartbroken widow, who had been hitherto generously helped by this noble brother, came to the Sheltering Home, and though I at first shook my head, for I did not see how we could possibly squeeze another bed into either of our overflowing dormitories until after our next swarm to Canada took place, yet, as she silently stood before me with all those helpless, fatherless children to provide for, and only her two hands to accomplish all, and in this dilemma, if she by any means managed to procure work, what was to become of these wee baby things? Could they be left all day, and every day? Would not her boys, as they got old enough to run the streets, take on the example of bad boys, and drift first into the truant school and then into a reformatory? I decided to take Willie and Jessie, and promised her that, if we were spared in God's providence, we would take two more and two more, and finally, if she bore herself well in the struggle, would find means for her and the babies to get to Canada. The letter runs thus:—

"September 27, 1883.

"My Dear Friend Mrs. Birt,—I write you this little note to let you know I arrived at my new home all safe. Now, Mrs. Birt, I do so wish you could see me here. Oh, what a pretty place this is. I have been doing nothing but sitting up in the apple trees and plum trees all day. We have fourteen cows, and such a lot of grapes—three different kinds. I hope I shall be able to do whatever my master tells me, and to do it right. We have a big orchard here, with every kind of apples in it. I wish I could just give you some. Now, Mrs. Birt, I had fifty-five cents left after I bought my ticket; what am I to do with it? Give my love to all the boys and girls belonging to my band. I wish to thank the teacher for the little book he gave me. I also send thanks for the nice one you gave me. I am to go to school all winter.—I remain, your loving boy,

"Willie Mullowney."

Does not this little letter speak for itself? Is it not a thousand times better for the lad to be entering upon a training amongst these fine Scotch Canadians that will soon fit him to earn his own living and also to help his dear widowed mother, than to be pining and miserable in a city like Liverpool?

Wandering round the premises on Sunday morning, I was attracted by the stamping of a noise in the stable, and found, on inquiry, that it was Johnnie Balls, who had ridden down in the early Sunday morning to breakfast with us at the Home, because he "felt a bit of a longing to see us again before we returned to England;" and soon Johnnie stood at my side, looking the very personification of health, brightness, and manliness, and at the very time of his life when he requires judicious handling and guiding. It is difficult to believe he could have grown up into anything but an idle, worthless criminal if left in Liverpool, for he had been twice in the Truant School before he was twelve years of age. Now he has had regular schooling every winter for three years, and we know there is nothing to prevent him from rising to a position of trust and affluence.

The following extract refers to a little girl who was brought to me by the daughter of a Member of Parliament to save her from a life of poverty and the bad example of her widowed mother:—

"Little Emily is treated as one of our own family. My wife has already found a warm place in her heart for her. It would have done your heart good to have seen the baby boy and Emmie just now with their arms so lovingly round each other's neck—they looked such a pretty pair—while my wife was telling them some pretty story. Emily shall have a good education, and we shall make her as comfortable and happy as we know how. She is happy already."

We would earnestly ask each one who may read this whether they will not help us to sustain this work and this "Sheltering Home" for the children from the stormy blast of want and woe. Then we shall begin our twelfth winter's work hopefully and prayerfully, knowing that "God will deliver the needy when he crieth; the poor also and him that hath no helper."

Yours in the service of little children,

Louisa Birt.

EVANGELISATION SOCIETY FOR GERMANY.

A NOBLE WAY OF COMMEMORATING THE ANNIVERSARY OF LUTHER'S BIRTH.

AN Evangelisation Society, under the auspices of a German Committee of influential Christian men, is being started at the present time. It has, indeed, been inaugurated. It is intended to co-operate with the existing Protestant churches of the country, and to supplement their labours among the unconverted masses of the German Empire; and it is proposed that the Society should be worked much on the same lines as the Evangelisation Society of London, so well known among us, and which has been the means of great blessing to our own land.

At the present moment, when public attention is so vividly directed to the subject of the great German Reformer in the Luther Commemoration now pending, it has been suggested that Christians of other Protestant lands—England amongst them—will gladly show their cordial and grateful appreciation of the blessings of the glorious Reformation, by giving active sympathy and assistance to the enterprise of our German brethren. All who wish to do this are invited to send in their names and contributions for this object to J. E. Mathieson, Esq., Conference Hall, Mildmay, N., or to the office of The Christian.

A warm-hearted English friend has already offered 100 guineas; and a minister who intends to preach a thanksgiving sermon in connection with the Commemoration, has voluntarily promised to devote the collection made in his church on this occasion to the same purpose. If some others come forward and do the same, a goodly sum may be sent to Germany as a token of brotherly interest as well as a thankful acknowledgment of all the benefits which may be traced to the life-work and influence of Martin Luther.

The German Committee are as follows: President, Rev. Th. Christlieb, D.D., Professor of Theology and University Preacher, Bonn, Prussia; Hon. Treasurer, Count A. Bernstorff, Privy Councillor to the Ministry for Public Worship and Education, 5, Rauch Strausse, Berlin, W.; Rev. Pastor Krummacher, Reformed Church, Elberfeld; Count E. Pückler, Assistant-Judge, Berlin; Baron F. von Oertzen, Superintendent of the City Mission, Hamburg; Baron von Niebuhr, Bonn, Prussia; Professor G. Pfleiderer, Berne. Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan and Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

ISLINGTON.—Messrs. Moody and Sankey's opening meetings, Priory Hall, 198, Upper-street. On Saturday, Nov. 3, a Meeting for United Prayer, at 7 p.m. Sunday, Nov. 4, Address to Christian Workers, at 8 a.m., no tickets; Evangelistic Address, at 11 a.m., admission by ticket only; Evangelistic Address, at 3 p.m., women only, no tickets; Evangelistic Address, at 6.30 p.m., men only, no tickets. Monday, Nov. 5, Evangelistic Address, at 8 p.m. Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, Nov. 6, 7, 8, and 9, Bible Reading, at 3 p.m.; Evangelistic Address, at 8 p.m.

SAFE THROUGH THE STORMS.

WILL you strike a note of praise for the safe arrival of the Annie, after a very stormy voyage from Calais? In one of the gales the vessel was first driven to the Downs for anchorage; from thence into Ramsgate. After a few Gospel meetings there, she again sailed for Portsmouth; was again overtaken by a gale of wind, driven to anchorage again off Dumfries, having broken her main hawse and carried away her sails. As the wind moderated, and after temporary repairs, she sailed, and has reached Portsmouth, after a very happy five months' Mission tour, the result of which cannot fully be told. One is, that a Christian brother in Nice has received several thousand francs towards a Mission yacht for the south of France, yet he needs more. Then, for the north of France, the Annie is to be given over entirely for the French work. A Christian lady, who is deeply interested in our Mission work especially on behalf of the French, has kindly promised £350; another lady has given me £20 towards £700 required to replace the Annie for home work among our seamen.

The vessel, after repairs, will be sent, God willing, early in the spring to Dunkirk, or elsewhere, as the Lord shall direct. Will your readers pray earnestly for France? A door is now open; it will soon be shut. Who will help for the remainder required for the Harbinger, or Gospel ship, in place of the Annie? No time to be lost. The Lord will provide.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK.

A LARGE number of Sunday-school teachers and others interested in the work of the Ragged School Union assembled at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on October 22, to take part in a prayer-meeting and hear a special address by Mr. C. H. Spurgeon.

Mr. John Kirk, Secretary, stated that in connection with the Ragged School Union there were 170 distinct buildings in London, attended on Sunday evenings by some 37,350 poor children. In the day and night schools, and in the industrial schools, &c., there were more than 130,000 children, who were under religious instruction and good influence during the week, and on Sunday as well, taught by a devoted band of voluntary helpers, whose hearts were in the work.

Mr. Spurgeon emphasised the possibility of little children being converted to God in their early days, ere the temptations became too strong for them. It was much to be regretted that in London there did not now seem to exist the enthusiasm about Sunday-school work there once was; and more deplorable still, to see the hundreds of big boys and big girls wandering about the streets who have passed through the Sunday-school. Not only should teachers seek to bring children into the school, but retain them when they get too old for the children's classes. Another of the reasons why men and women do not care to go to many of our places of worship, is because of what they hear. They want the Gospel preached to them in a plain way, instead of long words, and now and then a bit of Latin.

The Ragged-school work is strictly an undenominational agency, doing a grand work among the poor boys and girls of London. They are not only in need of teachers, but also of money, which may be sent to the Secretary, Mr. John Kirk, 12 and 13, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

SOUTHAMPTON.—The appeal made in our columns on behalf of the Southampton Town and County Mission is a deserving one, the work done by this evangelical and unsectarian institution being highly commendable and effective. It has several branches, including the police, docks, night schools, servants' mission, and Home of Industry, and is well deserving of imitation in other localities.

THREE QUIET DAYS AT BAYSWATER.

OUR "three quiet days" are just over. They have been really quiet days—seasons of freedom from the world, and very close and precious communion with God. It has not only been the quiet of God's house, and the laying aside earthly matters, but to many of us a quelling of inner discords, a laying to rest perplexities which will haunt even the renewed heart. The Holy Spirit has been with us, brooding over many a chaos of disordered facts and truths all misconceived, and bringing from them peace, and order, and light.

The most casual observer could hardly mistake the nature of the gatherings. The large congregations were evidently composed chiefly of those who felt the great question of salvation had been settled; who knew that they had died with Christ, and were now seeking to know more of the power of his resurrection. The deep and general response, the earnest singing of the hymns (selected from the Parochial Mission Hymn Book), and the almost motionless attention, gave a delightful sense of fellowship and reality, a feeling heightened rather than otherwise by the absence of excitement or visible emotion. The addresses were all of a deeply spiritual nature, though with intensely practical bearings; the speakers, men who seemed to know from experience that all they said was true, to whom Christianity was a real power, and Christ a real King.

On Tuesday, Revs. Evan Hopkins, C. A. Fox, and E. W. Moore, spoke on "Christ's Life sacrificed for us—our Propitiation." On Wednesday the subject was, "Christ's Life, unfolded to us—our Pattern." This was a particularly helpful day. That Christ left us an example that we should follow in his steps is such a grand thought; but who, as he measured himself by this standard, has not felt his life a pitiful failure? It was a great lifting up to get away from the painful, literal following of every step of Christ's human life, and be reminded that a man's life is the outcome of his character, and thus, being is a higher thing than action. If we would live the life of Christ, we must first have the mind of Christ. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus." It is to be a development from within, not an imitation from without. Mr. Thornton showed how Christ's perfect life became our pattern-life, and Mr. N. Sherbrooke illustrated it from the parable of the Good Samaritan.

The indwelling life of Christ, as our Power, was treated by Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Webb-Peploe. The sad contrast between the life of the professing Christian Church and the glorious possibilities Christ had put before her was pointed out, and the certainty (even from a philosophical point of view) that such great things would never have been promised had not Christ been able to give to her the power of attaining them. We have no right to long for more power, for we have all power in Christ. We must yield the will to God. By nature it is captive to the passions, but must be brought back to its own element—the truth of God—and so gain the strength of freedom. Not a restricted life bound by a sense of duty, but a life of love in which the will is free to do what it likes, but likes to do the will of God.

The meditations in the afternoon were conducted by Revs. E. Hopkins, E. Carr-Glyn, and C. A. Fox. The first, on "The rest of Faith," was a revelation of themselves to many an anxious Christian, but so lovingly done that thankfulness was the only feeling. The second, on "The Return of Love," was a solemn hour of self-examination, spent before God in the attitude of prayer. Every service seemed to have its peculiar fitness, and the Holy Spirit's presence was felt and owned. God has been emptying us, yet filling us; humbling, yet comforting us; casting us down, and yet now one feels wonderfully lifted up. We thank God for his servants who have been with us, and pray that He will care for them as He has cared for us in sending them.

NOTES FROM THE UNITED STATES.

By GAWIN KIRKHAM.

I WAS sorry to bid adieu to Canada in the rain after enjoying so many bright sunny days there, but immediately after closing my last letter I started on a journey of some 600 miles, and on the morning of the 25th of September I reached the famed city of containing a population approaching 700,000 souls. Fifty years ago the place consisted of a few wooden huts surrounded by open prairies. The day I visited the stockyards 28,000 head had been brought in. One firm alone often kills 12,000 pigs a day. At the rooms of the Y.M.C.A. I found the largest and the liveliest noon prayer-meeting I had yet seen. The tendency, as in most open meetings, was to monopolise time by speaking to each other rather than to the Lord. A Gospel Temperance meeting in the evening in the same place was also remarkably good. The testimonies of reclaimed drunkards were very striking. But the blue ribbon, the symbol of this movement in Great Britain, was scarcely seen either there or in other places since visited.

On the second day of my visit I was allowed to speak on open-air preaching at the noon meeting, and in the evening went with some of the Y.M.C.A. "Yoke-fellows" to the steps of the Court House, where a remarkably attentive assembly gathered. This Association is not only vigorous in its open-air work, but seeks to stir up the churches to take hold of it. It also prepares young men for missionary and other work. On the first evening of my brief visit a meeting was held to take leave of William Pos, a young Dutchman, going to Mr. Grattan Guinness' East-end Training Institute to prepare for foreign missionary work.

LE MARS.

Before leaving England I had a longing desire to penetrate as far north-west as the new home of my dear friend Captain Moreton. Here I stayed four days, and was glad to find Captain Moreton and his family well. He has a farm of some 750 acres, and resides in a house on rising ground about two miles from the town. If he has not a school of prophets in training, he is yet very usefully employed in training young men for farmers, and in some cases placing them on neighbouring farms when so trained. The land is all open, rolling prairie, and the soil very good; and, like other immense tracts on this continent, well repays the labour of cultivating. Coal has also been discovered on his estate.

Though so fully occupied in looking after a household composed of from thirty to forty persons, he has also continued his evangelistic efforts for the good of the neighbourhood. At present he supplies the Plymouth County Presbyterian Church (a wooden building on the prairie, eight or nine miles to the north of his house) every Sunday morning, and also takes a school-room service in Elgin township, three miles off, in the afternoon. At his request I took these services on the Sunday of my visit, September 30, while he went to hear the venerable Bishop Simpson, then visiting Le Mars, for a Conference. Before every service I preached in the street, from the steps of one of the banks, after which we invited the people into the rooms of the Y.M.C.A., where two Methodist ministers spoke, and some souls were under conviction of sin. The custom of this country seems to be to hold many of their religious anniversaries on the Lord's day; so we adjourned to the new Opera House, and heard addresses in connection with Methodist Foreign Missions. Perhaps I ought to add, for the sake of those who may contemplate emigrating, that Le Mars is in the extreme north-west of Iowa, has a population of 5000, and is 1700 miles from the Atlantic sea-board.

ENGLISH PEOPLE IN FIJI.

IN my last, describing the death of a great Christian Fijian chief, I said that I would in a future letter say something about the moral and religious state of our own race in Fiji. There are at the present time about 2000 people of European descent in the group and two towns, Suva and Levuka. Religiously speaking, the tone among Europeans is not high. So-called "Freethought" (especially with those who do the least thinking) is prevalent, and there is very considerable laxity as to morals and indifference as to religion. Drinking is one general evil, and impurity, the temptations to which are so many and the opportunities so facile, is another and very marked one, and the numbers of souls and bodies that have been destroyed by these two devils amongst our own race in Fiji is very, very painful to think of.

And, yet, there is another side to be looked at as well. The cause of total abstinence from intoxicants has made encouraging headway, and saved many most intelligent men; and a better tone of feeling as to immorality is already making itself apparent, and it may be hoped will become stronger yet. Of churches for the Europeans there are—in Levuka—Anglican, Roman Catholic, and Wesleyan (the latter, the oldest), and at Suva there is a well attended Presbyterian Church, and a Church of England service as well. There is the latter also on the Rewa River. In all parts of the group, wherever a congregation can be gathered, the Wesleyan missionaries hold English services, while at Levuka, the writer ministers twice every Sabbath to English hearers in a church of their own. There are Sunday-schools, too, for European children both in Levuka and Suva.

Many men of religious habits come to Fiji, and young men of the best home training in piety. These at once appear at one or other of the churches; but in the case of several, I am pained to observe that their regularity of attendance diminishes, and they soon fall into the tone of the companions they acquire, either affecting a liberality of view which makes devotion a less important matter and divine things less urgent; or giving way to some of the secret seductions which are, so to speak, the very genii of the place. Still, even in seductive Fiji, with its climate so inducive of indolence, and conducive to the use of stimulants and its facile modes of descent to the devil, there are those who remain true to their morality, who are ever helpful in church work, and there are sincere worshippers of God amongst the men and women of our own race.

—Yours truly, ARTHUR J. WEBB.

Levuka, Sept. 4.

Y.M.C.A., LAMBETH BRANCH.—The fourth annual meeting of this Association was held on Tuesday evening, October 16, in the large school-room of St. Philip's Church, Kennington-road. The Report stated that the past year's operations had been most successful, both in the point of numbers and in the rich blessing vouchsafed by God upon the teaching of his Word. The Sunday afternoon Bible-meeting had been the means of great good, several young men having been led to the feet of Jesus. An evangelistic meeting had been combined with the devotional meeting on Tuesday evening, and had proved a great blessing. The Friday night Temperance meeting had worked vigorously throughout the year, and had been very useful, eighty pledges having been taken, and the heads of several families from which peace had been long absent, were now not only total abstainers, but partakers also of the pardoning mercy of God, through faith in Christ Jesus. The Tract Society had distributed several thousand tracts, and the Pure Literature Society had also done much useful work, social meetings and a picnic had been held, and the year throughout had been a busy and prosperous one, numerically, financially, and spiritually. The Chairman, Rev. A. T. Edwards, and Rev. W. Williams, and Mr. Hind Smith and others, gave addresses on the importance of making good use of the time, and seeking by preaching the Gospel to bring young men to Christ.

MISSION IN NEW YORK.

THE readers of The Christian are, no doubt, glad to learn of the spread of Christianity anywhere, and will welcome good news from the leading city in the United States.

In the city of New York there are 111 Missions where Sunday-schools and preaching services and Gospel Temperance meetings are being held. Forty-five of these Missions are held in buildings more or less like churches in size and appearance. Thirty-four of these Missions are in connection with some one of the regular Protestant evangelical denominations, and eleven are Union, or undenominational, sustained by members of all the denominations, and open freely to all comers, without distinction of colour, country, creed, or condition.

In all these undenominational churches the people, generally of the industrial or working classes, contribute of their means to the support of the Gospel among themselves, and also to the spread of the Gospel abroad. Some of the most popular of these Missions may be found by visitors to New York as follows:—The Cooper Union meetings, in charge of C. W. Sawyer, at Eighth Street and Fourth Avenue; the Bowery Branch, Y.M.C.A., 243, Bowery; the Young Men's Mission, 36, Bowery; the Home of Industry, 40, East Houston-street; McAuley Mission, 316, Water-street; the Cremorne Mission, 104, West Thirty-second-street. A complete list of all the Missions of New York may always be had at the office of the City Mission, 50, Bible House. L. E. Jackson.

MEDICAL PRAYER UNION.

AMONG the many developments of modern Christian life, having special aims in view, no one is to be more rejoiced in than this earnest union of medical students, under the leadership of eminent members of the profession, for the prayerful study of God's Word. Eleven of our London hospitals are represented on the executive committee, the Bible-classes held in connection with them being in most cases well attended, and manifesting many signs of fervent spiritual life.

The annual meeting was held on Friday last, in Lower Exeter Hall, the president for the year, Mr. R. Thorne, M.B., in the Chair. Addresses of an impressive and directly Christian character were given by the Revs. C. H. Spurgeon and H. Webb-Peploe, Dr. F. Roberts, and the President. The latter urged upon the students (who were present in large numbers) the great importance of full and unreserved consecration of themselves to Christ, accompanied by bold outspoken confession of his name, asserting that there was nothing in the nature of their studies to prevent this. Dr. Roberts dwelt upon the necessity in these days of modern thought, which was for the most part characterised by ignorance of God, for having a clear, definite, and evangelical creed, such a one as made Christ the centre and foundation of all and everything. He specially impressed the need of letting this be joined with practical devotion to the glory of God in relation to all their professional and other duties in life.

The influence of the meeting was evidently strong in the right direction; and as we think of the important career which is before the young men, who listened to the truths enunciated with marked attention and approval, we could but be devoutly thankful for an agency so potent for good.

WESTPHALIA.—On page 9 of our last issue the sentence, "He was born in Westphalia," should come after "Germans in Paris," in the article on "A Good Work in Germany." Pastor Bodeschwingh lives and labours in Westphalia.

"A DOUBTFUL EQUIVALENCE."

My dear Sir,—Allow me to say the term of imprisonment for non-payment of fines is governed by the "Summary Jurisdiction Act 1879," which provides, that for any sum not exceeding 20s., which will include both fine and costs, the term of imprisonment shall not exceed fourteen days. If in the above instance the fine and costs did not exceed 20s., and the defendant was committed to prison for a month, in my opinion an action could be sustained against the committing justices for false imprisonment.

In this county a "Salvationist" was sentenced to a month's hard labour for assaulting the police in the execution of their duty. This sentence the Lord Chief Justice not only pronounced illegal, but excessive even had the conviction been legal.

Surely some Christian legal practitioner will see into the above harsh proceedings.—I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully, Alfred Pegler, J.P.

Southampton, Oct. 22.

P.S.—I believe that imprisonment cannot be imposed unless the defendant have no goods to levy a distress upon.

JEWISH REFUGEES IN PALESTINE.

Sir,—Last year's movement of Jews from Russia and Roumania towards Palestine has resulted in the opening of several Jewish colonies, near Jaffa, Haifa, and Safet.

In spite of some glowing accounts of their progress, which the Jewish newspapers contained from time to time, it is an acknowledged fact, that they all have proved, more or less, a failure, that a large number of Jewish families have lost their all in their undertakings, and a good many lives have been sacrificed.

The "Jewish Refugees' Aid Society" is on the point of opening another colony for Jews in Palestine, and some of your readers have generously contributed towards this object.

Are not there some who may be inclined to ask: "Will this new Society add another chapter to the already too long chapter of failures?"

If so, it may be of some use to briefly state why we may confidently expect success, where others have failed.

(1) The "Jewish Refugees' Aid Society" has appointed a manager, who is to exercise a kind of patriarchal government over the colonies. They are generally very quarrelsome, and get into all kinds of trouble by trying to get the better of one another. A Jewish overseer has scarcely a chance of being a soothing element in these quarrels, whilst a Jewish Christian, such as is here appointed, will sweep away difficulties like cobwebs. This has been our experience these eighteen months.

(2) The "Jewish Refugees' Aid Society" has taken precautions against accepting, as colonists, promiscuously, all who apply. Only those are to be accepted who have shown a fitness and readiness for agricultural work, and legal provision is to be made for enforcing conformity to all the rules laid down for the good of the colony.

(3) The poverty of the intending colonists is an element of strength to the future colony. Jews with a capital of their own would be hard to rule, and though they were in a colony, they would still pursue their old mode of life, by betaking themselves to usury, and other questionable modes of making money.

In all these points, the failures of the other colonies have been a source of information for the "Jewish Refugees' Aid Society," and though no one ought to expect so important an undertaking to succeed without a good many mistakes first having been made, there is fair ground for saying the failures of others need not frighten the "Refugees' Aid Society."

I wish I could add when this new Society will take care of the colonists. But we live in Turkey, and things move slowly. We have not yet been able to complete a purchase of land, and until that is done the poor refugees are still at our charges.

We must give them food, and very soon the rent of their houses has to be paid. How these demands are to be met, God only knows. But we trust that those of your readers who understand the difficulty of our position, and the important issues depending on our action, will be willing to help us still a little while, as they have done hitherto. Help towards present maintenance or house-rent of the refugees is urgently needed, and may be sent, either to the Secretary, 16, Lincoln's-Inn-fields, W.C.; or to us, here direct, for the "Refugee Fund."—Yours faithfully,

Jerusalem, Sept. 26. H. Friedlaender.

A CAUTION.

Sir,—Allow me once more to warn your readers against a French pastor, who was seeking to obtain money under false pretences, but is now trying to get pupils, on the ground that he is a preacher at French churches in this country, and has a French University diploma. I have been strongly urged by pastors in the Drome and other districts of France, where he is too well known, to take this step in the interests of morality. No one with any care for the well-being of their children should admit him into their family circle.—I am, Sir, &c.,

R. S. Ashton

(Secretary of Evangelical Continental Society).

THE CRY OF THE POOR.

Dear Sir,—I am sure numbers must share my feelings of horror at the revelations that have been made lately, of the awful misery and wickedness of a part of the population of London.

We have a right to look to the Government to use all the powers they have to remedy such an awful and threatening state of things; and to Parliament, for compulsory legislation and reform of Municipal Government, so that the laws may be strictly and wisely applied. Surely it is far more pressing to legislate for the protection of these wretched ones, who have no power to help themselves, than for the extension of the Franchise or re-distribution of seats.

The present need is for some one to start a movement that shall spread like a mighty wave over the whole country, touching the hearts and consciences of all people of means who live to do good to others instead of to please themselves. Will you do this?

And then we want an organisation that shall harmonise and make the most of legislative action and private efforts. I believe that if Parliament and Government did their part with promptness and wisdom, and with an executive organisation in which all could have confidence, and a well-considered comprehensive scheme published by them, there are thousands who would give liberally to remedy these heartbreaking evils. But people must be assured that if they make a sacrifice it shall secure the object aimed at. I am an invalid and cannot move about, but I would gladly give to one scheme, if really good, what I could afford. Christians must pray constantly about this, and then let each one trust in the Lord and do what his hand finds to do in the matter.

"Let God arise, and let his enemies be scattered. For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, now will I arise, saith the Lord."—Yours faithfully, in Christ's service,

E. F. B. Brooke.

Notices of Books, &c.

Winning Words. F. E. Longley, 39, Warwick-lane, E.C. 1s. There are pleasant talks for young folks in this little book. The twelve illustrations and well-told stories will interest the children. It is just the book for a birthday present.

Pearls of the East. By R. Newton, D.D. Longley. This is a companion volume to the above, only the stories and incidents are from Bible history. The author has endeavoured to say something that will help the young to know Jesus.

The Children's Friend, The Infants' Magazine, and The Friendly Visitor. Partridge & Co. These three old favourite annuals are now ready, full of high-class engravings and excellent reading matter. We commend them as cordially as heretofore.

Roses and Thorns (2s., Longley), contains "Stories of Every-day Life," written by various authors and well illustrated by eminent artists. The stories are well told, and calculated to inculcate right principles. It will be appreciated in the family circle.

Spoilt Guy. By Darley Dale. Nisbet. Would that thousands of parents might read this book. It is the story of a spoilt child, the son of an officer who was in India. Guy was left to the care of an uncle and aunt, whose folly brought themselves and the poor boy into much trouble.

The Herald of Mercy. Volume for 1883. 1s. Morgan & Scott. The articles in this volume are well chosen, and of a character calculated to arrest, arouse, interest, and lead to the Saviour. They go straight to the point about sin, and show the way of salvation in an earnest and simple manner. The illustrations are good. It deserves a place in every home.

Is All Well? Nisbet & Co. An unpretentious little work, but very suitable for anxious inquirers.

Cissy's Troubles. By Darley Dale. Nisbet & Co. A well-written book, describing a sister's sacrifices and trials, and their happy termination.

Helpful Hints for business employés is a set of thirty hints, which has reached its 10th thousand, and contains useful suggestions for all men of business.

The Secret Philip Brown kept from his Wife (3d., Partridge) is the story of a man who saw the folly of taking his money to the publican instead of to the butcher. He saved his money, and made his home what it ought to be.

The Prices of Sins in the Church of Rome. By A. H. Guinness, M.A. 6d. No. 9, Strand. The author gives a condensed account of the sale of indulgences, the price of sin, and the present influence of the papacy on civilisation. Much information is put into a few pages.

The House by the Works. By Edward Garrett. Third edition. T. Fisher Unwin, 26, Paternoster-square. The moral of this story is good, and an illustration of the truth which declares that "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." The fact of its having reached a third edition is proof of its public acceptance. The emptiness of worldly riches, instead of doing good, is forcibly described.

Told in the Twilight. By F. E. Weatherly. 6s. Hildesheimer & Faulkner, 51, Jewin-street, London. The author, artists, and publisher have succeeded in giving to the public a handsome volume of pictures with poetry, that will interest, amuse, and instruct our young folk. The whole is exceedingly well got up, and should find a place on any family drawing-room table.

Addresses and Stories for Mothers' Meetings. By C. E. Morton and A. Hankey. 3s. 6d., cloth. Hamilton, Adams & Co. We welcome another volume for use at mothers' meetings and any others for which it may be found suitable, and it is suitable for much more than the title indicates. All the chapters, twelve in number, are exceedingly well written and aim at practical, every-day life results, as well as the salvation of the soul.

The Cottager and Artisan. Volume 1883. 1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. The matter, type, and illustrations of this volume are worthy of the house that publishes it. Our readers will find it a suitable book to give to their poorer neighbours for fireside reading. There is something for young and old here; yea, for rich and poor too. Every public institution should possess a copy also.

Voices of the Good Shepherd. By the Author of "Morning and Night Watches." Nisbet & Co. This book contains, first, an introductory chapter on the object of the series of texts which follow for morning and evening reading. All the Scriptures given are the very words of Jesus, special stress being laid on the shepherd character of our Lord. It is tastefully got up, printed in colours, and the texts are well chosen.

Mother's Queer Things. A Bag of Stories. By Anna Warner. Nisbet & Co. The Queer Things are missionary relics and curiosities, and they are the facts on which the stories are founded. The children, especially "Lex," are as queer as the things. It is a book at once instructive and entertaining. The great results from small gifts is shown from the story of a temple in Asia, which was kept gilded, because every one who had ever such a tiny bit of gold-leaf stuck it on.

George Washington: his Boyhood and Manhood. By William M. Thayer. Hodder & Stoughton. 5s. The success of his former work, "The Life of President Garfield," has doubtless led the author of "From Log Cabin to White House" to write the history of the first President of the United States. George Washington was a man of whom any country might well be proud; and the training he received from his mother, and its results, in the boy, the soldier, the General, and the President, are here worthily and graphically told. It is an elegant gift-book for boys, and not for boys only.

The Children of India. Written for the Children of England by one of their Friends. 4s. Religious Tract Society. The very book to foster the missionary spirit in the minds of the young. It supplies a want in this respect which has been felt by many Christian parents and teachers. The contents are divided into five parts, dealing with the children of India as to their surroundings, themselves, their gods and festivals, other religions than their own, and the work of Christian Missions among them. Handsomely bound and beautifully illustrated, it is sure to be prized and read, and makes a capital gift-book for the young.

Alice's Pupil. By Letitia McClintock. Nisbet & Co. This is a short story of a lad, whose love of money almost cost his soul's destruction; by God's blessing on his faithful teacher's efforts he became a consistent Christian.

Heart Responses. By Anna McCourt. W. B. Horner, 27, Paternoster-square. A small volume of hymns and verses, simply written, and displaying deep earnestness and spirituality, but without any particular poetic merit.

Gospel Parables. By Rev. W. J. Mathams. Nisbet. Suitable for a Christmas gift to children. A series of short but charming stories; many of them are equal in beauty and pathos to Hans Christian Andersen's writings, imbued also with the Danish poet's devotional spirit.

Best Gifts of Heaven: "Faith, Hope, Charity." J. Walker & Co., 96, Farringdon-street, E.C. This is a tiny gilt-edged book with texts on Faith, followed by verses of poetry by the best authors, and so Hope, Charity. The texts and verses are all well chosen.

The British Juvenile Album. Is. Willoughby, 27, Ivy-lane. The "British Juvenile" is a pleasant monthly magazine for children, of the same kind as the well-known "Children's Friend." The volume has nearly 200 pages, twenty-six illustrations, and ten pictorial texts. It is accurately described on the title-page as "A Gift Book for the Young."

The Crystal Stories. 1s. 6d. Willoughby, 27, Ivy-lane. Of course this, as the title implies, is a collection of stories. We, ourselves, prefer true narratives to fiction; but we must add that these "Crystal Stories" are of a high order and from able pens; all the stories have a moral tendency, and some are distinctly religious, a mass of reading, and numerous illustrations.

About Ourselves. By Mrs. Henry Wood, author of "East Lynne," &c. Isbister & Co. We are more than thankful to welcome Mrs. Henry Wood's new book. It is a series of earnest appeals to turn from sin to righteousness, from worldliness to heavenly-mindedness, from Satan to God, based on the solemn prophecy that "two men shall be in the field, the one shall be taken and the other left; two women shall be grinding at the mill, the one shall be taken and the other left." As emanating from the author of "East Lynne," one of the earliest of the modern sensational fictions by female novelists, these chapters carry special weight. We should still more heartily welcome the story of the author's own conversion to God.

Rome: Pagan and Papal. By Mourant Brock, M.A. Hodder & Stoughton. That Papal Rome is Pagan Rome in a somewhat altered dress is a fact too well established to need another book to prove it. Yet the multitude of witnesses is not without its value in presence of the increase of the Romish superstition in our own land. The venerable author of the book before us wrote his preface in June, and on the 29th of the same month the command went forth "Loose him and let him go." And now, being dead, he yet speaketh, warning this generation against the mystery of iniquity which already worked in apostolic days, and which, by its villanies and violence against the saints of God, has proved itself to be that system symbolised to the Apocalyptic seer as the woman drunken with the blood of the saints and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus. The book is illustrated by numerous woodcuts identifying the new with the old heathenism. Such a book should be in every library.

The Jews; or, Prediction and Fulfilment. An Argument for the Times. By T. H. Kellogg, D.D., Professor in the Western Theological Seminary, U.S.A. Nisbet. This able book demonstrates that the history of the Jews was written in the Bible 2000 years beforehand, and that consequently those Scriptures must have been inspired. In reply, therefore, to the modern school of criticism, which asserts that many of these Scriptures were not written by the men whose names they bear, but by men of a later age, who used those names to give their writings greater authority, it is shown that if the critics are right, we have here a no less remarkable phenomenon than an inspired forgery, which is a moral impossibility. As a highly valuable contribution to the defence of the sacred writings, as an unanswerable argument for the literal fulfilment of prophecy, as a masterly analysis of Jewish history and prospects, and as an intelligent and exhaustive review of recent facts and writings, relative to the present status and influence of the Jew, now emancipated from the oppressions and disabilities of past ages, we may warmly commend this book to the attention of all who desire to have understanding of the times, and specially of the so-called "Eastern Question," which is indeed the "Jewish Question."

REPORTS AND OTHER NOTES.

The Bristol Nursery for Homeless Infants, at 13, Southwell-street, is a home for the children of unmarried mothers. It does not connive at sin, but seeks to help to virtue those who have been led astray.

Mr. Charles Cook's report of the Lord's work at Hyde-park Hall, Metropolitan Music Hall, and Hyde-park, is a modest account of a good and deserving work. The last ten pages are on prison work.

A short account of the work of the Latymer-road Mission, Blechynden-street, W., threepence, may be had of Mr. Aulay Macaulay. It is a pleasing description of a good and fruitful effort among young and old.

Merchant's Letter.—Miss V. M. Skinner's twenty-fifth letter is to merchants. It is well written, and likely to be read by the class for whom it is written. Jarrold & Sons, Paternoster-buildings, E.C. 6d. per dozen.

The "Costermongers' Christian Mission," under Mr. W. J. Orsman's excellent superintendence, is a brief but interesting record of a useful agency, and may be had of Mr. Oarsman, at Milton House, Shacklewell-green, London, W.

The record of the "Bridge of Hope Mission Refuge and Training Home," at 26, Princes-square, St. George's-in-the-East, is an evidence of what can be done if attempted. There have been 242 girls and women received, the majority of whom have turned out satisfactorily. Particulars supplied by, and donations may be sent to, Miss Steer as above.

Wales.—The United Free Mission is an agency which has been the means of rescuing hundreds from lives of sin, drunkenness, and degradation. Its aim is to reach the masses of people who never attend any place of worship. It is supported by voluntary contributions. Donations will be thankfully received by the District Manager, Mr. Shillam, 10, Maria-street, Neath, South Wales.

The twenty-fourth annual report of the "Female Mission to the Fallen" is a graphic picture of a real work among the class it desires to benefit. We advise our readers to send to Mr. A. J. S. Maddison, 32 Charing-cross, for a copy. This is a Women's Mission to women. In connection with this Society is a "Reformatory and Refuge Union," which aims at reclaiming and elevating the criminal classes.

The Y.W.C.A. Report, Central Branch, Old Cavendish-street, London, W., is a telling little book on the subject of the temptations which beset our young women, and of what can really be done for them by loving hands and hearts. It astonishes us to find the amount voluntarily contributed, directly and indirectly, by the young women themselves. They help themselves, and therefore should be helped.

The Bradford Gospel Temperance Report states that several of the medical men of the town have signed the pledge. One gentleman since the Mission has given up a wine and spirit agency, which was bringing him in over £500 a year. Another gentleman posted a notice in his shop that he should discontinue the sale of wine in future. The visitors report that over 80 per cent. of those who signed the pledge have kept it. A second Bradford United Temperance Blue Ribbon Mission in St. George's Hall, from Jan. 14 to 28 inclusive, 1884 when Mr. Noble will be present.

Australia.—Recent notes from Australia say:—"It is a great mistake to assume that emigration to Australia furnishes a remedy for loose or idle habits. It is not the place for any who are afraid of honest work. Those most likely to do well in New South Wales are skilled mechanics and experienced agricultural labourers, men who do not mind living in the country, far away from the tempting surroundings of the colonial metropolis. Of clerks, bookkeepers, shop assistants, and the like, there is always a supply in excess of the demand."

Mr. Wm. Dobbie, who has for six years and a half laboured as a town missionary in Berwick-upon-Tweed, has been obliged to resign that appointment and seek a milder climate in Australia, on account of the bad health of his wife. God has greatly blessed his work, both in preaching the Gospel to the poor and in promoting Gospel Temperance work; and their departure is deeply regretted by very many Christian friends, as well as by the inhabitants of the lanes, where his work chiefly lay. They embark in the Petori on November 15. May we ask that prayer may be offered for a safe voyage, restoration of health, and open doors.

A meeting for the encouragement of thrift was held at Holy Trinity Schools, Kilburn, on Tuesday evening. Dr. P. Kirkpatrick Picard presided, and Mr. T. Bowden Green gave an address entitled "Thrift is Blessing," and Mr. F. P. Doremus spoke on "Thrift in Food." He referred to the lamentable waste that took place in the homes of the poor, as well as of the wealthy, and stated that if whole meal bread, Scotch oatmeal, vegetables and fruit, were adopted as a general diet, there would be far more health and happiness amongst all classes of the community, besides a very considerable saving in expenditure upon food, whilst deaths from starvation would be but seldom recorded.

Manchester and Salford.—Arrangements have been made by which the 400th anniversary of the birth of Luther will be celebrated here as elsewhere. The committee appointed has arranged for a public meeting to be held in the large hall of the Y.M.C.A. on Tuesday evening, November 13, under the presidency of the Mayor, Mr. Alderman Hopkinson, at which short addresses will be delivered on various topics connected with the Reformation. It is suggested that sermons suitable to the occasion be preached on Sunday, November 11, and that some means be taken to integrat Sunday-schools and young people in the commemoration.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For souls saved at Wrington and Langford during a twelve days' Mission.

PRAYER.—For blessing on Evangelistic services by Rev. T. R. and Mrs. Donaldson at Chalford, Glo'stershire, from Oct. 27 to Nov. 7.——For much blessing on a Mission in Ayr, conducted by John M. Scroggie, commencing Nov. 4.——For the 48,000 police of the United Kingdom.——For blessing on the preaching of the Gospel by Messrs. Wharton and Weaver, at Higham, Derbyshire, from Nov. 4 to 10.——For blessing on the labours of the United Free Mission in South Wales.——For blessing upon special services at Hazelbury, Plucknett, from Nov. 4 to 18, by S. Bryant.

Mission Appeals.

St. Malo, France (English Sailors' Reading Room).—Books, papers, and magazines are much needed for the above. Second-hand books will be appreciated. Parcels can be sent to Miss Ballard, The Poplars, Walton-on-Thames.

Tilekiln Lane.—A Christian gentleman of the Church of England appeals for £30 to complete an iron room in this village, where he has done a good work for years, and is surrounded by Ritualism. Address: Mr. Grove Palmerston, Crescent, Bowes Park, N.

Prison Mission, Nine Elms House, Wandsworth-road, S.W.—Mrs. Meredith's summary of work done in 1882 is as follow: Women received from various prisons, 572; prison-vats meetings and breakfasts, 3125; days' work given, 12,924; articles washed for sick, 445,482; Mission Meetings, 991.

Radford, near Leamington.—A lady who has laboured long in this place feels the great necessity of a large iron room. She has held meetings for men for some years. The numbers have so increased that her own room is far too small. Will Christians help to provide a room to hold about 200 people, for Gospel meetings, Bible-classes, and read ng-room for men? The cost will be about £150. Particulars will be gladly given by Mrs. Robinson, The Poplars, Radford, Leamington.

Southampton Town and County Mission.—The object of this Mission is to visit from house to house, assist the poor and sick, hold Gospel meetings, distribute Bibles, provide boys' and girls' night schools, restoring the fallen, and the support of a Home of Industry for destitute children and orphans. From the Home of Industry emigrants are sent to the Colonies. Work is sought for widows and others needing a helping hand. The Committee appeal for funds, and we think deserve sympathy. Address, Mr. R. Beck, 35, Alexandra-road-hill, Southampton.

Working Lad's Institutes.—Since the Lord Mayor presided at the Mansion House on the 12th inst., the following contributions to the building fund of the new Institute have been received:—Messrs. Williams, Deacon and Co., £52 10s.; Messrs. Glyn, Mills and Co., £25; Messrs. Matheson and Co., £25; Messrs. Smith, Payne and Smiths, £25; Mr. B. W. Lubbock, £10 10s.; Messrs. Tapling and Co., £10 10s.; Messrs. Dent, Allcroft and Co., £10. As an additional sum of £1500 is required before the building can be commenced, further contributions will be gladly received by the Secretary, at 1, Finsbury-circus, E.C.

King's-court Mission, Suffolk-street, Borough.—This Mission is carried on by the subscriptions of a few working men and friends, who preach the Gospel in and out-of-doors, together with Sunday-school, prayer and Temperance meetings, and Band of Hope. The hall was in a very bad state, and the brethren have succeeded in renovating it in their spare time. The expenses have been rather heavy, and are a source of anxiety; they would be thankful for any subscription to help them defray the expense. Address, Mr. Benford, 57, Webber-street, Blackfriars-road, Southwark.

Missions to the Jews.—The annual report of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews is just published, and derives special interest from the fact that it is the fortieth year of the Society's history. From the time that it originated in the efforts of men like Murray McCheyne, Ridley Herschel, James Sharman, and others of a similar type until now, its course has been one of useful and successful endeavour to benefit and bless the race of Israel in accordance with the Apostolic method "to the Jew first." The report for the present year is eminently cheering and hopeful, stating "that never before in the history of the Society had there been such steady advance along the whole line." Six missionaries are at work in London, five in the provinces, and fourteen in foreign fields while the services of some eighty voluntary helpers are rendered gratuitously in connection with the Society. The present Secretary, the Rev. J. Dunlop, is ardently devoted to the work in which he is engaged, and his report will go far to win for the institution he labours, with others, to promote, increased confidence and support. The income for the past year has been the largest yet received, being £9,457. Our readers will do well to obtain the Report, and trace the important work carried on by this useful and sedulous agency.

The Christian Commonwealth announces that Dr Alexander Maclaren's current sermons will be published in that paper. They will be revised by himself.

A French Magazine.—In last week's number we had a notice of La Bonne Nouvelle. The editor (Mr. Gibson) publishes it at a loss, but is anxious to continue its issue, being an excellent method of bringing the Gospel to the French. In order to do this, subscribers are needed. The yearly subscription is only half-a-crown, including postage. Our readers would do good service to Gospel work in France by sending to Mrs. H. W. Gibson, Raleigh Hall, Brixton, S.W., for obtaining for themselves or for distribution.

PLYMOUTH AND DARTMOUTH.—Eminently successful meetings in opposition to the Contagious Diseases Acts in the towns above mentioned have been held in these towns. Mr. Henry Varley gave a lecture to men only, on the advantages of chastity, and was followed in each town by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, M.A., of Oxford, whose masterly exposure of the vicious and futile character of this legislation, as evidenced both on the Continent and in England, left nothing to be desired either for clearness or conclusiveness.

THE ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children,

Now Sheltering, Educating, and Training over 1,300 Poor Boys and Girls,

WILL (D.V.) BE HELD

THE SECOND WEEK OF DECEMBER, 1883.

A few Articles have already been received, but much more will be needed, and the aid of all is earnestly asked.

We would remind those friends whose busy fingers are at work on our behalf, that shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing are particularly valuable additions to the clothing room of our Bazaar, being much asked for and readily sold. Of course besides these we shall be glad to receive pictures, jewellery, old coins, old china, curios, musical instruments, and fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, books, drawings, bric-a-brac, and other examples of the thousand and one tasteful ornaments which are required to furnish bazaar stalls.

It is not necessary, we hope, again to remind our friends that, as in former years, the Sale will be conducted in strict harmony with the objects in view—no raffling or other doubtful measures being adopted to ensure success or to bring in money.

Gifts of plants, cut flowers, fresh butter, eggs, or confectionery will also be very welcome if sent in a day or two only before the first day of the sale.

All other gifts should reach us AS SOON AS POSSIBLE, but in any case not later than Saturday, 1st December, and should contain inside the parcel a complete list, with the name and address of the donor, so as to ensure acknowledgment. Carriage should be prepaid, and a separate advice of the despatch of the parcel should be posted to us two days beforehand. All articles and communications should be plainly addressed to 18 to 26, Stepney-causeway, London, E.

OUR WINTER'S WORK

AMONG NEGLECTED GIRLS AND POOR STREET BOYS.

Dear Friends,—Until quite lately we have been able to receive every case of real destitution making application. Now we have to hesitate—to delay—and soon shall have to refuse admission to many whom we must then

TURN AWAY FROM OUR DOORS.

Our Funds are, however, so low, that unless the Lord whom we serve lays our needs on your hearts, no other course will be open to us.

Very earnestly do I plead, therefore, that we may not be compelled to close the door in the face of any poor homeless little one seeking admission.

Your fellow-labourer among poor children,

T. J. BARNARDO.

18 & 20, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

Cheques should be crossed London and South-Western Bank; so also should P.O. Orders, made payable at the G.P.O.

"Whitefield was not a framer of discipline, not a leader of a sect, not a founder of societies, not a ruler of men, but pre-eminently a winner of souls. Would that such preachers were multiplied in the present day! We thank Mr. Andrews for this seasonable addition to our religious biography. No young preacher or student should be without it. This patient visited me at Coombe Lodge at the beginning of last year, recommended by an old patient. Had been the subject of Winter cough for five years; but this and other symptoms had now become permanent, with failure of general health;—much weaker, expectoration a little specked with blood, and pains in the side. He had come just in time, before a second stage of phthisis had been entered.

In a recent letter (Aug. 21), Mr. Wigg writes me:—"Your treatment effected a complete cure, for which I have been ever grateful; and since my recovery I have sent several young persons to you, who have been also successfully treated."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

WINTER COLDS, ASTHMA, AND BRONCHITIS.

HOW TO PREVENT THEM.

Of all the diseases known to the medical profession, none have received more attention and study, and are more to be dreaded, than the above maladies, which are so incidental to our climate, and which ultimately result in phthisis; and yet the most eminent physicians are compelled to admit themselves baffled when confronted with a case of real consumption.

The efficiency of Magneto-Electricity in all affections of the chest and respiratory organs has been most uniform, owing to its permeating and soothing properties, which reach the congested organs, clear the capillary vessels, and produce an even circulation. Moreover, by heightening the resisting powers of the system, it becomes a most valuable protection against external influences.

The bracing effect of a clear frosty air as compared with a negative and damp atmosphere induces a healthy condition of the system, under which we feel better and work better than we should on a damp and foggy November day: but we do not consider that we are prodigally using our vitality because we are enabled by natural means thus to exert ourselves. These are as truly outside influences as the influence of Magneto-Electricity; but the latter supplies to the weary one the most natural penetrating and permeating influence known, aiding the invalid to recover a normal state of health. Through the application of Magneto-Electric currents, a patient may be surrounded by an energising influence like the free electricity of the Swiss mountain air, and may obtain, without leaving home, the re-animation or recreation for which many toil and travel at so great an expense.

The usual effect is precisely that produced upon the debilitated and exhausted patient by far more expensive means, such as a sea voyage, or lengthened residence at a watering place, at once showing the natural, though almost imperceptible, character of the change produced and of the agent employed.

These facts are being abundantly proved by personal experience, as the following statement will show:—

From Capt. C. D. CAMPBELL, "Oak Side," Box Grove Road, Guildford, Surrey. June 19, 1883.

"You will be interested to hear that the poor old seaman at Brighton, Henry Abraham, for whom you sent me a set of appliances, has found the greatest relief and benefit from them. At first he was frightened at the idea of having to pay so much, when he could hardly get enough to live upon, and wrote urging me to take them back at once, but I persuaded him to try them, and the result is, he now says he would not part with them for three times the money, as he is now able to stand the cold morning air at his coffee stall without being chilled and racked with cold and phlegm as he used to be, and feels twice the man he was. Is not this excellent? He is so grateful, and thanks God for His mercy."

Capt. Campbell, who has for some years proved the efficacy of the treatment personally for Bronchitis, adds in the same letter:—

"I am able to report being quite well and hearty, and equal to any hard work. I have had for months past, meetings, lectures, canoe and tricycle trips at odd times, besides heaps of letters, which are perhaps the most fatiguing of all my daily work, which often requires me to be on my legs for many hours."

Let no one despair of checking the progress of organic disease until he has tested the Electrician's medical skill. Although he may have tried Magnetic remedies in vain, he has yet to learn the value of the great restorer properly applied.

On receipt of particulars of any case in which advice is sought, the fullest information will be given, and the required treatment suggested, by Mr. B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

SOCIAL REFORM.

SOCIAL Reform is rapidly pushing its way to the very foremost rank of public questions urgently demanding settlement, and that in a manner which precludes the possibility of its being shelved again. Representatives of all classes and of all shades of opinion are lifting up their voice upon it, and the stern facts which have of late been brought to light by various means have compelled our politicians and journalists of every type to admit that a real grievance exists, and one which demands speedy action for its removal. Leading statesmen on both sides of the House are admitting that the time has come when something practical and thorough must be done to meet the necessities of that large portion of our population which groans under an accumulated weight of poverty and distress, such as necessarily breeds a mass of corruption and crime.

Emigration has its place among the factors employed in the settlement of the question as to what shall be done, but it fails to solve it to any very appreciable extent; indeed, it leaves almost untouched the principal part of the difficulty, inasmuch as it removes the best of our industrial classes, and leaves behind the worst. Household Suffrage, for which some plead so warmly, and which probably is among the inevitables of a near future, cannot meet the requirements of the case, indeed, is likely rather to increase its complications, the masses for whose relief we plead being at present unprepared to employ wisely so important a trust as would then be committed to them. Questions of political economy affecting the physical conditions of the people have to be faced, and legislative reforms calculated to secure relief from oppression in wages, overcrowding, filth, pestilential gases, jerry builders, and suffocating slums, must be now only theorised and talked of, but actually accomplished.

Politicians must now, if they wish to retain their hold on public confidence, become, in earnest, social reformers. Party considerations will have to give way for the nonce at least before this burning question of the age. It is not as Liberals or Conservatives this aspect of our social condition must be dealt with by our legislators, but as men bent upon redressing wrongs, and removing evils which are a blot upon our civilisation, to say nothing of our Christian profession. We are reaching a crisis, if indeed it is not already reached, in our national history, upon which issues are depending of a most serious kind. Not only the interests of the poor and the outcast portions of our community are at stake, but the action of the upper classes in reference to them is being regarded with such jealous watchfulness as to threaten perilous results should indifference or half-heartedness be again displayed. The cry of the distressed has come up into our ears, and a solemn responsibility rests upon all as to what reply shall now be given.

The Church of Christ has a position to maintain in reference to this momentous subject which calls for utmost wisdom, as well as earnest action. Her mission is mainly moral and spiritual, and this must not be forgotten, nor political or merely material endeavour allowed to have precedence in her zealous efforts to meet the demand upon her energies. By all means let Christians philanthropically sympathise with everything calculated to promote the real welfare of the race, and let their voice be heard in support of wise and needed reforms outside the distinctly spiritual range of activity; but upon the followers of Christ far deeper aspects of the question urge themselves than are present to the eye of the mere political or social economist. They know that it is in vain to clean the outside only of the cup and platter, to garnish and beautify the outer appearance of the sepulchre, while death and corruption lurk within. Sin lies, after all, at the root of the matter—bad hearts, dark minds, poisoned springs of thought and action, evil intents, and hatred of God and godliness, exist as moral conditions, as truly as bad dwellings and other physical ills affect the outward life. To reach these is the grand mission of the Church, and for this work she is well equipped, if only her members are prepared in faith and prayerful consecration of life to go forth and fulfil the Master's behests.

WHERE ARE WE?

A GOOD man once said that he read the newspaper in order to see how his heavenly Father ruled the world. This was in years gone by, and we are tempted to ask whether things are better or worse now than they were then. Some passages in the daily Press read sadly enough, and seem to tell of a world which has wandered far from the Father's house, and which refuses to be ruled according to his will. In the tall columns that greet our eyes six days per week are records of a conflict long ago begun, and going on through every fleeting hour. Here is a victory for the Serpent, and there is one for the Saviour. As with the hosts that fought in Rephidim, so the fight goes on. Sometimes Israel prevails, and sometimes Amalek. We know that at last the Lord will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven. But as yet it is not so. The hosts are commingled in the valley, and to human eyes the scene is full of confusion.

Let us glance at the history which comes before us in one brief day. It is evening time, and let us open the intellectual pages of the Pall Mall Gazette. There is an editorial "Note" commending George Tinworth's religious sculpture. The latest specimen of the artist's skill represents Christ appearing to Mary Magdalene in the Garden. The stone of the sepulchre, we are told, "has been rolled away, so as to display the interior of the tomb, where, according to a pretty mediæval legend, two angels are seated, singing." The singing may be a legend, but how is it with regard to that which Mary saw, "Two angels in white sitting, the one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the body of Jesus had lain?" Is this to be taken as on a par with the "pretty mediæval legend," though of an earlier date? Is there "no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit"? Is there an answer suggested, though not expressed—the answer of the Sadducee and the Agnostic?

We pass on, and a little further we find another piece of history, mysterious as an Egyptian hieroglyph. The heading startles us: "The Clergy and Sunday Card-playing." Two High Church clergymen at Plymouth, who are members of the Liberal Club, have given a notice of motion to rescind a rule which prohibited cards and billiards on Sunday. This motion, we are told, "is in harmony with the procedure at a working men's institute in connection with All Saints' Church, which is open on Sundays, the vicar having declined to insert a rule prohibiting the playing of games on Sunday." We might add that it appears also "in harmony" with something we have seen with our own eyes. Over the door of a building apparently devoted to a religious undertaking, is a gas-lamp, inscribed, "St. Mary's Mission-room. Bagatelle." Accompanying the words are the symbols of the game, in the form of a couple of "cues" artistically crossed, with balls between, so that he who runs may read. "No harm in bagatelle," says the Christian professor. But the world thinks the association rather odd, nevertheless, and the world has a keen discernment in such matters.

But we proceed with the Pall Mall Gazette. Still keeping to the same number of that ably-conducted journal, we read "The Rev. Arthur Mursell, of Birmingham, will deliver a lecture this evening in Fetter-lane Chapel, on Charles Dickens." "What harm?" asks one. "What good?" we might retort. But yet a step further, and we read a few extracts from a lecture on "The Stage," given before the City Temple Debating Society, by the same rev. gentleman. We are told therein: "There are black sheep in every community, and it would be a dangerous thing to press the tu quoque argument as to character back against the Church. Enough to say that Judas Iscariot does not stand alone as a devil among professed disciples." "I claim," says the preacher, or lecturer, "I claim such names as Sheridan Knowles, and William Charles Macready, and that of Charles Santley, of the lyric platform, as burning Christian lights worthy to shine with bishops and apostles." After this, let us go to the play. Perhaps we shall see a bishop there. We have only to cross the Atlantic in order to see something to that effect.

Yet another glance at our Pall Mall, and there are the telegrams which tell of Mr. Irving's first appearance in America, and his "enthusiastic reception." So let the world applaud its own, especially when the specimen is good of its kind. We are not concerned to prove the stage immoral, or to deny that those who are devoted to it as a profession are often amiable and generous. That the theatre is essentially "of the world" is the point for which we contend, and that its bias is evil rather than good, even though it may be possible to find something in it which is not altogether evil. The theatre is the worldling's joy, and, after all that may be said for it, we cannot hold that it is in accordance with the spirit of Christ. Hence we mark with pain the statement that among the audience who greeted Mr. Irving were the "Rev. Dr. Collyer and the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher." Bracketed with these names we have that of Mdme. Christine Nilsson, who was to be expected there, though perhaps she scarcely reckoned on such reverend company.

A lurid light falls on the final page. The Pall Mall Gazette quotes from the new number of "Harper's Magazine" a frightful story of "A Night in a Hashish House." This is no fiction, but a tale terribly real, or at least professedly so. The locality is that of New York, and the scene reads like the story of a nightmare. The opium den is hideous, but the "hashish house" has a horror of its own. Steeped in Oriental splendour, it has the air of a Satanic paradise. It is the den of the "old Serpent," draped in magnificence, and as far from God as hell from heaven. Satan's latest snare is not his last, and the fiend shows his skill in strewing the way to destruction as with velvet and flowers. Such sweet before the bitter must make the end to be bitter indeed.

A JOURNALIST.

THE BIBLE AND THE POOR.—2.

MOSES, THE PROPHETS, AND THE PSALMS.

THERE is this contrast between the perfect code of law which God gave to Israel and all merely human legislation—that God favoured the poor and the helpless, while man favours the rich and strong.

The first mention of the poor in Scripture is in this connection: "Six years thou shalt sow thy land and gather in the fruits thereof; but the seventh year thou shalt let field and vineyard and oliveyard rest and lie still, that the poor of thy people may eat;" and that this was expected to afford an ample provision is shown by the fact that they should eat and be satisfied and leave for the beasts of the field to eat. And not only was the whole produce of the seventh year to be left for the poor, but the Israelite was forbidden wholly to reap the corners of his field or gather the gleanings of his harvest; to glean his vineyard, or to gather every grape. "Thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger: I am the Lord thy God."

And if these and other regulations might seem to bear hardly upon them, and they should ask, "What shall we eat the seventh year? we shall not sow nor gather in our increase;" then that should be the most fruitful time of all, for "I will command my blessing upon you in the sixth year, and it shall bring forth fruit for three years."

We may mark the contrast between ancient and modern legislation thus: In Israel it was felony not to permit gleaning. In England it is felony to glean without special permission.

At the base of the Mosaic legislation was the principle that all men are equal before God: "They shall give every man a ransom for his soul unto the Lord. . . . from twenty years old and above. . . . The rich shall not give more and the poor shall not give less, than half a shekel" (=1s. 3d).

This, which might at first sight seem hard upon the poor, was on the contrary their enfranchisement. It showed that whatever might be the difference in gifts or talents committed to each, "a man's a man for a' that," and in God's account the souls and the lives of rich and poor were of one value and of one price.

Respect for the poor and the self-respect of the poor were further provided for by the command that the judges should not respect the person of the poor nor honour the person of the mighty. Even justice was to be meted out, without favour because a man was poor, without consideration that he happened to be rich.

Another illustration of the respect for the manhood of a man which was inculcated by the law given by Moses, was the restriction, "if the wicked man be worthy to be beaten," to forty stripes; "lest, if he should exceed, and beat him above these with many stripes, then thy brother should seem vile unto thee" (Deut. xxv. 3). The judge must not forget that the criminal is his brother.

By keeping the land in his own hands, maintaining indeed the position of the ground landlord, confining the tenure to fifty years, and restoring in the jubilee the land to the original possessor (who, through poverty, might have sold the reversion of it), and by forbidding them to oppress or defraud one another, God provided against grinding poverty and the growth of a pauper class.

All our legislation as to the conveyance of property, as it was devised by men of property, so it favours the propertied class. But it was quite otherwise with the Divine legislation. If a man became poor and sold his estate, his next of kin or himself might redeem it at any time, without waiting for the jubilee year.

The same principle was emphasised by the very exception which the law made, that if a dwelling-house in a walled city were sold, the right of redemption was confined to a year, and, if not then redeemed, it did not go back, even in the year of jubilee. But a house in an un-walled village might be redeemed at any time, and did go back in the jubilee, if not previously redeemed.

God did not found a communism; He let individuality, industry, competition, have full scope; but He did not handicap the weak in favour of the strong, nor burden the poor to add riches to the rich; on the contrary, He demanded from the mighty consideration for the helpless, and required those in authority to defend the fatherless and the widow.

But Israel did not keep this law, holy and just and good; they refused to prove the holy acceptable and perfect will of God, and therefore the curse came upon them to the uttermost. But before it came God sent unto them all his servants the prophets, daily rising up early, and sending them. And the prophets, from Amos, the herdman in the fields of Samaria, to Daniel of the royal seed, in the palace of Babylon, all insisted on the righteousness of the law in considering the poor. Thus Jehovah called Amos as he followed the flock, and sent him to address the dainty daughters of Israel after this rough fashion: "Hear this, ye kine of Bashan, that are in the mountain of Samaria, which oppress the poor, which crush the needy." Isaiah threatens judgment upon the ancients and princes of his people because "the spoil of the poor is in your houses," and asks in the name of an indignant God, injured in the persons of the oppressed, "What mean ye that ye beat my people to pieces, and grind the faces of the poor?"

And are the daughters of England guiltless as to their poor sisters, who, for long days in stifling rooms for scanty pay, make their bonnets and head-bands, the changeable suits of apparel? And do not those tradesmen whose inordinate desire extends their mammoth establishments till they eat up all smaller men, and the rich men who clear their estates of the labouring population, that they may have great game preserves, come under Isaiah's "Woe unto them that join house to house, that lay field to field, till there be no place, that they may be placed alone in the midst of the earth"?

In spite of Moses, and the Prophets, and the Psalms, Israel went on in their oppressions until God sent them into captivity. But Gentile and Jew are both alike, and when to the Despot of Babylon Daniel revealed his dream and the interpretation, the Prophet besought him to break off his sins by righteousness, and his iniquities by showing mercy to the poor, "if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity." But he returned to his forgetfulness of God and his oppression of the poor, and the judgment came.

Will not the same causes produce the like results in England? If we behave like beasts shall we not become beasts? Is it not beast-like to thrust with side and shoulder, and push all the diseased and weak ones with your horns, till ye have scattered them abroad? "Therefore thus saith the Lord God, behold I, even I, will judge between the fat cattle and the lean cattle; therefore will I save my flock, and they shall no more be a prey."

Truly the exceeding loud and bitter cry of outcast London is gone up into the ears of the Lord God of Sabaoth, and He cries it back to us, because the comfortable classes must cut off their sins by righteousness, and their iniquities by showing mercy to the poor, or He will avenge Himself upon the comfortable classes by the poor. The secular press is not insensible to this alternative, as the following from a recent leader indicates:—

"Some time or other, if things are allowed to go on as they are now going, the social question may turn itself into a political question. Socialism, in that sense which properly associates it with disturbance, has never yet found a mouthpiece, a leader, and an organisation, in England. But what if the vast mass of suffering and vaguely discontented poor were some day to be presented with a political theory, a mouthpiece, and a leader capable of making them believe that in political convulsion they could best find a remedy for their sufferings?"

But the entanglement and complication are such that neither politician nor philanthropist nor Christian, knows how to begin the much needed reformation. What can Christians do but that which the saints of God have ever done in times of perplexity and distress? They cried, and the Lord heard. And now, as of old, He will not turn a deaf ear to his people. If the cry goes up to God on behalf of his poor, and if we are in earnest in desiring to raise them out of their terrible and trodden-down condition, He, who has thousands of times wrought wonders beyond what we asked or thought, will give his people understanding of the times, that they may know what Israel ought to do. M.

PRAYER FOR LONDON.

ON Thursday, the 1st inst., a number of workers met the second time for prayer and conference, at Eccleston Hall, S.W., respecting the work of bringing the Gospel to the unconverted population of London. There was much earnest pleading with God for a mighty revival of his work in the great Metropolis. It was considered that one of the greatest hindrances to the conversion of the multitude was the lukewarmness and apathy of professing Christians, although a great many among the Churches had been happily aroused to aggressiveness in the work of the Lord. Instances were cited of the Lord's blessing being granted where Christians were united in their prayers and efforts.

At the evening meeting Mr. C. R. Hurditch, who had invited those present, and Mr. Wallis, gave addresses on Ephesians iii., noting the provision that is made for the equipment of those who in any measure seek to serve their Lord. It was suggested that other meetings be convened in different parts of London for the purpose of prayer for the salvation of souls. It would be a happy thing if the churches of London would unite for this purpose; for where unity exists there the Lord commands the blessing.

BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.—On Wednesday evening, October 31, a Social Tea was given to a number of refugees and others (among whom were several believers), prior to the re-opening of the night-school at Harvey-street, Hoxton. There was also a goodly number of Christian friends present. The distressed strangers represented no fewer than half a dozen nationalities. Addresses of an evangelistic and stirring character were delivered in German and English by Mr. Warschawski, Mr George Henderson, and Rev. C. Double, and the reading of Scripture in Hebrew and German by Mr. Aschkenasi. The Jewish brethren listened to them all with marked attention, feeling evidently impressed with the truth thus brought home to them.

HINTS FOR THE INQUIRY ROOM—2.

Addressed to Christian Workers by Mr. GEORGE SOLTAU.

"RIGHTLY DIVIDING THE WORD OF TRUTH."

IN the previous address we dealt specially with the subject of Sin, its irremediable nature and permeating power, the cause of all the sorrow and suffering to the soul. Further, we saw the necessity for ascertaining what form sin had assumed to the consciousness of the inquirer, in order to apply such portions of Scripture as would meet the want of the soul. We now enter upon the consideration of the various ways in which the Gospel is presented and symbolised in Scripture, in order to select from these symbols the one best suited to the difficulty of the inquirer.

It is very essential, in dealing with inquirers, to avoid, as far as possible, mixing these symbols, otherwise the mind gets confused, and is less able to grasp intelligently what the Gospel sets forth. We have not unfrequently heard a worker in the inquiry-room begin with an allusion to the Good Shepherd seeking the lost sheep, then suddenly quote a portion of the parable of the good Samaritan, follows this with some reference to the story of the Prodigal Son, and conclude with an allusion to the blood cleansing from all sin. Such a method of applying the Scripture will bewilder rather than instruct the mind, and fail to lead the inquirer to Christ.

The following may be taken as among the simplest and most useful illustrations of the way of salvation:—

(1) Jesus Christ pardons the guilt of sin, and blots out the record of sin.

(2) Jesus Christ redeems from the slavery of sin by paying the ransom.

(3) He is the Great Physician healing the disease of sin, and removing its impurity.

(4) He is the Good Shepherd seeking the lost sheep and carrying it home.

(5) The Lord Jesus is the Friend and Brother to receive back the wanderer, to hear the outpouring of the heart, and give the welcome into the Father's presence.

(6) He is the Life, to quicken the dead soul.

(1) Jesus Christ pardons the guilt of sin and blots out the record. Sin is the transgression of the law (1 John iii. 4). The penalty of law-breaking is death. God can only forgive the sinner by transferring the guilt and penalty to another able and willing to take it. Jesus Christ offered Himself as the Sin-bearer, took upon Himself the penalty of the broken law, suffered and died under it. God being satisfied, raised Him from the dead; and now He presents to the sinner his blood, token of his life poured out, to accomplish these two things, namely, to blot out the record of sin from God's Book of Remembrance in heaven, and to remove the guilt of sin from the convicted conscience and heart of the sinner.

When, therefore, an inquirer says, "I am a great sinner, I need the pardon of my sin, I am verily guilty," take a line of teaching similar to this, using such texts as the following: 1 Peter ii. 24; Is. liii. 4, 5; Rom. iv. 25, v. 6—10; Is. xliii. 25, xliv. 22. For illustrations, Luke vii. 48; Matt. ix. 2. The Book of Remembrance, Rev. xx. 12.

(2) Jesus Christ redeems from the slavery of sin by paying the ransom (Rom. vi. 17). "Ye were the slaves of sin." The condition of the Israelites in Egypt illustrates the slavery and bondage of sin. They were unable to free themselves: life, liberty, property were in the power of another. God says, "I will deliver from this bondage: let them slay the lamb, sprinkle the blood outside the door where I can see it." This blood was the price of the transfer of the people from Pharaoh to God. It meant, "We acknowledge our life is forfeited—we lay it down." It also meant, "We are not our own, we are bought with a price." Now the Lord Jesus comes to earth to lay down the price of redemption. The sinner accepts the fact, and acknowledges, "I have no liberty, no life, no power to free myself." "The Lord frees us from the bondage of sin, I am transferred to Him as my new Master; my life is in His keeping by right of purchase." "Sold under sin" (Rom. vii. 14; 1 Kings xxi. 20; Is. l. 1). "Redeemed" (Tit. ii. 14, 1 Peter i. 18, 19, Rev. v. 9, Psalm ciii. 4, Eph. i. 7, Heb. ix. 12, 1 Cor. vi. 20, Job xxxiii. 24, Matt. xx. 28, 1 Tim. ii. 6).

When an inquirer says, "I have tried to give up my sins but I cannot; I am held down by them, I long to be free"—select this line of illustration for him.

(3) Jesus is the Great Physician, healing the disease of sin and removing its impurity.—All the miracles recorded in detail in the Gospels were wrought on incurables. They are types of the various effects of sin, producing blindness, paralysis, infirmity, leprosy, deformity, and death. The cures were instantaneous, not gradual—perfect, not partial—painless, not agonising. Healing depended on faith in the Lord's power and will, and obedience to his word. When all means have failed, the Lord can heal. Give up "trying," and "praying," and "trust Jesus."

For the Lord as Healer see Ps. xli. 4, vi. 2; Jer. xxx. 17; Hosea xiv. 4; Jer. xvii. 14; Exod. xv. 26; Ps. ciii. 3. He cures blindness. How? See narratives in Matt. ix., Mark x., and John ix. If an inquirer says, "I can't see my way," "I can't see these things," give him the questions and commands recorded in these narratives. Bid him trust in the wondrous promises of God. Trust the ability of Christ to make him see. The result will be he will "follow Jesus in the way."

Jesus cures leprosy—type of the outward manifestations of inward sin. He looks at the sores, and touches them. Does an inquirer say, "I have been an awful sinner, I have committed every kind of abominable sin, and I can't get rid of sinful thoughts and desires"? Point him to the narratives in 2 Kings v., Matt. viii., or Luke xvii. Bid him uncover his sin to Jesus—show himself to the great High Priest, or, go wash, burying himself with all his loathsomeness in the water of judgment that rolled over Christ's soul for him, and he shall rise to walk in newness of life.

Does the inquirer say, "I have lost all hope?" Show him the story of the hopeless man in Luke x. 30—34. Does he say, "I have tried all I know, and am no better?" Bid him try Jesus, according to Luke viii. 44, 45.

(4) Jesus is the Good Shepherd seeking the lost sheep and carrying it home.—"I feel I am lost." To be lost means to have gone astray, and like a sheep to be unable to find the way back (Is. liii. 6). Exhort the inquirer to confess this to God at once, according to Ps. cxix. 176; 1 Pet. ii. 25. Then explain the Lord's words in Luke xix. 10. "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." "But I am afraid He has given up seeking me, I am such a lost sinner." No, that cannot be the case, is the reply, as He seeks until He finds (Luke xv. 4). When He has found the lost one, He takes him up, and lays him on his shoulders rejoicing; that is, Jesus undertakes the sinner's case now, and will be responsible for the safety and welfare of body, soul, and spirit, if only the lost one will let Him. He is able and willing to do so, because "He laid down his life for the sheep" (John x. 11). Now He says, "Let me lay you on my shoulder."

(5) The Lord Jesus is the Friend and Brother to receive the wanderer, &c.—There will be not a few in the inquiry-room crushed in spirit, lonely in heart, and longing for sympathy and comfort. To many of these the power of temptation is very strong, and they realise their weakness to resist temptation. Those bruised spirits may be tenderly led to such Scriptures as Heb. ii. 18, iv. 15. Let them realise that the very sympathy and help they need is such as the Lord offers them.

> 'He knows what sore temptations mean,
> For He has felt the same."

Bid them confide their sorrows with a trustful heart to Jesus according to Ps. ciii. 13, 14, Prov. xvii. 17, and xviii. 24. They need a friend to love them always—one who is born for adversity, and whose help can be relied on in every dark moment. But they may ask, "Does God want me?" For the answer see Rom. x. 21; 2 Pet. iii. 9; Ezek. xxxiii. 11. When they come and truly cast themselves on God the welcome will be in accordance with Luke xv. 20 and John vi. 37, the ground of the welcome being Is. liii. 4. Surely He hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows.

> "Man of Sorrows! what a name.
> Hallelujah! what a Saviour."

(6) Jesus is the Life to quicken the dead soul.—What is a dead soul? One who has no connection with God, and no communication with Him. Like a son who has left his home and friends and gone away, leaving no address behind him, and who, for years, sends back no communication; such an one is practically dead to his friends. The sinner is dead in trespasses and sins (Eph. ii. 1—3). Life in its relation to God has never commenced, hence the force of the Lord's words in John iii. 3, 5, 7, x. 10; also Rom. vi. 23. "But how can I get this life?" For answer, quote John iii. 16. Christ gave up his life on the cross for our acceptance, see Gal. ii. 20. To be born again is to receive by faith the life of Christ, to begin all over again, reckoning the past life with all its sin and ungodliness as blotted out of all existence and memory, having nothing holy and pure in it.

For further understanding of Life, mark all the passages in St. John's Gospel where the word occurs, and in quoting any of them to the dead souls, remember that it is the "Spirit that quickeneth" (John vi. and see 2 Cor. iii. 6).

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE IN PRESTON.

A MOST successful Blue Ribbon Mission was concluded on Tuesday, October 30, at Preston. A United Committee of Churchmen and Nonconformists was formed some months ago, representing all the Temperance Societies in the town. The Committee secured the services of Mr. William Noble. On October 19, they invited 150 workers to a tea meeting and conference. On Saturday and Sunday evenings preparatory meetings were held, but on Tuesday, the 23rd, the Mission proper commenced.

Revs. J. H. Rawdon, S. MacNaughton, W. F. Newton, T. B. Spencer, E. Moulton, W. Lewis, Alderman Benson, J.P., F. Thorp, J.P., and many ministers and others were present, and spoke at the prayer and public meetings. A fine, earnest, brotherly spirit prevailed throughout, and earnest souls felt that they had laid hold on God.

At the first meeting Mr. Noble appealed to all present to consecrate themselves to the work of reclaiming their fellow-men from the terrible curse of intemperance. It was felt on all hands that the Mission would certainly be a great success. Night after night the spacious new Public Hall, seating over 4,000, was well filled. On the last three nights the Hall was densely packed, every available inch of standing room being occupied; on Tuesday night the attendance was close on 6,000.

Rev. S. MacNaughton, M.A., said: I am sure you all feel, as I do to-night, glad and grateful for the marvellous success that has crowned our efforts during this Mission. I do not believe we have ever had a finer sight in Preston than this meeting to-night, and the meetings of the two previous nights. We have had not only numbers, but perfect order, devout reverence, intense earnestness and enthusiasm. We are grateful for the preacher of truth and temperance that God has sent us in the person of Mr. William Noble. The enthusiasm of the meeting knew no bounds. At the close the chairman asked for 1,000 pledges, and 1,060 were received. During the eight days 4,741 signed the pledge, and 7,602 donned the Blue Ribbon.

Never has there been such a successful temperance crusade in Preston. Manifestly divine power rested upon all the meetings in answer to the united prayers of God's people. During the whole Mission, Mr. Noble did not utter a single word that anyone could wish to have been unuttered. Earnest, outspoken, thorough, fearless, yet free from rash utterances, he is a man whose merits ought to be known, and whose services ought to be sought in every town in the land.

A TRUMPET CALL TO CHRISTIANS.

OPENING ADDRESS IN LONDON.

By Mr. D. L. MOODY.

"Let us go up at once and possess the land, for we are well able to overcome it."—Num. xiii. 30.

MY thoughts have been called to this portion of Scripture by seeing the harvest fields so white all around us at the present time. I have been engaged in connection with the Lord's work for the last twelve years, in this country and in America. I do not think I have ever seen such favourable indications of a general awakening on both sides of the Atlantic as during the past sixty days. It was my privilege to go to the city of Boston a little while before I came away, and speak to an audience of men one Sunday night. There was no special interest attached to the meeting, and yet it seemed as though a hush from heaven came upon the congregation. I was not looking for anything of the kind, so that it went altogether beyond my faith. At the close of the address I asked all who felt interested to remain for a second meeting, when I would be glad to explain more fully the way of life. I do not think a hundred left the building; it seemed as though they were just held there by some unseen power. When I had preached another sermon I said that if any who were anxious would come up to the front—we had no workers, and the ministers were mostly out of the city at the time—I would like to meet them. They came right up, I may say not by scores but by hundreds. These men just seemed to be thirsting for the water of life.

Soon after I went to Chicago, and the same thing impressed me there. Men appeared to be taking great interest in eternal things. For three days, morning, noon, and night, there was no building that could contain the people. I have known Chicago for twenty-five years, and have never before seen anything like the interest manifested there. The streams of salvation are flowing out in different parts of the city.

When we came to the South of Ireland people said there would be opposition and trouble. I do not know exactly how to account for it, but I do not think that we have ever had so much blessing within the same time as during these last three weeks. The people have listened to the Word as we seldom have seen them. Almost from the first night they remained to the inquiry-meeting, and all through these three weeks men, women, and children have been eagerly asking what they must do to be saved.

It seems as if God were coming very near to us. Let us cross into the promised land at Kadesh Barnea, and take possession of it. I do not think it is the will of God that we should wander around in the wilderness for forty years. We have been listening to the ten spies long enough. You will find that about ten out of every twelve persons within the Church are all the time predicting defeat. The ten spies sent out by Moses returned with what we would call "a majority report." Probably they brought back maps and charts of the land. They said, "There are great cities walled clear up to heaven; we looked at the thickness of the walls, and we are sure we cannot take the cities." They reported also that the land ate up the inhabitants. Just see how blind unbelief is: in the very next breath, they said they saw giants here. It must have been a queer kind of eating-up that would produce giants. They said also hey looked like grasshoppers in the sight of these men. When we get our eyes away from God, and forget that the Lamb is sitting on the throne, and think the work is to be done in our own strength, then we will look very small indeed in the sight of the giants that oppose us. But when we remember that Christ is on the throne and that all power is given to Him in heaven and on earth, we go forth in his name and the obstacles look very small indeed.

Caleb and Joshua were worth more than all these ten men. Let me say that it was a mistake to send out these spies anyway. Faith sends out no spies. I have noticed that those Christians who spy out the land are the very ones who talk of defeat. There is a committee of twenty-five, say, and some suggestions are made to make a forward movement; about twenty out of the twenty-five will get up and raise more objections in half an hour than you could overcome in a year. But notice how these ten spies drop out of sight. I was going to say that if I should challenge this audience to tell me the names of these ten men, probably not one could do so. Who remembers the sceptics and unbelievers that lived in the last generation? But how the names of these two men of faith, Caleb and Joshua, shine out on the page of history. All those who have made a lasting impression on this world have been men of faith and courage. You remember how four times in one chapter the Lord tells Joshua to be of good courage. I think about nine-tenths of the professed Christians of the present day are all the time afraid, and looking at the giants in the land. I can imagine that when Gideon got together his army of thirty-two thousand men his heart sank within him as he thought of the mighty host of 135,000 Midianites. What could he do against them with such a little army? But the Lord's thoughts were not like Gideon's. He said: "Gideon! you have got too many men." Probably there was a good deal of murmuring in the camp, as there is throughout Christendom now. The Lord commanded Gideon to tell all those who were fearful and afraid to go back to their wives and mothers, where they would be out of danger. Twenty thousand men wheeled out of line; like cowards they just struck for the rear. You let two-thirds of this audience rise and leave the hall and you would almost think they were all going. I believe the Church of God would be ten times stronger to-day if we could get all the fearful and afraid to step to the rear. Then the army could move forward in the name of the Lord.

Gideon perhaps thought the Lord had made a mistake, but instead of him having too few, the Lord said, "You have got too many now; try them once more." He took the ten thousand men down to the brook, and those who were dead in earnest did not stoop down to drink, but just lapped up the water with their hands. Nine thousand seven hundred more of them wheeled out of line and only three hundred were left. What could Gideon do with such a handful against the great army of the Midianites? Three hundred men whose hearts are all on fire with love to God are worth more than three hundred thousand of these nominal Christians, who are all the time looking at the giants and the walled cities and expecting defeat. But it was not with Gideon and his three hundred men that the power lay. It was "the sword of the Lord and of Gideon." If we had three hundred men with hearts loyal to the God of heaven, and willing to do what God would have them to do, we should see marvellous results.

I notice there are some ministers of the Gospel even in this nineteenth century who almost tremble from head to foot the moment anyone talks about a spiritual revival. If there is not scriptural authority for revivals, then I cannot understand my Bible. For the first 2000 years of the world's history they had no revival; probably, if they had, there would have been no flood. The first real awakening, I judge, of which we read in the Old Testament, was when Moses was sent down to Egypt to bring his brethren out of the house of bondage. When Moses went down to Goschen, there must have been a great commotion there; many things were done out of the usual order. When God visits any community in saving power, there may be many things done out of the regular line. We want to get out of the regular line. We are so apt to sink into ruts and become formal, that we need to have a shaking up now and then. Under Joshua there was a great revival, and again under the Judges; God was constantly reviving the Jewish nation in those olden times. Samuel brought the people to Mizpah, and they were to put away their strange gods. Then the Israelites went out and defeated the Philistines, so that they never came back in his day. Dr. A. Bonar, speaking of that time, says he can imagine that David and Jonathan were converted in the revival under Samuel. What was it but a great revival when Elijah gathered the people on Mount Carmel, and their hearts were turned back from the worship of Baal to serve the living God?

In New Testament times, we have the wonderful revival under John the Baptist. People now are so afraid of excitement and of the harm it will do. No doubt the leading men in the days of John the Baptist thought he was doing more harm than any other 100 men put together; they were shaking their wise heads and saying it would not last. And when John was beheaded they might have said: "Did we not tell you the thing was bound to come to an end?" Has it come to an end? Nearly nineteen hundred years have rolled away, but the influence of that mighty wilderness preacher is as great as ever. Was there ever a man who accomplished so much in a few months, except the Master Himself? The preaching of John was like a breath of spring after a long and dreary winter. For four hundred long years there had been no prophet, and darkness had settled down on the nation. John's advent was like the flashing of a brilliant meteor that heralded the coming day. It was not in the temple or in any synagogue that he preached, but on the banks of the Jordan. Men, women, and children flocked to hear him. Almost any one can get an audience in a crowded city, but this was away out in the desert. No doubt there was great excitement. I suppose the towns and villages were nearly depopulated, as they flocked out to hear the preaching of John. People are so afraid of excitement. We want a little of it; it will not hurt us a bit. When I came over to this country in 1867 I was asked to go and preach at the Derby race-course. I saw more excitement there in one day than I have seen at all the religious meetings I ever attended in my life put together. A man in one town in Great Britain—he was a minister, I am ashamed to say—was at a dance when we were here last year, till after five o'clock in the morning. The next Sunday he preached against the excitement of revivals—the late hours, and one thing and another!

There must have been intense excitement when Christ called the seventy disciples and sent them out two by two. Just imagine thirty-five towns all woke up in one day, and two men in each place beginning to preach the Gospel of the kingdom, telling them that the King had already appeared. Do you suppose there was no stir among the people in these towns? In the sight of the world, of course, there will be many things in connection with a revival of God's work that will appear strange. The worldly people doubtless thought that John the Baptist had gone clean mad. Would to God we had a good many men now-a-days bitten with that kind of madness. They called Christ mad; I do not think a man is worthy to preach for Christ until he is ready to have the world consider him mad. Many people are so afraid of making mistakes, that they never do anything.

Then look at Pentecost. The Apostles preached, and you know what the result was. I suppose the worldly men of the day said it would all die away. Although they brought about the martyrdom of Stephen and of James, other men rose up to take possession of the field. From the very place where Stephen was slain, Saul took up the work, and it has been going on ever since. I have little sympathy with those pastors who, when God is reviving the Churches, begin to preach against revivals. There is not a denomination in Christendom to-day that has not sprung out of a revival. The Roman Catholics and the Episcopalians both claim to be apostolic in their origin; if they are they sprang out of the revival at Pentecost. The Wesleyan body rose out of revivals under John Wesley and George Whitefield. In a few days you are going to celebrate the 400th anniversary of Martin Luther's birth; did not the Lutheran Church come from the great awakening that swept through Germany? Was not Scotland stirred up through the preaching of John Knox? Where did the Quakers come from if not from the work of God under George Fox? Yet people are so afraid if the regular routine of things is going to be disturbed. Oh, this Church dignity! It was Church dignity that killed Jesus Christ. The ecclesiastics of that day thought He must be wrong because He did not conform to the regular order, so they put Him to death. Let us pray that God may raise up some man who will be used of God for the reviving of his Church in our day. I think the time has come when we need it.

In an American city where we went one of the ministers found that his church was opposed to his taking part. He was told that if he identified himself with the movement he would alienate some of his congregation. He took the church list and found that four-fifths of the members of the Church had been converted in times of revival, among others the superintendent of the Sabbath school, all the officers of the church, and every active member. The minister went into the church the following Sunday and preached a sermon on Revivals, reminding them of what had taken place in the history of the congregation. So you will find that many who talk against revivals have themselves been converted in such a time. Not long ago a very able minister, intellectually, preached a sermon against these awakenings; he did not believe in them. Some of his people searched the church records to see how many during the previous twelve years had been added to the membership on profession of their faith; they found that not a single soul had joined the church all these years. Yet the minister preached against revivals. In another place a man preached bitterly against revivals. He had two sons, and both of them were confirmed drunkards. I suppose there are many who could be reached if their parents were right on this point. When there have been special meetings, these parents have said some sarcastic or bitter thing about the evangelist or his preaching. The child has heard it, and has been turned against all religious things. We should be very careful how we talk about such awakenings. Is it not high time that the Church of God woke up and put forth an effort to save the sons and daughters of the church members? We cannot afford to be lukewarm on the subject. Let us to-day reconsecrate ourselves to God's service. Let us pray and labour so that God hall revive his blessed work in all our communities.

Of course many people will raise objections. They say the converts will not hold out. Well, they did not all hold out under the preaching of Jesus Christ. "Many of his disciples went back and walked no more with Him." Paul mourned over the fact that some of those who made profession were walking as the enemies of the Cross of Christ. The Master taught in his wonderful parable that there are various kinds of hearers—those represented by the stony ground, the thorny ground, and the good ground; they will remain to the end of time. I have got a fruit tree at my home, and every year it has so many blossoms that if they should all produce apples the tree would break down. Nine-tenths perhaps of the blossoms will fall off, and yet I have a large number of apples. So there are many fair blossoms in Christian work that disappoint us. But if the professed converts sometimes do not hold out, it is not always their own fault. I went into a town in America some time ago, and a minister said to me: "I hope this work will not turn out like the revival here five years ago. I took one hundred converts into the Church, and with the exception of one or two, I do not know where they are to-day." This was discouraging, and I said I would rather give up the work, and go back to business, if the work was not going to last. I spoke, however, to another minister in the same city, who said: "I took in one hundred converts at the same time, and I can lay my hand on ninety-eight out of the hundred. For five years I have watched them, and only two have fallen away." Then he asked me if his brother minister had told me what took place in his church after they brought in those young converts. Some of them thought they ought to have a better church, and they got quarrelling among themselves, so nearly all the converts left the church! Yet he laid the blame at the door of the evangelist. If anyone will but engage heartily in this work they will have enough to encourage them. My experience has been that those converted in times of revival make the healthiest Christians. Shall we not make every effort, and have faith to believe that we are going to have Pentecostal power in these days? It seems to me that Pentecost was only a specimen day. You remember that a little further on they had another meeting, at which there were 5000 converted. I believe if the Church had faith to go right forward in the name of God, looking for and working for results, we should soon see great things. It would not take long before the whole world was reached. If America and England were to unite in this matter, they could carry the Gospel to every nation under heaven within a few years. Let us go up at once and possess the land. If the Lord delight in us we are well able to take it.

THE BOROUGH EVANGELISTIC CHOIR.—This choir is prepared to assist in meetings by way of singing the Gospel, or to conduct services of song, &c., where needed. The members are all Christians, and endeavour to serve their Lord by the use of their voices. Particulars may be had of Mr. W. J. Lewis, 132, Lorimore-road, S.E.

APOSTOLIC METHODS.

AMONG the many interesting works that are carried on at the Y.M.C.A., 168, Aldersgate-street, E.C., is one which has lately become prominent by reason of the zeal with which it has been taken up viz., "Foreign Missions." On Wednesday evening, October 31, a missionary meeting was held, at which Mr. Reginald Radcliffe gave an earnest address on evangelisation at home and abroad, the formation of churches, and the reasons for their becoming and means by which they may be made self-supporting.

Before a number of brethren engaged in prayer, mention was made of Mr. W. Arnot, who, more than a year ago, left Scotland for missionary work in Africa; he is now a captive in the neighbourhood of the Zambesi. We learn that his brother has gone out hoping to be of some service towards furthering his release, if it be the Lord's will. Various parts of the world were made the subject of much prayer, which seemed to stir the hearts of many who were present.

Mr. RADCLIFFE referred to the Lord's Word in Matt. xxviii., "All power is given unto Me, go ye therefore," and 1 Cor. ii. 3—5, where the Apostle sets the example of knowing nothing but "Jesus Christ, and Him crucified," and points out the need of having faith in the power of God rather than in the wisdom of men. He went on to show from Acts xiv. 23, xx. 17, and kindred passages, how the Apostle Paul sought to preach the Gospel, and then, leaving the converts to the care of elders, passed on to other needy fields. The churches thus became self-sustaining, and out of their very midst arose men who supported the weak rather than take from the Church means for their own support, the Apostle himself setting the example.

The custom of European missionaries going to heathen lands and settling down to local work had frequently produced unconcern on the part of members generally, and had hindered them from moving on to places where the Gospel had not been preached.

As a proof of the value of this principle Mr. Radcliffe cited the case of Wales in the last century, when Howell Harris was the means of so much blessing from north to south, and who worked according to this method. John Wesley, too, established churches which, to a great extent, were self-supporting. Later on came William Taylor, who has been the means, in God's hands, of establishing many churches in different parts of the world, and where to-day may be found happy companies of the Lord's people witnessing for Christ.

As to the language, there need be no difficulty, for in almost every country the address could be interpreted. God had wonderfully blessed the preaching by interpretation; therefore, no young man, or young woman, need be hindered on account of language. The doors are open, and the people are waiting in all the continents to hear the Gospel.

The speaker sought to impress upon any present who might be thinking of going abroad, the need of working on Apostolic lines, and guarding against the hindrances which surround the paid missionary in many places.

A few brief testimonies were given by several friends of Missions, who, from experience or observation, had seen the blessed results of this simple apostolic method of reaching souls and building up churches. It is to be hoped that many more young men will offer themselves for the foreign field in connection with the good and long-tried work carried on at Aldersgate-street, which is indeed a servant to the Church, and is deserving of hearty support.

OUR DOCK LABOURERS.—The Lord graciously blessed our labours last winter by giving us many souls, two of whom, we are happy to state, have become useful teachers. We feel indebted to your readers for their prayers, and ask for a continuation of the same. Tea and other meetings are employed by us to bring them under the sound of the Gospel.

Messrs. Moody & Sankey in London.

THE OPENING DAY AT ISLINGTON.

THE long-looked-for day has come at last. On Sunday morning Messrs. Moody and Sankey's campaign of eight months in the great metropolitan centre of the world began, under the happiest auspices, in the Priory Hall, Upper-street, Islington. This fine structure, as we have already stated, has been specially erected for the London meetings. At the close of the fortnight's Mission in Islington, the evangelists will break ground in Wandsworth, where a similar structure is now in process of preparation. While the meetings are going on there, the Islington Hall will be transferred to Stepney; and so on throughout the winter. These halls are built on the same plan as the great Bingley Hall at Birmingham, and have a seating capacity of over 5000. A large platform running along one end will accommodate the choir, the ministers, and other workers. The inside appearance of the hall is graceful and pleasing to the eye, while in the matter of acoustics it is as nearly as possible perfect. One of the side wings will be curtained off for the purposes of an inquiry-room, when occasion arises, as it very frequently will.

A preliminary prayer-meeting was held in the Priory Hall on Saturday evening. Mr. H. M. Matheson presided. Some 2000 Christian friends gathered together to beseech the Divine blessing on the special efforts about to be commenced. Such a manifestation of Christian unity and earnestness may well awaken the highest hopes for the success of the Mission.

MEETING FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

Sunday morning rose very clear and fine for a November day in London. Its promise, however, was not sustained, as will hereafter be seen. By 8 o'clock, the hour of meeting, a great company had gathered within the walls of the Priory Hall; a little later, when the congregation was complete, there must have been at least 4000 persons present. Many of the old faces so familiar to the frequenter of the Islington meetings eight and a half years ago could be seen on the platform and in the spacious area; it required little stretch of fancy to imagine ourselves back again in those wonderful and never-to-be-forgotten days, with only a slight change of location. The grand "Old Hundredth" was given out by Mr. Moody, led by Mr. Sankey, and sung with heart and voice by the multitude—a fitting key-note of praise for the past and of anticipation of yet greater things to come. Rev. F. C. Lillingston, of Holloway, offered prayer. Then Mr. Sankey's voice pealed through the great hall with telling power as he exhorted his brethren and sisters in most tuneful accents to prayer, praise, watchfulness, and expectation, through the medium of Dr. Bonar's hymn, "Pray, brethren, pray." The hall may not be so good for musical effect as many others in which Mr. Sankey has sung the Gospel; but if his voice retains its wonderful qualities as exhibited on this occasion no ear in the vast throngs will be unreached—we trust no heart unmoved. After another hymn by the audience, Mr. Sankey sang his old favourite, which is yet far from worn out, "Nothing but Leaves."

Mr. Moody having read part of Numbers xiii., announced as the text of his opening discourse the words, "Let us go up at once and possess the land; if the Lord delight in us we are well able to take it." As the main portion of the address will be found in another part of this issue, it will only be necessary here to allude to some points that are not touched on in the fuller report. After speaking of the wonderful spirit of inquiry he had lately seen in Boston, Chicago, and South Ireland, he said: "I have come up to London with high hopes and great expectations. I have about a hundred times more faith than I had when I came here eight years ago. If I was mad then, I am five times madder to-day. Some people have said that the work we had before in London did not last. I want to say that since then I have been preaching all through America—out in the Far West, and away on the Pacific slopes—and wherever I have gone I have found the fruits of the London work. They are now scattered all over the earth." The various "points" and sharp sayings of the preacher were readily taken up and responded to. Proceeding to speak of the "revivals" that God had sent at intervals in all the ages, Mr. Moody said he liked the word "awakenings" better. Wherever there had been such a manifestation of God's saving power, they had never wanted for "croakers," who said the thing would not last, and complained of the undue excitement. "I rode five miles through your city last night; it was approaching midnight before I got from the station to my quarters. I saw more excitement in the public-houses than there has been in all the meetings we have had during the last twelve years. These places were crowded with people drinking. I saw some men who were beastly drunk, and were abusing their children. There was great excitement in the streets; here and there they were fighting. And yet, the moment a breath comes from heaven, and men are getting delivered from their evil passions, a great many people shake their wise heads and say, 'Undue excitement! The thing won't last.' Let us pray for pentecostal times; the effects of Pentecost are felt all over the world to-day." Mr. Moody caused much amusement by telling the story of the man who had resided many years in India and said to a missionary that he had never yet met with a native convert. The missionary by and by asked him if he had ever seen any tigers in India. Oh, yes, he had shot a good many of them, whereupon the missionary replied that he had resided in the country for a long period and had never seen one. The truth was, the one had been looking for tigers and the other for converts, and both had found what they looked for. The moral of this little incident was of course apparent to all who heard Mr. Moody; according to their faith and expectation would be the blessing in these meetings.

At the close of his stirring address, Mr. Moody very earnestly prayed that every believer present might be seized with a passion for souls, and that hundreds might be converted under that roof throughout the coming winter. The company sang "The crowning day is coming;" the benediction was pronounced, and the first London meeting was at an end. As the great crowd dispersed, one and another might be heard saying to his neighbour that he had come such and such a distance to be present, or that the gathering reminded him of by-gone days.

MEETING FOR NON-CHURCHGOERS.

This was fixed for eleven o'clock. By that time the great hall was well filled; the late comers occupied every vacant corner. One could not help remarking on the preponderance of men; they must have constituted three-fourths of the audience. While the vacant seats were filling up the choir sang sweetly some of the best known among Songs and Solos. It was evident from the way in which the audience chimed in that all were not non-attenders at religious services, but there could be no doubt a fair sprinkling were of that class.

After Mr. James E. Mathieson had led in earnest prayer, Mr. Sankey gave a very fine rendering of the hymn, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed on us." The choir took up the thrilling chorus, and with the help of the audience it was repeated and re-repeated several times at Mr. Moody's request. Mr. Sankey also sang later on, "Man of sorrows, what a name!" the choir joining in the triumphant notes of the refrain, "Hallelujah, what a Saviour!"

The sermon was on "Seeking the Lord." As the preacher pictured forth, in his own graphic and colloquial style, the varied and strange motives that actuated those who flocked to hear the Saviour in the days of his flesh, the attention and interest of the hearers were thoroughly aroused. Very soon Mr. Moody turned the tables on them, and showed how the variety and insufficiency of motive had most probably been at work in their own case. By this time the rain had begun to descend, and was heard pattering fiercely on the low glass and iron roof of the building. This fact formed a good handle for the preacher, as he referred to the case of a man who had sought shelter from the rain in the Agricultural Hall, one day during their last visit to London; the Lord met him there in grace, and he who came to find refuge from the outward storm found in Christ a refuge from the burden of his sins. Proceeding to unfold the subject by incident and appeal, Mr. Moody pressed home on his rapt audience the acceptance of eternal life as a gift. Let them but seek it as earnestly as men desire wealth, health, or fame, and it would soon be theirs. Then he passed on to the third division of the subject—the divine command to "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," while he dwelt on the excuses men offer for not obeying this command, e.g., "there is plenty of time," &c. The wind blew and the rain beat more violently than ever on the roof, yet there seemed, amid the howling of the storm, no abatement of interest in the audience. As the roar of the elements increased, Mr. Moody only seemed to warm up to his subject. "I am glad," he exclaimed, "to see so many young men here; I should judge that one-half of this audience are young men. Let me say right at the outset of our work here, that if we could have a band of young men coming out boldly for Christ, and taking their stand as his faithful followers, what a grand thing it would be for themselves and for the City of London. If one thing has been laid on my heart more than another as we have been approaching London, it has been that God would bless the young men in this mighty metropolitan centre of the world. I believe many have been lifting up their hearts for this object. Shall we not on this first morning see many of them "seeking first the Kingdom of God"? The discourse was wound up with one of the preacher's most telling anecdotal illustrations, and all who had the faintest desire to become Christians were invited to remain for another thirty minutes.

No doubt the thickly descending rain induced many to sit still; at any rate there was no perceptible diminution in the size of the crowd. Everybody settled down as we sang, "Take me as I am." "I know of no hymn," said Mr. Moody, "that has been written lately, that puts the way of life more plainly and simply than this." Another short address followed, of course; in this the evangelist endeavoured to answer the all-important question, "What must I do to be saved?" By-and-by there came the other question with which we are becoming so blessedly familiar, "Who will trust and not be afraid?" There was as yet no abatement of the storm, but the enthralled hearers heeded it little or not at all. "Is there a person in this vast assembly," said Mr. Moody, "who has got the courage to stand up and say 'I will trust and not be afraid?'" He had not long to wait for a reply. One after another sent back to the platform, now in a strong determined masculine voice, and again in the feebler and more musical accents of woman, the assuring and gladdening response. Some that did not get their tongues loosed lifted up the hand. "I like to see these young men confessing; I take it as a token of what God is going to give us." Passing on, Mr. Moody said he was about to lead the meeting in prayer, and he would be glad if any who desired to be remembered before God in these supplications would rise in their places. Almost as fast as he could count, and sometimes faster, men and women, old and young, arose in all parts of the area, and on the platform as well, until the evangelist had got up to 150. Then he prayed that the Spirit of God would deal savingly with each one, and that many might have to look back on this hall, and this first Sabbath in November, as the time and the place when they were brought into the kingdom of God. As the rain had been coming down upon the earth, so might showers of blessings descend on these thirsty and weary souls. The second meeting broke up, and personal conversation was carried on for some time. Who can be faithless enough to doubt that Mr. Moody's prayer was heard, and that souls were born anew at this first Gospel service? Nothing could be more positive proof of the suitability of the Gospel to meet the needs of the human soul; nothing could have more plainly demonstrated the fact that many souls are lost because the Gospel net is not drawn in every time it is let down among the people.

WOMEN'S MEETING.

The pouring rain that continued to fall through the afternoon had a very perceptible effect on the attendance of women at the service specially devoted to them; probably the hall was not much more than two-thirds full. The audience was still large enough to have filled several of our largest churches, and one that any preacher might be glad to have the privilege of addressing. Rev. E. A. Stuart, of St. James's Church, Holloway, prayed and also read a part of John xiv. The hymn that followed, "Peace, be still," seemed to come with singular appropriateness, amid the raging of the windy and watery tempest outside.

Before the sermon Mr. Sankey's voice sounded out in beautiful and thrilling tones the Gospel invitation "Come," as arranged in Mr. McGranahan's stately melody (Hymn 400). Mr. Moody then told the story of a young man who was so haunted by the word "Come" that occurs so often in the hymn, that he was at last obliged to give up all attempts to drown the message and yielded himself to the Saviour. The text was in keeping with the hymn and the story, "Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." "Men often fail to keep their promises," he said, "but God never. No sister who is here this rainy afternoon, weary and laden with sin, but may find the rest in Christ that He offers. How vain for men to seek rest in business, pleasure, fame, or worldly society. The foot of the Cross is the one spot in this sinful world where rest can be found. How many mothers here are bowed down with sorrow for the salvation of their wandering boys, or for the loss of some loved one. Although it is storming without, if you come to Him there will be peace within. If you cannot come as a saint, come as a sinner. If your heart is hard, who can soften it like the Saviour? If you are dead in sins, who else can give you life?" So turning over and over the sweet Gospel invitation in order to make it suit the varied cases of his hearers, the evangelist pressed it on the acceptance of every soul. When telling the story of a little nephew who would not ask his mother's forgiveness because he said he couldn't, Mr. Moody promptly utilised the fact that a smile had spread over the audience to say, "Ah, you laugh, but it's just your own case. There are many here who say they can't believe, when the truth is they won't. The battle is fought out right here on the ground of the will." A feminine audience is naturally more impressible than one of the sterner sex, but in truth the earnestness and pathos of the preacher were sufficient to melt the most obdurate heart. As he piled up one touching incident on the top of another, it was plain to see that many were yielding to the beseechings of the evangelist, and to the promptings of the Spirit of God.

As the sermon closed, and all heads were bowed, Mr. Moody asked all the weary and heavy-laden ones to show it by rising. As in the case of the previous service, he had a large and quick response. They started to their feet, some of them weeping sorely, till the number exceeded a hundred. The inquirers were drafted into the side "section" curtained off for the purpose, and there dealt with one by one or in groups. Meantime a prayer-meeting was held in the body of the hall, at which Mr. Stuart, Mr. Sankey, and Mr. Hind Smith led the petitions of the assembly.

MEN'S MEETING.

Before six o'clock the rain had ceased, but the hall was not more than three-parts full when the evening service "for men only" commenced; others crowded in until the vast area was one expanse of manly forms and faces. Mr. Sankey's first solo, "My ain countrie," was, perhaps, the most effective of those he sang throughout the day. It brought out to the full the marvellously sympathetic qualities of his rare voice, and appeared to impress the vast company very deeply. After prayer by Mr. H. M. Matheson, Mr. Sankey sang his old rousing Gospel-message, "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by." This is one of the grandest and most solemn song-sermons that the book contains; it loses nothing in being preached through the medium of Mr. Sankey's voice.

Before commencing his discourse, Mr. Moody urged that as his stay in one place would be so short, all who had unconverted friends living in the district should leave no stone unturned that they might be reached through this special effort. The subject was "Repentance," which Mr. Moody treated both in its negative and positive aspects. The audience seemed forcibly struck when he said that if all the good resolutions they had made were written down, it would take more than one horse to cart them away. A subdued ripple of laughter followed his dramatic reproduction of a soldier's account of his conversion: "The Lord said to me 'Halt! Attention! Right-about face! March!'" "There is not a man in this vast assembly to-night who cannot be forgiven right here if he will but repent and turn to the Lord. But if you will not repent, how can God forgive you? How much should you feel sorry for my sins? Enough to give them up. There is a point in every man's life when he can repent, and that point, I believe, is come to many a one here to-night." After a torrent of burning speech, embracing several incidents by way of illustration, calling to instant repentance, the preacher closed by urging all to cast themselves into the arms of a loving Saviour this night and this hour.

The request then went forth that those who wished to repent now might rise. Then followed what was surely the most remarkable and heart-stirring sight that has ever been witnessed in the history of modern evangelism. After several had stood up a young man rose about a dozen seats from the front, and in a loud clear voice said that he would respond on the ground that the last Mission of the evangelists to London was a failure. Nothing disconcerted by this unlooked-for interruption, Mr. Moody replied to the young man that if he himself got converted now, then the present mission at any rate would not be a failure; he would be glad to preach eight months for the conversion of a single soul. The young fellow then cried out, "The Lord can do that without you." Said Mr. Moody, "Here is a scoffer. Now, who among you will come out boldly on the Lord's side? Let men scoff if they will, but let us show to the world whether this thing is a failure or not." The words had scarcely dropped from his lips before there was a general upward movement, and in the space of a few seconds there must have been at least three thousand men standing straight on their feet. The whole incident came "like a thunderbolt out of the blue," and many of the platform on-lookers could but give vent to their feelings in subdued expressions of thankfulness to God. "Praise the Lord for this wonderful sight," continued Mr. Moody; "and thank that young man for his speech." Then he burst into prayer, one of the petitions being that the friend who had interrupted might be truly converted, and might live to be the instrument in God's hands of leading multitudes of souls to the Saviour. All who were willing to repent and start for the Kingdom were invited to pass into the inquiry-room. A large body of the men did so, and the workers had a busy time of it, "bringing in the sheaves."

THE BISHOP OF ROCHESTER'S TESTIMONY.

The Bishop of Rochester has addressed the following letter to the Rev. J. W. Marshall, vicar of St. John's, Blackheath:—

"Croydon, Oct. 29.—Dear Mr. Marshall,—I am sincerely glad that you should give counsel and sympathy to our good kinsmen, the American evangelists, who propose to help us with our overwhelming work in South London this winter. You will indeed do good service if you, and those associated with you, will firmly discourage the selfishness of well-instructed people, who, by their constant attendance at services not intended for them, crowd out those who are wanted to come. Their success will, moreover, be far more complete if you can show them how to reach that class of the population which I have reason to know they did not lay hold of in their last visit to the metropolis; and which, alas! still baffles the Church's activities, though not outside her duty, purpose, and care.

"May I add, that those men are personally known to me? More than once I have come across their track in their own country, and I have heard nothing but good of them. To call them schismatics is to trifle with language. To suspect them of sectarian motive is to do them a grave injustice. Their religious services are simple, reverent, and deeply impressive. Their recent labours, not only in our largest provincial towns, but also at our two great English Universities, are standing the hardest test, that of time. Should anyone doubt if their doctrine is pure, or their work solid, let him do what I myself have done, and hope to do again—go to judge for himself. He will probably come away touched to the quick by the tenderness, and pathos, and manly thoroughness of what he will hear there; perhaps just a little sorry that their secret is not yet quite his own. This I am sure about, that all earnest workers for souls, of whatever school among us, if they cannot altogether go with them, will pray for them.

"My own desire is that God will raise up 10,000 such men to proclaim His redeeming love.—Faithfully yours, A. W. Roffen."

MR. H. VARLEY AT UXBRIDGE.

ON Wednesday evening the Town Hall, Uxbridge, was crowded with an audience of men to hear Mr. Varley lecture on the advantages and obligations of chastity. Mr. Alfred S. Dyer presided, and was supported by the Revs. Selwyn Blackett, J. C. Taylor, G. H. Jones, and others.

In the course of a powerful address of an hour and a half in length, Mr. Varley declared, amidst applause, his entire sympathy with the action the Chairman has recently taken in that town in exposing and denouncing the iniquity of the ownership of houses of ill-fame by persons holding office in connection with Christian Churches. He said that this age needed men who would boldly denounce sin, wherever it was found. Mr. Varley's lecture marks another step in the efforts that are being made to purify the moral tone of Uxbridge, which has been corrupted by the toleration, without protest, of houses of impurity in one spot, it is said, as far back as can be remembered.

OPEN-AIR MISSION. — The West London Auxiliary Quarterly Meeting of this Mission was held on Monday evening, October 22, at the Stafford Rooms, Tichbourne-street, W. A goodly number of Christian workers were present. The Chairman, Mr. Herbert Arbuthnot, made some earnest remarks, of a short, telling, and spiritual character; Mr. Pamment gave some interesting particulars relating to Mr. Kirkham's visit to America, and also spoke on open-air work. Mr. Wood, of the Evangelisation Society, spoke on Paul as a preacher's model, preaching Christ and Him crucified.

Notes and Comments.

WE hope many Christian ladies in London will heartily give themselves, during the coming months, to the work of house-to-house visitation in the various districts as they are visited by Messrs. Moody and Sankey. A pressing personal invitation will often induce people to attend who might not otherwise hear of the meetings. Friends residing in the provinces will be glad to learn that a number of seats are reserved at each meeting for those coming from the country; tickets can always be had by sending stamped envelope to Mr. Robert Paton, Hon. Sec. to the Central Committee, 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.

A letter from the Postmaster-General states that the Post-office, in carrying out the new arrangements for extending the sale of postage-stamps to the public, will give licences to tobacconists and keepers of refreshment-rooms and the like, whose shops are necessarily open late. The effect of this will be ruinous to servants and young girls, who may be sent out for stamps. No post or stamp office ought to be identified with any such business, nor with any place where drink is sold.

Pastor Fliedner, in his November journal, pleads earnestly for a special fund to be raised, in connection with the Luther Celebration, on behalf of Spanish Protestant theological students. They are few in number, but greatly needing aid to enable them to prosecute their studies. The fact that in Spain there are youths being raised up to be trained as pastors, evangelists, and teachers, cannot but cause joy to all who desire the evangelisation of that dark, priest-ridden land; and the suggestion is one that professors and students of our own colleges would do well to consider. They might, perhaps, take it up as a speciality of their own, and render graceful as well as needful aid to an important object.

Openings for the preaching the Gospel in Spain are presenting themselves in all directions. The inhabitants of towns and villages visited by the colporteurs manifest strong desire for the Word of God, and for evangelists to settle among them. But the labourers are sadly few, and cannot overtake the work which awaits them. The need of supporting the new institutions just formed for training workers is very pressing, and the pastors of the churches in Cadiz, Seville, Jerez de la Frontera, unite with Pastor Fliedner in urging it upon Christians in all Protestant countries.

The recent proceedings at Ongar Fair, as reported in the Chelmsford Chronicle, seem to indicate that the cause of moral and religious progress in Essex has its enemies in high places as well as its friends. Capt. Budworth and the Rev. Father Nicholls seized the opportunity afforded by the speech-making at the close of the fair to violently attack those who are seeking to bring about the closing of public-houses on the Lord's Day, and urged the people present to do all in their power to prevent this end being gained. They expressed their conviction that all who aimed at this were fit inhabitants for lunatic asylums, and they hoped that ere long the times would return when Sunday recreations and games after morning service would be resumed. Country and city alike show these sad signs of retrogression, and while leading men in rural districts thus pervert the people, who can wonder that evil triumphs?

The past week has been marked by disasters of a sad and serious character. The collision between two vessels in the Irish Channel on the night of the 30th ult resulted in the loss of fifteen lives. The Liverpool express dashing into another train at Watford occasioned the death of two, and the serious injury of others. But the most deplorable of all was the outrage committed on the Metropolitan Railway, by which many were badly wounded and hurt, though, by a merciful Providence, no life was lost. That such fiends in human shape are abroad in our midst as the perpetrators of so great a crime as attempting to blow up two trains laden with precious lives, is a fact which reveals a state of depravity terrible indeed to contemplate. That these are "perilous times," through reckless ungodliness and lawless hate of men, every day seems to bring fresh witness.

The Moral Reform Union has issued a leaflet relative to the duty of voters to use their votes in municipal elections so as to secure the triumph of high character instead of party politics. The importance of returning candidates for election as members of our Town Councils, and other Local Government bodies, who are pledged to principles of justice and high-toned morality, cannot be exaggerated. We are bound to see that those in whose hands we place municipal authority will use their influence in checking all kinds of vice, and in upholding all honest efforts to promote social purity, civil order, and proper regulation of all matters coming under their control. Any one willing to join in the work of the Union is invited to send their name and address to the Secretary, Leinster-place, Porchester-terrace, London, W.

There is such a thing as the lawlessness of wealth, as well as the lawlessness of the masses of the poor and untutored part of our population. And, be it remembered, the former has to do with the prevalence of the latter. Wealthy candidates for Parliamentary elections scheme and plot to get over Acts passed to prevent corrupt practices. The sons of aristocratic families help largely to maintain West end immorality and vice, and are not held in less repute for so doing. Rich men's clubs have their Sunday opportunities for carousal and social festivity unhindered, while the public-houses, to which the poor resort, are partially closed, and under supervision. People who can pay are allowed to escape with a fine, while the penniless, for the same crime, are sent to gaol. What wonder if discontent, secret resentment, and resistance of law, prevail among the lower orders, while these glaring inequalities are allowed.

The labour question, too, has its influence in promoting the sad state of social and political disquietude which is at work in our midst. Many thousands of toilers in our great cities and towns are labouring for pittances insufficient to keep body and soul together. Tailoresses making boys' trousers at 2s. 6d. a dozen pairs, sempstresses making shirts at 9d. a dozen, and finding their own needles and thread, while their employers are making large profits and living luxuriously. Can we be surprised if restlessness and discontent, such as breed revolution and riot, are fostered in the minds of those doomed to such a state of existence? Despair, hard-hearted resolves, and hatred of those in better circumstances, are the natural outcome of these and similar social wrongs.

It may be true, as men tell us, that it is easier to point out the evil of such things than to find the remedy. But there are principles of righteousness for which Christian men at least ought to plead, and themselves to act upon. It is something towards remedy, for us all to search out the cause of existing evils, and to use our influence in the advocacy of justice and truth. The voice of such an Apostle as James, when he proclaims against injustice and oppression, has its message for the Church and the world of to-day, as truly and as essentially as the voice of Paul when he preaches the salvation which is by faith in Jesus Christ. The Gospel required now is one in which the orthodox practical side of truth is made as prominent as that which is doctrinally sound and clear.

Among the faithful sayings of God to which earnest heed should be given are two, which, however apparently diverse, are yet inseparably one in their nature and result: "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." "This is a faithful sayings, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men." They follow each other as cause and effect, and any divorcement between them is evil. It has, however, been but too often attempted; hence Christianity has in many quarters lost its power in the hands of some of its advocates.

A correspondent writes to suggest that many Christians might do much to reclaim the lost by gathering together in their own homes classes of lads and lasses on Sunday evenings. Numbers of these are to be found in our streets, and the attraction of a warm room, bright singing, and earnest Gospel words of instruction, would be strong, and, with God's blessing, would doubtless lead not a few to salvation through Christ. Parents who feel it a duty to devote the Sunday evening to the spiritual good of their children might increase their usefulness by inviting a neighbour's children to join them. Or such meetings might be held on week evenings. Our friend adds: "Let us not wait until we can do something great for Christ, but do the little we can now." Many are deterred from usefulness by despising little acts of service, and aiming beyond their capabilities. God does not refuse to accept or bless small services; let none of us be backward to render them.

If last week we expressed our regret at Mr. Spurgeon's mistaken remarks on undenominationalism (to which subject we shall again refer), we no less heartily express to-day the thankfulness with which we have read his utterances in the Sword and Trowel for November on the recent session of the Baptist Union at Leicester. Union at the expense of principle is not in Mr. Spurgeon's line; his love for the Gospel of Christ is ever paramount, and we thank God he has been led to utter so manly, and withal Christian a protest as that to which we refer. It may be true that the Unitarian leader who was present, and whose presence at the inaugural soirée was welcomed by other speakers, was not invited by the officials of the Union; but ought leaders of Christian associations to allow themselves to be placed in such a position that nolens volens they must appear before the public as allied with deniers of the lordship of the Master they serve?

We recommend those who wish to find really useful books for prizes and presents to send for the catalogue of Mr. T. Fisher Unwin, 26, Paternoster-square, E.C.

By the death of Rev. Sir Henry Wellwood Moncrieff, of Edinburgh, last Sunday morning, the Free Church of Scotland has lost another of her most prominent leaders. He was for many years senior clerk of the General Assembly, and was looked upon as an authority in all Church questions. He had attained the ripe old age of 75.

The character of the fiction which finds its way into the religious journals of these days is often anything but conducive to the interests of true piety, not to say really adverse to them. Our attention has been directed to the serial tale commenced in the new paper called The Christian Million. It seems by no means calculated to foster reverence for sacred things, or to promote respect for a love of truth and godliness. We cannot wonder that the youth of to-day manifest a keen relish for novel-reading of a questionable and harmful kind, while in papers and magazines which they are led to regard as Christian in their character, they find tales as loose and pointless for any good end as the trashy productions from other sources can possibly be.

The letter of the Rev. R. C. Billing, Rector of Spitalfields, to the Telegraph of Friday last, on the question of the London poor, does credit alike to his judgment and philanthropy. His assertion that overcrowding, through lack of houses suited to their need, accounts largely for the state of things, is undeniably true, and until this evil is dealt with there is little or no hope of improvement in the social and moral condition of the outcast masses of the population. Decency cannot be observed, or virtue inculcated, under the existing state of things, nor can the new life even of converts (supposing them to be made) be consistent with godliness, amid such surroundings. The sad part is that necessity compels many well-conducted and industrious persons to abide under these painful conditions.

It is useless to demolish the old haunts of these wretched and in many cases unfortunate people, unless other accommodation is provided for them. The problem is how can this be done. Mr. Billing contends that the State must and ought to, at least, assist in the work, but that Christian philanthropy and private enterprise might do a great deal to solve it. The suggestion is also wise and right that great employers of labour should be held bound to provide dwellings for their own operatives, as agriculturists are for their labourers. These assuredly ought to move speedily and heartily in the matter. Mr. Billing justly says:—

"It is a holy cause if ever there was one, and until it triumphs I see nothing before us but more pauperism, more vice, more crime, and at last a terrible retribution."

MARTIN LUTHER: What he did, and what he taught.—The Religious Tract Society, 58, Paternoster-row, London, has just issued a broadsheet (size, 13½ by 17½), with portrait of Luther, and giving some of the principal events in his life, and an epitome of the Protestant doctrines which he taught. The broadsheet is suited for distribution at Commemoration meetings, for posting up in school-rooms and Mission-halls, and for parochial and district circulation; one penny each, or 3s. per 100.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.

THE annual meeting of the helpers and friends of this interesting work took place on the 1st inst., when the largest room of the "Rest" was filled to overflowing. After prayer by Mr. Colin Young, Mr. J. E. Mathieson, who presided, read Ex. xxxix. 42, 43, and briefly directed attention to three aspects of Christian work. First, toward God, that it should be done as "before the Lord," and "unto the Lord." Secondly, toward our brethren, "in honour preferring one another," not "judging one another," but rather in love "admonishing one another." Thirdly, toward "them that are without;" remarking, that when discouraged by the magnitude of the work, we should remember that God saves men singly.

A worker then spoke of recent cases of blessing amongst British sailors, instancing as one out of several recently, that of a fine, intelligent seaman, who only that week had come to the "Rest" after a three week's debauch, during which the earnings of a long voyage (£22) had been squandered. Penniless and penitent he was pointed to the Saviour; after being here sheltered for a day or two, he sailed for the West Indies, to all appearances a "new creature in Christ Jesus." This was cited as an example of what is happening week by week, and sometimes day by day, in connection with this work.

Dr. Ziemann gave interesting testimony of work in Germany. The German people are thirsting for the "Water of Life," and the great need of that land is living men to proclaim the Gospel of Christ. It was cheering to hear of one such now doing God's work in Germany who was brought to the Lord at the "Strangers' Rest." Miss Hedenstrom told of rich blessing amongst Swedish sailors, and of one in particular, converted at the "Rest," now a missionary in Sweden; after which a Christian from Finland spoke of an open door for Gospel work in that country, and expressed his hope that Finland might be the bridge across which the Gospel should travel to Northern Russia and Siberia.

Mrs. Osborne, recently returned from the Cape after three years of work amongst soldiers and sailors, testified of prayer offered in England having been richly answered in Africa. Mr. Bergman, a faithful worker amongst the Jews in the district, could have recounted many deeply interesting incidents of his work, and spoke of one Jewish brother, who having accepted Jesus as his Lord at the "Rest" is now serving Him as agent of the Bible Society at Port Said.

Mr. R. C. Morgan (the retiring treasurer) pointed out the connection between the closing verses of Mark xii. and the first verses of Mark xiii., showing that the widow's two mites, given in the spirit, were more in the eyes of the Lord than the fine buildings of the Temple, and added that the whole question of money in regard to Christian work needed raising to a higher level. Mr. J. T. Isaac (hon. sec.) said the workers could praise God for a year of perhaps greater blessing than any before. The actual extent of work done was indicated by the fact of six meetings daily, in various languages, all the year round, in addition to thousands of tracts, bags of books, and Bibles given away. Open-air meetings have been held in the highway nightly through the summer, and fruit has been seen from them. Several missionaries, now labouring in distant lands, have been one result of the work at the Strangers' Rest.

Mr. T. A. Denny briefly remarked that unless our giving involves some self-denial, there is "not much in it. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe then spoke, in burning words, of almost the whole world waiting for the Gospel, which should lead us not to rest satisfied with the poor past, but look for much greater things in the future. He urged that the great need of Christian workers is to get down before God, and then down to the people, even down to the degraded and outcast; he powerfully pleaded for present and full consecration. This interesting gathering was brought to a close by commemorating the dying love of the Lord Jesus, in the "breaking of bread."

It is a cause of regret to the Committee that a work so fruitful, and in which so large a return of actual work done is given for so small an outlay, should be in any way hindered for want of funds; they hope that it will be counted a privilege by those to whom to whom the Lord has entrusted the silver and the gold, to assist in discharging the debt of £64 now outstanding. Donations will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, Mr. F. S. Gardner, Heddon House, Hampstead, N.W., or at the "Strangers' Rest," 163, St. George's-street, E.

The next monthly Workers' Meeting will (D.V.) be held on December 7, when Mr. George Soltau will give an address.

IRISH CHURCH MISSION.

I OBSERVE with deep gratitude that the sympathy of true believers is drawn out now more than ever towards the Christless multitudes in blood-stained Ireland. In evidence of this many loving gifts appear in your subscription list for preaching the Gospel in the sister isle. I am rejoiced to hear from our Lay Secretary that £93 1s. 6d. came through your hands last year for this good work, and I beg you to allow me to thank the givers.

Suffer me to bring the work we do before the readers of The Christian. It is to preach Jesus Christ and Him crucified in all holy love and fervent zeal as the sinner's only and all-sufficient Saviour to the poor neglected Roman Catholics of Ireland. They number about four millions of souls, and are in a deplorable moral and spiritual state of destitution. We employ 27 clergy, 167 trained teachers and Scripture readers, and 50 Irish text teachers. Testaments and tracts are distributed, Mission Services held, house-to-house visits made, Sunday, day, night, and ragged schools taught. There are 1300 destitute children in affiliated homes, and 3000 children taught in the daily ragged-schools.

The only bright spot on the dark page of current Irish history is Mission work for our beloved Master. Other works may and have ended in defeat, disaster, and disappointment, but this one has not and never will. Rev. Timothy Clesham was preaching lately to a cabin full of peasantry in the West. He says: "I was explaining the Fall and its Remedy by Genesis iii. 15, and the history of our blessed Lord in the New Testament. One old Roman Catholic exclaimed before all, 'I'm an old man now, and often heard my priests tell about the death of Jesus Christ, but I never understood it at all till now, and it's all so beautiful!'"

BRIGHTON MEDICAL MISSION.—The Mission Hall in Edward-street was the scene on Thursday, the 1st inst., of one of the most touching incidents in connection with this Mission. Dr. E. W. Witten, who for the past nine years has held the post of medical missionary, gave a farewell address to his co-workers and patients with whom he has been labouring. The announcement of the meeting was more than enough to fill the Hall to overflowing, for the sympathy which has been manifested during the doctor's career in the work has been felt and appreciated by all; hundreds bearing testimony to his assiduous labours. At the close of Dr. Witten's address, he was presented with a variety of gifts.

HOME FOR POOR CHILDREN.—It is proposed to form a Home, a happy, bright, working Home, for saving some of our little ones from a life of degradation and vice—little girls who have been sinned against, and are helpless, powerless to save themselves. They would be taught, cared for, loved, and trained for useful work and occupation. A lady, residing at Fulham, proposes to undertake this charitable work, aided by a clergyman's daughter, but has not the means to start it. She will need £100 to begin with, taking at first a small house and furnishing it with actual necessaries. Donations, &c., received by Frederic A. D. Noel, Treasurer, 18, Carlton-road, Maida-vale, W.; and Miss K. Thomas, St. Cyprians, Hurlingham, Fulham, S.W.

THE REVIVAL IN IRELAND.

[SPECIALLY REPORTED.]

THE WATERFORD WORK.

DURING the past three weeks I have often been impressed with the inadequacy of these cursory notes as a sufficient representation of the wonderful work of God in South Ireland, through our American brethren. To give that would need a pen specially gifted and inspired. One can tell of crowds coming together twice or thrice a day; of the solemn awe that rests on these listening multitudes, as the preacher sounds forth his warning appeals and affectionate, sometimes tearful exhortations; of the visibly softening influences at work while the singer, in rapturous and mellifluous tones, extols the loving-kindness of the Lord, commends the offer of salvation to the immediate acceptance of the sinner, or urges the believer to a deeper and fuller consecration of heart and life. One can speak, too, of many publicly confessing their anxiety of soul, or their resolve to be henceforth the Lord's. But all these things are only what appears on the surface. Who can see and describe the silent and secret workings of consciences that have been deeply stricken by the arrows of the Truth? Who can record the mighty spiritual conflicts that are going on in these thousands of hearts? Who can estimate the number of those who pass from death into life as they sit on their seats without any public proclamation of the fact? Who can follow to their widely distant homes those visitors whose souls have been either quickened by a new, heaven-born life, or revived by a fresh anointing of the Holy Ghost? Who can enter the circles in which one or many or all of the inmates have been greatly blessed, and are in turn made a blessing to others?

There is much connected with such a work of grace that any one or any twenty observers can never find out. There is much also that is known that cannot discreetly be told to the world. And yet I trust that what is known, and may be told, is sufficient to stir sympathetic hearts to more abounding thankfulness, a more consuming zeal, and a more confident assurance that the time of our redemption draweth nigh. Mr. Moody has several times remarked that it seems as if the present were a season of God's special favour in the ingathering of souls. In Boston and in Chicago, just before he left the American shores for this campaign, he found a very remarkable readiness among the people to listen to and obey the Gospel invitation. He has scarcely ever, perhaps never, in all his experience seen more glorious times than those that have been witnessed these past weeks in the South of Ireland. Speaking for myself, and, of course, from a much more limited field of observation than the evangelist, I can corroborate this view. As I have several times remarked in these letters, it has looked as if the people were really hungering and thirsting with insatiable desire for the bread and water of life.

THE BEST WINE KEPT TO THE LAST.

The Waterford Mission has been the shortest of the three, but, take it all in all, it has certainly been the most remarkable. As I stated last week, the opening day gave the best start that the evangelists have had in this short, but memorable, Gospel campaign. It is not often that the message takes hold so quickly. It must be confessed that Mr. Moody seemed at his best that Sunday evening, though one cannot very well say what his best is; every succeeding utterance seems to eclipse its predecessor in intensity of earnestness and thrilling power. The key-note of Sunday night has been maintained throughout the remaining three days. On looking back, and recalling the spectacle that the Skating Rink has so frequently presented, it is hard to believe that it has all been crowded into such a brief period of time.

The week-day meetings were fixed for mid-day and evening. The former hour was chosen to suit the great numbers who came into Waterford from the towns within a considerable radius round about. Not a few came in for the entire mission, but the greater portion of the visitors from a distance were only able, so far as I can judge, to attend one mid-day service, and then return to their homes by an afternoon train. The railway companies have helped on the work by granting cheap tickets. Special late trains have also been run each week-day evening, so that those who wished to attend the evening meetings could return home the same night. I have myself met with some cases, and have heard of a good many besides, where those friends from the country, who could only be at one meeting, have yielded to the power of the truth preached and sung, and, like the Eunuch of old, have gone on their way rejoicing. Mid-day meetings are not usually considered favourable for drawing in the Gospel net. The lineal descendants of Nicodemus are pretty numerous in our own time; many will "come to Jesus by night" who have not the courage to do so in the broad light of day, amidst a crowd of spectators. The difficulty of getting anyone to testify his anxiety of soul has been strongly felt at Waterford, I understand, in former times. All the more surprised, therefore, have some of the active workers been at finding such a ready and general response to Mr. Moody's searching individual tests at these early afternoon gatherings.

ALL CLASSES REACHED.

The work seems to have reached all classes of the community, high and low, rich and poor. In Limerick, the Bishop of the Irish Episcopal Church was strongly opposed to the movement. In Cork, Bishop Gregg, while he was not unfriendly, took no steps to identify himself with the meetings. Bishop Day, of Waterford, on the other hand, has been present on several occasions. It is rather a curious fact that in Cork, where the chief ecclesiastic was only benevolently neutral, a goodly array of his clergy were active sympathisers; whereas in Waterford, with a warm friend at the Episcopal Palace, only one clergyman of the town, so I am informed, cast in his lot with the evangelists. Clergymen, however, from other towns have been in constant attendance, while the ministers of the various Nonconforming bodies have been hearty in their countenance and help. I believe I am justified in saying that not a few of the members of the well-to-do and influential country families have been sharers in the blessing. I could enter into some deeply interesting particulars, if it were desirable to do so; it will be sufficient to indicate the welcome fact, that though the poor have had the Gospel preached to them, and doubtless have in many cases been converted, the influence of the movement has extended to those who, as a rule, are not so easily reached and affected. I would not presume to think that the soul of one man is more precious in the sight of God, or more intrinsically valuable, than that of another. But when we hear of the conversion of those whose social rank and worldly possessions give them great responsibility and power over others, we cannot but rejoice with a joy more deep than usual.

Considering the circumstances of the town, the attendances at these Waterford meetings have been very remarkable indeed. The Protestant population is said to be only between 3000 and 4000. When one takes into account the large proportion of those who cannot, from various causes, attend any public meeting, the fact that the Rink was crowded twice a day with some 1200 or 1400 persons is one that cannot well be explained according to the rules that usually govern these matters. Of course there were many from the country, but even when due allowance is made for that, the phenomenon is not fully explained. One can only conclude that the Lord gave the evangelists special favour in the eyes of the people, not excepting those who are supposed to be outside the pale of all such movements. The Catholic part of the population was well represented at many meetings, and I believe not a few cases are known where these were greatly impressed with the truths to which they listened.

There was a better and more proportionate supply of competent workers for the inquiry-meetings here than at either Limerick or Cork, and that may have had something to do with the success of the after-meetings. The friend to whom I referred in connection with the Limerick meetings duly reached the scene of action at Waterford; other active and well-qualified workers were present from distant places. The task of removing difficulties from the minds of those who desired personal conversation, seemed in many cases easy; they were so thoroughly broken down by the softening influences of the song, and the powerful appeals of the preacher, that they were ready to be led into the path of simple trust in the Lord Jesus Christ, and unconditional surrender of heart to Him.

THE LAST DAY,

all things considered, was the best of the four, and would probably bear favourable comparison with any day during the entire three weeks' Mission. In order to atone for an alteration in the arrangements, Mr. Moody conducted the early prayer-meetings on the last two mornings. At these a very large number of requests for prayer were read and presented; among those mentioned on Tuesday was the case of a young soldier, now under sentence of death for murder in Dublin, who has been converted since his imprisonment. The meeting on the last morning was turned by Mr. Moody into a praise-meeting. Having shortly expounded a part of the 103rd Psalm, he called on all who had received distinct blessing during the past days to rise and confess it before God and man. A great stream of short testimonies followed, with now and then a brief pause during which Mr. Moody would give some kindly word of stimulus or encouragement to the young disciples. Many of these were by no means young in years; indeed, I could not help being greatly struck by the large proportion of elderly men among those who stood for prayer and professed to have trusted in Christ during these four days. The first note in this concert of praise came from a grey-haired man who thanked God for having been led to Christ. One father offered praise for the conversion of three children, and another for two sons brought to the Saviour. A lady returned thanks for the conversion of a visitor, and a relative that had been baptized with the spirit of service. A backslider praised the Lord for his restoration. Mr. Grubb, of Cahir, who was an active helper in the Limerick meetings, as well as at Waterford, desired to return thanks that twenty members of the Bible-class he formerly conducted at Limerick had been brought to decision. Two of the Waterford pastors also rose, and said that they knew of several cases of conversion among the members of their congregations. Many others in the body of the meeting gave thanks on their own behalf. Mr. Moody urged the young men who had been blessed to band themselves together and "go for" the young men of Waterford. He afterwards prayed very earnestly for all these young disciples who had confessed Christ.

At the last mid-day meeting there was a crowded congregation, to whom Mr. Moody preached his powerful discourse on "Sowing and Reaping." At the close, when he asked those who desired prayer on their behalf to stand, a great company at once started to their feet all through the hall and also on the platform. Personal dealing followed, and the hearts of the earnest workers were much rejoiced at the wonderful privilege they had of pointing the troubled ones to Him who hath made peace by the blood of his cross. The opportunity for conversation was extended to the whole of the time elapsing before the mid-day and evening meetings; several good cases were met with. The last meeting of all was a grand one—grand in the overflowing attendance, in the rapt attention, as Mr. Moody entreated those who had come near the kingdom of God not to miss it, and in the wonderful responses to his call for immediate decision.

At this final meeting Mr. Sankey sang the new favourite, "When the mists have rolled away," and Dr. Bonar's impressive hymn, "Pray, brethren, pray," with the solemn refrain, "Eternity is drawing nigh." The solos by Mr. Sankey were greatly appreciated at Waterford, as indeed they have been throughout this Irish campaign. Requests frequently came in for some particular song that had been made a blessing to the petitioner. It was a great matter for thankfulness that, notwithstanding the moist, dull Irish atmosphere—the sun never showed himself once all the time the evangelists were in Waterford—Mr. Sankey's voice kept in splendid trim, and he was able to sound forth in sweetest strains the Gospel message, the ascription of praise, and the trumpet call to duty.

FLYING VISIT TO DUBLIN.

Leaving Waterford early on Thursday morning, Messrs. Moody and Sankey reached Dublin in time to be present at the afternoon meeting of the Convention, then in session at the Christian Union Buildings. The hall was densely crowded. The audience had remained in their places since ten o'clock that morning, well knowing that if they once left the building there was small chance of getting back for the afternoon meeting, which was timed to commence at three o'clock. About half an hour before that time the evangelists appeared, and Mr. Moody at once opened the proceedings. After Rev. Hugh Price Hughes had offered earnest prayer, Mr. Sankey sang "When the mists have rolled away," and subsequently Miss Havergal's hymn, "Tell it out among the nations." Mr. Moody's address was very similar to the one with which he commenced the London campaign, last Sunday morning, in the Islington Hall; a pretty full report is given in preceding columns. Towards the close of his impassioned exhortations and appeals the whole audience seemed fairly broken down with emotion, especially as he told the incident of the dying teacher in his Chicago Sunday-school, whose efforts for the conversion of his class, said the evangelist, "changed the whole course of my life, and gave me a passion for souls that I have not lost to this day."

Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey left Dublin by the evening mail of Thursday, and arrived in London the following morning.

DUBLIN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

THE tenth of these interesting anniversaries was held last week in the Christian Union Buildings, Lower Abbey-street. There was a goodly muster of ministers and Christian workers from different parts of the island, and the attendance of the general public was also well sustained. The first meeting was on Monday evening. At the close of a social hour, Rev. J. D. Smylie shortly addressed those present on the need of earnest believing prayer, of unity of spirit and aim among Christians, and of a whole hearted surrender to God's service. A number of requests for prayer were read, among them being one for a rich blessing on the special evangelistic effort in the south of Ireland. The following condensed notes of the proceedings are taken from the excellent accounts in the Dublin Daily Express:—

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 30.

On Tuesday morning to a large company, Rev. H. B. Wilson, of Cookstown, spoke on "How the Evangelical Churches might better husband their resources." He said: In very many districts, one church here and one church there would be ample for the worshippers, and what he said of churches he would say of ministers—one ministerial labourer would suffice where the services of several are now retained, and the remainder might advantageously be withdrawn and commissioned to carry Gospel truth to other localities and other countries where light was badly needed. Economy is a present duty: money and labourers are given by God, and should not merely be applied to fitting uses, but should also be so expended as to show the greatest possible return. A great world lies outside the Church of Christ, the majority of its inhabitants being without one gleam of light on the path that leads to the grave. The practical and pertinent question arose, was it necessary that in every field each of the churches should have its ministerial representative and general staff of officers. Might not churches confer and devise some principle of "give and take," that would enable them to work together, and so diminish expenses? In Victoria churches are built out of a common fund, and are held as joint property. It should be remembered that the points upon which all churches agree are overwhelmingly greater in importance and number than those upon which they differ. He appealed to those present to remember that the one aim of every church should be to win souls for Christ; they should set aside, therefore, everything that could interfere with the accomplishment of that object.

Rev. J. Fordyce, of Belfast, next spoke on "The Relation of the Holy Scriptures to Spiritual Life and Growth." This was an age of many books, of reading, and of writing—an age in which the humblest Sunday-school teacher was more highly favoured than the highest in bygone days. With all this reading, perhaps on account of it, the reading of the Book of Books is neglected. He urged the importance of habitual study of the Word of God, not merely as preparation for ordinary Christian duties, but in the private study in the closet, by which alone activity in religious life could be sustained. In the case of all men who had moved the masses and been energetic in pushing forward the work of God, the prominent feature in their lives was their love for regular study of the Bible.

Rev. R. W. Starr, of Liverpool, delivered a forcible address on "Co-workers with God." He said he resided in one of a half-mile row of houses, in the course of which might be counted forty public-houses and two churches. On Sunday evenings more people are to be seen in any one of the former than in both the churches combined. "Roll ye away the stone" is a Divine command, and might well be taken to heart. What were the stones in their way? Insanitation was one. The people cannot be reached as long as they are housed—save the mark!—in a way that no nobleman would think of providing for his horse or dog. At their Liverpool Town Council one of its members had said that there were 17,000 insanitary houses in the district from which he came; and this meant that the poor people had not a chance of living even in common decency; he prayed that a Christian statesman might soon arise who would rescue the people from their inhuman condition. He also mentioned want of sympathy between various classes of the community as another difficulty in the way, and urged the necessity of house-to-house visitation, that the habits and wants of the poor might be better known.

Mr. W. Spencer Walton, of London, gave an address on "Sanctification." Taking as his text Joshua iii. 5, he maintained that Christian unfaithfulness was a greater hindrance in the way of religious progress than infidelity.

On Tuesday evening it was found necessary to remove the partition separating the large hall from the minor hall adjoining, in order to provide sufficient accommodation for the vast number seeking admission.

Rev. H. P. Hughes, Oxford, addressed the meeting on "The Evangelistic Aspect of Holiness." Taking as his text "I love Thee" (John xxi. 15), he asked how it was that Peter, though he was a wayward man, was yet a favourite pupil of the Great Master. It was because he was a warm-hearted and generous man. Cold hearts were almost useless in the Church of God. If Irishmen were as earnest on the subject of Christ's work as they were on the subject of politics, they would shake the kingdom of Satan to its very centre. The love of Christ constrained the early members of the Church to become ambassadors of Christ, and to desire the conversion of the whole human race; and so it should be the case with all in these days who love the Lord. They should also have more faith in God, more belief in his power, and willingness to save to the uttermost. A cabman in Plymouth once expressed his wonder that, while Christians said so much about Charles Bradlaugh, they did not meet together and pray for his conversion? And why not? He had not blasphemed the name of Jesus more than Saul of Tarsus had done; at all events, he had not spilt the blood of Christians. God save Charles Bradlaugh! His brother had been saved, and was now a preacher of the Word in England.

Rev. Dr. Mackay, Hull, delivered an address on "The Unfinished Work of Christ." They had often heard, he said, of the finished work of Christ, but they should turn their minds more to his unfinished work, the work that He had been raised from the dead to perform, and that He was now executing at the right hand of his Father in heaven. The theology of the present day was not so much Christ as I. The Christianity that should be believed in was Christ, with a small "I." Christ all in all—from the beginning to the end of life, none but Christ—that is God's Christianity.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 31.

There was a good attendance this morning. Rev. Frank White, London, spoke on "Christ revealing the Father." He started with the proposition that a Divine revelation was needful to human restoration. Knowledge of God is impossible apart from Christ. He chiefly revealed the Father by the greatness of His works—opening the eyes of the blind, healing the sick, cleansing the leper, raising the dead, casting out devils. The Father was not revealed to the wise and prudent in olden time, but to the babes. Therefore, those who desired to know more of God must become as little children in humility and docility. Let the prayer of Philip be ours, "Lord, show us the Father."

Rev. Dr. Black, Inverness, spoke on "The World's Need." He thought the want of the world was expressed in the Lord's Prayer, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Our Saviour proved by his life that his Father's law was workable and practicable in the world. So the aim of all true Christians should be to testify and indicate the workableness of the will of God on earth. He thanked God that while sin was rampant upon the earth, God always raised up some counteracting agency to meet the need of each special case. Let the prayer of each one be, "Lord, take me and do with me as Thou wilt."

Rev. R. W. Starr, Liverpool, delivered a short address on "Neglect of one's own vineyard." He said he had been greatly concerned with the large number who would not be called workers, but who rather hang on outside the church door. Active church work cannot be pushed forward unless there is a loving enthusiasm stirred up in the heart. In the experience of ministers one of the greatest temptations with which they have to contend is the mechanical performance of their exalted duties. The Churches to-day are accomplishing one hundred and fifty times more work than was accomplished one hundred and fifty years ago. And it was this high pressure work that rendered it all the more necessary that the small half acre of the heart should have its interests well looked after, so great are the tendencies to overlook private communion and Scriptural study. Let ministers, teachers, and all Christian workers endeavour to have their own hearts overflowing with love and enthusiasm, then out of their fulness others would derive benefit.

Rev. Thomas E. Hackett, Bray, taking for his subject, "Be filled with the Spirit," said to have the Spirit of God was a necessary possession of every true believer. It was a possession of greater importance than anything else that could be named. The Spirit of God keeps from yielding to temptation; without it the tempted are like dry gunpowder placed in contact with sparks of fire. In the Acts of the Apostles 171 cases are given of men filled with the Spirit, without which none could be made useful.

At the evening meeting Rev. Henry Dening delivered an address on the subject, "Wanted—a Man." To be a man it was not enough to have pluck, muscular development, and ordinary acuteness. Business cuteness was considered sufficient by some to constitute manhood, but the fox was a great deal sharper than man. Reputation, wealth, and position did not constitute manhood. Real manhood consists in obedience to the command of Christ, resemblance to his character, and perseverance until his Coming.

Rev. Henry Montgomery delivered a short address to young men, on the prayer of the publican, "God be merciful to me a sinner."

AFTERNOON MEETINGS

On Tuesday afternoon the work of various Irish Missions was described, and their claims set forth.

Mr. T. P. Law, Q.C., delivered a short address on the Dublin City Mission. Although it is intended specially for the Protestant poor, those who take part in it know no sect, no party, and no denomination. The work consists in carrying to the poor in their garrets and rooms the glad news of the Saviour's love. In carrying on the work of the Mission, earnest personal help is necessary. Each individual should be in himself a missionary, speaking to those around him of the love of Christ and of the grace that He gives. There are mothers' meetings and meetings for boys. If our youth could be got to attend meetings for reading and studying God's Word, and if they could be kept from drink between the years of sixteen and twenty-five, there would be less need for efforts to restrain them from drink in after life. The Mission Hall would be cheerfully lent for meetings for young men, and it was to be hoped that such meetings would be blessed with abundant success. Many of the clergy of the city of different denominations co-operate with the agents of the Mission in their respective districts, but more union is needed. No time should be lost in carrying a knowledge of Christ to every soul within reach of their influence.

Rev. James Robertson next addressed the meeting with reference to the Prison Gate Mission, Dublin. Ladies go early in the morning to the gates of the prison, and speak kindly to the prisoners coming out, inviting them to the Mission premises in Blackhall-place. They are invited to attend various classes—sewing classes and classes for Bible study; they are taught to work in the laundry. Sometimes they are sent to their friends, and sometimes, if they prefer it, they are sent to one or other of the colonies, in order that they may have an opportunity of commencing useful, happy lives. From the beginning to the end the work of the Prison Gate Mission is a work involving self-abnegation and self-denial. The ladies in charge of Blackhall-place want more room—better and more suitable accommodation. Recently they have not been able to take in all the prisoners that they might accommodate because of the low state of the funds.

Rev. Wallace M'Mullen spoke on the Methodist Home Missions. The missionaries do not push their work controversially. Their war is against sin, not against creeds. They simply state the truth, and, leaving it to make its own impression, they make no reference to antagonistic error. It might be asked, What has been the spiritual result of their work? Many of the results are not clearly known, and even much of the fruit of their work that is known is not gathered into their own barns. The motto of this section of the Church has never been Ireland for Methodism, but rather for Christ. But they knew sufficient to enable them to judge that the results have been abundantly encouraging.

Rev. J. M'Cheyne Edgar addressed the meeting on "Presbyterian Home Missions." At the outposts Presbyterians scattered here and there are gathered together into a congregation, and from this point of support an effort is made to influence for good the surrounding population. Connected with the Presbyterian Church there are sixty or seventy stations outside of Ulster, and nearly 500 congregations and stations in Ulster. The object they are pursuing is not to Presbyterianise Ireland, but to win Ireland for Christ.

Rev. J. S. Fletcher, Chaplain to the Dublin-by-Lamplight Institution, said that no Christian or philanthropist could fail to be deeply interested in the work among our fallen sisters. A gentleman to whom he explained the nature and work of the Lamplight Institution said to him that day, "Why don't you make that institution known? I will gladly give you £5 towards it." Six years ago the Christian public entrusted the Lamplight Committee with £2,000 to rebuild the laundry. That had been done, and it was now yielding a good return. The midnight meetings are most encouraging. The average attendance at them has been about sixty, and many have thus been rescued. The speaker stated that over 300 of our fallen sisters, weary of a life of sin and shame, knocked for admission at the door of the Lamplight Institution last year, but, owing to the want of room, only eighty-one could be received. Christian friends were asked to help to build new dormitories, to receive many more. Of twelve placed in suitable situations in the last nine months, ten have turned out most satisfactory. Here is a noble work for Christ and for perishing souls—let every Christian lend a helping hand.

The Chairman (Col. Noble) reminded those present that Mr. Hewson, who was labouring earnestly among the deaf and dumb in this city, would be glad to supply reports showing the nature and progress of his work to anyone who might feel interested in it.

[Notes of some further afternoon meetings and of the last day's proceedings must be postponed to our next issue.]

MAJOR AND MRS. POOLE.

BATH.

THESE friends have concluded a ten days' Mission at Bath. The fine Assembly Rooms were nightly packed to their fullest extent, and that by an audience composed almost entirely of the better classes. Numbers of these have thrown their sympathy into the Blue-ribbon movement since the visit of Major and Mrs. Poole. The Mayor of Bath opened the Mission, also presiding at the farewell meeting. He also issued special invitations to the city dignitaries on Saturday afternoon, in order that they might meet Major and Mrs. Evered Poole at his residence, Weston Park, and become acquainted with the Gospel Temperance movement. Some hundred and fifty guests were present.

The after-meeting and inquiry-room were introduced by Major and Mrs. Poole, and although a novelty, proved a success, many happy cases of conversion being the result. The deep religious tone of the whole Mission was a feature much commented upon, and led to the adhesion of many of the Lord's people to the Gospel Temperance cause in Bath, who had hitherto been standing aloof.

Major Evered Poole's address, to "men only," will not soon be forgotten, 120 signing the "Purity-pledge," and several young men consecrating their services to the Lord for the combatting of social evil. Mrs. Evered Poole's special meeting, for "women only," was one of the most successful of the Mission, hundreds being turned away for want of room. At the Sunday evangelistic services it was calculated that not less than one thousand left the doors for want of room; within, every available space was occupied an hour beforehand.

NEWARK.

A Mission has commenced at Newark, which is meeting with the most determined and organised opposition. The close proximity of Newark to various large breweries and the local vested interests account partly for this. There are, however, a band of earnest workers, who are resolved, by God's help, to make a bold effort in this drink-sodden town; they earnestly ask prayer that power and success may be given to the labours of Major Poole and his wife amongst them, and that God's cause may signally triumph.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for ensuing week:—Nov. 11, 1 Sam. iii. 11—21; Nov. 12, 1 Sam. iv. 1—18; Nov. 13, 1 Sam. v. 1—8; Nov. 14, 1 Sam. vi. 1—16; Nov. 15, 1 Sam. vii. 1—17; Nov. 16, 1 Sam. viii. 1—9; Nov. 17, 1 Sam. viii. 10—22.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

The Reformed Church of France.—Le Christianisme au XIX. Siècle gives a list of sixty parishes belonging to this church, that up to October 20 were without pastors, some having been thus destitute eight or nine years.

Marseilles.—During the popular fair, held here for three weeks, twenty religious meetings were held, when from 800 to 900 auditors must have heard the good news of salvation in Jesus Christ. In addition, from 10,000 to 12,000 tracts were distributed.

New Zealand is preparing to follow the example of Canada. The four Methodist Churches, —viz., the Wesleyans, the Primitive Methodists, the Free Methodists, and the Bible Christians—are talking of uniting.

Paris.—In connection with Mr. McAll's work, the Semaine Populaire contains the following:—"We announce with pleasure the formation of four Fraternal Societies: at the Boulevard Barbés, at Batignolles, at the Rue Rivoli, and in the Faubourg St. Antoine. Each of these societies is founded with about fifty members. Here are some of their principal statutes:—(1) The members declare their belief in Jesus Christ as their Saviour; (2) They promise to read the Bible every day; (3) They subscribe every month one penny at least for the poor; (4) They meet every fortnight to relate their experiences, for prayer and mutual edification.

Berlin.—Quite recently a new section of the Y.M.C.A. has been formed in Friedenstrasse, North Berlin. It is called "Christophorus," and seeks to gather all young men into the kingdom of God. May they indeed become true Christ-bearers.

The Berlin Society for the Distribution of Christian Periodicals is celebrated this Luther-Festival year by supplying each member of the 500 churches who are without pastors with a weekly copy of a Sunday paper that shall contain God's Word. Some of these churches have been years without any pastor or preaching of the Word.

Russia.—Some years ago the Spirit of God worked powerfully in the heart of a large number of Russians. The visit of Lord Radstock to St. Petersburg was much blessed. The revived Christians naturally felt desirous of leading those around them to the Saviour, and having themselves been so much benefited through the Word of God, they sought to make it known to their fellow-citizens.

A Lutheran Bible Society had existed for some time, and a new Bible Society has been founded by the Christians of the Orthodox Church. It was founded with the approbation of the Emperor Alexander II., and received from him an annual subscription of about £50. The death of the Emperor and others has deprived the Society of powerful support.

At the end of the year 1881 the Russian Bible Society comprehended 886 members and six colporteurs. The propagation of the Bible in Russia is encouraged by a goodly number of high functionaries and superior officers. It is also helped by the managers of the railways, who, for the most part, convey gratuitously the colporteurs and the bales of Bibles. In more than one school the Bible is read; it has also entered many prisons, where some true conversions have been the result. It is now sought to scatter it through Siberia, where so many unhappy men and women live and die deprived of all religious succour. A day will come when this Word will exercise a powerful influence on the Russian people; for God's declaration abides, "My Word shall not return unto Me void."

Richmond, Maine, U.S.A.—A great revival is in progress in Richmond. The Spirit of God has fallen in power upon the town, and thus far about one hundred persons have decided for Christ. Crowded meetings have been held every night in the Town Hall for five weeks, and on Sundays an overflow meeting has been necessary.

G. Preble.

Switzerland.—M. Aimé Humbert, of the Journal du Bien Public, who has energetically claimed liberty for the Salvation Army, and has shown himself very sympathetic towards the movement, writes:—"I maintain that the Salvation Army has met with a check, from which it will not recover itself; but this blow has not been given to it by the rulers nor by the rioters of Geneva, Berne, Vaud, and Neuchâtel, nor even by the Great Federal Council; the blow has come from the chief of the Army. Mr. Booth, under the fire of persecution, has behaved less as a Christian, or as a father of a family, than as an Army General, which is perhaps what he intends, but which absolutely condemns his rôle."—Journal Réligieux of the Independent Churches.

India.—About this time last year prayer was requested (1) for troops stationed at Meerut—that the Holy Spirit of God might restrain such sins as drunkenness, and impurity, and forgetfulness of God; (2) that sinners might be converted to God and come out boldly as servants of the Lord; (3) that believers might know more fully the power of our risen Lord to keep them from committing sin. Will you please return thanks that many soldiers have been converted, and also that a request for fuller sanctification has also been manifestly granted? Many new troops are about to arrive for the Duke of Connaught's Camp, whilst regiments are also leaving. Please, then, repeat the above prayers, and ask all believers to remember us here in private prayer, and to request public prayer for us. Special Gospel services will, if the Lord permit, commence November 4, and be held each Sunday till April. Ask all to remember such meetings, and please pray for me (Ephes. vi. 19., James iv. 10), for of the upper classes I might write that I know of none like minded to help. A Major, R.A.

Cairo.—I left England in March in connection with the Army Scripture Readers' Society to labour as their agent. God is blessing us in this far-off land in the conversion of many soldiers in every regiment. In July and August we had a trying time, when cholera was taking down its hundreds. Before the regiments left for their several camps I held a few Gospel Temperance open-air meetings. Hundreds attended and many signed the pledge.

Our soldiers in Cairo will have much reason to praise God for coming in contact with our American bretbren at the American Mission House. It is a mission for the purpose of teaching the Arabs and leading them to the Saviour; the day-schools of boys and girls are in complete order, and the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ is being taught within its walls under the able superintendence of Drs. Lansing and Watson, Rev. W. Harvey, and a faithful staff of ladies. Friends interested in the Lord's work should call at the American Mission House; they will find, as many have already found, a cordial reception awaiting them. C. V. K.

CHRISTMAS LETTER MISSION.—During the Christmas season of 1882, 323,000 missives, exclusive of Welsh, French, German, and Italian letters, were sent by post. It is hoped to send this quantity forth in ten languages this year, and the treasurer, Miss H. Bewes, 67, Ladbroke-grove, London, W., will be thankful for help towards this object. The testimonies of receivers sent to us are most pleasing. Sample packets may be had of Messrs. Hazel & Viney, 3, Kirby-street, Hatton-garden, E.C.

CHURCH ARMY.—Now that the Church Army Training Home is opened at Oxford, under the Rev. F. Webster, we are able to receive younger and less taught men than before. A careful training for two to four months is given gratuitously to approved candidates. The chief essential for them is that they shall be filled with holy fire, and burning love to God, and an unflagging desire to rescue the lost. The work is hard, the pay poor, but the occupation is delightful. It may be some reader of these lines may ask himself, "Is this a call to me to leave all and follow Him?"

A SIGHT IN LONDON—JUNE, 1883.*

A PLEA FOR DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

"WELL," they cried, as we sat one night,
Ere the lamps came in, in the fading light,
"In London city, so bright and gay,
What is the 'sight' you have seen to-day?"

Driving at noon up a crowded street
Almost faint, with the burning heat,
In a block of carriages moving slow,
Watching the passers to and fro;
Idly gazing with languid eye,
On men and women hurrying by:—
I saw, as I went, by the side of the way
A pitiful "sight" in your town to-day.

Turning up from the noisy Strand,
Two little children crept hand in hand.
Such tiny children! so stunted and small,
Cowering close to the sheltering wall.
Shrinking away from the summer air
Like unclean beasts, aroused from their lair;
Clinging together and crouching low,
As if to avoid an expected blow!

Never a shoe on the little feet
Bleeding and burnt, by the scorching street;
All uncovered each matted head,
Though the rays of the sun were like molten lead!
Clothes! that scarcely together would hold,
Ragged and dirty and wofully old!
On the girl, what once was a silken skirt
Draggled behind in the roadway dirt;
And as she stepped at each motion you saw,
The gown was the only garment she wore!
A rag on her shoulders was fold d with care,
But underneath it the body was bare.—
All tattered and torn, fastened up to his throat.
The boy wore what once was a grown man's coat,
Of broadcloth made, when first it was new.
Now! full of great holes where the skin showed through!
With trousers so ragged, what colour they'd been
In their palmier days, could no longer be seen.
Both just covered and wrapped for decency's sake
In the rags that from dust heap and road they could rake!

But the faces! O God, it made my heart cold,
To image the pasts and the futures they told!
As I thought of the hundreds of babes I could name,
Sheltered from sorrow, temptation, or shame!
Honest-eyed boys—with manly smiles!
Little girl fairies, with womanly wiles!
Cared for and worked for since they were born,
Watched over, prayed for, evening and morn;
Tenderly nurtured, daintily clad;
Guarded from everything hurtful or bad;
All they could wish for, instantly given,
Guided from infancy, onward to Heaven!

But these! so young! yet marked even now
Was the criminal's scowl on the boy's low brow!
On his face, was an insolent cowering air!
In the girl's eyes, already an impudent stare!
Born of parents degraded and low,
Shrunk from and dreaded, for many a blow!
Beaten and sworn at, often not fed,
Finding at night in some cellar their bed.
Told when they're hungry, that nothing is left,
Sent out to gain it, by lying or theft.
Scarce knowing that lies or thieving are wrong,
With their only learning some ribald song.
"God!" they don't know what is meant by the word,
Of "Jesus" and "Heaven," they never have heard,
"Hell!"—that's the only idea they have got
Of another existence or future so!
Some dim, dark notion that makes them long
By any means this life to prolong. [dead,"
'A place where they'll all be burnt, when they are
No wonder they shrink from the prospect with dread!
Life! tho' hunger is cruel and keen,
Life! tho' its charm is hard to be seen,
Though "life" means nought but starvation and pain.
They must lie, steal, sin, that life to maintain.

In our city so populous, wealthy and wid ,
With its mighty commerce, and palaced pride.
The great world-centre of culture and thought,
This, is the lesson the children are taugh !

Ugly and sickly and filthy and torn,
Nurtured in vice ever since they were born,
Destined our gallows and gaols to adorn,
Repulsive and wicked! but, ah! so forlorn!

With mothers whose lives are a trade of sin,
With fathers besotted and brutal with gin;
Helpless and hopeless, alone on the earth,
Destined to sorrow and crime from their birth.
As babies, obliged for their living to fight,
No one to help them or lead them aright.
Hopelessly ignorant! utterly bad!
A sight at which angels and men must be sad,
A stain on your purple, a blot on your page!
A cloud and a curse for the oncoming age!
A shame to the land, where such lives may be bred,
A thorn for the Heart, which on Calvary bled.
A smouldering spark of danger, that glows
'Neath the soft couch of roses, whereon you repose,
A burden for spirits awakened to see
The canker that lurks 'midst your laughter and glee!
This sign in your streets I have seen to-day.
And can't it be mended? Philanthropists say;
Rise, Christians of England, and cleanse it away!

A. F. Thornton.

PARIS DAILY PRAYER-MEETING.

ONE result of the visit of Lord Radstock to Paris has been the resolve to establish a daily Prayer-meeting. The meeting will take place each day at five o'clock in the afternoon in Salle Philadelphie, 404, rue St. Honoré, except Sunday. The meeting is to be a strictly catholic gathering of all who love the Lord Jesus Christ, with perfect liberty given to speak and pray in the language most familiar to the speaker. We cordially invite Christian friends who visit Paris to join us at this "sweet hour of prayer." We shall watch with interest the meetings in London by our friends the American evangelists; information about the progress of the Lord's work anywhere will be welcome and requests for prayer attended to.

The visit of Lord Radstock has been a true refreshing and strength to many, and Canon Wilberforce is being much used among the English. Alex. Donaldson.

THE SPEZIA MISSION.

TEN miles east of Spezia lies the old town of Sarzana, within a short distance of where stood the ancient city of Lima. Sarzana has an extensive fruit and poultry market, and is the seat of the Romish bishopric for a larger district, including Spezia.

Nearly the whole of the land round the town has been bought over by the priests, and thus they "hold fast"—not Christ's name, but the bonds of religious training. The evangelist has therefore met with extreme difficulty in endeavouring to plant the Word of Life in such a town. Some years ago three distinct efforts were made to establish an evangelical work, but the consequent persecution seemed to become too powerful for those efforts.

A few months ago two evangelists of the Spezia Mission, after much prayer for blessing, made a fresh visit to Sarzarna with faith, believing that God would give them victory. "This is the victory which overcometh the world, even our faith." For two months very large gatherings have been hold, and much blessing experienced. The local newspaper has rebuked the conduct of the priests for their persecuting policy, and a good feeling prevails amongst the people towards the evangelists. Thus God is teaching us the power of believing prayer.

We are making a special appeal for help to support this and other two new stations of the Spezia Mission. Will your readers help us in this Gospel work? J. S. Anderson.

Casa Alberto, Spezia, Oct. 26.

GRANTHAM.—Mr. T. E. Murphy has been conducting a Gospel Temperance Mission here, under the auspices of the Mayor and other temperance friends connected with the "Gospel Temperance Union," with much success. Large and enthusiastic meetings have been held, resulting in many pledges being taken and the temperance work in Grantham receiving a fresh impetus. A pledge stall was also erected in the market-place.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Fishersgate, Brighton.—Ned Wright has been here for six nights, and there has been great blessing. On the first inst. he commenced a five nights' Mission at Brighton.

Sadler's Wells Theatre.—Mr. Catlin, of the Cow Cross Mission, has now secured Sadler's Wells Theatre for six months for Sunday services, and on Sunday, Oct. 28, Gipsy Smith of Hanley was the preacher; there were about 1700 present in the afternoon and 1800 in the evening. Mr. Catlin also conducts outdoor services round the neighbourhood at six o'clock.

Norwich.—Mr. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, gave addresses to crowded audiences on Sunday and Monday, October 28 and 29, in the Victoria Hall, Norwich. The meeting on the Monday evening was presided over by Rev. W. A. McAllan, and the subject, "China and the Chinese," was illustrated by the exhibition of a large number of "idols" and other articles. Mr. Taylor's visit to Norwich was under the auspices of the Victoria Hall Mission.

Uxbridge.—On Wednesday afternoon Mr. Henry Varley gave what was felt to be a Bible reading of much interest and profit in the Friends' Meeting House, Uxbridge, to an audience which filled the place. The catholicity of the occasion was indicated by the presence on the ministers' gallery of the Rev. Robert Sewell, minister of the old (Congregational) meeting-house, and by the offering of the concluding prayer by the Rev. W. S. Ward, B.A., Vicar of Iver; both of these, to their regret, were prevented from attending Mr. Varley's lecture on purity in the evening.

Cambridge.—The Evangelistic Mission tent meetings during the past summer, held in Sutton and Stretham, Cambridgeshire, have been so remarkably fruitful in results that a Christian friend has been induced to bear the cost of the erection of a Hall and Workman's Coffee and Reading-room, with every convenience for carrying on a permament Gospel Mission in the latter place, from which the surrounding villages will be visited by evangelists who from time to time have charge of the work. A large number of the converts from surrounding places now assemble at Ely on Sundays and several week nights, to evangelise amongst the working people of that city. Prayer is desired for much blessing.

Spitalfields Gospel Mission.—The friends and supporters of this Mission will be glad to know the Lord has given many tokens of his favours and blessing. Instead of falling off in attendance, as was feared, when Mr. Lewis left, it has been just the opposite. Our Sunday-school has increased largely, and the Good Shepherd is making Himself known to his lambs. The open-air work is most encouraging; we have no difficulty in getting from four to five hundred around us every Sunday evening, of the poorest and lowest of Spitalfields. We have a good band of young persons to help in the singing, and hope still to have a share of the prayers of the Lord's people. The address of the superintendent is Mr. Jas. Sharpless, 14, Sidney-square, Commercial-road, E.

Ferryden.—This small fishing village, a few miles from Montrose, has more than once been brought under a revival, with the result that many were awakened from death unto life. The rising generation, however, have grown up indifferent. In the early spring of this year a Sunday-school teacher, since deceased, was the means of drawing the attention of several to their state, and they were converted. A series of meetings were begun of deep spiritual life, which were well attended, and many souls, old and young, converted. The work has gone on under God's blessing, and as an indication of the work of grace accomplished, no less than 120 young people sat down at the last communion, who professed to have received conversion. The population are mainly fishermen, and before proceeding to the fishing lately, they had a special communion service of dedication; a circumstance seldom, if ever before, witnessed in a Scotch fishing-village.

Ronaldshay.—Mr. James Adams, evangelist, has been doing a good work during the past week in the Free Church here. The meetings were large, and a deep interest awakened.

Johnston.—A good work has been done during the past few weeks. A series of evangelistic meetings were begun with an attendance of 200 and gradually increased, while many have remained to the after-meetings, and received a blessing.

Tain.—A Gospel Tent Mission was carried on here for ten days, recently, and was the means of considerable blessing. The prayers of God's people are much required that God would open the way, and break down the superstitious influences that exist against evangelistic effort.

Coatbridge, N.B.—A very successful series of open-air meetings has just been concluded here, having continued from April till now. Many pleasing tokens of the Lord's presence and power have been realised. The people came in great numbers to hear the Gospel sung and spoken. The workers can rejoice over some brought into the fold. The hymn, "Almost persuaded," was the means of awakening one, who was subsequently asked, "Well, what now—Christ, or the world?" "Christ!" was the reply.

Musselburgh.—Some three weeks ago a few of the workers from Carrubbers Close, Edinburgh organised a series of meetings here in Bridge Street U.P. Church, which were much blessed to the awakening and conversion of precious souls. The second week the meetings were started in the Free Church, which is crowded nightly, and of deep solemnity, while many inquirers wanted to be spoken to. Numerous testimonies of change of life and joy are being given by those who have accepted Christ. All the ministers of the town are aiding and co-operating in the work.

Carrubbers Close Mission, Edinburgh.—The opening of the winter's work in connection with this Mission gives promise of great blessing. A spirit of earnest expectation pervades the workers, and all the meetings are being owned of God and characterised by a deep sense of the Lord's presence. The Sabbath evening meetings in the Free Assembly Hall are attended by large numbers, and there are anxious inquirers at the close of the meeting. The Gospel Temperance work has never been so encouraging as at present. Large numbers are taking the pledge, and waiting, anxious about their soul's salvation. The testimonies that are given by those who have been rescued from the depths of drunkenness, and made new creatures in Christ Jesus, are very encouraging. The prayer-meeting of the workers is a source of blessing to all. During the past few weeks a number of the workers have commenced a series of evangelistic meetings in a neighbouring burgh, and much blessing has resulted. The new buildings for the Mission are making rapid progress, and when completed will have a full equipment for the satisfactory carrying on the work of evangelisation. The Christians of Edinburgh are certainly greatly indebted to Mr. Moody for the interest he took in this undertaking; it will ever stand as a noble testimony to the powerful impression made by his work and efforts in the cause of Christ in the Scottish capital.

Glasgow.—The work of the Glasgow Home Mission Union of all Churches for the reclamation of the masses has now begun. The city has been divided into districts, and each of the churches has been allocated a distinct part of the city, so that overlapping will be avoided. It is satisfactory to learn that nearly all the churches, with few exceptions, are entering heartily into the work by the means of visitation, and inviting non-churchgoers to a place of worship.

As a direct result of the Convention held recently in Glasgow for the Deepening of Spiritual life, last week a series of meetings were held in Coatbridge, at which a number of those who attended the Glasgow Convention spoke. The meetings have been well attended, much blessing received, and definite steps of consecration and faith taken.

We have received a note expressing a different view of the teaching of Mr. Barnes from that given by our correspondent of last week. We shall be glad to receive further information, and any reports of the addresses.

Mr. Hyslop, who did so much good in Bethany Hall, Glasgow, and who has had to go to Australia for the benefit of his health, is recovering rapidly, and hopes to be able to resume work again on his return.

Cardiff (Y.M.C.A.)—On Monday, October 29, Mr. Henry Thorne completed a nine days' Mission in this town, which increased in interest every night. There was manifest blessing bestowed on every service, and few will forget the marvellous power accompanying Mr. Thorne's address on the last Sunday evening.

Mr. W. Forbes has conducted a ten days' Mission in the town of Brookville, Ontario.

Minnesota.—The following letter to Mr. F. H. Salmon, 15, Whitehorse-road, Croydon, has been received:—"Many thanks for the parcel of books and tracts you have sent me. No one knows how it cheers us out in the far West, almost outside the world, to have such good reading sent us. Christian people in England can hardly understand the spiritual condition of this part of the world. Many towns and villages in this county have no religious service, and the name of Christ is seldom used, except in swearing. Grog-shops curse the country. I am trying to set up a free library, for the use of the whole community. If you can send me books for this I shall be thankful. The Christian comes to us every week. It is a great blessing to me and to many others. The people are just drifting away from Bible truth, and these papers help to hold us back."

Notices of Books, &c.

Pen's Perplexities. By M. B. Hunt. Cassell & Co. This is the story of a girl who had many perplexities, but who seems to have improved by passing through them.

Margaret the Moonbeam. By Cecilia Lushington. 2s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin. A second edition of an excellent story for the young, and worthy of wide circulation.

Three Wee Ulster Lassies. By Jas. Greer; The Cuckoo in the Robin's Nest, by Mrs. A. H. Martin; and Thorns and Tangles (Cassell & Co.), are stories for the young. They are written in a pleasing style, and will be sure to interest our young folk.

Angel Meadow. By Alice Lang. Religious Tract Society. A book that ought to stir up many of those who have done nothing to do much; the field of service is a district in London, and the workers are a clergyman and two ladies. The story is well worth perusal.

The Law of Jehovah. By J. Matthew, D.D. Nisbet & Co. This is a series of lectures on the Ten Commandments, the principles of which are impressed upon the reader as obligatory to righteousness, not as a means of salvation but as the outcome of a renewed heart. We cordially commend it.

Gudrun, Beowulf, and the Death of Roland. By John Gibb. T. Fisher Unwin, 26, Paternoster-square. The stories in this volume are taken from poems, which are among the earliest remaining of the three greatest nations of Europe—the German, English, and French. It concludes with an account of the original poems.

The Science Monthly, Illustrated. Vol. I. No. 1, 6d. D. Bogue, 3, St. Martin's-place, W.C. We find some excellent articles on scientific subjects in this Magazine. The present number contains a good photograph of Sir G. B. Airy, accompanied by an account of that astronomer's life and work.

God With Us; or, The Believer's Portion. By Anna Shipton. 3s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. This volume is a spiritual gem, we might say, a rich vein of precious Gospel ore. It is a book for the spiritual and devout, one which leads the soul onward in the ways of truth and peace, upward "to the hills, from whence cometh our help." The incidents recorded in its pages as illustrations of Divine faithfulness and of varied experiences of trust and hope in God are specially striking and helpful, while the exposition of Bible themes is at once clear and truthful. Such books are among the love-gifts of God to his children, by means of his servants, whom He uses to write them: they are some of the green pastures into which the Good Shepherd brings the sheep of his fold.

The History of Protestantism. Part I., 7d. By Rev. J. A. Wylie, LL.D. Cassell & Co. The reissue of this celebrated history will be welcomed by the public generally. It is well written and beautifully illustrated. We wish it an extensive circulation.

Prize Sermons on the Sabbath. By Various Writers. Partridge & Co. Here are twenty sermons on the Sabbath which gained a prize of £10 each awarded by the "Lord's Day Observance Society." The subject of the Sabbath up to the time of the resurrection of Christ, and the Lord's Day of the present dispensation, are expounded in a way that ought to help in the advocacy of the privilege which God has graciously instituted for his people's good.

Christian Ethics and Wise Sayings. By A Presbyter of the Church of England. Nisbet & Co. We cordially commend this excellent volume. It contains some of the best sayings of the best men on subjects which sadly need pressing home upon men generally. The chapters are alphabetically arranged and indexed, and cannot fail both to interest and profit the reader. Those on the "Church" and "Clergymen" are far from equal to the rest, and need revision.

The Authority of Scripture. By the Rev R. A. Redford, M.A. Religious Tract Society. In this thoughtful and able re-statement of the argument for the Divine authority of the Bible the grounds on which that authority is claimed are clearly presented to view and shown to be firm and immovable by the many efforts made in this age of doubt to shake their strength. By the multiplication of such works as this the Society from which it emanates confers a great boon on the Christian public, and does much to help forward as well as maintain the cause of God and truth.

The Metaphors of St. Paul. By Very Rev. J. S. Howson, D.D., Dean of Chester. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. This very valuable contribution to our New Testament literature treats of the metaphors employed by the Apostle Paul from four distinct sources, viz., Roman Soldiers, Classical Architecture, Ancient Agriculture, and Greek Games. Some passages will be at once suggested to the mind by each of these headings, but only one who has studied the subject can be aware how much light is thrown upon St. Paul's Epistle and his addresses in the book of Acts, by considering whence his metaphors were derived. One of the greatest boons that can be conferred upon us is more light upon the Word of God. Therefore we heartily welcome this little book.

The Companions of St. Paul. 5s. The Character of St. Paul. 5s. By the Rev. J. S. Howson, D.D., Dean of Chester. Hodder & Stoughton. Dr. Howson's share in that invaluable work on the Life of St. Paul, which has so long earned for itself the position of a standard book on the subject, constitutes him par excellence an authority upon such themes as the above, his research and careful thought having for so many years been devoted to everything bearing upon the great Apostle's career. The twelve chapters on the companions of his life are full not only of interest, but also of information, and make us earnestly hope the author's purpose to publish other volumes of Scripture biography may soon be realised. The estimate of St. Paul's character given in the other volume is, it seems to us, discriminating and instructive, as it is scriptural and just. That such literature should be passing through new editions, and widely read, is a fact to be hailed with gladness. We commend both works to our readers with confidence.

The Holy Bible, containing the Old and New Testaments. Newly translated from the Original Texts. Part I., Genesis to Joshua. 3s. 6d. Morrish, 20, Paternoster-square. We hail this, and every similar attempt, to present to the English reader a faithful and exact rendering of the original. The work is manifestly executed with extreme care, and with an evident desire to avoid any needless deviation from the ordinary English version. The work will undoubtedly be a help to any who desire to search the Scriptures. It is, however, a pity that the translation is not supported by the authority of a name. From the references to Mr. J. N. Darby in the "Introductory Notice," there is no difficulty in recognising the school of thought with which this translation is identified. The value of this and similar works is immensely increased if the Bible student obtain for himself or herself more acquaintance with Hebrew and Greek. And the acquirement of a serviceable familiarity with the one tongue or the other is not a difficult matter to anyone who is in earnest.

The Tract Magazine. Vol. XIV. 1883. 1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. This new volume of an old favourite is in no way behind its predecessors, and contains a host of articles well adapted for the home and the school, or for reading at social meetings of various kinds, whether of the old or young Fighting an Omen. By E. Henderson Smith. 1s. Religious Tract Society. One of the cheap shilling volumes now being issued by the Religious Tract Society. The "omen" that was fought against was rain on a wedding-day. The married life, thus unfortunately begun, had in it for a time a full measure of cloud and storm, but subsequently all was well.

Private Thoughts on Religion. 1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. By Rev. Thos. Adams. This chaste little volume forms the second of a series entitled "Companions for a Quiet Hour." It is a reprint of a strong Puritanical flavour, from an author of the last century, who had deep views of the depravity of the human heart and of the holiness of God. It would ill become one to criticise the subject-matter of so venerable a book, but it does seem to savour a little too much of morbid introspection and too little of joy and peace in believing.

Stephen, M.D. By the Author of "The Wide, Wide World." 3s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. Under the nom de plume of Elizabeth Wetherell, this American authoress has for more than thirty years been writing wholesome and profitable books for the young, most of them in the form of stories. Beginning with the popular "Wide, Wide World," and succeeded by the oddly-desiguated book, "Queechy," we have, as the latest of the list, the present—also a somewhat strangely-titled—volume It is sufficient to say that the book before us well maintains its author's deserved reputation. It is suitable for young people of either sex.

We have received from Mr. John G. Wheeler, 88, Mildmay-park, N., some new and beautiful specimens of Text, Christmas and New Year Cards. The large pair (price 2s.), entitled "The Everlasting Hills," are exquisite illustrations of Mount Blanc and the Staulbach Fall, with illuminated texts. A packet (price 6d.), under the name of "Silver," consists of twelve cards for the New Year, with flowers beautifully printed in colours and the texts in silver. They are very superior at the price. A second packet, of the same size and price, designated "Rubies," contains twelve cards, with Christmas texts, also with flowers printed in colours. Then there are three sixpenny packets for children, gorgeous in colour, with figures of children. Each is called "The Little Folks' Packet;" but two are intended respectively for Christmas and the New Year, and the third for any time, having general texts for mottoes. Last come "Wonderful Words of Life," a new series of large cards, six in number, with texts in illuminated borders, suitable for placing on the walls of rooms. This packet is priced at 2s. The "Watchtower Series" of six choice illuminated Christmas cards, by E. de C.W., price 2s., are well got up, suitably coloured, not too large, and inexpensive.

English Versions of the Bible. By Rev. J. I. Mombert, D.D. 6s. Bagster & Sons. "I have striven," says the author, "to write a his ory useful not only to scholars but to all readers of the English Bible." At the cost of considerable labour Dr. Mombert has given us a volume interesting to read, and most valuable for reference. Commencing with mention of the rude paraphrases of Cadman, the Saxon cowherd (A.D. 680), he passes on to notice, amongst other early translations, the Psalter of Aldhelm, Bishop of Sherborne (706); then Bede's Translation of the Gospel of John (735); then, after reference to various Anglo-Saxon renderings of portions of the Bible, we come to the Heptateuch of Archbishop Ælfin (1023). After this we have a copious account of the Wiclif Versions (late in the 14th century); and of the Tyndale Versions (1526—36), succeeded by a detail of the publication of Bishop Coverdale's Bible (1535); of Thomas Matthewe's Bible (1537); Taverner's (1539—51); the "Great" Bible (1539); the Genevon (1557—60); the "Bishop's" (1568—1606); the Douay Bible, and Rheims Testament (1582—1609); and the present, usually spoken of as the "Authorised" version, although Professor Westcott states that "no evidence has yet been produced to show that the version was ever publicly sanctioned by Convocation or by Parliament, or by the Privy Council or by the King." Dr. Mombert's work concludes with a chapter on the Revised Testament. The book is enriched with copious indices, so that any part can be readily referred to.

The Star in the East is a little penny tract that treats of the great need of Gospel and educational work in Eastern lands, and of the efforts of the Christian Vernacular Education Society for India, 7, Adam-street, Strand. This Society needs and is deserving of support.

Martin Luther, the Reformer. Partridge & Co. A useful sketch of the great Reformer's life, admirably adapted for the young. The leading incidents of his history are carefully collected, skilfully woven together, and combine to form one of the most interesting biographies we have yet seen on a small scale. The spiritual element predominates, making the book eminently calculated to benefit the soul as well as inform the mind.

Christianus, and other Poems. By H. C. G. Moule, M.A. London: G. Bell & Sons. The title is taken from the subject of the first poem, which gives the story, in blank verse, of one who is supposed to have been converted to the faith of Christ by the preaching of Paul at Antioch. This, and the other poems by which it is followed, are beautifully conceived and expressed. The author is a true poet, and his gift is consecrated to themes of choicest kind, rendering the volume one in which the devout will find no little profit and delight.

The People's Bible Finger-Post. By the Rev. E. J. Barnes, K.C.L. Elliot Stock. The author of this useful book has hit upon a novel plan of helping Bible-readers in their study of the Scriptures. He has arranged it in parallel columns, the first containing Old and New Testament subjects, and the second notes and illustrations suited to their expression and application. For teachers, City missionaries, and district visitors, the book will prove specially helpful, and, indeed, is suggestive to all readers. The Earl of Shaftesbury, to whom the volume is dedicated, has given it his commendation, and we cordially give it ours also.

Assyrian Life and History, by M. E. Harkness (2s. 6d., Religious Tract Society) is a concise account of all that is known concerning the history, manners, and customs of the kingdom of Assyria. Much of it is collateral with the records of the kings and prophets of the Bible account, added to and amplified by recent discoveries of remains now to be found in the British Museum. Both of these little books contain, in a concise form, much that is interesting and valuable to the Bible student, representing the result of years of study and research.

The Handbook of Sunday-school Addresses. Edited by Rev. Robt. Tuck, B.A. Elliot Stock. This is a compilation from various sources of what are really suggestive and helpful outlines, adapted for use in the home, the school, or the church. The subjects are wide and varied in their character, the style easy and expository, the illustrations numerous and pointed. Mr. Tuck is evidently well qualified for preparing such volumes as this, and by so doing he is conferring a boon on all who desire assistance in their efforts to instruct the young, and to win them over to the way of truth.

God the Creator of both Evil and Good. By H. Pinson. W. H. & L. Collingridge. Our warrant for speaking of this book as neither helpful to faith nor useful to reason as a guide in forming opinion on the subject of which it treats, may be judged of from the following extract: "It is impossible to follow St. Paul's teaching and our Saviour's as well, for St. Paul urges that for condemning which our Saviour was crucified." The book abounds in rash statements, unreasonable inferences, and erroneous assertions. Ministers, prayer-meetings, and total abstinence, are the special aversion of this author, who sees in each a cause for thankfulness, and in efforts for its removal a cause for reprobation. He truly calls evil good and good evil.

Juan de Valdes on the First Epistle to the Corinthians. Edited by J. T. Betts. Trübner & Co. Those who have read the translation of this pious and learned writer's commentary on the Epistle to the Romans, will, we feel sure, be glad to find that another volume of his works is now produced in English guise. The title-page, as reproduced from the old Spanish original, quaintly says the exposition is "very useful for all who love Christian piety," and further speaks of it as "familiar and comprehensive." In both these statements we fully concur, and are sure that while the author's views may not be endorsed on all points by all readers, yet none can fail to find enjoyment and profit from the careful consideration of them. The editor has evidently entered con amore into his work, and performed it with great care and skill. Boehmer's lives of the twin brothers Juan and Alfonso de Valdes is included in the volume.

Letters to the Editor.

CHRISTIAN EMPLOYERS.

Dear Sir,—I was pleased to see in The Christian recently your extract from the sermon of the Archbishop of Canterbury, as to the want of sympathy between the upper and lower classes of this country, and much regret his remarks are sadly too true.

We should all remember we have sprung from the same parentage and possess the same natures, feelings, and failings. Employers should foster a spirit of kindness and goodwill towards those in their employ, try to promote comfort in their homes by encouraging carefulness, sobriety, and thrift, and what is of a thousand times more importance, use every effort to lead them to the Saviour of sinners, and then, through faith in Him, employers and employed shall together "be for ever with the Lord." Where these principles are heartily and faithfully practised, I venture to say there will be an end to all ill-feeling, and employers and employed daily meet each other with cheerful greetings and mutual goodwill.—Yours faithfully,

An Employer of Fifty Years' Standing who has never been troubled with a Strike.

Brimscombe Court, Gloucestershire, Oct. 15.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Dear Sir,—I observe that in speaking in your issue for Oct. of the action of the Neuchâtel Government against the Salvationists, you remark that the authorities may have been annoyed by the processions or street music of the Salvation Army. Will you allow me to state the facts on this head? I have been engaged in drawing up a complete report of the events in Neuchâtel which culminated in the Boudry trial. My report has been submitted to legal criticism, and you may therefore have confidence that the facts have been fully examined by me before publication.

Neither in Geneva nor in Neuchâtel has the Salvation Army ever had a procession, or a band of music, or any manifestation whatever in the streets, as is common in England. Having heard a report that in England they use fifes and drums, the Public Prosecutor, at the trial, adorned his speech with allusions to those instruments. Miss Booth, in her reply, asked of the Public Prosecutor and the Court, "When and where was a drum ever heard, used by us?" Silence was the only response. "When and where was there ever heard a fife, or any other instrument?" Silence, again. "When and where had we ever a procession?" Again silence. None had ever been seen or heard.

How hard it is to rid the public mind of an erroneous impression once circulated! — Yours faithfully, Josephine E. Butler.

A PERSONAL TESTIMONY.

Sir,—I should feel greatly obliged by your inserting the undermentioned testimony in your next issue.

I have suffered from spinal pain and weakness for nearly thirty-three years. During this period I have consulted many doctors, and tried various remedies, but derived very little benefit from any of them.

Last spring I was induced to visit "Bethshan" Faith-Healing Home, 161, Islington, Liverpool, where I stayed ten days. The result has been I am now almost made over again.

For the last twelve or thirteen years I have been obliged to lie down on the sofa nearly all the day, except for short intervals between breakfast and bed-time. For the last three years I have not been able to read prayers, or preach; now I can do both, and not feel the least pain or oppression in my spine. For many years prior to my resignation of the last benefice I held, I was necessitated to sit on a high stool both while reading and preaching, which now I do not require.

I have received much spiritual good from my visit to the above "Bethshan," and I believe I shall have to praise God, in time and eternity, for the spiritual and physical blessings He has bestowed upon me in answer to believing prayer.—Yours faithfully, William Bateson, M.A.,
Late Vicar of Copp.

Poulton-on-Fylde, Preston, Lancashire, Oct. 25.

[We have lately received from a personal friend very remarkable testimony as to the healing of two railway-men, and of benefit received by his own daughter, in answer to prayer, at "Bethshan," Holloway, London.—Ed.]

RELIGION AND VICE.

Sir,—In your article upon "Religion and Vice" contained in a recent number of The Christian, reference is made to an incident brought to light at Uxbridge in connection with a trustee of one of the largest dissenting places of worship in the town. As the officers of that church, perhaps you will allow us space to explain our position.

In the number of The Sentinel to which you allude, the church is charged with "exalting to one of its highest offices" a man who is "the owner of the principal houses of ill-fame in the town."

It is certainly a misfortune that a "new prophet" who is so anxious to defend the Christian religion against such outrages should not be equally painstaking in ascertaining how far the church are responsible for such a state of things, and to what extent they have the power of remedying them. More definiteness of research in this direction would doubtless add more weight to his utterances. Had Mr. A. S. Dyer pursued this course he would have learned that as a heritage handed down from its very foundation, the church to which The Sentinel and he in his public address in this town alludes, has no power over its trustees. It can neither appoint nor depose them. Such prerogatives rest entirely with the trustees themselves. The church of Christ has no voice in the matter whatever.

Your readers therefore will be in a position to judge of the truth of the statement that the "largest congregational church" at Uxbridge "exalts to one of its highest offices" a man against whom such charges are made.

Mr. Dyer's motive appears to have been to connect this trustee with the work and organisation of the Christian Church, and thus to cast an unmerited reflection upon its officers and members.

The gentleman alluded to, apart from his office of trustee, is simply a seatholder, never having been even a member of the Church.

As deacons we protest against the imputations cast on us as a Christian community, whose members are quite as earnest as Mr. Dyer in denunciation of the social evil which he—doubtless honestly—is trying to expose.

The Deacons of Providence Congregational Church, Uxbridge.

The following appears in the Buckinghamshire Advertiser for November 3:—

PROVIDENCE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

Sir,—A statement having appeared in several publications that one of the trustees of Providence Congregational Church, Uxbridge, is the owner of the principal houses of ill fame in the town, we, the undersigned trustees, hereby declare that we were unaware that one of our colleagues had or held any interest in such places until the statement appeared. We felt it a duty to ourselves, and the congregation on whose behalf we hold the trust, to demand from one of the editors the name of the trustee referred to, which he gives as "Mr. George Baynham, grocer, Windsor-street, Uxbridge," who admits that the houses in question are his property. We hereby publicly request Mr. George Baynham to resign his trusteeship, and thus exonerate us from any appearance of complicity in such a matter, unless he can clear himself from this charge.—We are, sir,

Faithfully yours,
Edwin Birch, Alfred Button, Alfred R. Dimmock, J. B. Guilland, Giles Hutson, } Trustees.

Providence Congregational Church, Uxbridge, Nov. 1.

THE LATE DR. BUTLER.

Sir,—On page 13 of your issue for October 25, you have inserted a paragraph on the wisdom of speaking gently to the young; but should we not also "speak gently" of the departed? You have introduced a comparison and a contrast between the late Dr. Butler, Dean of Peterborough, and Dr. Longley, Archbishop of Canterbury. Such a comparison should have been struck out of the autobiography, certainly it should never have been transcribed into the columns of The Christian.

May I be allowed to say that it is as unjust as it is injurious. That my esteemed great-uncle was, when head master at Harrow, a firm disciplinarian may be true, but that he was one to afford an illustration of "harshly crushing the feelings of the feelings of the young" I will not believe. Dr Butler was a kind-hearted man, a Christian, and a gentleman. My personal remembrance of him and of his kindness to me in early youth has left the very opposite impression to that left in the mind of the writer of the autobiography. As I knew him at Peterborough, and after he had left Peterborough, it might have been said of him as truly as of Longley, "he never was able to say an ill-natured word." I have, moreover, heard very much of him, but, till I saw this invidious paragraph, I never heard a word that was not to his honour.

I deeply regret that such an estimate of his memory should have gone forth, and I trust that you will withdraw your endorsement of the same.—I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

George William Butler.

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

Sir,—The special interest which your readers take in this subject leads me to ask your powerful aid in reference to a branch of it which has not hitherto received the consideration it deserves. Gladly would I avoid my task, and dwell only on the noble work in which our friends are engaged; but, looking to the future, I must call attention to the practice of vivisection creeping rapidly into our British medical schools, where its importance is affirmed, and its practice is rendered almost obligatory on such of the students as propose to follow the higher branches of the profession.

I hope and believe both your readers and our present medical missionaries feel with myself that the vaunted discoveries of vivisection are not proven. Very able medical authorities assert this, and I believe it; but even if there were some physical benefit to be gained by such means, I would call on all Christians to resist the temptation and oppose this cruel practice.

But can we expect students to withstand the influence of their teachers without the grace of God and the aid which Christians can bestow? Therefore I would earnestly entreat the co-operation of active workers in medical missions, and especially those in Zenana societies. It is doubly incumbent upon us to be assured that our lady doctors cordially unite with us here. They, almost alone, are able to bring the Gospel with all its elevating, civilising powers to the women of Eastern lands. There must be human infirmities in all human teaching; but let not one of our valued missionaries allow herself, or be allowed by her supporters either, the tolerance or the teaching of vivisection. The danger is not imaginary. We all earnestly desire colleges founded for the instruction of natives. Such colleges for women may be a little delayed; but this is only a question of time, and I would have our lady doctors at once forearmed with an entire hatred and avoidance of vivisection.

I cannot help turning here chiefly to our own sex; we ought to be foremost in upholding the spirit of the Gospel, but our American gentlemen friends have set us here a striking example. I enclose a copy of their instructions sent from Boston to the college at Aintab, in Syria. May I entreat your help that we English may resolve to do likewise, both in our home example and in the rules framed for missionaries abroad.—I am, &c.,

"Minutes adopted by the Trustees of the Central Turkey College (Aintab, Syria), in regard to Vivisection, at their annual meeting in Boston, Mass., U.S., Jan. 21, 1881.

"The attention of this Board of Trustees of the C. T. College having been called to the subject of Vivisection, as practised in many of the medical colleges in Europe and America, we have taken into consideration the propriety of our taking some action on this subject in reference to the medical department of the Central Turkey College. After full and careful consideration we have adopted the following resolutions:—

"1. Resolved—'That we sincerely regret the great increase of the practice of Vivisection in the medical schools of Europe and America, as we believe this practice tends to blunt the sensibilities, and harden the hearts of those who engage in it.'

"2 Resolved—'That as we desire the medical department of the C. T. College to be, in a special manner, a source of pure Christian influences as well as a well ordered scientific institution, we direct the Local Board of Managers to take measures to prevent the practice of Vivisection in that institution, and we look to them for the full and practical enforcement of this rule.'

"(Signed) In behalf of the Trustees,
"N. G. Clark, Secretary.

The Late Lord Congleton.—At the funeral of this well-known and highly-respected servant of Christ, on October 29, more than a thousand persons were in attendance, when addresses were given by Messrs. C. Underwood, Luxmore, H. Heath, and H. Dyer. Many leading men among the brethren were present also, some of whom held services in various parts of the cemetery, there being far too many to get into the chapel.

THE ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children,

Now Sheltering, Educating, and Training over 1,300 Poor Boys and Girls,

WILL (D.V.) BE HELD

THE SECOND WEEK OF DECEMBER, 1883.

A few Articles have already been received, but much more will be needed, and the aid of all is earnestly asked.

We would remind those friends whose busy fingers are at work on our behalf, that shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing are particularly valuable additions to the clothing room of our Bazaar, being much asked for and readily sold. Of course besides these we shall be glad to receive pictures, jewellery, old coins, old china, curios, musical instruments, and fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, books, drawings, bric-à-brac, and other examples of the thousand and one tasteful ornaments which are required to furnish bazaar stalls.

It is not necessary, we hope, again to remind our friends that, as in former years, the Sale will be conducted in strict harmony with the objects in view—no raffling or other doubtful measures being adopted to ensure success or to bring in money.

Gifts of plants, cut flowers, fresh butter, eggs, or confectionery will also be very welcome if sent in a day or two only before the first day of the sale.

All other gifts should reach us AS SOON AS POSSIBLE, but in any case not later than Saturday, 1st December, and should contain inside the parcel a complete list, with the name and address of the donor, so as to ensure acknowledgment. OUR WINTER'S WORK

AMONG NEGLECTED GIRLS AND POOR STREET BOYS.

Dear Friends,—Until quite lately we have been able to receive every case of real destitution making application. Now we have to hesitate—to delay—and soon shall have to refuse admission to many whom we must then

TURN AWAY FROM OUR DOORS.

Our Funds are, however, so low, that unless the Lord whom we serve lays our needs on your hearts, no other course will be open to us.

Very earnestly do I plead, therefore, that we may not be compelled to close the door in the face of any poor homeless little one seeking admission.

Your fellow-labourer among poor children,

T. J. BARNARDO.

18 & 20, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

Cheques should be crossed London and South-Western Bank; so also should P.O. Orders, made payable at the G.P.O.

IMPORTANT RE-ISSUE. Morgan & Scott's Edition.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS.

(WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.)

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Primitive and Protestant Martyrs in all parts of the World.

To be completed in Sixteen Monthly Parts. Part I. now ready, in neat Tinted Cover, 6d.

At a time like the present, when, in Great Britain, Popery, and its evil progeny Ritualism, are both insidiously and openly seeking to gain the supremacy, it is necessary to the well-being of our country that the story of FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS should be regarded as an essential part of the education of our children. From the record of the past we can fairly judge as to what Popery would be if again in the ascendant.

The issue of the present edition, at a low price, and in the convenient form of MONTHLY PARTS (16 parts at 6d. each), places this valued book within the reach of almost everyone. May also be had in One Volume, handsomely bound in cloth, 10s. 6d.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

ADVANCED PHTHISIS—CASE AT HALTHAM, HORNCASTLE.

The name of this patient is Mrs. H. ALBANS, the wife of a poor deserving man, with three children, a case needing sympathy and help. On the recommendation of Rev. H. Spurrier, of Roughton Rectory, I sent medicine at reduced charge, with letter of advice.

On the 18th June she first writes, as follows: "Your treatment has been recommended to me by Mrs. C. A. Sanderson, of Horncastle, who was cured of Consumption in 1879 by taking your medicine." She then proceeds to state her case:—

"My father died of diseased lungs, also two brothers, and other relatives. My illness commenced in September, by getting wet. Severe cold brought on a hacking cough, with sharp pains in the chest, with much expectoration, and wasting of flesh. The cough is now most violent, the expectoration thick and yellow; sometimes I bring up pure fluid blood. The pain is violent in my chest, and breathing constantly affected. I have much fever, and hectic flushes, and night perspirations. Often my heart seems to stop beating. Then I have neither power to speak or move for some minutes. Then there comes an intense pain at the heart. There has now been a loss of flesh all over the body. My legs and ankles are always much swelled. The doctor at Horncastle calls my disease Consumption. I have been a patient at the Dispensary, and have had iodine, applications and inhalations, with little, if any, benefit."

In this melancholy state Mrs. Albans commenced with my medicine and instructions. In a few weeks much benefit was manifest. "The cough is relieved (she writes), breathing better; I feel stronger. I have followed all your advice, and shall still persevere. I had given up all other hope when I applied to you, and felt that my only chance of life was in your treatment, subject to our Heavenly Father's will."

The amendment steadily continued, and I have just received a letter, in which she says: "I am very pleased to inform you I am now quite cured. Should any symptoms again occur I will write you at once. Accept my grateful thanks for all your kind advice. Our Heavenly Father will reward your kindness, which I cannot repay."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

MARYLEBONE MEDICAL MISSION,

43, Carlisle Street, Edgware Road, N.W.

OBJECTS.—Preaching the Gospel and Healing the Bodies of the Sick Poor.

Last year the number of new patients was 4,647; attendances at the dispensary 13,806; 3,356 visits were paid by me to the sick at home, and 3,264 visits were paid by the nurse; 25,968 tracts and portions of Scripture were distributed.

At the Annual Meeting the EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G., said: "It would be a positive blessing if we could have a Medical Mission such as this in every poor district in London—and a Dr. Chambers to conduct it. Now the combination of medical skill and missionary zeal is of very old standing, the first example being our Lord Himself; but you find that the missionaries who have medical knowledge are far more acceptable and successful than those who have not. From what I have myself witnessed, I have come to the conclusion that the union of the two agencies—healing and preaching—is almost absolutely essential if the lowest are to be reached.

Funds to carry on the work are much needed. Contributions will be thankfully received by Dr. R. CHAMBERS, 43, Carlisle Street, Edgware Road, N.W.; or by the Treasurer, E. PARKER YOUNG, Esq., 30, Westbourne Square, W.; or at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN. P.O.O. should be made payable at the Post Office, 310, Edgware Road, N.W.

The Committee appeal very earnestly to all who love the Master, and for the sake of His poor, for Funds to erect a suitable and substantial building in which to continue and extend the blessing of Gospel light in what may be truly described as "a dark place."

Contributions will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Treasurer, H. J. Bristow, Esq., 68 & 69, Cornhill, E.C.; or may be paid to the account of the Deptford Ragged School Building Fund at the Ragged School Union, Exeter Hall, W.C.; or into either of the undermentioned banks, viz.,—

RHEUMATISM AND RHEUMATIC GOUT:

CAN THEY BE CURED?

In reply to the inquiry "Is Rheumatism curable?" we reply as follows:—

We do not know of any chemistry outside the human organism which can eliminate the morbid products of a Rheumatic Diathesis; but that which chemistry and medicine cannot accomplish, the human organism can, when the right conditions are afforded, and one of the most effective conditions, if not the most, is that which tends to establish an equilibrium of functional action in all the organs. Our argument is simply this, that by Magnetic treatment, an unhealthy condition of the system or the blood, culminating in the morbid and consequent functional derangement of some organ, and predisposing to formations, even to cancer, as admitted by medical men, is checked, and counteracting conditions of dispersion or absorption are set up, a more vigorous tone being communicated to the system in general, and to each organ in particular.

No Cure for Rheumatism!!! We do not advocate a remedy for symptoms, but, knowing that we have in our hands a remedy for their cause, we are justified in saying that Rheumatism is curable. Whoever doubts the possibility of so strengthening the physical powers as to enable them to overcome the tendency to chronic ailments, should read the following statements, and inquire of any of our patients among a list of 850 names.

August 18, 1883.

"I had been for a long time subject to Rheumatism, rendering me almost unable to walk or lift anything, and reducing me to a low, weak state of health generally. Deriving little or no benefit from the numerous remedies I tried, I was induced to adopt your treatment, with a result that even exceeded my anticipations, for in a very short time the pains subsided, my physical strength returned, and my health generally improved and continues to do so."

From Mr. JOHN WALLACE, Mauchline, N.B.

July 9, 1883.

"I used your appliances for three years, but I am now so well that I do not need them, and I only wear them on cold frosty days."

July 27, 1883.

"By what I said on my post-card, a few days since, you will see that I am benefited by your treatment. I feel, however, that I should like to add a little more of my experience to that which I have already sent. Many years ago I was hurt by a fall causing a weakness in my left side and the small of my back, which increased as I advanced in years, so that at last I was unable to stand or sit for any length of time, a recumbent posture being the only one I could assume without pain. The continuous wearing of your appliances, however, has marvellously helped me, and although I am seventy-five years of age, I am quite freed from pain, and feel well and hearty. The chronic colds from which I suffered have also gone. Those who neglect to try the treatment cannot reap the benefit they otherwise would, nor can the end our Heavenly Father has in view be accomplished unless the means be tried.

Those desiring further information on Rheumatic affections and their cure, are referred to No. 2 of "Uniform Efficacy of Magnetic Treatment," post free on application from B. Corson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

THE BIBLE AND THE POOR.—3.

THE PSALMS AND THE NEW TESTAMENT.

AS the Prophets, so the Psalms, dwell with undeviating intensity upon the views and principles relating to the poor which were laid down in the Mosaic law. The royal Psalmist prays, "Oh, let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end, but establish the just;" and the head and front of his offending is that "the wicked in his pride doth persecute the poor. . . The wicked, through the pride of his countenance, will not seek after God." "He lieth in wait secretly as a lion in his den; he lieth in wait to catch the poor; he doth catch the poor when he draweth him into his net." "He hath said in his heart, God hath forgotten: He hideth his face: He will never see it." And the man of God cries out, "Why standest Thou afar off, O Lord? Why hidest Thou thyself in time of trouble?" But here is the hope and expectation which lines with silver and edges with gold the darkest cloud in the Psalmist's sky: "He shall judge thy people with righteousness, and thy poor with judgment." For when the sweet Psalmist of Israel writes the psalm for Solomon, the King of Peace, in which the prayers of David the son of Jesse are summed up and ended, the great and prominent contrast between that ideal and coming sovereignty, and the present governments of the world, is this: "He shall judge the poor of the people; He shall save the children of the needy; and shall break in pieces the oppressor."

Turning to the New Testament, we find God, when manifested in the flesh, choosing his condition among the poor, and striking the keynote of the laws and principles of his Kingdom in the first beatitude: "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs [or, of them] is the kingdom of heaven." His life was spent among the poor, and in doing them good. And his last prophecy, the greatest of all prophecies, was given in response to a question prompted by his declaration that the poor widow had given, in her two mites, more than all they who had cast into the treasury. The disciple points to the great buildings, and goodly stones and gifts of the rich men, but Jesus says, "There shall not be left one stone upon another which shall not be thrown down." They and their marble gifts and tablets are all forgotten, but that poor widow and her mites are enshrined in the Book of God for ever. Then came his disciples, and asked Him privately, "When shall these things be?" and then He gave the prophecy of his second coming, so wonderfully interwoven with and shining through the foretold destruction of Jerusalem. (See Mark xii. 41—xiii. 2; Matt. xxiv.; Luke xxi.)

When, in the early Pentecostal days, great grace was upon them all, there was none among them that lacked. But the grace waned, and the poverty returned.

When Paul went up to Jerusalem to consult those who seemed to be pillars in the Church, they gave him and Barnabas the right hand of fellowship, and had only one counsel to press upon them: "Only they would that we should remember the poor." Yet this was scarcely necessary, for Paul adds, "The same which I also was forward to do."

James, who insisted on works, as Paul on faith (though each equally stated both sides of the truth of the Gospel), dwells with vehement emphasis on our duty to the poor. We shall be judged by the law of liberty; but the first illustration of the principle on which judgment shall go forth is, "If a brother or sister be naked and destitute of daily food, and one of you say, 'Be warmed and filled,' and give not to him, what doth it profit? He shall be judged without mercy who hath showed no mercy."

James will not have the good place in the assembly given to the gay clothing of the rich, and the poor man in vile raiment made to sit under the footstool. He warns the rich of the miseries that shall come upon them. He will not recognise the infallibility of political economy. He does not believe in the righteousness of blind obedience to the laws of supply and demand. He will not assent to the proposition that wages rise and fall by a righteous sliding scale, which needs no interference. He says, the hire of the labourers is kept back by fraud, and the cries of the workers is entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth.

Paul gathered up the words of the Lord Jesus which none of the Evangelists had recorded: "Ye remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how He said, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'" Into the soul of James had burned those other thrice-recorded words of the same Lord Jesus: "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God."

If Jesus had given a title to his parable, He would not have called it "The Good" but "The Righteous Samaritan," for He used it to illustrate the fulfilment of the righteousness of the law to our neighbour. The rich man was not only ungenerous but unrighteous to the poor Lazarus at his gate full of sores. The sheep, in the judgment, are righteous, the goats are wicked; the discrimination between them rests on their ministering or not ministering to the Son of Man in the persons of the poor and the afflicted. M.

FAIRLOP FRIDAY.—May I ask you to inform the readers of THE CHRISTIAN generally that my dear father, Mr. G. J. Knight, is laid aside now for two months, and we fear permanently, with a general failure of strength, accompanied by rheumatism? For fifty-eight years he has laboured in Christian, social, and moral movements all over London, but more recently in Gospel Temperance and Peace labours in the Eastern districts. He has also carried on the "Fairlop Friday" effort, mainly at his own expense, for twenty-two years past. I feel, as his eldest son, a desire that the prayers of all Christians who love such work shall be offered up for his support under his very painful affliction. GEORGE J. KNIGHT, JUN.

THE LUTHER COMMEMORATION.

SATURDAY and Sunday last were red-letter days throughout the Protestant world. Not only in the land that gave him birth, but in every quarter of the globe where the Scriptures are fully believed and freely taught, the work and influence of Martin Luther have been the theme of admiring comment from pulpit and from platform. Even in such Popish countries as Austria and Spain, and under the very shadow of the Vatican in Rome, there have been "Luther Commemorations." Notwithstanding the lapse of four centuries, the famous Reformer is still the "greatest figure in German history;" there are not wanting those who go much further, and say he is the greatest gift that the Church of God has received since the days of Paul.

It would be hopeless for us to attempt in these columns any summary of the well-nigh innumerable addresses and sermons that have been given on the subject. As the London and provincial Press has fully reported these utterances, it is scarcely needful that we should. The chief points dwelt upon appear to be the personal courage and honesty of the great Reformer, and the deep importance of the cardinal doctrine of "justification by faith," that became the watchword of his religious life and teaching. The exercise of the same qualities and the proclamation of the same truths are needed in our own day; we thank God that if we may not have among us many who outshine their contemporaries to the same degree as Luther did, we have a mighty host of witnesses who are ready to maintain intact the Reformed doctrines, to the diffusion of which the German monk gave such a great and enduring impulse.

We have observed that not a few of the preachers who last Sunday spoke on the life and work of Luther chose for their text the apostolic words, "Stand fast therefore in the liberty with which Christ hath made you free, and be not entangled again in the yoke of bondage." That is the great lesson that has come to us, not from Luther only, but from the host of martyrs and confessors who, in all lands and in all the centuries of this dispensation, have borne noble testimony to the full-orbed truth of God's revealed Word. May we give good heed to it, thus transmitting to our successors the freedom and the faith that have come to us as a priceless inheritance!

TRACT DISTRIBUTION.—I happen to know, by the case of a lady to whom a Gospel tract proved such a blessing to her own soul, that she told me she would not part with that piece of paper for a five-pound note. Let this be an encouragement to workers. C. GARDNER.

STAMFORD HILL, N.—AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.—Yesterday afternoon (Thursday) a new and attractive building, in connection with the above Society, was formally opened at Stamford Hill. This is the fourth Home of this Society, established in 1807, for giving life pensions to the aged Christian poor of every evangelical Protestant denomination. 1037 pensions are now on the books, and 170 are inmates of the Society's three homes. The address of the Society is—Finsbury-pavement, London, E.C.

DENOMINATIONALISM.

TO judge from the time, energy, and money expended upon its advocacy and maintenance, Denominationalism might be accounted one of the greatest advantages and excellences connected with the Christian religion. And yet, so far from this being the case, there is good ground for saying that it is one of the principal hindrances to the work of Christ, and a stumbling-stone in the way of salvation which causes the fall of many.

What is Denominationalism? It is the setting up some one or other of the many human interpretations put upon truths connected with our common Christianity as being of paramount importance, and making the ideas of the few concerning them to be a law for the many. It is the deliberate and active formation of sects and parties for the sake of upholding distinctive modes of thought, upon matters non-essential to salvation and in no way affecting union with Christ. It is dividing the body of Christ into severed parts for the sake of giving prominence to opinions which, however important they may appear to the individual conscience, have really no force outside its personal convictions. It is putting "isms" in the place of Christ, uniformity in the place of unity, allowing outward appearance to take precedence of spiritual life, and human theory to assert itself rather than the Divine Word.

That differences of opinion should prevail upon matters of faith and practice is of course inevitable under present conditions, although these are found to be far less marked and real than many people suppose, when in the spirit of Christ believers meet together and compare their differences one with the other. They are largely to be accounted for by the fact that denominational prejudices and influences have from earliest years inculcated them, and very slightly, in multitudes of cases, are they owing to the force of independent thought, prayerful conviction, and careful investigation.

Differences of opinion prevailed in the Apostolic era, but they were not allowed to occasion schism, or lead to division into separate bodies, bearing varied names, and acting upon wholly unconnected lines. The least approach to this was met with firmest rebuke and stern denunciation. Corinth furnishes an illustration of this familiar to us all: "For ye are yet carnal; for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men? while one saith I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not carnal?" When the Apostle says, "God hath tempered the body together . . . . that there should be no schism in the body," he does not refer to denominational bodies, but to the one body composed of all believers on the Lord Jesus Christ. Anything more opposed to the spirit of Him who said of his disciples, "One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren," than for those who build upon the one foundation to go off into rival parties and contending sects, cannot well be imagined. To let diverse views on water-baptism, outward forms of Church government, preferences for this or that human teacher, or any other secondary consideration, keep believers apart, and produce a state of things in which divided interests and sectarian policies stand in the way of hearty and united co-operation in the work of Christ, cannot be of Him whose great aim is to "gather together in one the children of God who are scattered abroad."

We know that the accretions of ages of uncharitableness and party strife have built up a strong tower of denominationalism; but the signs of the times point unmistakably to a lessening regard for mere outward forms and self-imposed standards of belief. Multitudes, to whom the faith of Christ is unspeakably precious, and by whom it is spiritually discerned, thirst for Christian union, as opposed to that which is merely denominational. Side by side with the growing impatience on the part of waverers, of anything like fixed principles and the definite avowal of them, which, in common with all right-minded men, we deplore, there is an equally strong feeling of impatience and distrust on the part of very many earnest Christians as to the prevailing spirit of denominational rivalry, which causes the friends of Christ to stand apart from each other, while his foes look on and say, not "See how these Christians love," but, "Behold, how unable they are to agree among themselves, and how impossible it is to know what is true in their creeds and what is not."

Meanwhile, the rationalism and semi-infidelity, which grow apace in the churches, together with increasing worldliness, political partisanship, and lack of spiritual life, which also prevail, make it harder than ever for those who are resolved to cleave to the old paths, and to maintain intact "the faith once delivered to the saints," to remain in fellowship with denominationalism in its present developments. What shall they do? They have principles which they hold dearer than life, they recognise the need of ministry, official and ordained, as appointed by Christ; they know that organised effort and visible unity are required and directed by the Spirit of God. They desire not confusion, but order; not discord and strife, but peace and love. Brethrenism, pure and lofty as its early conception and aim undoubtedly were, has proved a failure, so far as securing practical union is concerned. Its influence in arousing attention to neglected truths of Scripture has been immensely beneficial and greatly owned of God; but its lines of division and separation from the true followers of Christ who do not see eye to eye with them, although based on different ideas, are practically as intolerant and exclusive as those of other sections of the Christian Church. Brethrenism as a system offers no satisfactory solution of the difficulty.

But it is not a hopeless case for all that. A via media, a Scriptural point of unity, is surely to be found. A church is an assembly of believers gathered together not on the ground that all see everything in the same light, but that all hold the Head, and combine to do his work and help each other in his service. Faith in the Divine Redeemer, leading to spiritual union with Him, and devotion to his cause, is in itself ample ground for unity and co-operation. Other matters may safely be held personally rather than collectively, and where the spirit of Christ rules the heart and mind, may be mutually considered, not as bearing on Church unity but on individual faithfulness o the Word of God.

For this to be possible and practicable all that is needed is for each one to carry out the plain injunctions of the inspired Word, and to abound in the charity which is the bond of perfectness. Whereto believers have already attained, it surely ought not to be difficult for them to "walk by the same rule, and to mind the same thing," assured that so long as their eye is single, and their heart sincere, wherein they have not attained, or are not as yet of one mind, God will reveal it unto them. To bear and forbear, to edify one another, to differ without disagreement, ought not to be an impossibility with those who are the children of one Father, the servants of one Master, redeemed by one blood, and indwelt by the same Divine Spirit. Nor would it be were denominationalism got rid of, and the only name striven for and gloried in, that of our Lord Jesus Christ. There are churches and ministers of the type we plead for, they are continually and steadily increasing, and that they may be multiplied a thousandfold is our earnest prayer.

THE BIBLE IN GERMANY.

THE following incident took place during a late visit to Wiesbaden, and I think will be interesting to readers of The Christian:—"One morning, when passing a fruit stall, I found several women together and in tears. On asking the reason of their distress, I was told a man had just died on his way to the station. I said a few words on the uncertainty of life. One woman, coming to my side, said, 'I trust in the Lord.' Walking away with her I found, to my delight, that she read the Bible daily, 'ever since a Protestant had given it to me.' On visiting the woman I saw that, although she was a Roman Catholic, the Word of God had given the true light, and an earnest longing for Christ had sprung up in her soul.

I generally find a German Roman Catholic without a Bible, and always pleased to receive one. Mrs. Grimké's German Text-cards are so well received and give so much pleasure, that I advise all Christian travellers on the Continent to carry with them a supply. M. W. A. S.

REMINISCENCES OF THE LATE CHARLES STOVEL.

I OBSERVED in a recent issue of The Christian an account of the death of Rev. Charles Stovel. Whilst an apprentice at 32, Houndsditch, where I was placed fifty-five years since for seven years as a printer, I attended the Bible-class of Mr. Stovel, taught in his Sunday-school, and was one of the few admitted into his study. At the time he was living in Finsbury-circus. He has told me that his study, previous to being admitted into the Baptist College at Stepney, was in a bakehouse, where he kept his books, and acquired that information which afterwards made him "higher" in spiritual stature than many of his fellows.

This reference to his profession leads me to state that because he objected to work on the Sunday he could not procure a situation, and was compelled to break stones on the road, when his predecessor took him by the hand and introduced him to Stepney College. He was at first objected to, he looked "so stupid." His friend said, "If he falls down he can get up again," and, on the recommendation of his old minister, Mr. Stovel was admitted. His previous training in a bakehouse here told, and "he was pronounced to be one of the most efficient pupils ever turned out of the College."

On one occasion I heard him speak after the celebrated Dan O'Connell, M.P., at the London Tavern, and my impression was that Mr. Stovel made the better speech of the two, notwithstanding the eloquence of the Irish orator.

When on a geological research, he has been so enchanted, the only thing he wanted was someone to whom to tell his joy. He spoke with much pleasure of the enjoyment he had experienced, previously to his public ministry, expounding for a quarter of an hour the Scriptures, and engaging in prayer with those in whose house he was residing.

MEDICAL MISSIONARY WOMEN.—On the 31st October, a meeting of ladies was held at the Bible Society rooms, Edinburgh, at which Miss Lloyd, of the Missionary Institute, London, gave an address on the demand for ladies for the medical profession in India. The curriculum of a college training in medical missionary knowledge was also explained, and urged as requiring to be thorough for effectual work.

MINNIE AND HER KITTY "ROSY."

By Rev. E. P. HAMMOND.

Mahtomedi, White Bear Lake, Minn., U.S.A.

WHILE on my way to the shores of this beautiful lake, we spent a Sabbath at Chicago. I there fell in with an old friend, who related to me the following touching incident:—

He was riding one day on the railway; a lady came in at a station, accompanied by her little daughter, aged about seven years, who took the seat directly in front of him.

The little girl held carefully in her hand a basket, into which, after lifting the cover carefully, she occasionally peeped. This was done with a smiling face and a cheerful word, as if she recognised a friend inside. My friend stretched his neck and looked over the back of the seat, wondering what the little girl had in the basket. He also peered through the open lid. He asked, "What have you there, my little girl?"

"Oh, this is my little kitty."

"What will you take for your kitty?"

"Oh, I would not sell kitty for anything."

"I will give you a dollar for your kitten."

"No; I will not sell kitty for any money you can give me."

"What is your name?" asked my friend.

"My name is Minnie, and my kitty's name is Rosy."

"Do you go to Sunday-school, Minnie?"

"Oh, yes, indeed."

"Do you love Jesus, Minnie?"

"Yes, indeed, I do."

She then looked my friend full in the face, and asked, "Do you love Jesus, sir?"

"Certainly I do. I have loved Him and worked for Him many a year."

Little Minnie looked down thoughtfully for a few moments. Suddenly she lifted her basked over the back of her seat, and said, "You may have Rosy for nothing, because you love Jesus."

You see, little Minnie was a Christian; and though she loved her "Rosy," she loved Jesus and his friends far more; and when she saw my friend loved the Saviour, her heart went out in love to Him. She was willing to make a great sacrifice to give Him pleasure.

Do you, my little reader, love Jesus? Do you love his people? I can tell you that Jesus has died on the cross, in your place, that you might be saved. He loves you.

Oh, come, then, to Jesus, and give Him your heart and get your sins forgiven, and you will then love Him and love his people as little Minnie did.

I have found some men and women away here in the North-west, near St. Paul, who, when I was here twenty years ago, gave their hearts to Christ, and they have never been sorry for it."

THE GIRLS OF SOUTHWARK.—For more than a year and a half we have been working among them on the lines of "The Young Women's Help Society." We have rooms in the Borough where classes are held almost every night. Bible-classes, reading, writing, arithmetic, and needlework classes. Girls can also board and lodge there and have dinners and teas at a cheap rate. Help is greatly needed for current expenses. It is necessary, too, that the rooms should be made cheerful and attractive, and we sadly want a piano. We fear that if we do not get efficient help we shall have to close our rooms. Part of our work is getting situations for the girls.

THE PEOPLE OF MOROCCO.—1.

By Mr. Wm. MACINTOSH.

THE North-west of Africa is the nearest point to England beyond the continent of Europe, not only of the great continent of Africa itself, but of any part of the world outside Christendom. And if anyone wishes to see for himself degraded heathen darkness and thraldom clad in the dress of African Moslemism, so that his eye may affect his heart (Jer. ix. 1), it is by no means necessary to make a tour of months to India or Japan, nor even to Central Africa. Let him take ship at Plymouth, and in from the shores of favoured England he will be on Moorish soil, where, although the people are nominally Moslems, he will witness among the masses an amount of degradation, ignorance, and superstition, equal to, if not surpassing, those of actual professed heathenism, and affecting in the most lamentable manner both the soul and body. There he will find as literally as anywhere in the world, "Sheep without a Shepherd," and if it be "the sick" that "need the physician," then it is no longer necessary to go to distant China and pass by near Morocco in order to find them, nor will it be following the great Physician's example to fix on the one because it is heathen and pass by the other because it is Moslem. Let any one of us enter a Moorish town, and especially one of the country fairs that are held in succession at different places during every day of the week—take for example, the one held outside the walls of Tangier every Thursday and Sunday, and see if the masses gathered there from the surrounding country do not exhibit, spiritually and physically, a spectacle of human degradation and misery, pitiable in the extreme and sorrowful to behold, that may well attract the sympathy and awaken the efforts of the followers of Him who came to "seek and to save the lost."

Mohammedanism, like the other religions that depend, in the case of their converts, on something short of a vital and total change of heart and life by the pure and all-powerful creating Spirit of God, is satisfied with a mere change of name and external formula of a creed, while the stock remains the same as it ever was. Thus it is, that while it has professed to convert heathens, the conversion in the mass has been practically only from the idea of a plurality of gods to that of one god, while to a great extent the vice and superstition of a heathen life have been left unchanged and unchecked, to grow and flourish side by side with a germ of truth, the Unity of God. "They feared the Lord, and served their own gods, after the manner of the nations whom they carried away from thence" (2 Kings xvii. 33).

Let us visit some of the fairs I have referred to, and see "the serpent charmers" charming the crowds of poor Moors, covered with filth and rags, that surround them, with their base and disgusting performances, and the diabolical-looking "sorcerers," with an assembly nearly as numerous, lost in wonder and admiration at their deceptions, and the "story-tellers," in the midst of their audiences, being applauded at the rehearsal of the most

CORRUPT AND LYING STORIES.

And all these depraved deceivers of the people the religion of the country countenances, and in no way would attempt to counteract their evil teaching. But, on the contrary, you may be present another day at still more hideous spectacles than those to be witnessed at the fairs, enacted on special feast days in the very name of religion. They are to be seen at processions, conducted in memory of the birth, death, or deeds of some of their famous so-called "saints," in the case of many of whom the only title to saintship has been their depravity and cruelty.

At these processions, crowds assemble from different parts of the country, many of whom feign madness for the day, while others have been really wild and degraded maniacs for years. In the course of their march they frequently stop, form a circle of 30 or 40 men in the middle of the road, including the half-naked madmen; and with long, dishevelled hair, and foaming mouths, go through the most repulsive and unmeaning ceremonies, throwing their heads first forward and then backward in quick succession, and, altogether, with a loud and hideous grunt and with the greatest violence, so the bystanders wonder that their necks are not broken and their heads thrown off their bodies. This ceremony is continued with horrid and debasing monotony, until the crowd is tired of looking at them. Then they pass on a hundred yards and do exactly the same over again. This ceremony is repeated at intervals many times along the road, and is continued during the greater part of the day, only varied by scenes still more degraded, such as that of a live sheep being laid hold of, thrown up in the air, seized by the maddened performers, who tear it in pieces like tigers; and while reeking in its blood, they devour it on the spot. In short, I defy the black heathen of inner Africa to excel many of the Moslems of Morocco in the performance of deeds of heathenish and satanic baseness. And, worst of all, is the countenance shown them by rulers and men high in authority, from whom better things might be expected. The inference is, that Moslems and the Koran will allow or connive at any degree of barbarism and iniquity, if only the mere formula or letter of their creed is admitted.

We shall not speak of the abominations of slavery, divorce, and bribery, with all their concomitants. But if we can only imagine what a state of society these, and such like rites and customs betoken, to which the people have been slaves for centuries, sinking each year deeper in the mire, who shall say, that if it be "the sick" that "need the physician," he is not needed there? Surely if ever the most debased idolaters required the heralds of Christ to instruct and lead them from darkness to light, they are needed as much there! and if the fact of nations of heathen being bound by Satan in chains o darkness, misery, and vice, has moved the Christian Church to heart-felt pity, persevering prayer and vigorous action, is it not time that nations of Moslems so long neglected, though equally deceived and bound by Satan, should do so likewise?

SERMON LANE, ISLINGTON.

THE anniversary of this Mission was held on the 15th inst., when Mr. Attridge preached to crowded congregations, the Lord giving blessing with his Word in the conversion of souls. The following evening a tea was given to about 200 poor, when addresses were given recounting the mercies of the Lord during the fifteen years of toil. Men and women of the most degraded class have been rescued from lives of sin and shame, and the Temperance movement has also flourished in no small degree. Free breakfasts, teas, and soup dinners are means by which the poor are helped, and the Gospel preached to them. About £400 a year is necessary for carrying on this work, and the address of the superintendent is Mr. George Fuller, 54, Liverpool-road, Islington.

Messrs. Moody & Sankey in London.

THE meetings at the Priory Hall, during the past week, have been full of power by the Spirit of the Lord, and last Sunday commenced the second week with a still rising tide. The address in the morning to Christian workers was well calculated to encourage the many rather than to exalt the few. It was based on God's question to Moses: "What is that in thy hand?" and showed that whatever we have, however mean or weak, may be the means, in God's hands, of doing the mightiest works. It brought the plagues on Pharaoh, divided the Red Sea, brought water from the rock. The same helpful lesson to one-talent people was enforced by abundant quaint and graphic illustrations, from Shamgar's ox goad, the widow's pot of oil, the Galilean fishermen, and numerous others from the Old and New Testaments.

The meeting for non-churchgoers was largely attended by the class desired. That in the afternoon for women, and especially that at night for men, were seasons of mighty influence for good. At the latter Mr. Moody read the Commandments from Exodus xx., and took for his text "Tekel—weighed in the balances and found wanting." As he put in each commandment as a weight into the one scale and invited his audience one by one to step into the other, all degrees of Pharisaism were witheringly denounced. Hundreds of men stood up at the close desiring prayer, and it was very evident that sins present and past had been set in array before the startled conscience, and very many it is hoped turned from sin to righteousness and from Satan to God.

Referring to the report which had appeared in The Pall Mall Gazette, and which will be found in another column, Mr. Moody said: "I am so glad the reporter perceived that the power was not in the preacher. No one can report the Holy Ghost. Suppose a reporter had been sent to take down Peter's sermon at Cæsarea, he would have said, perhaps, 'There was not much of it. All that is recorded might have been said in three minutes. And there was very little in it. Just a few particulars about Jesus of Nazareth. There were plenty of men in Jerusalem and in Cæsarea that could have made a much better sermon.' But what would have astonished him was that while Peter yet spake, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the Word. It is the power we are after; let us look for the old power. Peter's sermon at Pentecost, they might have said, was mostly out of the Old Testament; but the power came, and three thousand souls were added to the Church that day. Now we have come together to pray for that same power on all the meetings this week."

Then Mr. Sankey sang Miss Havergal's glorious hymn, "Tell it out," and Mr. Moody read Exodus iv. 2, and spoke one of the most thrilling addresses we ever listened to.

It was, no doubt, in the providence of God that the reporter from the Pall Mall Gazette should have heard a sermon which, while it enforced the need and explained the way of salvation, did not grip the conscience as that on the previous evening had done, when the subject was, "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap;" nor had it the pathos of the following evening, when the prodigal son was brought home to the father's house; nor did it bristle with points like the address to non-churchgoers on Sunday morning. It was well that a secular paper should make known the fact that after such a poor sermon, as he thought, there was an impression, affecting several persons to tears; leading to earnest conversation as to the way of a full salvation; an amount of feeling which puzzled and bewildered him; which was an insoluble mystery, leading him to ask, "What is the secret of this impression? Why all this feeling? What is the meaning of it? Why does such a result follow, when appeals apparently infinitely more effective leave hearers untouched? What is the rationale of it? Where is the clue to this disproportionate effect produced by such inadequate means?" Could any more wise reply have been given, or one more happily expressed, than that by Mr. Sankey, of whom these inquiries were made: "I cannot explain it, nor can you. Behind all instrumentalities, feeble or mighty, there lies an inscrutable something which influences the soul of man. We call it the Spirit of God." "But its laws, its secret?" "The wind bloweth where it listeth."

Yes, thank God, that wind is blowing here in London. We hear the sound thereof; we know it comes from God; we know it goes to the hearts of men. May all God's children be very attentive to hear it, and to place themselves on a line with its beneficent influence, and they will be used to breathe into other souls this Breath of God.

And yet there will, perhaps, a year hence be found some one who will say, "I don't believe in this wildfire; it does no good; I've seen no benefit come out of it." Let this objector read the experience of one who said something of the same kind eight years ago.

Minister.—"I don't like this thing; there is too much excitement. And what does it all come to? I have not had one addition to my church."

Worker.—"Let me ask, when these meetings were announced to be held in your locality, did you call your people together to pray that God would make them a blessing to your friends and neighbours?"

M.—"No: I can't say I did."

W.—"When they commenced did you go to them, stay to the after-meetings, and endeavour to lead one inquiring or troubled soul to Christ?"

M.—"No; I was too busy; my hands were full of my own special work."

W.—"When they were over did you then ask your congregation to pray that blessing might follow?"

M.—"Ah, I see where I have been wrong! I'll never speak against this work again." And not only so; that minister was one of those who recently united in the invitation to which the present visit is a response.

Another case occurred of which we do not so particularly know the issue.

A clergyman, who thought himself in some way slighted, spoke disparagingly of the evangelists in the hearing of his bishop. But the latter said, "My brother, may it not be that God has sent these men among us, and that if we oppose them we may be found fighting against God? Let us rather pray for them. Do you lead us in prayer." And bishop and clergy knelt down in the church (where they were), and the offended brother prayed for the evangelists and their work. And having asked God to bless them, surely he could not afterward lightly speak evil of them.

An old and venerable clergyman was rather disposed to hold aloof, and being asked to identify himself with the work, said, "No; he was too old." Being asked to pray, he excused himself on account of his bad throat. But the following Thursday his heart was warmed by finding his church full, and not unnaturally he was again found at the evangelistic meetings, and had no difficulty this time in leading the congregation in prayer and thanksgiving.

The possible objector of the future may save himself much present discomfort and after regret, and may, on the contrary, enjoy much present blessing and future reward, by laying these incidents to heart.

Among the incidents of last Sunday this may be mentioned: A lady asked a widowed mother to go to the meeting, and the latter objected that she could not go without her baby, and could not hear if she took it. The friend replied that she would sit by her, attend to the child, and take all the responsibility of it. Accordingly, friend, mother, and baby were seated right before Mr. Moody, three rows from the platform.

In due time baby tuned up; the lady nursed it, dandled it, stood up and rocked it in her arms, and at last took it out, leaving the mother absorbed in the sermon, and so touched by the kindness that she remained to the after-meeting, and it was hoped yielded herself there to Christ.

It is also pleasing to know that several young ladies have promised to receive and take care of, at a neighbouring crèche, the babies of a number of mothers who have expressed a desire to go to the meetings. This is a little bit of practical Christianity, which will bless the givers no less than the receivers of the benefit. We mention it in the hope that the example will be followed in other places.

Much more might be written about the striking aspects of the meetings at the Priory Hall during the past week. As we have so often described these wonderful gatherings on former occasions, we prefer in our present issue to give, instead, the following extracts from two of our contemporaries representing between them the secular and religious Press. It is a token for good that a journal of such high standing and influence as The Pall Mall Gazette should give prominence to the work that is now going on in our midst:—

FROM "THE PALL MALL GAZETTE."

Cultured society would blush to know anything about Messrs. Moody and Sankey and others of their tribe. Revivalism in general, and American revivalism in particular, is desperately vulgar. But unfortunately, the same might be said with equal truth of every popular movement, religious and irreligious, of all time. Almost every religion has its origin among men of low degree, and the sons of fishermen and carpenters who create or revive the faiths and superstitions of mankind are, as a rule, very objectionable persons in the estimation of the men of light and leading of their time. It is only when the first fervour of the new faith begins to cool and its vitality to disappear, that polite society condescends to investigate its origin and to study the phenomena, psychological or otherwise, which it presents. The enchantment of distance renders it possible for self-respecting sons of culture to study after the lapse of a century religious revivals which to their contemporaries were too vulgar to be noticed except with a passing sneer.

It is somewhat irrational, however, to subject the scoriæ and lava of extinct volcanoes to the most minute analysis, while craters in full eruption are treated as non-existent. Nor can a plain man see the sense of poring over dreary tomes describing the enthusiasm of some preaching friars of the Middle Ages, usually exceedingly dirty, and as bigoted as they were vulgar, while the labours of such latter day friars as the American Revivalists who have now pitched their tent—in this case a portable iron building capable of holding 5000 persons—in the north of London are disregarded. Moody and Sankey are not, it is true, graduates of any university. They are men of the people, speaking the language and using the methods, not of the refined but of the generality. Yet they have probably left a deeper impress of their individuality upon one great section of Englishmen and Englishwomen than any other persons who could be named. Whatever we may think of them, however much their methods may grate upon the susceptibilities of those who have at length succeeded in living up to their blue china, these men are a factor of considerable potency in the complex sum of influences which make up contemporary English life. As such they merit more attention than they have hitherto received from the organs of public opinion, and for that reason a full account of the American Revivalists and of their services last night, which we publish in another part of the paper, may be studied with interest by some of our readers, and passed over, let us hope without too great a shock to their feelings, by the rest.

The following is the account of Wednesday evening's meeting referred to:—"A more dismal night never settled down upon London than that through which some five thousand men and women found their way under dripping umbrellas to the great iron tabernacle which has been reared in Upper-street, Islington, for the accommodation of Messrs. Moody and Sankey and their audiences. A dense fog filled the streets, through which the lighted shop windows gleamed like a long luminous bar, from the fog distilled a drizzling rain, which in time filled all the hollows in the pavement with muddy pools, through which a stream of pedestrians splashed steadily towards Priory Hall. The tramcars and omnibuses, lumbering with steaming horses up from the City and down from the higher regions, halted to empty their contingents at the entrance gates, and then rumbled away into the darkness. Joining the stream and showing tickets to the guardians at the gates, entrance was soon gained to one of the most spacious and commodious hearing-places in London—architectual pretensions it boasts none.

"At half-past seven the spacious arena was half filled. Stewards with long wands of office were flitting about here and there. Dimly, through the fog-obscured expanse, there could be seen a well-filled platform, where a choir was singing softly one of Sankey's hymns. The building—a roofed-in wilderness of chairs—accommodates five thousand persons. It is not a bad place to hear in, if by good luck you can face the speaker, under the central span of the roof. Those who sit either to the right or the left catch his words imperfectly, for even the singing of the choir is marred by the curious acoustic effect produced by the triple roof. The bass voices seem to be separated from the treble, and the result is sometimes very unpleasing.

"Mr. Moody is shown standing beside the American organ at which Mr. Sankey is usually seated, for Mr. Sankey both leads the singing and accompanies himself on this instrument, which they prefer above any other. The spacious platform is crowded with a choir made up from all the neighbouring churches and chapels, with the exception of the Unitarians and the Catholics. Churchmen and Dissenters are united in support of the Revivalists; and clergymen and Dissenting ministers sit to the right and left of Mr. Moody. The bare spaces on the walls were filled in with texts in red capitals. For instance, to the right and left of Mr. Moody were the following inscriptions:—

Now then we are	We pray you
Ambassadors for Christ	In Christ's Stead,
As though God did	Be ye Reconciled to God.
Beseech you by Us.	God is Love.

The rain was pouring in heavy showers upon the corrugated iron roof, making itself heard very distinctly whenever there was a lull in the singing, but all the while the stream of men and women—the sexes were about equally represented, and children were remarkable by their absence—kept pouring into the building, until by eight o'clock every seat was filled. It was a great sight, that vast expanse of upturned faces, gazing intently through the misty hall at the platform on which Mr. Moody had at length taken his stand. The audience was much more remarkable than the speaker.

"Mr. Moody is as unlike an ideal apostle as it is possible for any man to be. He is stout and thick-set, with a broad chest, a hairy face, the beard grizzling slightly. His manner is brusque, his voice harsh, and his delivery irregular and singularly unimpressive. He opened the service by giving out the hymn of 'Guide me, O Thou great Jehovah,' a well-known psalm tune. The great congregation joined in it with heartiness and fervour, and the effect of the great volume of sound ringing through the misty air was very impressive. After the singing, the Rev. S. Hutchinson, curate of St. Mary's, offered an extempore prayer. Islington, it may be remarked in passing, is entirely given over to the evangelicals. There is in not one Ritualist in the district, said one of the stewards proudly. After prayer, the congregation sang, sitting, the hymn, 'Come to the Saviour, make no delay.' Then Mr. Sankey, with considerable sweetness and effect, sang the hymn beginning:—

> 'Man of Sorrows, what a name,
> For the Son of God who came,
> Ruined sinners to reclaim.
> Hallelujah, what a Saviour!'

The doors were then closed, the great expanse of the hall being entirely filled. A Wesleyan minister, the Rev. S. Caine, then prayed at somewhat greater length than is customary at these meetings, and he had hardly said 'Amen,' before Mr. Moody gave out 'Hymn 361,' the elision of 'and's' and 'the's' being as noticeable as the nasal twang with which the words were pronounced.

"Mr. Sankey, who, despite the excessive strain to which he has subjected his voice, with much force and feeling sang as a solo the hymn beginning—'A ruler once came to Jesus by night.' When the last refrain had died away Mr. Moody announced forthcoming meetings. Tickets were issued to give the sinners a chance of hearing the Gospel. But for them the converted, from all parts of London, would crowd the hall, leaving no room for the unconverted, whom it was his special desire to reach, Bible-reading, lectures, prayer-meetings, would be held every afternoon—as many as 3000 persons had been that present that afternoon. All tickets had been exhausted for the evening meetings of Friday and Saturday. There would be four services on Sunday; one especially intended for non-churchgoers, and from which the regular attendants were specially urged to absent themselves. 'I had my suspicions last Sunday,' said Mr. Moody; 'you sang too well to be non-churchgoers.'

"'Except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God,' was the theme upon which Mr. Moody delivered an harangue which puzzled one more than ever. Why five thousand people should come through fog and rain into a bleak and misty hall to listen to such a discourse was inexplicable. Yet there the people were, listening intently to every word of the speaker, some of them touched with deep emotion, all respectfully attentive. After it was over three thousand of them lingered another half hour, and when that meeting was closed some six hundred or seven hundred 'workers, young converts, and anxious inquirers' remained behind till nearly eleven o'clock. From every point of view, except the supreme one of effect upon the audience, Mr. Moody's remarks were most disappointing. Alike in style, manner, matter, there was nothing in them superior to what might be heard in any meeting-house.

"If the meeting had terminated there, although I should have been puzzled to account for the immense crowd that had gone out into the wilderness on such a night to hear so poor a sermon, it might have been regarded as a mere mistake. But the after-meeting rendered the mystery much more insoluble. Three thousand persons stayed for another half-hour, during which Mr. Moody made a brief and not ineffective appeal to surrender the Will, which alone barred the way to forgiveness and reconciliation. Mr. Sankey sang several verses, and the meeting was bowed in silent prayer for some minutes. Then the bulk of the congregation departed, but six hundred or seven hundred remained behind. The marvellous thing was that no small proportion of these appeared to be deeply impressed. Several were weeping; many were engaged in earnest conversation with the workers. Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey went among the various groups, encouraging the workers and speaking a word to the inquirers. Clergymen and laymen, Bible in hand, expounded the doctrine of instantaneous justification and assurance of a full salvation to seekers on every side. Everything was strangely quiet and still. There was nothing audible but the subdued murmur of many voices, the rustle of Bible leaves as the spiritual director turned from promise to promise to furnish fresh assurances of forgiveness. It was very strange. The effect seemed to be produced without any commensurate cause.

"In bewilderment I sought out Mr. Sankey. 'Tell me,' I said, 'what is the secret of this impression?' 'We have no secret,' he replied. 'But,' I asked, 'why all this feeling? I seldom, if ever, heard a sermon so singularly unimpressive. I can understand people being touched by your singing and the inspiration of a great assembly uniting in praise and prayers, but that any mortal man should be stirred by Mr. Moody's discourse is to me an inscrutable mystery.' 'Yet,' said Mr. Sankey, 'it is a fact.' 'So I see, but what is the meaning of it? Why does such a result follow, when appeals apparently infinitely more effective leave hearers untouched? What is the rationale of it? Where is the clue to this disproportionate effect produced by such inadequate means?' Mr. Sankey answered, 'I cannot explain it; nor can you. Behind all instrumentalities, feeble or mighty, there lies an inscrutable something which influences the soul of man. We call it the Spirit of God. Beyond that we cannot go.' 'But its laws, its secret?' 'The wind bloweth where it listeth,' said Mr. Sankey, and with that answer I had to be content."

FROM "THE RECORD."

The return of Mr. Moody and his comrade Mr. Sankey to London will bring vividly to many memories the wonderful gatherings in the Agricultural Hall and Her Majesty's Theatre eight years and a half ago. A good many movements more or less similar have competed for public notice since then. But we have never seen meetings of sixteen thousand people since the 9th of May, 1875, when Mr. Moody made his final appeal to the vast crowd that thronged floor and galleries at the Agricultural Hall. The question has often been asked, Where are the visible results of that great Mission? Has the face of London at all changed? But the question is not a reasonable one. We might fairly rejoin, What are the visible results of the labours of the three or four thousand preachers who have had the ear of the metropolis for the past eight years? Why should the test be applied to one man only? The fact is, that London is too immense for any impression not miraculous to be visible. If one thousand persons were ranged in a row down Oxford-street, and if one individual among them all could be pointed out as having been turned from sin to righteousness during the Mission of 1875, and if from every other thousand souls in London one could be taken in the same way, that would amount to more than three thousand converts; yet who would notice them on the surface of London life, amid the three thousand times nine hundred and ninety-nine who, ex hypothesi, remained uninfluenced?

But those who have kept their eyes and ears open know well that Mr. Moody was permitted to effect a result much larger than could be be measured by a number of individual converts. His friends have not been in the habit of blazoning forth the facts that are within their knowledge. Here a Mission preacher may be moving from parish to parish, and be made the bearer of salvation to many souls; but few if any of them are aware that the plan for releasing that messenger of the Gospel from parochial ties of his own was Mr. Moody's plan. There an eloquent clergyman may be ministering to a large and devout congregation who little dream that their pastor owes all his usefulness, under God, to a word from the American evangelist. Here again may be an institution in which are gathered large numbers of young girls, who are thus brought under Christian influence and many of them won for Christ; but who remembers that the whole work dates from 1875? Once more, here may be a church whose communion services may be thronged by young people, brought to confirmation, perhaps, by agencies that sprang from Mr. Moody's Mission. We put the cases hypothetically, but we are not writing at random; and we must express our profound conviction that few men are more entitled to the gratitude of the Church of England in particular than the two evangelists who have now been once more welcomed to London. Mr. Moody said on Sunday morning that he had personally met with the fruits of the London work of 1875 in almost every place he had since visited, both in Europe and America; but we need not go beyond the metropolitan area itself to find reasons to thank God for that work.

Mr. Moody is not seeking only for vast assemblies, but for audiences of manageable size that can really hear him, and that he can get thoroughly into his grasp. The meetings are carefully "ticketed;" that is, tickets are issued for particular evenings and distributed through the clergy and ministers of the district, with a view to reaching the poor of the neighbourhood, especially non-churchgoers, and not mere visitors from other parts of London; and the same plan will be followed in the different suburbs in each of which he is to pitch his tent for a fortnight. It is clear that the object is not to create a sensation, but to get at individual souls; and after seeing the commencement of the work last Sunday, we are not surprised to hear that Mr. Moody has expressed an opinion that not one of his now numerous Missions in various places has opened more promisingly.

The most striking feature of the gatherings is their perfect quietness; and whatever may be thought of Mr. Moody's plan of calling upon "inquirers" to stand up, to "just rise" in their places and sit down again, and of audibly counting those who do so, no one can complain of any want of solemnity, reverence, or simplicity. Mr. Moody, at the early meeting on Sunday, boldly defended religious "excitement," but assuredly he does not aim at producing its external manifestations. Very marked, also, is the absence of anything that the fastidious critic can fairly call "rant." Fervent appeals to the conscience there are, but they are the appeals of a reasonable man to reasonable men; and those little human touches—if we may so call them—those references to mothers and to children which seem to go straight to the sympathetic feelings of the meeting, are of the most natural, unaffected, and unpretending character. On Monday night, for example, when a crying baby just in front of Mr. Moody seemed likely to prove a real difficulty unless it was at once taken out, he stopped and had one verse of a hymn sung, directing that during the singing any mothers with babies should change seats and get to the chairs next the gangways, and should, if necessary, walk quietly up and down the gangway, and lull the offender to sleep; "and mind," he exclaimed "that four or five hundred of you don't look round and frown at them! Mothers with babies and no nurses at home are just the non-churchgoers we want!' It was with evident difficulty that the meeting refrained from bursting into enthusiastic applause. But they did refrain; and here let us observe that although an irrepressible ripple of laughter is sometimes produced, it is the laughter of pleased sympathy, and does not seem in the least to mar the real solemnity and devotional tone of the service.

As to Mr. Moody's preaching, his voice and utterance are as rough and uncouth as ever. But his message, too, is the same—the plain, straightforward, unadorned message, "Be ye reconciled to God." Surprisingly free is it from the onesidedness and want of balance sometimes so noticeable in evangelistic addresses. The first two evening services presented a striking example of this. "Repent ye and believe the Gospel," was the text: the first clause taken on Sunday and the second on Monday. No more solemn call to repentance, surely, was ever uttered. Those who think Mr. Moody preaches too easy a religion should have heard that address, given intentionally and avowedly first. And then the absolute freedom of the Gospel offer of pardon and life, proclaimed with the most winning simplicity on Monday, came in its proper place, and made one exclaim, Yes, that is complete, totus, teres, atque rotundus.

The singing, of course, still occupies a conspicuous place; indeed, a more conspicuous one, we think, than before. The service proper lasts one hour; and on some occasions certainly half the time has been given to the hymns. The area of choice is much widened by the use of the larger book; and there is a happy mingling of the old familiar strains of 1875 with the generally more elaborate but not less attractive "later" songs. We doubt whether Mr. Sankey's singing, as singing, is quite what it was; but his enunciation of the words is clearer than ever, and if the truths he declares in song are more prominent than formerly, and his own part in declaring them less so, no one, we imagine, is better pleased than himself.

We feel bound to express our thankfulness for the past work of the two evangelists, both in London eight years ago, and in many other parts of the United Kingdom since, and our pleasure at their return to the capital. We hope that the evangelical clergy in the various districts to be visited will give their active and ungrudging co-operation to the movement. The Church of England, and the cause of Christ in this land, has everything to gain and nothing to lose by its success; and we wish it God-speed with all our heart.

MEETING OF MINISTERS.

A largely attended and enthusiastic meeting of clergy and ministers in sympathy with the work was held at the Priory Hall last Monday morning, when testimony was given as to the blessing that has accompanied the meetings. One after another spoke of the classes being reached. One said he had personally spoken to fourteen not one of whom had been in church or chapel for years. As to results, another clergyman said he had at his own home been engaged from seven to eleven on Saturday with callers anxious about their souls. Another clergyman said he had so many callers at his house, that he had been obliged to engage an extra servant.

One worker said he had been to nearly all the public-houses in the neighbourhood to invite the people to the meetings; he wore an extra wide blue ribbon, so that there could be no mistake about his intentions. Another had persuaded eighty persons to leave the public-houses and attend the meetings in one night. It is a very interesting fact that several large employers of young men and women in the district have made a free distribution of tickets among those in their employ. One friend stated that he had given a number of tickets to men and induced them to accompany him to the meeting. They reached the hall only to find it was full and no admission could be had. The men, instead of being annoyed, were much impressed by the fact of such crowds coming out to a Gospel meeting.

RESCUE WORK IN CAMBERWELL.—A home for the reception of penitent girls has lately been opened at 15, Fearnley-road, Camberwell, S.E. The prayers and practical sympathy of our readers are desired for this fresh and greatly needed effort to rescue the perishing. We are requested to say that a little book of poems, entitled "Heart Musings," will be sold at the reduced price of 1s. for the benefit of this Home. Copies may be had from the Authoress, Miss L. Backler, Norland, Champion-park, Denmark-hill, S.E.

"TELL JESUS."*

By GEORGIANA M. TAYLOR.

WHEN thou wakest in the morning,
Ere thou tread the untried way
Of the lot that lies before thee
Through the coming busy day;
Whether sunbeams promise brightness,
Whether dim forebodings fall,
Be thy dawning glad or gloomy,
Go to Jesus—tell Him all!

In the calm of sweet communion
Let thy daily work be done;
In the peace of soul outpouring
Care be banished, patience won;
And if earth with its enchantments
Seek thy spirit to enthral,
Ere thou listen—ere thou answer
Turn to Jesus—tell Him all!

Then as hour by hour glides by thee,
Thou wilt blessèd guidance know,
Thine own burdens being lightened,
Thou canst bear another's woe;
Thou canst help the weak ones onward,
Thou canst raise up those that fall:
But remember, while thou servest,
Still tell Jesus—tell Him all!

And if weariness creep o'er thee
As the day wears to its close,
Or if sudden fierce temptation
Bring thee face to face with foes:
In thy weakness, in thy peril,
Raise to heaven a trustful call;
Strength and calm for every crisis
Come—in telling Jesus all.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.

IT is no small mercy that someone thinks of railway men, who, alas! are very much employed on the Lord's Day. The Railway Signal, published at 186, Aldersgate, E.C., gives very interesting accounts of real evangelistic work done among railway employés by Mr. George Clarke and others. In this month's number of that paper we find a pathetic appeal for £700 to complete £1700, £300 of which has been collected by the men and their families towards the building required at Westbourne Park, the present one being crowded out. It says:—

"Fancy in London, that hard city, that place renowned for empty churches and chapels, seeing people starting one hour before the service, so that a seat or standing room could be secured. At 6.45 the preacher arrives, and finds the place packed every corner full, and every seat occupied, and a number of disappointed men and women outside. 'Can't you find room for me, sir? I have come all the way from Willesden, says one. Another, 'I have my brother with me, and he does not know Jesus; please get him in, sir.' Still another: 'Please, Mr. Tom —— my mate has been anxious all the week; he is here; can't you find him a seat?' What are we to do? The people still come, until perhaps one hundred have been turned away, and still it is not time to commence the service. Some go to the Church of England, others to the Wesleyans, others to Golburn Hall, still more to Kensal Hall and Sutherland Gardens, and yet a large number stand outside. What shall we do for them? Many are unsaved, and want to hear the Gospel.

"But perhaps some will say, How have the railway men collected £300? Well, one woman gives from her little earnings at mangling, 8s. 6d.; another has a small pension, and hands us 13s. 6d; a guard on the Metropolitan Railway, £12 5s.; a guard on the G. W. Railway, £42; his wife, £5 3s.; a little child, daughter of a guard, who has asked for pennies, gives 8s. 7d.; and so we could go on, but it makes our heart cry aloud with joy to see what is done, and bleed to see what could be done."

HINTS FOR THE INQUIRY ROOM—3.

Addressed to Christian Workers by

Mr. GEORGE SOLTAU.

"HEARING AND ASKING THEM QUESTIONS."

"The preparations of the heart in man and the answer of the tongue, is from the Lord."—Prov. xvi. 1.

MANY workers find some difficulty in knowing how to begin a conversation. Such questions as "Are you a Christian?" "Is your soul saved?" "Have you found the Lord?" are somewhat abrupt, and may have the effect of repelling the inquirer. Just as a medical man, when he calls to see a patient, leads up to the special questions as to the suffering and illness, so with tender sympathy the Christian should lead up to the close enquiry as to the state of the soul of the anxious one. It is a good plan to commence with questions suggested by the text of the address, or by the closing appeal made by the speaker, or by an allusion to the closing hymn.

Amongst the replies to pointed questions about the safety of the soul, the following will probably be frequent:—

(1) "I hope I am saved. I am doing the best I can. What more can I do?"

Instead of at once attempting to show that the hope is vain, and that nothing has to be done for salvation, it may be well to ask such questions as these:—

How long have you been hoping to be saved? What first aroused your mind as to the necessity of being saved? When did you begin to do your best? How have you been getting on? Are you satisfied with yourself? How many sins have you overcome? Who told you to do your best? Have you any text that enjoins it? When will you have attained to the standard of holiness that God requires? Do you know what God requires? He requires a perfect likeness to Jesus his blessed Son. Here is the description of Him, Heb. vii. 26: "He was holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners." Are you like Him?

Inquirer may reply, "But I am not worse than most people, and better than a great many." "But you admit you owe a certain amount to God that you cannot pay? a debt of sin has been contracted?" "Yes."

With this admission turn to Luke vii. 41, 42, and explain the parable of the two debtors. Let the inquirer be the fifty-pence debtor, the Christian worker the 500-pence debtor, and point out the meaning of the words "nothing to pay." If the inquirer brings up the text Phil. ii. 11, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling," as an argument for "doing one's best," turn to the passage, and read, "For it is God that worketh in you," and show how it is impossible to work out what God has not first worked in; that He gives forgiveness of sin, and the Holy Spirit, for this very purpose, thus enabling the saved sinner to work for Him, and manifest the salvation received.

Another line of conversation may be found useful. Put the question, "How much time do you spend in religious exercises during the week? and how much in business, or family affairs?" Suggest the desirability of reversing the order of things, and devoting to the interests of the soul for the next month the time hitherto spent in business, &c., and to the affairs of ordinary life the time hitherto spent in spiritual things, pointing out how such a process would lead to bankruptcy and confusion. If the soul is of more importance than the body, how utterly vain and futile must the efforts be for its salvation. Do not encourage the inquirer to "keep on trying," as is so often done. Note carefully Rom. x. 3. Having knocked away all the props of self-righteousness, and convinced the soul of its need, put God's way of dealing with sin before the inquirer.

(2) "I put my trust in the Almighty, He is very merciful." When you hear the expression "the Almighty," be very sure the person using it knows nothing of the character of God, or of the heinousness of sin. Inquire, "What promise of God are you trusting? What do you know of his Mercy? Has He forgiven your sins? Has He accepted you?" Answers in the negative to these questions will enable you to point out that the inquirer is trusting in his feelings, prayers, good character, &c., rather than in God."

"But I shouldn't like to presume to say I was saved; none can tell that till they come to die!" To such an observation, reply, "Suppose, when you come to die, after doing your best, you find you have made some great mistake, and you are all wrong, and there is no time to get anything put right, what will you do? It is presumption to flatly contradict what God says, and He plainly declares that we may know we are saved, and have eternal life." (See John iii. 16, 36; v. 24.)

(3) "How am I to know that Jesus died for me?" Turning to Rom. iii. 11, "They have all gone out of the way," ask the inquirer, "Is this true?" "Yes." "Then you have gone out of the way?" "Yes." Again, Is. liii. 6, "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned everyone to his own way." "Is that true?" "Yes." "Then you have gone out of the way?" "Yes." "And you have turned to your own way?" "Yes." "How far have you gone from God in your own way? As far as you could get?" "Yes." Now change the words all we for the word I, and read the verse again, concluding, "and the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of . . . . Whom?" "Did Jesus die for you?" "You have no right to cut this verse in two, believing that the first part that condemns you is true, and that the last clause that would save you is not true."

It is important with this class of inquirers to very clearly put before them that the Lord knew those whose sins He was bearing on the cross—that his eye looked down the future as well as back on the past, and that He then was fully aware for whom He was suffering (John xvii. 20). "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on Me through their word."

(4) "How can I tell whether I am one of the Elect?" The adversary of souls skilfully uses the most precious doctrines to hinder the sinner coming to Christ. He uses the doctrine of God's free grace to lull the conscience, by persuading the soul there is plenty of time. He uses election to frighten timid souls, lest they press forward and accept the gift of life. To such an inquiry it may be well to reply, "Are you anxious to know whether you can be saved?" "Yes." "Jesus said, 'If any man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink'" (John vii. 37). "Did He mean this invitation for anyone?" "Yes." "For you?" "I don't know; how can anyone come unless the Holy Spirit draw him?" "Who set God's people arranging these meetings? Who induced you to come to them? Was it not the Holy Spirit? And having brought you here, and given you this desire for salvation, does He purpose disappointing you, and leaving you in darkness and difficulty? The Holy Spirit now submits to your heart the decision of the matter. The question really is, What do you choose? Whatever you choose God will ratify. Choose life, by accepting the Lord's invitation. 'If any man thirst, let him come to Me,' and God will seal that choice for ever."

It has been very wisely said that the texts containing the great invitations, such as "Whosoever will," and "Whosoever believeth," &c., are the outside texts for all to read. Those who believe these words of mercy, and step inside the door, will find another set of texts for their comfort and assurance, such as Rom. viii. 29, 30; Eph. i. 4, 5; 1 Peter i. 2; these are the inside texts.

(5) "I am afraid I have committed the unpardonable sin." This difficulty haunts the minds of a certain number of persons who are naturally morbid, and given to introspection. If such a remark is made by an inquirer, ask him, "Does this fear haunt you? How long have you been thus troubled? What first gave rise to it?" Then ask, "Do you honestly desire salvation? Who produces this desire in your mind, Satan, or the Holy Spirit? If the Holy Spirit has thus stirred you to earnest inquiry, it is clear you cannot have committed the unpardonable sin. Had you done so, He would no longer strive with you, He would have left you for ever, and you would never have been troubled about these things. Take your very anxiety of mind as the best proof that the Lord desires your salvation, and has guided you here for that very purpose."

(6) "I am afraid if I begin to-night I shall not hold on." To meet this difficulty it is important to make clear the work of the Holy Spirit. The two great gifts of the Gospel are Remission of Sins and the Holy Spirit (Acts ii. 38). The first deals with the past, the second with the future.

The Holy Spirit seals the soul for eternity (Eph. i. 13, iv. 30; 2 Cor. i. 22). He gives life (Rom. viii. 10). He dwells in the believer (Rom. viii. 9; John xiv. 16, 17). He will teach and guide (John xiv. 26, xv. 13, xvi. 13). Help infirmities and teach you how to pray (Rom. viii. 26). God who saves is also able to keep (Jude 24; 2 Tim. i. 12; 2 Cor. ix. 8).

Moreover, this great gift of the Holy Spirit is the power for surmounting all difficulties and overcoming all temptations. Eph. i. 19—21 teaches us that this power is in us, that as the Holy Spirit raised Jesus and set Him far above (not just above) all principality and power, &c., we, too, may expect to be raised up above the power of evil and the trial of circumstances, and thus be kept from falling.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.

MY DEAR SIR,—The readers of THE CHRISTIAN have from the very commencement of this Mission taken a warm and loving interest in its operations, and have rejoiced in its rapid growth. It is only a little over seven years old. We have now twenty-five workers; amongst these there are five converted Jews, devoted missionaries, and one Jewess, our Bible-woman. About half of the workers take no salary.

Again and again in our various meetings Jews have stood up in the midst of a roomful of unbelieving brethren and avowed their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. We have reading-rooms at Wellclose-square, where a Christian German is engaged to speak to every Jew who enters, about his salvation. In the same rooms, once a week, we have a sewing class for Jewesses, the poorest of the poor. This numbers sometimes over 100 persons, to whom the simple Gospel is lovingly preached. At Hooper-square our Medical Mission is carried on; your readers would be astonished to see the crowd, especially on Saturdays, when scores are frequently shut out after the room and stairs have been packed. The two doctors, the dispenser, and the two deaconesses have a long, hard, but blessed day's work for Jesus, in seeking to heal sick and wounded bodies, and also to wound falsely healed souls.

We are to be driven by railway needs from our present rooms, and must seek others and larger: will the Lord's people join us in seeking the Lord's guidance in this matter? We have hitherto had his guidance in a marvellous manner in securing a home for inquirers at Newington-green, and a convalescent home in Langdon Park-road, Highgate. Thousands of Jews have heard the Gospel through this Mission, in London alone. Hundreds of others have heard by means of our itinerant Mission, which has already visited and preached Christ to the Jews in about twenty towns and cities in Great Britain. In addition to all this, we are hoping to establish a home and schools for Jewish children; we have already had several offered to us, but have been obliged to provide for them elsewhere. We are longing and praying for a mighty awakening of the Holy Spirit amongst the Jews in these latter days.—Yours in our one Lord,

J. WILKINSON.

TEMPERANCE IN YORKSHIRE.—The Christian Women's Temperance Union for this county has recently held its annual meeting at Middlesborough. Good reports were given of the work done all over the county, and helpful addresses were delivered by various friends. Mrs. Fielden Thorpe, York, will gladly supply further information to any who may apply to her, as to the really grand work being done in the populous villages and crowded towns of England's largest county.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next will be an Extra Number, containing a Pictorial Chart, size 20 in. by 30 in., giving exterior and interior views of Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth, erected by Messrs. Croggon & Co. for the meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, on ground kindly lent by Dr. Watney for that purpose. There will be no additional charge for the number.

Our present issue contains a copy of "The Christian Almanack," which we present to our readers. It is specially suitable for distribution in the homes of this and other lands, and may now be obtained at the office of this paper.

An English correspondent, residing at Biarritz, France, writes to us remarking on the great dearth there of suitable English lady teachers. He says that an English day-school for girls and young boys, if started and properly conducted, would be sure to meet with much success.

The London Missionary Society has recently addressed a fraternal letter to the ministers and members of the Dutch Reformed Church in the Transvaal, with a view more widely to enlist Christian sympathy and interest in favour of the native tribes. Copies of this letter, which is couched in terms of utmost catholicity and Christian courtesy, have been circulated extensively in South Africa, and much may be hoped for from its influence. The difficulties of the position occupied by the Dutch Christians in the midst of a large and uncivilised native population are fully recognised, but, as the writers of the appeal justly say, the grace of God will be all the more magnified in them if their influence is exerted on the side of mercy, and on behalf of evangelising the Bechuana tribes by protecting the Missions employed for that end.

The Annual Report of Mr. Spurgeon's Pastors' College has just been issued, and furnishes a wonderful example of successful work and Christian liberality in its support. Since its commencement, now twenty-seven years ago, 652 have been educated in the college, 486 of whom are now employed as pastors, missionaries, or evangelists, in connection with the Baptist denomination, others being also engaged in some work for the Lord, while 44 have died. The expenditure for the past year has amounted to £6,566, which has been thus met—the weekly offerings at the Tabernacle have amounted to £1,882, donations £3,911, and legacies £1,831.

A characteristic address from Mr. Spurgeon introduces the report, in which he declares his purpose to maintain the integrity of the Gospel at any cost, without regard to modern thought and its developments of new theories and refinements of the old faith. The danger lest the spirit of the age should lead tutors as well as taught to be moved from their own steadfastness is much dwelt upon, and is thus summed up: "Unless grace is given to make a man strong in the Lord, educated believers are in these days frequently tempted to aspire after the position of 'leaders of thought,' 'men who are abreast of the times.' Old-fashioned believers are at a discount, and are sneered at as a kind of idiots. This is not a pleasant experience for those who know they are the equals, if not the superiors, of their despisers." The request that daily prayer should be offered for the College leaders is one that all lovers of truth will heartily endorse.

At the recent Free Church Congress in Glasgow, Dr. Marcus Dods is reported by the Edinburgh Daily Review to have said that—

"The Church had confounded faith in Christ with faith in a number of things about Christ, and so made faith needlessly difficult."

This is, within certain limits, an important fact, to which it is well that attention should be called. But the Glasgow Daily Mail reports Dr. Dods more fully:—

"By confounding faith in Christ with faith in Scripture, or faith in the Atonement, or faith in eternal punishment, the Church not only needlessly increased the difficulties of belief, but also led men to misapprehend the real point at issue between faith and scepticism. The differentia of the Christian, that which distinguished Christian faith from every other form of opinion or of belief, was simply the one conviction that Jesus was at this moment conscious and supreme. The question which separated men into the two great classes of Christians and sceptics was this, Did Christ rise from the dead? If He did, then there was a spiritual power mightier than the strongest of physical forces in nature. If He rose again, then there was a power which could compel nature's laws to subserve spiritual purposes."

This alters the case considerably. Faith in Christ appears impossible without faith in the Scriptures which reveal Him. And a faith in Christ which does not embrace Him crucified as the Atonement for our sins is not the faith that saves.

The following paragraph is extracted from Galignani, the English newspaper published in Paris:—

"A gathering of a somewhat novel and interesting character took place at the Hôtel Vouillemont on Wednesday, when some forty of the pastors of Paris responded to the invitation of Lord Radstock and Canon Wilberforce to luncheon, followed by a fraternal conference on spiritual matters and the necessity of more aggressive Christian work."

We learn from a friend in Paris that nearly all the Protestant pastors of Paris attended this gathering, and that the discussion was a very interesting one. Canon Wilberforce and Lord Radstock spoke with much effect. The assembled pastors appeared to be deeply stirred, and there is every probability that a united Mission in Paris will be the result.

Archdeacon Farrar has met the challenge of the brewers with firm and manly front. They having threatened to aid in the work of disestablishing the Church if the clergy dared to oppose the liquor traffic, Dr. Farrar, speaking at Leeds the other day, said, "The Church of England had faced Popes and Kings, and was not going to recoil before the threatened vengeance of publicans and brewers." It will do no harm to let it be seen that brewers are not so needful to the Church as some people have supposed. Certainly all that is good in any Church can stand without the support of money or influence gained by alliance with traffic in strong drink.

At Burton-on-Trent, a Curate has roused the ire of local brewers by writing a pamphlet in favour of total abstinence. It has led to their threatening to withdraw their money aid of some £1000 annually from the church with which he is connected, unless he is removed from his post. It is said that the Vicar has asked the Bishop to remove the Curate; if it be so, many will look with eager interest for the result. Brewers will not gain much to their cause by making martyrs of their Temperance opponents. But drink and the devil have ever been closely allied, and it is no new thing to find them united on the side of opposition to good works.

The real position of the late Professor Darwin in relation to Christianity is a question which has been much debated by many. A recently published letter, written by himself, appears to define the matter very clearly. He says:—

"In my most extreme fluctuations I have never been an Atheist in the sense of denying the existence of a God. I think that generally (and more and more as I grow older), but not always, that an Agnostic would be the more correct description of my state of mind."

Professor Radford Thomson, of New College, in an article on "Proposed Substitutes for Christianity," contributed to the British and Foreign Evangelical Review, has said: "Agnosticism is undeniably one of the great and fashionable doctrines of our day, and has its powerful advocates." That it is fashionable accounts largely for its widespread influence, for fashion has as commanding an influence in the world of modern thought as it has in other spheres, and is as generally senseless and unreasonable in its dictates.

To be followers of such leaders as Herbert Spencer, Matthew Arnold, and Professor Darwin, is by not a few considered a mark of high culture, and indispensable to good breeding and intellectual repute. "God is the unknowable," say these teachers, therefore to be ignorant of Him, say their disciples, is the highest mark of wisdom.

But, after all, what does Agnosticism do for the world? Judged by its fruits it is about the most worthless of all the modes of thought propounded for human acceptance. As Professor Thomson says: "Agnosticism and Atheism are practically one;" and so Dr. Kellogg,—"Agnosticism is virtually Atheism." It may be more refined to say we do not know that there is a God, a future, or a revelation, than to say absolutely that neither exist, nor is possible; but for all practical purposes the two positions come to the same thing. Out of nothing nothing comes, so that the mere negations of Agnostic philosophy cannot possibly produce anything conducive to man's higher interests, or in any way contribute to his real good. It is not a little humbling to be told, as we have been by Joseph Cook, "England is the home of Agnosticism."

Would that the generality of professing Christians could be led to turn their attention more directly to practical developments of their faith, and less to mere sentiment and "ism." It is a striking statement, once made by Jonathan Edwards: "If God's people were only brought to abound in deeds of love, as much as in prayer, hearing, singing, religious meetings, and conferences, it would be a blessed omen." Assuredly it would; but the question arises, how is it that so many can enter into the privileges of the Gospel with so much apparent zest, and yet not abound in the faithful discharge of its duties? If the heart is truly full of the spirit of prayer, praise, and Christian fellowship, must not the life be full of the fruits of love and self-sacrifice?

A melancholy occurrence is reported from Cape Town. The Rev. Jas. Hoyle, the Chairman for the year of the South African Congregational Union, has just met with his death as the result of an accident which befel him while making a round of pastoral visits. He only left his former charge at Yeovil two years ago for Cape Town, where he had won the respect and love of a numerous circle of friends, and been greatly blessed in his work for the Lord.

A Glasgow correspondent urges us to call attention to the hardship of cabmen having to attend so much to their employment on the Lord's Day, and particularly to warn professing Christians against needlessly conniving at Sunday cab traffic. The evil is great, and bears hardly on a numerous class, who are thus deprived of all opportunity to attend the house of God even if they desire to do so. It is quite true that God's law concerning the Sabbath, that "in it thou shalt do no manner of work," ought to be sufficient, for professing Christians at least, to stop the cab as well as any other work, except that of necessity and mercy.

The following words, spoken by Bailie Dickson, one of the magistrates of the City of Glasgow, in addressing the court officers on the expiry of his term of magistracy, are well worthy of reproduction, both for their truth and outspokenness. He said: "Then there is that most painful of all evils, the social evil. How best to deal with it is a question surrounded with difficulty. But one thing I think is certain, for a nation or community to legally sanction or wink at its localisation is to become partaker of its evils, and a nation must reap as it sows, the same as an individual. The fact is, that while music-halls and theatres were in the centre of the city, these abandoned women found their locale there, and now that they are in this district these outcasts hang on the outskirts of such places to prey upon the frequenters. One thing would do much to lessen the evil, for often these poor outcasts are the more sinned against. Why should they be the only censured party in the case? Why should not men also be brought up who are found in such houses, and their names given the same public notoriety, and thus make those who are the same in guilt bear equally the shame and punishment? And then if families admit such men into their social life, they do it with a full knowledge of their loose character."

The organisation known as the White Cross Army, having for its object the promotion of social purity, is said to be making great progress in the North of England. The Blue Ribbon movement has a noble mission, and we rejoice in its widespread success; but its work is not higher or more important than that which aims to put a social ban on impurity, and to stem the torrent of abuses which flow from its prevalence. There is ample room and deep need for united and organised effort to uphold purity of life and conversation among old and young. Offences against morality are grievously winked at and tolerated on every hand by many who might and ought to be quick and strong to put them down.

In the crusade against social vice and impurity the youth of our population claim special attention. In our public and other schools, temptations to impure conversation and evil habits are very strong, and boys who are leaving home for school require to be warned earnestly and fully against the perils they are sure to meet with. Parents and head-masters have a great responsibility resting upon them. "A Worker in the Cause" entreats us to make an earnest appeal to them that the young in their care may be warned "guardedly, so that no feeling of curiosity may be raised, but faithfully so that one of loathing for impure words or deeds may be excited." His concern on this point is by no means needless; it behoves us all to cherish it.

Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., has just sent a copy of the pamphlet, entitled, "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London," to every Baptist minister in London, together with a circular letter in which he urges a new departure on the London Baptist Association in favour of the poor and wretched inhabitants of the city slums. It has been the rule of the association to build a new chapel every year in the metropolis, generally in the suburbs. Mr. Caine urges that for the next few years the money so employed should go to do battle with the misery, squalor, and vice, treated of in the pages of the pamphlet named. Mr. Caine says, "Let the well-to-do folk in the suburbs care for themselves awhile. It matters little if they become Wesleyans, Independents, or Churchmen, instead of Baptists. It matters much that we should see teeming millions in the grasp of hell, without a hand stretched out to save. It is the muck of the slums we ought to be in, not the trim gardens of the suburbs."

The Freeman, an organ of the Baptist denomination, writes in terms of severest censure and disapproval of Mr. Caine's action. His undenominational views and his reflections on the apathy and cold respectability of modern suburban church life are counted a grave offence. That there is much truth in his way of putting things many, outside the mere sectarian aspect of it, will have no hesitation in admitting. He is assuredly right when he says, "drink, disease, starvation, over-crowding, whoredom, incest, and all that follows in their train, will not come into the cushioned pews of our fine chapels. Christian men and women must wade breast-high into the seething mass, with the light of the Gospel in their hands, if it is ever to be sweetened and purified at all."

In an article on Jewish sensitiveness the Spectator thus speaks of the present condition of the Jews:—

"They have a very noble history behind them. They produce in two or three branches of thought and of art some of the highest names. They excel all men in the great faculty of accumulation. They are rapidly acquiring an influence in politics so great that in some countries it is considered a danger, and that in all it is out of proportion to their numbers. They admit, and exult in admitting, that in all countries they are bound together by a chain of tradition which is rarely, if ever, broken, and the strength of which consists in the fact that, besides being Frenchmen, or Germans, or Englishmen, they are Jews."

That such statements should be true of the chosen race, more than three thousand years after their becoming a nation, is a fact of wonderful significance and suggestiveness. Surely all must admit that it points unmistakably to a future of importance being in store for them. The same article forcasts evil for them in a nearing future, and says:—

"That they will in the end, as a new and exclusive caste of aristocrats, possessed of too large a share of wealth, exercising too much power, and adding too little to the world's resources in return, draw down on themselves the angry attention of the democracies of the world, is, in our judgment, certain."

Probably the writer of these words has no idea of being in accord with prophecy in making this assertion, but that a time of tribulation is before them, surpassing any they have yet known, is scripturally sure, whatever may be the particular means through which it is brought about. But it is equally sure that whenever the time of Jacob's trouble shall arrive, "He shall be saved out of it" (Jer. xxx. 4—9).

A more remarkable demonstration in honour of a private citizen was never witnessed than that which was made at Ramsgate last week in recognition of Sir Moses Montefiore's centenary. A procession over two miles long, made up of all the local public bodies, Sunday-schools, and many other institutions, filed past the veteran philanthropist's residence, and addresses of congratulation and respect poured in from all quarters upon him. The Queen, the Duke of Edinburgh, and the ex-Queen of Hanover, sent special messages of kindly greeting. Such honours paid to one who is by birth, religion, and association a thorough Jew, remind us very forcibly of the time which shall come when God will make his chosen race "a name and a praise among all people of the earth," only in that day they will be foremost in exalting the Saviour whom now they disown and reject.

Another High Church preferment is announced, Dr. Cowie, Dean of Manchester, well known to be of Ritualistic tendencies, having been appointed to the Deanery of Exeter. The way in which the chief seats in the Anglican Synagogue are being filled by men of High Church proclivities certainly affords cause for grave anxiety, all the more so that Romish influence is so manifestly increasing amongst us. There is growing and urgent necessity for zealous and watchful effort on the part of spiritually enlightened Protestants, to uphold the interests of plain Gospel truth, as opposed to formalism and ceremonial observance.

A "Baptist Layman," writing to the Christian World of last week, refers to our remarks in a recent issue on Mr. Spurgeon's words on undenominationalism. He says, "The Christian, I suppose, represents the views generally of the Plymouth Brethren." In this he is greatly mistaken; we do not represent the views of any denomination or church. We respect the honest convictions of all evangelical believers, and rejoice to recognise what is Christlike and useful in them all, but our path is not that of any sect or party. We believe, and are sure, Christian church organisation flourishes best on principles of Christian liberty and fraternity, such as no sectarian system acknowledges.

The "Bitter Cry" naturally occupied a large amount of attention at the half-yearly Conference of the London Congregational Union; and it is a cause for rejoicing that the Union has entered with so much heart and zest into the work of responding to its appeal. The Rev. Vaughan Price gave a good idea of the vastness of the field London presents when he said "it was nine Liverpools, or forty Brightons; it contained more Jews than Palestine, more Roman Catholics than Rome, more heathen than Calcutta; that about 90,000 persons entered it yearly from the country; that in it were 40,000 costermongers, 100,000 tramps, and a vast horde of criminals. In many of its districts only 10 per cent. of its population went to places of worship."

CHRISTMAS LETTER MISSION.—I am requested by Miss E. S. Elliott, the secretary of the "Christmas Letter Mission" (late "Hospital Pillow and Letter Mission"), to correct a slight error in the kind notice of this society in your issue of the 8th inst. Our Christmas Letters are not sent "by post," unless in very exceptional cases, but are distributed by hand. In the hospitals the nurses usually lay them on the pillows during the night, that the patients may find them when they awake on Christmas morning.—H. Bewes, Hon. Treasurer, C.L.M., 67, Ladbroke-grove, W.

THE TWO LINES.

I CRAVE to reach my God! I crave to find
The daily bending of my earthly mind
Toward his perfect holiness, until
My will is lost in his superior will.
As thus I sadly mused, I took my pen
And ruled across the sheet a line, and then
A second line, inclining to the first,
A simple diagram. But oh! there burst,
Sweet light into my soul, for I foresaw
These lines, though far apart at first, must draw
Toward each other, nearer, nearer still,
Until at last they met.
So if my will,
Turned by the blessed Holy Spirit, bend,
However slightly, to my God, the end
Will be the happy union that combines
In one blest centre all converging lines.
Trace thou God's line, his statutes, his decrees;
Hast thou a holy tendency to these?
Say, does thy line of purpose run toward
The line of purpose shown thee by thy Lord?
Then all the sacred yearning of thy soul
Shall be attained; as months and seasons roll
Their tardy course, nearer thy longings draw
To where thy wish shall touch his perfect law.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION IN INDIA.

I HAVE just accompanied on board the Cheybaysa Dr. Murdoch, who for nearly forty years has been engaged in promoting Christian education in India. He has for twenty-four years been the Indian agent of the Christian Vernacular Society for India; and has, perhaps, done more than any other living man to prepare in their own languages sound Christian literature both for Hindu boys and Hindu men. A short time ago he came home with the intention of retiring; but, believing he might be of use in the present educational crisis, he has volunteered to return to his post.

I am afraid that the English public do not sufficiently realise the importance of the present critical position of India. That country is passing through a social revolution in many respects, the educational changes being not the least momentous. A thorough inquiry into the whole question has just been made by a Viceregal Commission, which has presented its report to the Viceroy, and the decision of Government regarding it is daily expected. The supreme importance of seizing this opportunity for the extension of Christian education and the spread of Christian literature can scarcely be exaggerated.

For this reason it is most fortunate that one who possesses the ripe experience of Dr. Murdoch should be on the spot to give his counsel and advice, and to take advantage of any opening that may occur when the resolutions of Government are published. Nothing would please him more than to hear of adequate help being given to this Society. Its two great branches of work require to be maintained in thorough efficiency, which cannot be the case without greater funds. The training of native teachers in their own language is the one branch, and the second is the issue of Christian literature in the various languages of India. Men are ready to write books; but the funds for paying them are wanting. May I not justly appeal to the friends of India, and especially to old Indians, to step forward and help us in this emergency, and thus enable us to take advantage of an opportunity that may never occur again?

SAILORS' AND SOLDIERS' RESTS AT ST. HELENA.

DEAR SIR,—A most important work has just been commenced in the Island of St. Helena by Mr. Henry St. Quintin. For years the need of a "Sailors' Rest" has been greatly felt, as this island is visited by three or four ships of war at a time, for the purpose of giving leave, and a run ashore to the ship's companies. Temptations to drink and sin abound on every hand; as many as fifty blue jackets have been seen during "general leave" lying dead drunk about the streets, and no Sailors' Rest stretches out its friendly hand. Christian and temperance officers and men have frequently written strongly to me on the subject, and I do thank God that He has laid it on the heart of Mr. St. Quintin, a gentleman occupying an important official position, to take a house and make a start. Furniture and bedding are now being sent out from England, and a "Christian man"—Mr. St. Quintin writes—"has come forward to take charge of the Sailors' Rest."

So far, well; the experiment will be tried for a year, and if means are sent to pay the small annual expense, and cost of furnishing, the house will long remain as a blessing to the island. The officers and ship's company of H.M. gunboat Bullfrog, now lying at St. Helena, have collected between £4 and £5 for this purpose. The publishers of this paper will receive donations, and I will gladly do the same; or they may be forwarded direct to Mr. Henry St. Quintin, St. Helena.

Yours very truly,

Sailors' Rest, Devonport. Agnes E. Weston.

NEW ZEALAND.

FROM a letter to a friend from Mr. Gordon Forlong, we extract the following:—

The people here (Highland Home, Bulls), owing to our absence for three years, are more friendly and more willing to receive the Gospel than before we left; but we cannot expect above two hundred people at the outside. We are not disposed now to take any settled meetings of our own; we go wherever we are asked. Mrs. Forlong takes women's meetings. I take class-services among all denominations, and we see good doing.

The blue-ribbon army is doing good here, and spreading rapidly, owing to simplicity, I think. Other total abstainers are burdened with laws and regulations that have kept hundreds away from them.

This part of the country is well supplied with good roads, as good as from London to Ealing.

My elder boys have been at a large farm for a year or two, as regular workers, not mere cadets. Cadets are a mistake; they get into idle habits, and more harm than good. A good Christian farmer in New Zealand will take a lad of sixteen into his house, and work him as a son, and give him plenty of food, and eight or ten shillings a week, and the lad likes his little earnings, and yet he is obliged to work, and acquires active habits, makes fences, drains, &c.

My boys are both Christians, and have got no harm at farms, and value their ten shillings a week, earned by their own labour. I only mention this to illustrate that "cadets" at farms paying £50 a year is only for invalids.

DESTITUTE GERMAN CHILDREN IN LONDON.—In 1879 an Orphanage for destitute German children in London was opened in remembrance of the German Emperor's Golden Wedding. A small house near the German hospital, Dalston, was opened under the management of one of the brothers of the "Rauhe Haus," and five children were received. Since then the number of applicants has greatly increased, the number of Germans living in London being 100,000. To meet the need, a new and larger building, capable of housing from thirty to forty children, is in course of erection. The memorial-stone was laid October 11, by the Baroness Henry Von Schröder.

AMONG THE NAVVIES.

AS you kindly made known my need of a Mission-room at Grays, probably your readers would like to hear of the result. The only room I was able to secure was a bakehouse, without windows or proper ventilation; however I was glad of any place where we could hold services, &c. The Lord has given blessing in this little room, and several will have cause to bless God for the good they have received.

One woman gave her heart to God at once, and her changed life has so much angered her husband that he forbids her coming any more; in spite of this she continues very firm on the Lord's side. One man soon after decided; he had not been to a place of worship for years, accustomed to spend his Sundays in drinking and idleness; he and his wife signed the pledge, and I believe both have given their hearts to God. Their home now testifies to the change. Several others could testify the same.

Our Sunday evening service consists of a Gospel address, followed by a prayer-meeting, a Temperance meeting, a meeting for prayer and experience, and a Bible reading fills up our week service. My desire is to have a night school, which often attracts those who will not come to a service; but the room is so damp and cold, there being no place for a fire, that I fear to attempt it. A Bible class I should much like to start, but the room hinders. May I say that some cuffs and comforters for the men would be most acceptable. I work in full sympathy with the Thames Church Mission, who are doing a good work at Tilbury amongst the navvies there.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

Spain.—An "Occasional Paper" concerning the Evangelisation of Spain, under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong, gives some encouraging accounts of conversion. Protestant burial seems to be designedly surrounded with difficulty; for fear of false play, the believers have had in some cases to carry their dead themselves to graves dug by themselves. In one case the corpse was interred outside the cemetery.

German Missions in India.—Mr. Thomsen, a German missionary in India, reports some good work among the natives. Having sent some speakers to a village, the preachers soon returned, and announced that 36 Hindoos in that village were ready to confess Jesus. "Our joy," says Mr. Thomsen, "is great that now also some Sudras, and others of higher caste are seeking and finding Jesus; till now most of those who have believed have been without caste. Near Vinukonda about 200 converts are ready to confess their faith in Christ. Many of these Christians are suffering much persecution. Forget not to pray for us."—Der Wahrheitszeuge.

France.—In the spring of this year some remarkable conversions took place during a revival at Vallerange, which have so far stood the test of time. A man opposed the conversion of his wife with all his power. One evening, not being able to prevent her going to chapel, he followed her out of spite; there he heard his wife confess her faith in Christ. The thought that the next day his comrades would make fun of him on this account, much agitated him, and he walked out of the chapel, home. But the prayers, hymns, the reading of the Word of God and the joy that shone from all faces, made a deep impression on him. He could not rest that night, so at break of day he arose, and the first object that met his view in the room was a New Testament. He opened it, and his eyes fell on the verse, "Happy is he who shall not be offended in me." "Wretch that I am," he cried, "yesterday I was offended in God. I am lost!" On the table he noticed a hymn-book, where he read, "Without a Saviour and without a Father, what will you do?" He fell on his knees, exclaiming, "I am lost!" A friend hearing of his state visited him, and pointed him to the Sinner's Friend; he soon found peace. This man was in the habit of spending from £25 to £30 annually in drink and otherwise, was a source of much trouble and ruin to his family; now all that is changed.

Messrs. WHITTLE & McGRANAHAN IN IRELAND.

WE rejoice greatly to hear of the continued blessing that rests on the labours of these brethren in following up the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey across the Irish Channel. The following very encouraging notes, received from a correspondent, reached us too late for insertion last week :—

CLOSING MEETING IN CORK.

This meeting on Wednesday evening, Oct. 31, was a grand one. As it was "Hallowe'en" the committee feared that, the people being so accustomed to spend the evening at their homes, there would not be the usual congregation. The hall was packed, however, as full as at any meeting held, and the audience appeared to be deeply in sympathy with the truth. Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan sang a piece of new music set to the words, "I am the Resurrection and the Life," also the new Irish Gospel song, "God helping me, I will." Here, as at Limerick, the people caught up this new song with wonderful readiness, and sang it very heartily. Mr. and Mrs. Granahan's singing has had a great charm for the Cork people, and his new pieces have much pleased the music-loving Christians in the city.

At the close of the address all who had been led to Christ during the Mission were requested to stand as a testimony of the blessing received. The song "I will" was again sung while they remained standing. It seemed as though one fourth of the audience were on their feet. Before the singing of the last verse a final appeal was made for the decision of those who had heard the Gospel that night, and they were urged during the singing of the verse and chorus to rise and say, "I will." In all parts of the hall they responded, and probably one hundred in all must have decided that night. From the platform the scene was one of the most solemn and tender interest. Nearly all of those who arose were adult men and women, many of them of grey hairs. All of those who were standing were then invited to repair at once to the Scots Church, to receive a parting word from Major Whittle and Mr. McGranahan. In a few minutes the church was filled to overflowing. A few words of counsel and instruction to lead into fuller light and confirm in the faith, a season of earnest prayer, and the farewell word was spoken.

Many cases of singular interest might be mentioned among those gathered by the Gospel in Cork. Four young ladies from one family, well known in the county, all came out for Christ that night. A lawyer, who had received Christ early in Mr. Moody's meetings, and whose clear testimony and wonderfully rapid growth in love for and knowledge of the Bible has greatly cheered those engaged in the work, was gladdened by having his eldest son brought into the light this week; they stood side by side at this farewell meeting. Another father with two of his sons was there. Over one hundred young men, full of earnestness and enthusiasm, and who have already nearly all of them gone to work for Christ, were present, eagerly listening to the word spoken. They heartily pledged themselves to sustain a daily seven o'clock morning prayer-meeting, similar to the Limerick young men's meeting.

From the church the evangelists returned to the hall, where the audience had remained to be addressed by Canon Harley, Rev. Wesley Guard, Rev. J. Smith, and others. An announcement was made of the morning meeting for young men, to be held in the Assembly Rooms' smaller hall, to be maintained under the care of an excellent committee of young men, representing all the churches, with Mr. Alfred Beale chairman. Parting words were spoken by b Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan, a parting song sung, prayer offered, commending the brethren to God, the Benediction pronounced, and the special Mission to Cork closed. The permanent results will be known on the Resurrection morning. May much prayer be offered that the fire kindled in Cork, and the region for twenty miles around, will continue to burn and to spread.

FOLLOWING UP AT WATERFORD.

Here in Waterford, since the departure of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, the work has been remarkably maintained. The congregations have been about two-thirds of those that greeted these brethren; considering that special trains have all been stopped, and that those attending are from Waterford and immediate vicinity, this is quite a wonder to the committee. On both Thursday and Friday evenings the Rink was well filled, and some forty or fifty on both evenings professed to accept of Christ. Here, as at Cork, some Roman Catholics have attended, and received blessing. A remarkable feature of the work of Mr. Moody in Waterford seems to be the deep conviction of sin produced under his preaching, and the searching of conscience leading to confession of sin and restitution. On Friday evening the subject of Major Whittle's address was, "Be sure your sin will find you out." He dwelt on the obligation, where our sin had been against our fellow-man, to make confession to the one injured, and to make restitution as far as lay in our power. In the after-meeting many of the workers report cases of the deepest distress of soul under the burden of "sin that had found them out." One young man, who groaned before God in agony of conscience, so terrible seemed his sin, went, before he slept that night, and found three persons to whom he had lied in getting himself out of a difficulty, and made confession. He returned at a late hour to a worker, prayed with him and found peace. "So mightily grew the Word of God and prevailed." It is believed that some of those to whom confession has been made have also been brought under conviction by these confessions.

Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan had the hearty support and co-operation of all the ministers in Waterford who were in Mr. Moody's meetings, and of the very efficient committee under the lead of Mr. Edwin Jacobs.

On Monday evening, 5th inst., Major Whittle had a meeting specially for young converts and inquirers, who were admitted by tickets, carefully distributed. Some four hundred were present, and there were many cases of decision. Several fine young fellows came intelligently and clearly into the light. The Word of God, through his servants, has made a deep furrow in many hearts. Every day cases of confession of past sin and restitution have been occurring.

The meetings at Waterford closed on Tuesday, 6th inst. In the afternoon a children's service, largely attended and of much interest, was held. In the evening the rink was full for the closing meeting, and much blessing was received. Scores professed to accept Christ, and in the after-meeting many genuine cases were dealt with. At least one-third of the congregation present testified to having been led to Christ during the Mission, by standing, as the hymn, "I will," sung at Limerick and Cork, was sung in closing the meeting. Will every believing reader return much praise to God for the abundant answers to prayer here received, and pray that these young converts may continue steadfast in the faith.

From here they went to Clonmel (Irish for "sweet meadow"), a town of 10,000 inhabitants, twenty miles west of Waterford, where active preparations have been made for a brief Mission. Tralee in the West and Wexford in the East are desirous of having a visit from the evangelists, and an interest seems spreading throughout Southern Ireland, as the result of these remarkable meetings in Limerick, Cork, and Waterford. The harvest seems ripe, and all that is possible will be done to keep the two brethren, in Southern Ireland for three or four weeks to come.

THE MOTHER'S GIFT.

The following lines were written by a mother in a Bible, her gift to her son. A business man of Waterford, in middle life, on going home from hearing Mr. Moody, being awakened by the truth, went to his trunk and found the Bible his mother had given him eighteen years before, when he parted from her in New York. Led into scepticism while in America, he had lived a Godless life, and the Bible had been unopened by him during all that time. That Sabbath evening, as, alone in his room, he opened the Book, the memory of his mother, who some years ago had departed to be with Christ, was brought vividly before him. He remembered her parting kiss, her sobs and tears, and the earnest prayer that he would meet her in heaven. When, from the opened Bible, there fell into his hand the printed slip, and he commenced reading the lines, it seemed as though his mother were speaking to him, and every word went like a dagger to his heart, God's Spirit using and blessing the appeal.

Wiping the tears at every line, and filled with anguish at the thought of the suffering he had caused that dear mother, and his treatment of God, it was a long time before he finished the reading. When he did finish he was on his knees, a repentant sinner, asking God for mercy; then and there God met him, and he received Christ and found peace; he is now a humble, earnest disciple, a witness for the faith he once destroyed.

Remember, love, who gave thee this,
When other days shall come;
When she who had thy earliest kiss
Sleeps in her narrow home.
Remember, 'twas a mother gave
The gift to one she'd die to save.

That mother sought a pledge of love,
The holiest, for her son;
And from the gifts of God above
She chose a goodly one;
She chose for her beloved boy
The guide to life, and light, and joy;

And bade him keep the gift—that when
The parting hour should come,
They might have hope to meet again
In her eternal home.
She said his faith in that would be
Sweet incense to her memory.

And should the scoffer, in his pride,
Laugh that fond gift to scorn.
And bid him cast that gift aside,
That he from youth had borne,
She bade him pause, and ask his breast,
If he or she had loved him best?

A parent's blessing on her son
Goes with this holy thing;
The love that would retain the one
Must to the other cling.
Remember, 'tis no idle toy;
A mother's gift. Remember, boy!

LIMERICK.

A young man in Limerick, one of the band which is the result of the recent meetings, writing to a friend, says:—"Tell Major Whittle that we pray for him and his companions every morning at the young men's prayer meeting. He will be glad to hear that instead of the attendance falling-off it is becoming better, and the meeting more interesting each morning. Four or five young converts pray each morning who have never prayed in public before."

NINE ELMS PRISON MISSION. — The poor women from our prisons "throng us and press us." We draw in the net at the Lord's command, daily, and find many who are waiting for salvation. The proof of their earnestness is given in clamour for "honest work." We daily give a meal to these miserable souls who come to us from the prisons; then we offer them employment, and oh, how eagerly it is accepted when the Holy Spirit is dealing with their souls. We have begun to give them sacks to sew at 7d. per dozen—hard, unremunerative work, but the best we can find for such unskilled hands. The laundry is crowded out! More room there is the only thing that can be suggested as the promise of a living to the hundreds now seeking work. We want special contributions to open up more space, larger business, and to receive greater numbers of those weary ones. Please send help to the Treasurer, Mrs. Meredith, Nine Elms House, Wandsworth-road, S.W.

LONDON'S "BITTER CRY."

THIS has become one of the burning topics of the time, and many of our public men are having their say about it. Let us hope that in the multitude of counsellors there will be wisdom, not only to discuss the evil but to devise the effectual remedies.

As "Merchant Lecturer" for the month, Rev. Elward White made the "Bitter Cry" the text of his address at Finsbury Chapel, on Tuesday week. He distinguished between the poor and the vicious classes, whose degradation, he said, is very largely the result of their open defiance of the laws of God and man. In the forefront of the remedial agencies he placed the proclamation of the Gospel, a thorough acceptance of which will help a man to rise above his miserable surroundings. If God could save the unspeakably vile Africans to whom Dr. Moffat preached, He could surely save anyone, however lost to all that is good. The multiplication of Mission halls in poor districts was advocated. Coming to more secular efforts, Mr. White uttered a very strong protest against the planting of so many public-houses, quoting from Mrs. Bayly, to show that if the stream of wealth that flows into the publican's till were diverted into the home purses of the people, a great part of their destitution would be relieved. Finally, he called for an earnest and sustained effort by the legislature, for those social and domestic reforms in regard to dwellings and sanitation that are so urgently needed in the over-crowded parts of the city.

At a Baptist Conference last week, Rev. Dr. Clifford gave an address on the same subject. In discussing the remedies, he said: "Hurry was weakness, and the feverish grasp of the first weapon that offered success was usually the least effective method to be employed. Working was better than weeping; one stroke of a strong will would do more to get rid of the evil than all the lamentations they could utter when their grief was at its highest. But they must be sure of right principles upon which to conduct their movements. They must recognise the manifoldness of man. There should be used a multiplicity of means and agencies for ameliorating his condition. The response which the Church must give to the cry of outcast London—and, indeed, all London—must be full in its tone and various in its ends. The Church must be a great deal broader in its methods, and become broader in its sympathies and work; and it should be borne in mind that just anybody would not do for work amongst the poor."

Rev. J. Morlais Jones gave an eloquent address on the all-prevailing topic, at a meeting of the London Congregational Union: "A population that might form a capital city for any country in Europe live in cellars, and in garrets that are worse. Their lives never emerge into the sunshine, not a sunbeam touches them with beauty from the cradle to the grave; no kind hand beckons them on with glad promises of a better future, either in this world or the next, from the quagmire of accumulated vice, pestiferous with alcoholic fumes, and riddled with poverty. This, O happy Christianity! so sure of thy salvation, this is what thou forgettest. This wonderful, awful London, so rich, yet so squalidly poor, so queenly, but with beggardom at her heart, sweet streams of happiness flowing side by side with slimy sewers of horrid misery—these are the facts that hurt. We talk about our theological difficulties, we befog ourselves with disputes about things we can never understand, but these are the things that hurt, these are the things that humiliate us, these are the things that call us to write a fresh chapter on 'The Evidences of Christianity,' that will convince more people than our most successful demolition of agnostics in the reviews."

In a long and able article in the Pall Mall Gazette, Lord Shaftesbury, while admitting the extent of existing evils, tells of the great improvement in the condition of the London poor and outcast within the past generation. He strongly urges that the moral and material elevation of the masses must go hand in hand.

The venerable Samuel Bowly writes to one of the daily papers on the question as it presents itself to an ardent Temperance reformer: "I confess I have no great faith in what legislation can do except in removal of the fearful temptations to intemperance which is the well-known cause of nine-tenths of the destitution, crime, and improvidence we so deeply deplore. Unless we can succeed in changing these habits of drinking for those of sobriety and thrift, there is little hope of changing the sad social condition of our toiling multitudes." In the same issue of the same paper Miss Octavia Hill pleads for better dwellings for the poor: "There is no difficulty," she says, "in planning model buildings, and no financial difficulty (provided care and economy are secured) in letting them at rents which the poor could pay, and which would yield fair interest on the capital expended. In this way thousands of families might be comfortably accommodated, and the competition for existing houses and temptation to over-crowding in them would be diminished."

Prompt to seize the opportunity, Punch has a graphic cartoon, entitled "Mammon's Rents." It shows the interior of a wretched and dilapidated one-roomed tenement, with the wife and children in rags, and the head of the house burying his head in his hands. Prominent in the picture is a portly, flashily-dressed rent-collector, who somewhat savagely demands the rent, with the alternative of immediate "eviction." As a companion to the picture Punch has a touching poem, entitled "Sweet Home!" of which we quote some stanzas:—

Sweet Home! Sardonic as the Accuser's jeer
Sound the heart-moving words when uttered here,
Where life is a sin-poisoned agony,
And even love a shape of leprous fear.

Heaven! to think of fingers thin,
Toiling in pain the grey hours round, to win
From the swol'n hoards of wealth some scanty dole,
Tithed by the triflers who toil not, nor spin.

Tithed? Nay, much more than tithed, for Mammon's grip
Snatches the morsel from the hungering lip,
And Mammon's minions wringing gold from pest,
Penury's portioned mite shall not let slip.

Property's gold mine—this! How sweet to think
That herded thralls of want, and crime, and drink,
Though all too foul to touch the skirts of Wealth,
Well squeezed, make Mammon's guineas chink.

Choked back from the huge City's thick-piled maze,
Crowded aside from Comfort's cleanlier ways,
They slave, and sin, and multiply, and die, [pays.
These pariahs whose strange "Home" disgusts—but Another important contribution to the literature of this subject comes from the pen of Mr. George R. Sims, whose graphic papers on "How the Poor Live," recently published in the Pictorial World, no doubt helped largely to awaken the present interest. In an article in the Daily News of Thursday he gives some appalling disclosures as to the state of what he calls "Horrible London, particularly as to the evil surroundings of many poor children. Alluding to his late researches in the London slums, he says: "I began my task with a light heart; I finished it with a heavy one. In that two months I saw a vision of hell more terrible than the immortal Florentine's, and this was no poet's dream—it was a terrible truth, ghastly in its reality, heartbreaking in its intensity, and the doom of the imprisoned bodies in this modern Inferno was as horrible as any that Dante depicted for his tortured souls. But the most terrible thing of all was that the case of many of these lost creatures seemed utterly hopeless." He argues strongly for the separation of the labouring and the criminal classes. As to the children, he observes: "Any scheme of reform which is to be permanent must provide for the removal of young children from such frightful contamination. It is to the rising generation we look for that which is hopeless in the grown-up outcasts of to-day."

Through the columns of the Daily Telegraph "a lady of rank" implores the Government to let the political enfranchisement of the rural labourers wait, if need be, in order to reform the Government of London. In the course of a long and striking letter she says: "While the whole question of the rehousing of the London poor is occupying public attention, and even yet there is a chance of its being postponed, we must remember how terribly the condition of things is telling on the women of London, and through them on future generations. The temptations to vice in the East-end alone are appalling. It is said that vice must always exist as the condition of a high state of civilisation; that it cannot be suppressed, and had better be ignored. But how about the increasing number of children and young girls whom we are quietly pushing into perdition by our supineness and lack of moral courage? What are the lives of thousands of young girls in the East-end? Sprung from parents a great proportion of whom are immoral women and thieves, living in one room with the rest of the family, under conditions which preclude all possibility of decency and innocence, they grow up naturally vicious. Once grown up, they must live and earn their own bread. The factories then become their chief resource, and, as the supply is greater than the demand, thousands of girls must compete for the small pay and the hard work."

Having described the straits to which these girls are driven in connection with the various occupations open to them, the writer proceeds: "And now, remembering this side of the picture, let us look on the other. Any girl who likes can earn plenty of money by leading a bad life. And this choice between luxury and idleness, or slavish, hopeless work, is offered to girls of fourteen, fifteen, and sixteen. In the language of one who spends her life freely among these poor outcast girls, trying to save and to raise them to an idea of better things, 'the London streets have been their cradle and ther nursery; the streets are the fields which they find ready to their hand to till; on the streets they scatter seed of the only crops they know; from the streets they reap their bitter harvest; and in the streets at last they find a grave. They know it; they dread it; they shudder as they speak of it. But to them, with their grossness, their ignorance, and their wants, there seems no escape from the fate which hems them in.' Instead of political cries got up to tickle the palates of agitators, who have not the welfare of the people at heart, let the women of England band together to say, 'Such things shall not be!' How long is the patience of the poor to hold out—how long are they to suffer—when what would save them is not socialistic legislation, but the law enforced and amended?"

MRS. AMANDA SMITH is still labouring in Grand Bassa, Liberia. In a letter just received from her by Miss Mason, Kilburn, she says: "You will see that I have not yet gone to Cape Town. I do not know when the Lord will bid me go from here, where there is so much to do, and I have had to go slowly, on account of the rainy weather and my own personal weakness. But for more than two months I have had no chill and no fever, although I have had a severe cold that lasted four weeks. The Lord Himself saved me from fever. Glory to His name!"

WHO WILL GO?—Dear Sir,—Will you kindly allow me to make known to your readers a sphere of service, at present to a great extent unoccupied, at Appledore, in North Devon? It is a small seaport town, at the junction of the rivers Taw and Torridge, and is inhabited almost entirely by the seafaring class. Comparatively few of the sailors go to a place of worship, and although there is a Bethel, it fails to attract. Yet these men are to be won, under God's blessing, by tact and kindness, if a warm-hearted servant of God, understanding sailors and their special dangers and temptations, were to live among them and make friends with them. A comfortable furnished house would be lent, rent free, for a time, to a suitable Christian brother or sister with some private means willing to reside and labour among these poor people. Communications may be sent, as under, to yours faithfully, W. D. H.

NOTES FROM THE UNITED STATES.

By Mr. GAWIN KIRKHAM.

DENVER.

ANOTHER journey of 700 miles brought me to Denver, Colorado, calling at Omaha on the way. Each of these cities is in some respects a greater surprise than those already seen. This city of Denver, and all its surroundings, requires irrigation, on account of the scarcity of rain, yet it has 80,000 souls. These mountains contain gold, silver, lead, &c., and the mining operations keep the city in a constant excitement, and every stranger seen in the city is supposed to want to buy land, mining shares, &c. I was just in time to attend a reception of the Y.M.C.A. to consider Christian work in the city. Five ministers were present, and the tone of the meeting was good. Each one seemed to feel his responsibility before the Lord to do something. I was permitted to speak on open-air preaching, and was glad to find the Association determined to do more in this direction in the future. From all accounts, I gathered that there is good evangelical preaching in the churches.

The distances on this Continent are so great that I found it impossible to accomplish all I desired, and decided to make this my extreme western point. But I confess I turned back from the verge of these Rocky Mountains with regret. I saw a magnificent golden sunset behind them, which flooded my soul with tender feelings. The majesty and might of God, the new Jerusalem, and the glories of the other world, came strongly upon me as I seemed to stand on the very threshold of heaven. Next morning, as the train bore me away o'er the prairies, I gazed through an open window upon these everlasting hills, and the last peak did not disappear till we were nearly 100 miles away. Most of them were blue, but some of the higher ones were clad in perpetual snow.

were not less impressive in their way than the mountains. For 245 miles there was no trace of spade or plough, i.e., nothing grew artificially. There were a few wooden houses here and there, occupied by men in charge of the herds of cattle which graze on these boundless plains; but not a shrub or vegetable, much less grass or crops, grown by the care of man. Yet the solitudes preached their sermons. The presence of God was felt "in the void waste as in the city full." The dry, sandy bed of a stream spoke of false friendship and disappointed hopes (Job vi. 15-20). A small spring bubbling up and gradually increasing till it swelled into the Republican River reminded me of Ezekiel's vision, where there was life at the touch of the waters (chap. xlvii. 9). Two graves on a low hill, rudely railed in, told that, however few the inhabitants, death would find them out. And the bones of buffaloes, oxen, &c., freely scattered, told of the unbelieving Israelites, "whose carcases fell in the wilderness" (Heb. iii. 17). On arriving at the train to St. Louis had gone, and there was no other for twelve hours. Sauntering up into the town I was struck with some of the houses, standing on rocky eminences, and presenting a picturesque appearance in the morning mist. But I was more struck with the number of drinking saloons, in some of which music and song were already heard to attract customers.

There came over me a strong conviction that the Lord had a purpose in leaving me here, and I felt I must testify for Him. So returning to the station for my "Coloured Teacher," I sought the Market-place (it was market day), and, mounting a bench by the new Opera House, soon secured a crowd, to whom I preached the Gospel. It is at such times we keenly feel our responsibilities. We are speaking to people whom we shall never see again, and it behoves us to be clear of their blood. I then sought out the Y.M.C.A., whose secretary, F. A. Hatch, very kindly showed me round and gave me much information. Like other cities this has grown rapidly, and has now 100,000 inhabitants, 10,000 being coloured people. At noon I attended a study class, where the Rev. F. S. Beggs met some Sunday school teachers, and went through the lesson for the morrow with them. This seemed to me a useful plan, and ought to be common.

Before coming away I visited the rooms of the Railway Mission, and was much pleased with its ample arrangements. Thirteen companies use the Union Depôt, as the central station is called, and rooms are set apart on the premises, towards the cost of which the companies contribute largely.

ST. LOUIS.

How shall I describe a Sunday in St. Louis? Here is an overgrown city of more than 400,000 souls, that has more the appearance of Paris on the Lord's Day than any other place I have ever visited. The walls were covered with play-bills which, almost without exception, had "Sunday October 7," on them. Crowded tram-cars passed to and fro all day; 20,000 people paid for admission to the State fair, bands of music were heard at intervals, the Germans were celebrating the 200th anniversary of the settlement of Germantown, Pa, with music and song, including secular speeches and plenty of beer. In an evening walk I saw the people crowding into four theatres, most of which were lighted by electricity, as were some of the numerous drinking saloons, also crowded. This is but one side of the picture.

There are about 175 churches (42 being Roman Catholic); many earnest Christian ministers, and much earnest work for Christ. During my four days' stay, I could see but a fraction of this. In the afternoon I saw a Chinese Sunday-school in the Y.M.C.A.'s rooms, each scholar having a lady teacher all to himself. One of these Chinese, about to visit his native country, addressed the school in intelligible English. In the closing exercises the scholars repeated the Lord's Prayer together in Chinese.

Of the 125 Chinese in the city, 56 are under Christian instruction. I heard of these Sunday-schools as part of the Y.M.C.A. work in Canada, and am told it is common in the States.

At the close of an ordinary Sunday-school in the same rooms I addressed a meeting of workers, specially convened to hear about open-air preaching. I then spoke in Lucas Market, and in the evening in the Y.M.C.A. rooms. These evangelistic meetings were continued on the two following evenings, with tokens of blessing, and I much regretted, with these indications of the Spirit's work, that I could not stay longer. It was pleasing to meet with converts brought in by the labours of D. L. Moody, Henry Moorhouse, and George Needham. One of the latter is engaged, with others, in working a Bible-carriage, the only one, as I understood, in the States. I went out with the brethren one evening, and witnessed the sale of some two dozen copies of the Scriptures, in half an hours chiefly Testaments, some of them in German. On the last evening of my visit I gave an address in the La Fayette Park Presbyterian Church.

EMIGRATION TO SOUTH AUSTRALIA.—Mr. W. Chorley, of the Kingsland Mission, asks us to state that some branches of the labour market in this distant colony are very crowded and that British artisans proceeding thither will probably meet with disappointment. He cites the case of a relative, a stonemason, who was induced to go to Adelaide; on reaching that place he found that instead of work being plentiful many of the unemployed were clamouring for the institution of Government relief works.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE Y.M.C.A.—The seventh anniversary of the Sunday-school Teachers' Preparation Class, in connection with the Newcastle-on-Tyne Young Men's Christian Association was lately held. This class, at which the average attendance is sixty-five, is conducted in rotation by various ministers and other qualified persons in the town of all denominations. For the fifty-two lessons of the past year, which are those of the International Series (afternoon), there have been no less than than thirty-five different conductors. Whilst every effort is made to maintain a high standard of efficiency and ability, there is also a very pleasing variety.

DINNERS FOR POOR SCHOOL CHILDREN.

THE work of the "Destitute Children's Dinner Society," which began in the winter of 1866-7, has now been extended to all parts of London, where misery and pauper education indicate the need of such assistance. The two qualifications for help are that the real need and merits of the children shall be ascertained, and that none but those attending schools shall be recipients. In the season 1881-2 the number of dinners given was 187,329; the children's pence (which are now reduced to halfpence) amounted to £381 1s. 3d. Last winter the figures were slightly lower, but the work done was not less effectual.

The dinners are meat dinners of Irish stew and bread, and cost 3d. per head, of which 2½d. is given by the Society, and ½d. for the bread by the child. There is accumulative evidence of the physical, moral, and educational benefit which the children derive from these dinners.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

DEAR SIR,—For many years I have endeavoured to aid "The Irish Society" and "The Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland." With all my heart, I second the letter from "One of the least of Christ's disciples," which appeared in your columns on November 1. It is the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ alone that can bring peace to Ireland, and the two societies I have named are working nobly to circulate it.

England has, in the past, done grievous wrong to this unhappy country; will not some of her many wealthy Christians come forward at this crisis to supply the help so much needed? This will be thankfully received by Rev. Wm. Fitzpatrick, 17, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin, for Irish Society; by Capt. Kearney White, R.N., Pembroke-street, Dublin, for Scripture Readers' Society; or by yours truly,

P. C. ANNESLEY, Dowager Countess.
Newcastle, Co. Down, Ireland.

SIR,—Having seen that a correspondent in your issue of November 1 proposes special effort for Ireland by increased subscription to various branches of Christian work, I would suggest that each thoughtful reader of THE CHRISTIAN in Ireland should procure a Douay Testament, and read it aloud on Sabbath afternoons, in any cottage where there is hope of its being received with gladness. Many willing listeners will be found. Copies of the Douay Testament may be had for 6d., at 10, D'Olier-street, Dublin.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Leek.—Mr. R. Weaver has been labouring here for some days with much blessing in the conversion of souls. Many who found Christ twenty-three years ago are still walking in paths of righteousness and rejoicing in the Lord.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wiggan have held a fortnight's successful Mission services in Brighouse, Yorkshire. The meetings have been crowded and much blessed. Many persons, including a number of younger people, have found peace in Jesus.

Annan, N.B.—A most blessed time has been experienced through the labours of Mr. W. D. Dunn. Christians received great blessing, and many of the poor lost ones were gathered into the kingdom. Mr. Dunn's next field of labour is Greenock, for which prayer is asked.

Long Crendon.—Gospel services, conducted here by Mr. John Harris, from the Evangelisation Society, have been well attended, and made a means of blessing to many. Chilton, Ambrosden, Brill, Piddington, Ludgershall, and Shabbington have also received showers of refreshing.

Miles Platting.—A twelve days' Mission was conducted in the parish of St. Luke's, by Rev. A. R. D'Arcy. Large numbers attended the services, which were held in the church, the schoolroom, and in some of the factories of the parish. The after-meetings were numerously attended, and towards the close of the Mission much fruit was gathered for the Lord. The Mission reached many of the class who scarcely ever attend either church or chapel.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith commenced their Mission at Portsmouth on Saturday, November 3rd, when the Lake-road Chapel was crowded for a song service. On Sunday the various services were attended by large congregations, and in the evening the chapel was crammed, despite the rain. Each evening during the week services have been held, and much interest is being evinced therein. On Sunday last a special service was held for men.

Children's Services in the North.—Mr. A. Mackeith, of Glasgow, and his helpers, Messrs. Steel and Pratt, have lately conducted Gospel services for the children at Barrhead and Pollockshaws. The lime-light lantern views from the "Pilgrim's Progress," with the explanatory remarks of the Evangelist, continue to create much interest among young and old alike. Real and lasting blessing has followed these efforts.

Mr. Henry Thorne has been conducting overflow meetings in connection with Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Mission nightly in the hall of the Y.M.C.A. The Lord has been manifesting his saving power in the conversion of many souls. He has already had the first fruits of the harvest of blessing to be reaped during his forthcoming Mission to young men only, from Nov. 20 to Dec. 1.

Mrs. Yeoland has been at work in the village of Polmont, Stirlingshire, for two months. She has visited from house to house, and also spoken in the Mission-room there. She has, by God's blessing, made a deep impression on many, and the work which she began there two and a half years ago (as she was asked to come again) has been rendered more permanent. Some who then continued undecided have declared themselves on the Lord's side. She deals most thoroughly and judiciously with the anxious, and her Gospel addresses are remarkable for their power and clearness.

Peterhead, N.B.—The Lord's work, in connection with Topping's Hall Mission, is being steadily carried on, with tokens of the Master's presence, in the salvation of sinners. Tent services were held in the country districts during the summer months. Much opposition was offered. In one district a stand was refused; but believing there was blessing to be given, the tent was pitched near the same place in the "Peat Moss," and the one who gave most annoyance is now rejoicing in the Lord with all his house. All were converted before the meetings ended, and their barn opened for the Lord's work to be carried on. W. S.

Dorking.—The open-air services on Westcott-green, on Lord's-day afternoons during the summer, have been brought to a close. The Lord has been very gracious to us, and the meetings have been well attended. The services are continued in Our Cottage on Sunday afternoons and Friday evenings.—E. S. Millett.

Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, S.W.—The special Mission, commenced here on Sunday, 4th inst., has been graciously owned of God in the salvation of souls. The meetings will be continued until Sunday, the 18th: Sunday at 3.45 and 7 p.m., and every week evening at 8. Speakers: Messrs. Russell Hurditch, E. Trotter, and F. C. Spurr. Christian workers are earnestly asked to "Come over and help."

TOWER HAMLETS' MISSION.

ON Saturday afternoon six memorial-stones of the new Great Assembly Hall, which it is proposed to erect for carrying out and developing the work of the Tower Hamlets Mission, were laid. The cost of the building it is desired to erect will be £20,000. The Earl of Shaftesbury presided. The first stone was laid by Lady Blanche Keith-Falconer, who was introduced by her brother, the Hon. Ion Keith-Falconer, as one having a great interest in the work of the Tower Hamlets Mission. The second stone was laid by Miss Cory, of Cardiff, and Mr. John Cory said that his daughters had come up from Wales with very great pleasure to give aid and support to this great and glorious movement.

The Earl of Shaftesbury laid the third stone. He did not suppose that there was any part of the metropolis more forgotten, or in a more neglected state, than the dense population of this district was in former days. All honour and gratitude to those men who first undertook the work of evangelising that district. He believed they had a large harvest before them. If it were not for such movements what would become of the enormous seething masses of the population? To all these agencies for carrying the Gospel to the masses of the people, diving into the depths of human misery, and bringing into the light of the Gospel all who were suffering, to such agencies was due all the tranquillity we enjoyed. There was still much to be done, and much to be preserved of what they had done.

Mr. George Williams laid the fourth stone, and said that in addition to a pure Gospel being preached in the new building, they would have Blue Ribbon Temperance, and also a branch of the Young Men's Christian Association. Another thing he hoped they would have was a branch of the Young Women's Christian Association; and he also trusted they would have not only a Help Myself Society, but a Help-one-Another Society. The fifth stone was laid by Mrs. Frank Bevan. Mr. F. A. Bevan said that his father, who was the treasurer, was willing to give £2000, and thought that other Christian friends in London could manage to make up the other nine-tenths of the sum required. The sixth stone was laid by Lady Hobart. After a few remarks from Mr. Rowland Smith, Mr. John Hilton said the drinking habits of society, and the temptations which surrounded the people, were a great hindrance to the extension of religious work, and he was rejoiced that Mr. Charrington, besides preaching a pure Gospel, also taught people to abandon that which was the source of their greatest temptations.

Subsequently tea was provided, and afterwards a public meeting was held in the temporary hall. Lord Shaftesbury presided at the opening of the proceedings, and addresses were delivered in support of the work carried on by Mr. Charrington.

PLYMOUTH.—A meeting of ladies was recently held here to discuss the question of the Contagious Diseases Acts, when several speeches were made and resolutions passed respecting it.

MAJOR AND MRS. POOLE IN NEWARK.

THE Lord hath triumphed very gloriously here, and filled his people's hearts with joy. On Monday night, November 5, a serious disturbance being threatened, twenty police from Nottingham were present to prevent any breach of the peace. On Tuesday night, the magistrates, having refused further protection, the meeting was held in simple dependence on the Lord's power. A crowded audience filled the Corn Exchange, to which Mrs. Evered Poole spoke for a short time, with marvellous effect. A solemn quiet reigned. Tears stole down many a rough cheek, as she pressed home the awful responsibility of individual influence, and urged all opposing the work to pause and consider, lest their influence might cause the ruin of immortal souls.

A very remarkable change from that moment seemed to come over the spirit of the town; opponents were silent and subdued, and crowds have filled the hall to listen. Up to Saturday last 500 pledges were taken. Many of these new adherents have had to, and will have to bear bitter persecution. They are commended to the prayers of the Lord's remembrancers. Those connected with the brewing interests announce their intention of opposing the Temperance movement in Newark by every means in their power.

RESCUE WORK IN THE EAST-END.

SIR,—I am deputed by the Committee of Mrs. Wilkes' Homes to request you to allow us the opportunity of informing your readers that, with a view to the consolidation and extension of this important work, it has been decided to divide the management of the Homes, which will in future be carried on by two separate committees.

The Elms, Walthamstow, will be conducted under the especial patronage of Mrs. Walsham How, who will continue it as an Industrial Training School for penitent girls between the ages of fourteen and twenty years.

The Rescue Work in Poplar will also be continued at Manor Cottage, Kerby-street, by Mrs. Wilkes, who will reside there entirely, keeping not less than two houses open always as a day and night Refuge. Three beds in the Walthamstow Training School will always be reserved for the use of selected cases from Manor Cottage.

As a member of both committees, I now desire to impress upon your readers the need of increased help, to re-establish these Homes free from debt, and of co-operation with their present supporters in the very important work undertaken by the two committees. Subscriptions intended to be divided between both the Homes to be addressed to Hon. Mrs. J. Stuart Wortley, 16, Clarges-street, W. For the Training School at Walthamstow, to Mrs. Walsham How, Stainforth House, Upper Clapton, E. For Rescue Work in Poplar, to Mrs. Wilkes, Manor Cottage, Kerby-street, Poplar, E.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.—On Thursday evening the Open All-night Refuge connected with the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution was re-opened for its work of mercy, after being thoroughly repaired, and some much-needed improvement effected. Mr. Thomas very briefly related the history and progress of the work, and stated the expenses involved in the repairs and the help already received towards the outlay, and expressed his belief that the Lord would dispose the hearts of his people to supply what was yet required.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE IN HOXTON.—On Saturday night last the 2101st consecutive nightly meeting was held at Hoxton Hall, N. The same day Mr. William Mark Noble, son of the founder of the movement, and Mr. George Harris, of Reading, accompanied by twenty other abstaining friends, sailed in the clipper Thirlwell for Brisbane, Queensland, vid Sydney. On December 1, Mr. George Blacklock enters upon his duties as an appointed agent of the Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance Mission; applications for his services should be addressed to the Secretary, Hoxton Hall, Hoxton-street, N.

Letters to the Editor.

PROVIDENCE CHURCH, UXBRIDGE.

Dear Sir,—As some of the trustees of the above-named place of worship have now requested their co-trustee who owns houses of ill-fame in Uxbridge to resign his trusteeship, I do not intend to follow up the subject further, so far as Providence Church is concerned, except to ask to be allowed to say a few words on one point in the letter from the deacons of that church, which you published last week.

While laying stress upon the inability of their church to legally depose the trustee in question from his official position, they ignore the fact that, although devoid, as it appears, of legal power, it was possible for the church, at a church meeting any time during years past, to have absolved itself from moral responsibility by expressing its condemnation of one of its trustees affording accommodation for the commission of a damnable sin; and by passing a resolution requesting him to resign. Some of the members and deacons of the church have for years resided within a few yards of the immoral houses belonging to this trustee; and in a small town like Uxbridge, while members of other churches were well acquainted with the fact of ownership, it is preposterous to suppose that the members of Providence Church were alone in ignorance. Your readers who know me will think it needless for me to say that I have no feeling against this particular church and congregation, or against any other. In the future, as in the past, I shall attack vice and complicity with vice wherever I find it, irrespective of any ulterior consideration, and with perfect impartiality.—Yours sincerely,

Alfred S. Dyer,
Editor of The Sentinel.

IS "CONVERSION" UNSCRIPTURAL?

Sir,—In the now famous Echo correspondence on the "Church and the Working Classes," not a few insults have been offered to all who happen to believe in the supernatural element in moral regeneration. One writer says:—

"The popular form of religion in England is Evangelical Puritanism—the religion of the well-to-do middle classes, which in this country constitutes the "religious world." This, which has drawn a foolish and utterly unscriptural and futile barrier of separation between 'converted and unconverted,' has done more than anything to drive the poor from our churches, as well as to promote the hypocrisy and narrowness which have always characterised English religion, and particularly the religion of English Dissent."

If this sentence means anything, it means that the "unconverted" are as good as the converted, in church and chapel. This dangerous but uncomfortable doctrine is one cause of the moral powern lessness of many semi-worldly churches in 1883. It some "fashionable" episcopal and nonconformis- churches, moral character counts for little if a person has plenty of cash. Sociality, rather than spirituality, is the inspiring motive of many unconverted teachers in Sunday-schools. Is this Scriptural? John T. Markley.

EVANGELISATION IN GERMANY.

Dear Sir,—The Christian of Nov. 1 has just come to hand. The article headed "Evangelisation Society for Germany," very naturally claimed my special interest. How thankful I and many of my countrymen would be if an Evangelisation Society were started on the principles of the Evangelical Alliance, allowing free scope of action for the various sections of the Evangelical Church in Germany. Hitherto this has not been the case, but under the name of Evangelical Alliance, only the Lutheran and the Reformed Churches are included, whilst the Baptists and Methodists and other free churches find no recognition, nor do they escape the enmity of the so-called Evangelical Alliance. I, for one, have suffered much by the exclusive spirit of the Lutheran pastors, and even now my work as an evangelist would be hindered by them if they had the power to do so. Anyone acquainted with Gospel work in Germany will agree with me in saying that the Baptist and Methodist brethren have laboured with great zeal and much self denial in Germany. They have been excluded from the Evangelical Alliance, they have been accused of "building on other men's foundations," those who attend their meetings have been excluded from Lutheran churches; yet these brethren labour on "by evil report or good report," preaching the Word.

The names on the German Committee are exclusively belonging to the State churches. I do not think English believers ought to be asked for their support without telling them the exact character of the society they do support. If a truly Evangelical Alliance existed in Germany, one would expect to see the names of the leading Baptist, Methodist, and Free Church brethren coupled with Professor Christlieb, Baron Oertzen, &c. This would be "to co-operate with the existing Protestant churches of the country—and be worked on the same lines as the Evangelisation Society of London," but an exclusively State-Church work is on very different lines.

I feel compelled to utter my protest, as one who desires to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.—Yours in Gospel bonds,

F. W. Baedeker.

EMIGRANT ACQUAINTANCES.

Sir,—Would any of your readers suggest some plan that would enable Christians, intending to emigrate, to get acquainted with each other before starting? Many young men would be glad to meet with others of a like mind leaving home for a strange country. They would help each other temporally as well as spiritually in the struggle of life, and be stronger to witness for their Master.

A WORD TO CHRISTIANS.

"When thou gatherest the grapes of thy vineyard, thou shalt not glean it afterwards: it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow."—Deut. xxiv. 21.

Dear Sir,—By the law of England gleaning is felony (Woodfall's "Landlord and Tenant"). Yet on the spiritual application of the passage above quoted from Deuteronomy, I wish to put it seriously to the consciences of your readers whether a Christian may sell cast-off clothing without a loss, in some degree, of the Divine blessing. I observe the appeal of Mr. A. G. Brown, of 22, Bow-road, E. I never in my life sold an article of wearing apparel. I have always had them put in good repair, and then given to some worthy recipient. I never saved a penny, and now in my old age am placed completely above want.

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE JEWS' QUESTION.

Dear Sir,—At a time when so much Christian sympathy is being awakened in England on behalf of the Jews for the persecutions they are now enduring on the Continent, it may be well to give ear to one or two of the reasons which prompt this anti-Semitic feeling, shared alike by pastor and peasant. It is hardly necessary to say that the Jew is not unpopular on account of his physiognomy or dress. The Jew is not attacked by envious Christians who are jealous of the glory in store for God's chosen people; he is hated because he is the money-lender, the usurer of the country. He comes to the ignorant, innocent peasant and tempts him to buy what he cannot pay for, and what he knows his victim never will be able to pay for; and when the debt is sufficiently large, he pounces down on the unlucky man's farm and house. This is what is occurring daily in the agricultural districts of Germany, Austria, and Russia. Judaism is sucking the blood of whole countries, and these persecutions are in many cases the protests of exasperated men. In his thirst for gold, this "Merchant of Venice" has neither pity nor remorse. He has a monopoly of the capital of the country, and, on a smaller scale, is committing the crime of which the well-known corn and cotton ringers were guilty.

In the Middle Ages he was bullied by the aristocracy; now he is the bully, and is taking fearful vengeance, not on his former oppressors, but on ignorant, poor men, who are deceived by his smooth, flattering words. The Talmud enjoins him to cheat a Christian. These persecutions are punishments inflicted by the injured on the injurer. It is the case of the "biter bit." Only to-day we are informed that justice has been executed on a certain number of Jews belonging to the town of Neustettin, who burned down an old synagogue, and then in their Press ascribed the diabolical crime to the outcome of an anti-Semitic speech, and attempted to pose as the martyrs of the Christian "dogs."

Englishmen, and, above all, Christian Englishmen, are as great lovers of the truth as they are generous supporters of the weak; but it is high time that the zeal which has been manifested in the cause of a religion, which God has decreed shall give way to a better and a purer one, be tempered by considerations of the reasons which cause the breach between the advocates of a lower and a higher standard of morality.

Let us act as arbiters between the two combatants, not as fanatical allies of the one. Let us tell the Jew that God hates usury, "the root of all evil," as we would tell our own people that He hates drunkenness, or the French that He loathes impurity.

Let us show the "oppressed" children of Israel that we will not encourage them, still less praise them, if when "buffeted for their faults, they take it patiently," but that we seek their true happiness, by humbly doing all we can to win them from the service of a god of gold to that of a God of Love, a God of Mercy, and a God of Salvation. Notices of Books, &c.

Miss Marston's Girls, and their Confirmation. Nisbet & Co. A story of the confirmation of four young girls, and the development of character in each.

Noble, but not the Noblest. By Marie Hall. Hodder & Stoughton. A well-told, though somewhat painful and disappointing story of early Christian days in Rome. It shows the incoming of the errors of Mariolatry and Monkery, and their disappointing and bitter results.

Pirate and Madman. By Ballantyne. Nisbet & Co. An interesting tale of missionary enterprise, showing the power of Christianity to subdue and subsequently to regenerate savages of the worst type, located in one of the South Sea Islands. This, like most of the author's works, will prove both interesting and instructive to young people.

Nelly Channell. By Sarah Doudney. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. A clever tale, inculcating noble principles, and teaching that God can bless those whom He puts asunder as well as those whom He joins together. The book is, however, too much "bumped out." The paper is thick, the type large, the margin ample, and out of 214 pages 38 are blank.

Lady Temple's Grandchildren. By Evelyn Everett-Green. Nisbet & Co. The most exquisitely pathetic story we have read for many a long day. It tells of a little peacemaker who unconsciously made harmony everywhere, because she herself was filled with the peace of God. It is not the author's first attempt; we hope it will not be her last.

A Popular Introduction to the Pentateuch, the Books of Joshua, Judges, and Ruth. By the Rev. R. Wheler Bush, M.A. Religious Tract Society. These two volumes abound in information of a valuable kind, and are eminently characterised by reverence for sacred truth and evangelical faith in the revelation of God. For Sunday-school and Bible-class teachers they will prove a storehouse of useful and necessary material, to which they will turn with great advantage to themselves and those they seek to instruct.

Jacob Abbott's Stories. A new edition of these deservedly popular narratives for children is issued by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton. 1s. 6d. each. There is a wonderful difference, to the youthful mind, between a truth in the abstract and the same truth embodied in a tale. This fact has been very practically recognised by the author of these stories; it would be impossible to mention, within the limits of a brief notice, half the important lessons that are conveyed through this pleasing medium. The titles of the four pretty books are "Juno and George," "Mary Osborne," "Juno on a Journey," and "Hubert." "Juno" is the heroine of all the stories, and the fact that the same characters appear more or less in each book adds greatly to the interest of the series. Any boy or girl who reads the first will certainly want to read the other three.

Three Books About Luther. The Luther library grows like a rolling snowball in a thaw. It will be scarcely possible for the average reader to possess, much less to peruse, all the books that are being written or compiled about the great Reformer. Three of these are before us. They can be had at small cost, and we venture to think that any one who reads them carefully will be about as wise and well-informed as he need be on the subject. Martin Luther the Reformer (Cassell & Co, 1s.) is a popularly-written and sufficiently exhaustive sketch of Luther's career, translated from the German. Luther's Table Talk (Religious Tract Society) comprises selected extracts from the recorded sayings of the Reformer. Dr. Macauley, of The Leisure Hour, is responsible for the selection, and he seems to have executed the task with good judgment. The little book is one of the series, "Companions for a quiet hour," and is issued in a very neat and attractive form. The third volume, Anecdotes of Luther and the Reformation, is the most comprehensive of the three. Besides furnishing many of the most noteworthy incidents in Luther's life, and copious doses of his "Table Talk," it gives stray glimpses of contemporary and other modern Reformers, who have left their mark on the religious history of their time. It is published by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton, in a dress that does credit to the taste of the binders (price 3s. 6d.).

 The publisher of "God the Creator of both Evil and Good," noticed in our last, is Mr. E. W. Allen, 4, Ave Maria Lane, E.C., not Messrs. W. H. and L. Collingridge.

Mission Appeals.

Rosslyn Mission, Barnsbury.—Miss Garnett, 32, Westbourne-road, Barnsbury, N., will be glad of help towards securing a building for carrying on the work of the Mission.

Cage Lane Mission, Plumstead, Kent.—Miss Russell appeals for funds towards the current expenses of the Mission, and the Purchase Fund. Mr. T. A. Denny has kindly promised another £50, conditionally. £500 is needed.

Soldiers' Home, The Curragh, Co. Kildare.—From £400 to £500 are still required for our new Home, for furnishing, lighting, &c., before it can be opened. Contributions will be thankfully received by the Hon. Secretary, Mrs. Perry.

Gospel Mission, Floodgate-street, Birmingham.—The workers of this Mission appeal for tracts and pecuniary help for carrying on their work, and ask the prayers of the Lord's people on their effort. Address: J. Grinned, 186, Andrew's-road, Birmingham.

Working Boys' Home, Dublin.—The Committee are anxious to repair, clean, and partly refurnish the Home, but cannot do so until the necessary funds are forthcoming. There still remains £197 to be raised. Contributions will be thankfully received by Mr. Thomas Spumer, 10, Lansdowne-road, Dublin.

Female Mission to the Fallen.—An urgent appeal on behalf of this Mission is issued by Sir John Kennaway. "A thousand new cases," he says, "gives a fair idea of the extent of the work done by this Society. If it is to be maintained, a great increase of support must be secured." Address: A. J. S. Maddison, Secretary, 32, Charing-cross, W.C.

Mansion House Mission.—Mr. G. W. Linnecar, 89, Belleaden-road, Peckham, S.E., writes:—"We have thousands of poor near us. We are hindered in our work because of a debt of £490, and our expenses heavy. The work prospers under the Divine smile, and if friends will come and judge of the merits of our work, I am sure they will help us. Left-off clothing for the poor gladly received, or help in money."

Bethlehem.—As Christmas draws near, will not Christian friends remember the present needs of the people of Bethlehem? "The Society for Promoting Female Education in the East" has a school for girls in Bethlehem. Funds are urgently needed for building a school. Applications have continually to be refused for want of room. A lady has promised £100 at Christmas if the remainder, about £300, is then contributed. Contributions may be sent to Miss Webb, 267, Vauxhall-bridge-road, London, S.W.

Help for the Needy.—Mr. J. J. Jones, of the London Samaritan Society, 98, High-street, Homerton, E., pleads for cast-off clothing and boots for the poor children who attend the elementary schools in the metropolis. Almost daily applications are received from teachers and workers among the poor, entreating that this highly-valued mode of relief should be resumed. It is an actual fact that many children are unable to leave their homes to attend school, and many men cannot seek work, for lack of clothing and boots. Parcels can be sent to the new offices of the Mission, 57 and 59, Ludgate-hill, E.C.

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, SANDGATE.—This, the oldest Soldiers' Home in the United Kingdom, celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary on the 7th inst. A goodly number of soldiers, with their friends, sat down to an excellent tea. A public meeting was afterwards held in the Mission Hall. Addresses were given by Mr. W. E. Alston, a lady, Colonel Sladen, R.A., from Walmer, and other friends. The one matter for regret was that Miss Papillon, owing to ill-health, was unable to be present.

THE ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children,

Now Sheltering, Educating, and Training over 1,300 Poor Boys and Girls,

WILL (D.V.) BE HELD

THE SECOND WEEK OF DECEMBER, 1883.

A few Articles have already been received, but much more will be needed, and the aid of all is earnestly asked.

We would remind those friends whose busy fingers are at work on our behalf, that shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing are particularly valuable additions to the clothing room of our Bazaar, being much asked for and readily sold. Of course besides these we shall be glad to receive pictures, jewellery, old coins, old china, curios, musical instruments, and fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, books, drawings, bric-a-brac, and other examples of the thousand and one tasteful ornaments which are required to furnish bazaar stalls.

It is not necessary, we hope, again to remind our friends that, as in former years, the Sale will be conducted in strict harmony with the objects in view—no raffling or other doubtful measures being adopted to ensure success or to bring in money.

Gifts of plants, cut flowers, fresh butter, eggs, or confectionery will also be very welcome if sent in a day or two only before the first day of the sale.

All other gifts should reach us AS SOON AS POSSIBLE, but in any case not later than Saturday, 1st December, and should contain inside the parcel a complete list, with the name and address of the donor, so as to ensure acknowledgment. Carriage should be prepaid, and a separate advice of the despatch of the parcel should be posted to us two days beforehand. All articles and communications should be plainly addressed to 18 to 26, Stepney-causeway, London, E.

OUR WINTER'S WORK

AMONG NEGLECTED GIRLS AND POOR STREET BOYS.

Dear Friends,—Until quite lately we have been able to receive every case of real destitution making application. Now we have to hesitate—to delay—and soon shall have to refuse admission to many whom we must then

TURN AWAY FROM OUR DOORS.

Our Funds are, however, so low, that unless the Lord whom we serve lays our needs on your hearts, no other course will be open to us.

Very earnestly do I plead, therefore, that we may not be compelled to close the door in the face of any poor homeless little one seeking admission.

Your fellow-labourer among poor children,

T. J. BARNARDO.

18 & 20, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

Cheques should be crossed London and South-Western Bank; so also should P.O. Orders, made payable at the G.P.O.

REMARKABLE CASE of BRONCHITIS and BRONCHIAL ASTHMA.

EXTRACT from the LETTER of A—— D——, a DISSENTING MINISTER in the NORTH, to MR. CONGREVE, bearing date September 27, 1883.

[This patient, who does not wish his name and address to appear in print, says, "You may show them to any enquirer, and I will confirm my statement if needed.]

"I had a constitutional tendency to asthma from a boy. . . . Roughing it in the colonies, I became subject to severe pains in the chest, and left for England with a sensation of great tightness and difficulty of breathing. . . . Arriving in the old country, I found myself continually catching severe colds. These became bronchial in character, and accompanied by that peculiar whistling with which asthmatics are familiar. The chest was so painful, and breathing so difficult, that when I awoke in the morning I felt as if I would like a knife to make an incision and let out the air. Soon I had miserable nights also. I consulted five doctors in all, and not one gave me a hint which was of the slightest use. They told me I must leave the country, for this climate would never do for me. I reluctantly prepared to leave, and had arranged for my passage, when I caught my eye on your name, and the mention of your treatment, in Mr. Sourveon's Almanack. I sent for your book, and was convinced; and, in short, I determined to give your medicine a trial.

"At this time I was suffering from a violent Cough. I had an engagement to preach on the Sunday, and was in terror at the prospect. I endeavoured to get a Postal Order to send you, but it being Saturday the office was closed. I was successful, however, in obtaining a small bottle of your medicine of a druggist. I took two doses that night, and three the next day. Such relief was experienced that, returning by the train, I found myself saying, 'Eureka! (I have found it). All thought of leaving England was from that day abandoned.

"I do not mean to say that I was instantly cured. The process was gradual. The early awaking in the morning, and tightness of chest, day by day vanished. In six months I considered myself cured; but, catching a chill, I was again threatened, but in a month was better. Then I entered again on the regular work of the ministry, and for a long time now have had no trouble with the disease. I keep your medicine by me, and sometimes take a dose when threatened with cold, or on Sunday, to give me a good voice.

"I owe my deliverance from this terrible disease, and my restoration to usefulness, under God, to Mr. Congreve's medicine. I perform full Sunday work, and walk daily for miles in all weathers, and suffer no inconvenience."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

"Mr. Bliss poured forth a glorious tide of artless song. He 'sang praises to God.' He sang before countless thousands the message of Divine love. He fashioned the ringing chorus and the lifting melody which touched the hearts of millions, and consecrated patriotic enthusiasm, military pride, domestic sensibility, and common instincts, to the service of the Christ whom he passionately loved."

WORRY:

ITS DANGERS AND REMEDY.

From a mere passing fit to the most poignant anxiety in the struggles of life and commerce, worry is so common a state of mind, and so many are overcome by mental strain, that it rarely gives rise to extended comment.

The grand struggle of the multitude is excited neither by ambition nor covetousness, nor by the tyranny of grosser passions; but by the common aim of the majority to maintain a bare or comfortable existence. The weariness of the scarcely successful effort is visible in almost every face. The increase of heart affections and nervous diseases arises from the distracting excitement and strain of mind, which now prevail throughout society; especially in large cities, where great competition exists, and where an uncertain commerce furnishes a precarious support, and wealth and pride too often take mean advantage of laborious poverty. In large commercial towns, we often witness, even in persons who have barely reached the middle period of life, the haggard face, sunken eye, hoary hair, and feeble gait, which properly belong to old age. Nor can the results be surprising to those who reflect that anxiety is but a chronic kind of fear; a sort of intermittent fever or ague, which as manifestly disorders the circulation and secretions as that which arises from the poisonous malaria of the marshes — which indeed, in these days of desperate speculation and grasping monopoly, is scarcely less deadly. Nor are the votaries of pleasure less exposed to the cause of mental disquietude than the sons of toil; both alike waste the energies of life in excitement, and alike suffer the penalty of breaking those laws which regulate the uses of mind and body.

(To be resumed.)

Many affections are classed as incurable because the sphere of action claimed for medicine does not extend beyond the symptoms of disease, and the sufferers become reconciled to a recurrence of the attacks. It is the impetus given to the vital energies by Magnetic treatment which controls the cause of our ailments, and not only relieves, but removes many so-called incurable affections; and from this point of view it cannot be difficult to see how cure becomes possible by this means.

In proof of this, we submit for consideration the unsolicited sta ements which appear weekly in this column.

From Mr. W. J. T. OVERETT, Rosedale Villas, K ng's-road, Cheltenham.

April 18, 1883.

"I have worn your appliances for some years, and I have so much faith in the efficacy of your treatment, that I always recommend it to any of my friends who are suffering from weakness or nervous complaints. I can speak in the highest terms concerning it, and I shall be only too pleased to do what I can to induce sufferers to adopt your remedy."

From Miss WEBB, Manor House, Foxhall-road, Ipswich.

June 11, 1883.

"I regret that I did not let you know earlier of the benefit I have derived from your treatment. After wearing your appliances for some months the ailments from which I was suffering were overcome, and the chest weakness, which seemed to defy all other remedies, has entirely disappeared. The result has far exceeded my expectations in that my general health has wonderfully improved."

Letters commendatory of Mr. Garratt's treatment by Magneto-Electricity have been received from hundreds of persons in all classes of society. A private list of 850 names as referees can be had on application. Consultation free, personally, or by letter. B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

A CRY FOR HELP FROM THE WEST.

A Plain Statement.

Most earnestly do I appeal for help for the Latymer Road Mission.

The following sums are needed to carry on the Work:

For the General Fund	£300
Boys' Evening Shelter...	100
Soup Kitchen	50
Sick Fund	50
Free Teas (at which the Gospel is preached) to the lowest in this forlorn neighbourhood	100
£4 will pay the expenses of one Tea.
To complete the extension	800
	£1,400

Our Evening Shelter for Ragged and Destitute Boys is crowded. The Girls' Shelter is not large enough for all who would come. The Sunday-schools are full. We have been obliged to build a large Hall in which we can conduct Gospel Meetings without interfering with the Boys' Shelter. Three extra class-rooms have also been added.

The Latymer Road Mission is situated in one of the most wretched parts of London, although in the parish of Kensington. In many cases families are housed like cattle, and conditions exist which are utterly opposed to Religion and Morality.

Our funds during the past five months have been so low that we have been unable by means of advertisement to make our wants known.

Pray Help the Committee.

Cheques and Post Office Orders may be sent to Morgan & Scott, office of The Christian; to Dr. J. H. Gladstone, F.R.S., 17, Pembridge-square, W.; Edward Blair, Esq., Fretherne House, 29, York-place, Portman-square; or to your obedient servant

AULAY MACAULAY, Hon. Sec.,

Blechynden Street, Notting Hill.

VISITORS ALWAYS WELCOME.

"O! for a true, comprehensive, popular Handbook to the Bible, keeping back none of the counsel of God, lowering no truth, chilling no lofty or spiritual sentiments; yet neither silly, fanatical, nor sectarian."—Dr. Arnold.

The Christian.

THE PULPIT AND THE POOR.

THE papers continue to receive communications respecting the condition of the poor, and a considerable number of correspondents advocate the reduction of the population, by stemming the recklessness with which young people of the working classes rush into marriage, and by pressing upon the married, of whatever class, that it is a crime to bring into the world children whom they have no prospect of being able to support.

There is much to be said for this view of the case, but to expect such self-restraint, and such consideration for the well-being of society, from those out of whom all the higher instincts are crushed by the cruelty or carelessness of society itself, is surely an utterly Utopian idea.

There is enough wealth in the country to sustain far more than our present population. The great evil is that not only is the distribution of wealth so extremely unequal, but there is a constant and inevitable tendency to that terrible social disease—the congestion of money in the comparatively few, while the many barely make ends meet, and the residuum are pressed down into hopeless poverty, to turn at last, like the trodden worm, and bite the heel of the oppressor.

The effect of machinery is to make men machines. To take a very simple example: A copying-clerk in a counting-house used to learn the art of letter-writing from the correspondence which he copied. Now a lad can turn the handle of the copying press, and that source of education is lost. The same principle runs through everything. The effect is that the few do the thinking, and the many become mere "hands." All increase of knowledge, and of consequent power, needs to be exercised, not selfishly, but in the interest of all, or it becomes power for oppression and not for mercy.

All elevation of public opinion, and all moral reformation, must proceed from the people of God. "Righteousness exalteth a nation," and God's witnesses must be preachers of righteousness. The Psalmist speaking, in the Spirit, of the Faithful Witness, said, "I have preached RIGHTEOUSNESS in the great congregation. I have not refrained my lips, O Lord, Thou knowest." It is the function of all who speak in the name of God to hold high the standard of righteousness, and to press upon the consciences of men the righteousness of God, and the righteous requirement of his holy law; for "He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?"

The Gospel is not a scheme devised to save men's souls from perdition by substituting Christ's righteousness for ours, and allowing us to live unrighteously. The Law, though holy, "was weak through the flesh." The commandment was holy and just and good; but it was powerless to produce a holy, just, and good life, out of sinful flesh.

Therefore God was manifested in the flesh; and, sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh, in order that the righteous requirement of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit (Rom. viii.).

Not that saved people might live unrighteously did grace and truth come by Jesus Christ, but to make it possible that ungodly sinners, saved and justified by his blood, might live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, looking for that living, purifying, and therefore blessed hope, the appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ. It is this glory which outshines in the believer's soul the vain and transitory glory of this present world.

> "Yes, I need thee, Heavenly City,
> My low spirit to upbear;
> Yes, I need thee; earth's enchantments
> So beguile me with their glare."

The preaching of the Gospel is powerless in proportion as it lacks its backbone—righteousness. The Gospel of the grace of God is the good tidings of a grace that reigneth through righteousness, and a Gospel which is not based on the righteousness of God, and which does not require righteousness in men, is a limp and invertebrate, pseudo-Gospel, which, though it may be held erect by the corsets and stays of human intellect and learning, is a lay figure, a pitiful and helpless imitation of the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God.

The Gospel of God is the "good tidings of the Kingdom of God." The seed sown by the Son of Man, and continued to be sown by all true ambassadors of Christ, is "the word of the Kingdom" (Matt. xiii. 19). "The Gospel of the grace of God," and "the kingdom of God," are different aspects of the self-same Gospel, and both terms are used by the Apostle to describe the Gospel which he had preached publicly, and from house to house, with tears (Acts xx. 24, 25).

But if it be a Kingdom and a King that the Gospel preaches, let us remember that righteousness and judgment are the foundation of the throne of that Kingdom, and that its "King shall reign in righteousness" (Is. xxxii. 1), "first being King of righteousness, and after that also King of peace" (Heb. vii. 1, 2).

The most fruitful in results of the wonderful meetings held during the past fortnight at Islington have been those in which Mr. Moody gripped the conscience with the law of God. Only a convicted sinner feels his need of grace, and the sermons from such texts as, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap:" "Thou art weighed in the balances, and found wanting;" "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God," have resulted in bringing sin to remembrance in such sort that men and women have trembled, and fled for refuge, to lay hold of the hope set before them in the Gospel.

The outcast poor, whose bitter cry has brought the President of the Board of Trade on an expedition of personal inquiry and examination into the condition of the reeking rookeries and guilt gardens of the East, do not whine for charity, but cry bitterly for justice. Do not let the preachers ask beseechingly for benevolence from those who are comfortably circumstanced, but uncompromisingly demand righteousness.

Mr. Ruskin, at Oxford, recently made the following noteworthy statement: "There is no such thing as real cheapness. Everything has its just and necessary price, which you can no more alter than you can alter the course of the earth; and whenever you boast that you have bought anything for half price, be assured that some one else has had to pay the other half."

Is it not true that "the other half" is due on a very large number of transactions and purchases? Is not advantage continually taken of the poverty of those who are obliged to sell either their goods or their labour, or both? And if this be so, and if Mr. Ruskin be correct, then the balance of account entered in "the books," which are to be opened when the Great White Throne is set, must be increasing at a fearful rate against many, even of professing Christians, whose names cannot be found in the Lamb's Book of Life, because their works testify against them that, not having the tender and compassionate and fair-dealing spirit of Christ, they are none of his. "For the Scripture saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn. And, The labourer is worthy of his reward. . . . These things teach and exhort. If any man teach otherwise . . . from such withdraw thyself.'" (Paul to Timothy v., vi.)

LATYMER-ROAD MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—This Mission, although in the wealthy parish of Kensington, is actually situated in one of the most forlorn and miserable parts of London. We work chiefly amongst laundresses, brick-makers, small costermongers, and mere labourers. Sunday is by no means a day of rest with our workers. Sunday-schools in our own building and in the Board School occupy them both morning and afternoon, whilst in the evening the separate services for the adults and children claim their attention.

One of our most interesting features of the work is our Boys' Evening Shelter; every night about 300 pay us a visit. These boys are surrounded with good influences, and but for our Shelter would be gambling in the streets, lounging outside public-houses, or frequenting low music-halls. The "Homes" of the majority of our boys is wretched in the extreme. A recent writer in the Quiver says: "The neighbourhood of Latymer-road is one of the worst districts of the West-end. The houses are not, in themselves, badly planned, nor are they built so closely together as is the case elsewhere, but they have been suffered to fall into such dis-repair that it is gravely doubtful whether they are fit for human habitation at all. So bad, indeed, are many of the houses here, the population is gradually leaving the neighbourhood, and only those whose occupation requires them to stay put up with the available accommodation for which the full rent of West-end tenements is exacted."

We have a crèche as well. The boys' night school and girls' shelter are both full, and are greatly appreciated by the poor children. The scholars from the neighbouring schools use our rooms to eat their dinner in. We hope shortly to be able to throw open a soup kitchen and invalid children's dinner table.

Our rooms are so overcrowded that we have been compelled to begin the building of a new hall and three extra class-rooms. We are very anxious during the winter months to reach some of the lowest by means of an invitation to tea. Many of our poor neighbours never by any chance enter church, chapel, or even Mission-room. It is to this class who live in the common lodging-houses that we are anxious to preach the glorious Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. I refrain in this letter from saying much about our pecuniary wants. Your readers know full well that the cost of conducting a Mission of this varied character is large. We hope many who may read these lines will be induced to pay us a visit, and to help. Sunday-school teachers and other workers are greatly needed. Gifts of left-off clothing are very welcome.—Yours faithfully, AULAY MACAULAY, Hon. Sec.

Blechynden-street, Notting-hill, Nov. 16.

ROSEMARY MISSION, ISLINGTON, N.—This hall (formerly a dancing-room) is now the centre of a good work among the poor of this crowded district. Many souls have been blessed, and the night schools, mothers' meetings, and Temperance meetings are well attended. Mr. W. McGowan, Rosemary Hall, Rosemary-street, N., will be glad of pecuniary help and the prayers of our readers.

A MODEL FACTORY.

UNDER this heading, The Standard recently gave an excellent account of an experiment in relation to manufacturing agency worthy of special attention. It appears that some 700 women and girls are employed in the Enderly Mills, Newcastle-under-Lyme, Staffordshire, where clothing, especially uniforms for police, railway officers, and volunteers, is manufactured. Mr. Richard Stanway, the proprietor of the establishment, with a view to securing the physical and general well-being of his employés, has designed and erected his buildings on an entirely new plan, and has secured perfect light, pure air, cheerful but not inconvenient sunshine, a comfortable temperature all through the year, and, indeed, every advantage calculated to ensure health and vitality, comfort and encouragement.

All the operatives are at work in one room, or rather vast hall, covering over an acre of ground, so that the various processes are all in progress on one floor, and may be seen by the visitor almost at a glance. Noise, confusion, and dust are unknown, although a hundred sewing machines are at work, capable of running at the rate of two thousand stitches per minute. Machinery, machinists, and material, are all so arranged and distributed that perfect order is secured. Forty distinct operations are performed by different persons for the completion of each garment. The scheme Mr. Stanway has contrived and carried out is so complete that he claims to have quadrupled his power of production, and yet so diminished his cost that he can produce given results at one-third less than any of his competitors.

At the same time, wages and hours of labour are regulated according to a scale far above the average in other factories. From 8 a.m. to 6.30 p.m., with two hours for meals and rest, is the rule in summer; from 9 a.m. to 5.30 p.m., with an hour and a half for meals, is the rule for winter. All labour is performed on the piece-work principle; the average earnings being, for adults, from 15s. to 20s. per week. Mr. Stanway has adopted the plan of taking the leading work-people of each department into his counsel before accepting any contract, so as to mutually estimate and decide on cost; the result being thorough confidence and co-operation all through the establishment. Meals, at wholesale cost of production, are provided on the premises. There is a medical department for relief of the sick, a crèche where children of the employés are left during work-hours in suitable charge, and a savings-bank arrangement for all who care to avail themselves of it.

Altogether, an example well worthy of imitation on a wide scale has been set by the originator of this successful attempt to improve the conditions of factory life. It is one which seems to present many points of interest and importance in reference to the right relations between capital and labour. In proportion as employers gain the confidence and esteem of their operatives, the disaffection which so frequently exists on the part of the latter must be prevented, and a healthy, and to a much more practical extent than under other conditions, a wealthy state of things is produced. It is in this direction that attention must be turned, if our social troubles are to be sensibly relieved.

TEMPTATION.

TEMPTATION. This is a long word, dear children, but I think you all know the meaning of it. It is a very important word, too, and concerns us all, for temptations come to everyone alike—to men and women as well as to little children—and we all need the same help to keep us from indulging in evil thoughts or tempers, or doing the wrong things that often appear so pleasant. You do not need that I should tell you who it is that is always trying to make us think sin such a pleasant thing. Satan has a great many names, each of which shows us something of his awful character. In the Bible he is called the Devil, a liar, a deceiver, an accuser, the Old Serpent, a murderer, the Tempter.

All the wickedness and suffering and misery that have so filled the world with tears have all been caused by people listening to Satan's evil whispers, and foolishly doing his will. He is very wise and very cunning, and he has great experience in deceiving, for ever since God created man and made him holy and happy Satan has been man's enemy, and has been trying to make him guilty and wretched.

This "Old Serpent the Devil" is just as busy now as he was in the Garden of Eden. The Bible tells us he goes about as "a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour;" and no child is too young to be beneath his notice—he tries to lead even the little tiny ones astray. How can a little child fight against him? How can a young boy or girl resist such a strong, cruel, cunning enemy as this? Dear children, God, your loving Father in Heaven, has shown us a way by which we may gain the victory over him, however young you are. There is a verse in the Bible which says, "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you." How can you resist him? By prayer; by asking God to help you and to fight for you. He will always do it, for His promise is so sure: "Call upon Me in the time of trouble, so will I hear thee, and thou shalt glorify Me."

I once heard a dear old friend of mine, who loved God with all his heart, tell a story about someone who wanted to be a Christian too; but who complained that he did not find he was making much progress, for sin had just as much power over him as before, and yet (he said) whenever Satan tempted him he never failed to resist him. "How do you resist him?" my friend asked. The other replied, "I always say 'Get thee behind me, Satan.'" "Is that all?" my friend answered, "then indeed I do not wonder that all your efforts fail." And he taught him that it was only our Lord Jesus Christ who could thus speak to the tempter, and be obeyed.

What we have to do is to speak to God, to tell Him all that troubles us, and ask Him to help us for his dear Son's sake. Each of you who reads these lines has some special temptation which Satan uses to try and make you fall. Perhaps it may be indolence, or a habit of not being perfectly truthful, or you may have a hasty passionate temper which leads you into saying unkind and unjust words. Perhaps you may sometimes be tempted to read some book which is forbidden, to disobey some order in the hope it may not be found out, or even, perhaps, to take something that is not yours. Whatever it is, watch against it, pray against it, strive against it, and you will always find, in answer to your prayer, that God will give you exactly that measure of grace which you need to overcome the sin.

A few days ago, some little children were running about out of doors, playing hide and seek; and very merry they were as they hunted about, behind shrubs, and in shady corners, and narrow garden paths, for the one who was every now and then calling "Cuckoo." All at once two little sisters saw a large fine apple lying on the ground, quite near them. The elder passed on without feeling tempted to touch what she knew was forbidden; but the younger was seized with an intense longing to take up the apple, and just to take "one bite." But I will tell you the story in her own words, as she told her mother, later, of the struggle she had gone through.

"Oh, mother, I can't tell you how nice it looked, and how dreadfully I wanted it. And I went on looking at it, and looking at it, and I thought I must take just one bite; but just then I remembered to ask God to help me. So I kneeled down on the path, and I p'ayed a little p'ayer, and said: 'O God, do help me not to take the apple; and do make me not to want it so very much. And, oh, mother, wasn't it kind of God; He answered my p'ayer at once! and after that I did not want the apple, I really didn't want it, and I felt quite happy again, and went on playing, and quite forgot all about the beautiful apple. Wasn't God kind, mother, to listen to my p'ayer so quickly?"

Yes; God is so kind! He loves little children, and never turns away from either their prayers or praises. Remember how the tender Saviour took them in his arms of love when he was upon earth: and now, though He is up in Heaven, He is just the same.

"There's a Friend for little children
A Friend who never changes,
Whose love can never die."

Remember, too, the prayer He taught us: "lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil;" and when you feel that Satan is trying to lead you astray, ask the Good Shepherd to help you, and He will save his little lamb. H. Morton.

WORKING LADS.

THE seventh annual meeting of the Working Lads' Institute was held on the 14th inst, Sir Robert Carden, M.P., presided.

Mr. H. Hill, jun., said that 167 lads had attended the Institute and classes during the year, and there had been over 1000 volumes lent for home reading. The deposits of the lads had amounted to over £30, some of whom had taken shares in building and other societies. Towards the new East-end Institute, already mentioned in our columns, £3000 had been received, £1500 more being required in order to provide 1000 lads.

Sir R. Carden, Mr. F. A. Bevan, Dr. L. B. White, and Mr. Cooke Baines spoke in praise of the excellent work done by providing some place of resort for them after business is over, as well as means for the improvement of the mind.

GROVE HALL GOSPEL MISSION.—Since the commencement of this work services have been held three evenings weekly, nearly 3000 visits have been made from house to house, 14,000 Gospel papers, tracts, &c., have been distributed. A meeting for the police has been held weekly, and services have been held in a number of country towns and villages by evangelists, in connection with this Mission. Seven women have been rescued from a life of shame since the opening of the Friendless and Fallen branch in September last. In view of the approaching winter, we appeal to Christians to help us in this important work. We are anxious to give several free teas to the unemployed and aged poor. James Sprunt,

THE BITTER CRY OF THE OUTCAST CHILDREN.

T. J. BARNARDO, F.R.C.S.E.

IN the pamphlet recently issued by the Congregational Union upon the condition of Outcast London, the writer says, "No respectable printer would print, and certainly no decent family would admit, even the driest statement of the horrors and infamy discovered in one brief visitation from house to house in the districts referred to."

What those horrors are, I have known only too sadly from personal inspection and examination during the past seventeen years, and I cannot but rejoice that the authoritative statement of a responsible religious body has at length drawn public attention to a state of things which baffles description, is an outrage upon our common humanity, and a standing menace to the whole community. Moreover, there is one aspect of the subject of supreme importance, and calls for immediate action.

I refer to the fact that by far the worst sufferers from the evils depicted are undoubtedly the children. Thousands of these are ruined from their very infancy by their awful environment. To behold young men and women as well as aged folk crowded together in pestilential rookeries without the least provision for decency, and in such conditions of abominable filth, atmospheric impurity, and immoral associationship as make the maintenance of virtue impossible, is almost enough to fill the bravest reformer with despair; yet, as one investigates patiently their histories and closely inquires into their antecedents, one is compelled to believe that not unfrequently vice or crime, begun long before and under different circumstances, may have had not a little to do with their present unhappy state. But to know that thousands of unfortunate boys and girls commence life thus, and grow up to a degraded manhood and a dishonoured womanhood, without having known innocence or virtue, perverted or polluted even on the threshold of life by the example of others or by the temptations which are bred of the places they live in, so that they become experienced almost in infancy with the grosser vices of a depraved adolescence,—to know this, and to witness the process being repeated from day to day—to be quite certain as to what it must all grow to, and yet to be helpless to deal thoroughly with the evil, is absolutely maddening.

Experienced as I have been in the abominations possible in some of the worst rookeries of this great city, I have recently, again and again, almost been compelled to give up personal explorations and visitations, heart-sick and stricken as with paralysis of the brain at the sights which I have witnessed, while unable to afford adequate relief.

A few nights ago, for example, I found in a court, in St. George's-in-the-East, hard by a well-known place of worship, one house of four rooms and a cellar-like wash-house, in which dwelt nine families and lodgers, consisting in all of no less than fifty-two persons. There were among these, besides younger children, thirteen boys and girls, between twelve and seventeen years of age. In one room on the first floor, where my business chiefly lay, I found at half-past eleven at night, twelve individuals, including two mothers and their babies, asleep. The intolerable stench made it a most difficult matter to breathe, even where I stood, at the half open door. Among the occupants of the floor were one drunken couple, who had fought each other in the street earlier in the night, until, with faces, eyes and heads bruised and blackened, they had at length desisted, and being treated plentifully with drink by some of the crowd who had surrounded them and urged them on, they lay down on the floor in the hovel which they habitually occupied. Standing outside the room door I could make no one hear for some minutes. Then a lad, who told me afterwards he was fourteen years of age, rose from the fetid heap of rags on which they all slept, and opened the door in a perfectly nude state. Two little girls I was seeking for were in the same room asleep, at the further side under the window, but their mother was still out, being, as the lad explained, "an 'unfortunate,' you know, sir." This boy was himself a lodger, and paid one penny a night for the shelter. He lived on the streets, doing odd jobs, occasionally by thieving, and had, indeed, always been the companion of thieves and harlots. I dare not write all the boy told me, as, having put on a few rags of clothing, he, at my request, accompanied me down the tottering stairs and out into the open court. I must forbear, lest I should shock those who are hardly prepared to believe that a hotbed of impurity, as vile as Sodom and Gomorrah, could exist within fifty yards of a stately temple for divine worship, in which a really faithful ministry is maintained.

Dreadful as is the foregoing, it is not by any means an isolated case. Years ago, in the public journals, I pointed out the evils of what is known as the "furnished room" system, where over-crowding, immorality, as well as every conceivable form of crime, can be consummated with an impunity impossible even in a common lodging-house, for these last are at all events under police inspection. Of late years, as is well known, these evils have been intensified by the destruction of innumerable dwellings, which have not been replaced by others of a better sort, or equally available for the same class.

No incident recorded in the pamphlet published by Messrs. Clarke & Co. exceeds in painful interest those which others besides myself, who have been labouring for years in East London, can testify to. In fact, some of the most dreadful disclosures of that book have long been perfectly familiar to me, and I could supply to many of the incidents a suggestive postscript, or a contrast. For example, the murderer and burglar referred to on page 7 had a brother fourteen years old, an outcast, and, like the criminal, an associate of the vilest. That boy is to-day in our Stepney Home, rescued, by the mercy of God, from the brink of the precipice down which his brother fell. The mother mentioned on page 5, who "turns her wretched children into the streets in the early evening, because she lets her room for immoral purposes until long after midnight," is almost decent when contrasted with three women from whom I have lately rescued unfortunate little girls. One of these brought her child of twelve years to places of public resort with the most abominable intentions. Another bartered the innocence of her poor child for a bottle of gin and a pair of earrings; while the conduct of the third was so inhuman, so devilish, that the mere recital of it must not be attempted here. These children, who are not at all necessarily destitute, but whose number far exceeds the "six score thousand that could not discern between their right hand and their left," for whose sake the tender pity of the Lord spared Nineveh, call aloud to the same living Lord for help. Shall that "exceeding bitter cry" from the children of Outcast London be unheard, or after the nine days' wonder excited by the recent revelations has died away, be forgotten?

I am persuaded the State must and will interfere. England can no longer tolerate such hotbeds of dangerous passions, such seed-plots of revolution and disorder, to remain among her crowded populations. Her own safety demands their removal before the welfare of the State is hopelessly imperilled. Nor can civilised humanity in broadcloth be any longer content to stand by unconcerned while its brothers and sisters are perishing (I cannot call it living) under the most loathsome conditions, and while harpies in the disguise of respectable citizens fatten upon rents demanded for hovels unfit for habitation, and which yield their owners from 15 to 40 per cent. on the original outlay.

I rejoice to believe that as an outcome of the attention which has been drawn to the subject, it is most probable that a Royal Commission to inquire into the whole of the shocking business will doubtless soon be granted in compliance with the demand of the nation. But must the CHURCH OF GOD wait for this?

Has not a Royal Commission, not only of inquiry, but of blessed remedy, been in existence these 1800 years?

"Go ye into all the world," is the mandate, "and preach the Gospel to every creature."

Listen to it, ye distant isles of the sea, ye cities of China and India, ye villages of Africa! Your heathen are not more besotted or degraded, more ignorant or more forsaken, or need the Gospel more than ours of Heathen London. Listen to these grand words, and as you hear them, ask in wonder, "Can these things be true?" and if so, is it possible that in the very centre from whence Gospel light is diffused to us the first principles of the Divine Commission have been overlooked?"

Contrast, for example, these two statements:—

"Then were brought unto Him little children that He should put his hands on them and pray; and the disciples rebuked them. But Jesus said: Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven."—MATT. xix. 13, 14.

"And Jusus called a little child unto Him, and set him in the midst of them, and said: . . . 'Whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth Me.'" —MATT. xviii. 2—5.

"The child-misery that one beholds is the most heartrending and appalling element in these discoveries. . . . From the beginning of their lives they are utterly neglected; their bodies and rags are alive with vermin; they are subjected to the most cruel treatment; many of them have never seen a green field, and do not know what it is to go beyond the streets immediately around them, and they often pass the whole day without a morsel of fo[illegible]"—"[illegible]TER CRY OF OUTCAST LONDON, p. 13.

Shall such a contrast between the Church's Commission and the Church's conduct continue much longer?

Without hesitation I call upon every Christian whose heart has been stirred by the publicity given to this awful state of things to begin at once to ask in the sanctuary of his own spirit, and with a deep sense of personal responsibility, the question, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" For we all, even the least of us, may do something. God help us to find out what that something is, and at once to do it!

This at least many who read these words may do. They may strengthen the hands of those who are snatching little children from destruction, as men rescue the perishing from a burning house, or from the ruins of a fallen building. Speaking for myself, although I have, even under the greatest pressure for funds, persistently clung to the resolution formed years ago—never to turn from our doors a single applicant if truly destitute—yet it is a sorrowful heart-breaking thing to have to confess in the light of recent disclosures as to the awful condition of "Outcast London," that I have not seldom been compelled to relinquish the work of searching out cases in the districts, where I knew only too well I should find them—and that merely because I knew that at the time we were short of funds. If but God's people would trust me with the needful supplies, my devoted and experienced helpers are willing and anxious to continue and extend their successful rescue work in the very worst quarters of the metropolis—snatching little children from the awful perils to which so many, alas! succumb.

Thousands of Christians resident in London may also begin to give some of their own time to personal visitation of these districts, and searching into these things, until every quarter of the metropolis, every cranny of "Outcast London," shall be honey-combed, as it were, by men and women of God, who with feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace, and animated by a Christ-like spirit, shall be fulfilling at all costs the Royal Commission of their Divine Master:—

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the futherless and widows in their affliction and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

HOLLOWAY.—At our Mission Hall, Holloway-road, last winter, we gave free breakfasts to the poor and destitute every Monday morning for three months; the average number per week was forty, to whom also the Gospel was sung and preached. We should like to repeat this again this winter, if the Lord should enable us so to do.

Messrs. Moody & Sankey in London.

As this wonderful work goes on, we are oppressed with the difficulty of giving our readers any true and comprehensive idea of its depth and scope. This difficulty is increased by the fact of one meeting being to a great extent so like its predecessor. A full and faithful report of one service, multiplied by the number of such services held throughout the week, would perhaps convey a just impression of the whole. But how is mortal man to report any one such meeting as the Priory Hall has been seeing day after day? It seems but the merest commonplace to say that the Hall has been more than packed every evening the doors have been opened; that these "eager, anxious throngs" have seemed as if chained to their seats by the songs and the sermons; that the preacher's appeals to the anxious ones to testify their anxiety in a definite and public way have been responded to in large measure with unfailing and almost unvarying readiness; that the workers have had a very busy and blessed time of it at the close of each service pointing seekers to the Saviour: in short, that multitudes of men, women, and children have been coming home to their Heavenly Father, and have begun to feel a foretaste of the joy that awaits the child of God when his time of probation is ended, and he enters on the full possession of his inheritance.

Some of the evening meetings last week were of surpassing interest. Night after night Mr. Moody has been delivering appeals to the heart and conscience that have struck home with the swiftness and certainty of an arrow from the hand of a practised archer. His power as a preacher is perhaps more manifest when he adopts this vein than any other; except when he sets forth the love of God to the world in the gift of Christ. As a writer who is quoted in another column well remarks, he reaches people's heads through their hearts when all attempts at the inverse process would probably utterly fail. Those who were present last week when he spoke from the words, "Be sure your sin will find you out," or when on another occasion he uttered a word of warning as to hidden and unconfessed sins, or, again, when he dwelt on the danger of coming near the kingdom, and missing it at last, will surely not be able to forget the powerful impression made by these discourses, and the truly wonderful results. The second meetings were such as it is useless to attempt to describe. Time after time hundreds rose at the preacher's call, and bore unmistakable testimony to the searching power of the message. It was cheering beyond degree to hear so many also declare in tones that indicated perfect calmness and determination, their resolve "to trust and not be afraid."

Mr. Moody's sanctified skill in the second meetings, in bringing his hearers to a decision, has been remarkably shown on these occasions. Having cleared the ground by his stirring appeals to the conscience, he comes in with some appropriate illustration, told with matchless pathos and effect, which breaks down any lingering barrier of hesitation or unbelief, and turns the scale in favour of instant acceptance of the free offer of salvation. Sometimes an unexpected incident happens that greatly helps the speaker in his endeavours to draw the net to shore; as, for instance, last week, when Mr. Moody was calling on those who felt their need of a Saviour, to say, "I will trust, and not be afraid," a little girl in one of the front seats spoke out among the rest. She was sitting by the side of her mother, who was so affected by the step her daughter had taken that she clasped the child to her bosom and kissed her. This in turn greatly moved Mr. Moody, whose broken utterances that followed reacted on the audience; it seemed to send a thrill of tender sympathy through the vast congregation, and no doubt gave an impulse to others who were halting between two opinions. This overflowing sympathy shown by the evangelist, added to his power of turning what may seem a trifling incident to good purpose, accounts greatly for the wonderful response he gets from the miscellaneous multitudes he addresses. At the forenoon service of Sunday last, while the crowd was settling down for the after-meeting, a small boy somehow got astray, and was found weeping bitterly because he had lost his mother. Mr. Moody, grasping the position with the quick eye of a general, asked the ushers to hold the little fellow aloft, that it might be seen if his mother were anywhere near. In less time than it takes to write the fact, the mother, some distance off, spied her weeping boy and at once hastened to the rescue, using no ceremony in pushing her way over the chairs to carry comfort to the distressed child. The moment was favourable, and Mr. Moody was not slow to use the occurrence as an illustration of the Divine solicitude over repentant and returning sinners. "Notice how quickly the mother went to her lost boy; Christ will come much swifter in response to the longing desire of any broken and contrite heart in this assembly."

THE OVERFLOW MEETINGS

have, in a measure, been overshadowed by the greater gatherings in Priory Hall; nevertheless they have witnessed most interesting and encouraging seasons of God's saving power by the spoken word, the sermon in song, and the quiet personal talk at the close. These overflows, by the kindness of Dr. Henry Allon, have been held in the spacious and conveniently situated Union Chapel. Various speakers have been present each night, and Mr. Sankey has invariably proceeded thither, after singing two solos in the Priory-hall. On Thursday evening Dr. Allon was himself present and gave one of the addresses; at its close Mr. Sankey called on the anxious to rise, when there was a great response in every part of the chapel. On Friday evening, after singing in the large hall, "Oh, to be over yonder," and a plaintively beautiful hymn, which deserves to be better known than it is, "Behold me standing at the door," Mr. Sankey proceeded to the overflow in Union Chapel. The fine building was well filled in every corner, Rev. E. A. Stuart having the reins of the meeting. Mr. Sankey gave with beautiful effect, "Beyond the smiling and the weeping," and Rev. F. A. Lillingston spoke from the pulpit for a while with much earnestness and simplicity from the words that are repeated in the first two parables of Luke xv., "Until he find it," setting forth the persevering love of Jesus Christ in seeking and saving the lost sinner. Mr. Sankey sang the familiar hymn, "We shall meet beyond the river by and by," the choir taking up the refrain, which was softly echoed by those sitting in the gallery. Mr. Stuart followed with a most interesting and impressive Gospel address, after which Mr. Sankey drew the net; and, to all appearance, a goodly company were earnestly seeking their way Zionwards.

THE AFTERNOON BIBLE READINGS

increased in attendance and interest each day. The word was with power, and at the close of the services many rose to express their desire to trust in the Lord, or requesting to be prayed for, or, better still, to confess that they there and then accepted Christ as their Saviour. It was most pleasing to see the mothers with their little ones, for whom Mr. Moody always had a kind word—words that in many cases went right to their hearts, as was seen in the after-meetings.

The prayer-meetings at the close of the afternoon addresses were times of real waiting upon God, and at which many requests were made for all sorts and conditions of men and women who were coming to the evangelistic meetings.

A TEMPERANCE MEETING.

A Temperance meeting was held in the Priory Hall, Islington, on Saturday evening last, at which about 4000 persons were present. The Temperance friends of the neighbourhood mustered in strong force to help Mr. William Noble in the advocacy of total abstinence. Mr. Brooks gave a sad description of what the drink had done for him, and the misery into which his wife and family had been plunged. Through the mercy of God he had been reclaimed, and was now prospering; best of all, he was rejoicing in Jesus as his Saviour.

Mr. Noble said the great need of the world to-day was sympathy. Abstainers cannot by any means get rid of any part of their responsibility in this matter. The power of love is a mighty lever for delivering the drunkard. He pleaded with Christians present to do all they could to reach these poor slaves of the demon drink, and gave striking and soul-stirring illustrations of the results of daring to do the right. The vast audience was much moved at Mr. Noble's earnest appeals to let the drink alone, and trust in the Lord to keep them day by day. At the close of the meeting a number of pledges were taken, and many workers were seen with their Bibles in their hands pointing the anxious to the Saviour.

LAST SUNDAY'S MEETINGS.

The task of comparing one of these meetings with another is a fruitless one, but we suppose it would be correct to say that last Sunday morning's meeting at the Priory was, at any rate, the largest of the three. It certainly did not fall short in point of enthusiasm either on the part of the speaker, singer, or people. The preliminary songs attuned the hearts of the vast congregation to the exercises of the morning. The first to lead in prayer was Rev. F. Lillingston, who thanked God for "the mighty fortnight" they had spent. "There are many of thy servants from whom the clouds of darkness and doubt have been dispersed. The new life has been fanned into a bright flame in the hearts of many who had become slothful and sleepy."

Mr. Sankey, in compliance with many urgent requests, sang again the hymn, "When the Mists have Rolled Away," the choir and audience taking up and repeating the sweet refrain:—

> "We shall know as we are known,
> Never more to walk alone;
> We shall know each other better
> When the mists have rolled away."

Another prayer from Rev. C. B. Sawday, in which he praised God that "we are getting to know one another better now," and Mr. Sankey sounded out the rousing and timely exhortation in song, "Go, work in my vineyard."

Before entering on the main subject of the morning's address, Mr. Moody said he had been praying that this meeting should be more fruitful than all the gatherings of the preceding fortnight. Just think of the possibilities, he said, of what might be done if we were all filled with the Holy Spirit. There is no church or chapel within three miles of this building that would not be mightily aroused inside thirty days. Then he went on to call attention to the work of the Holy Ghost in imparting the graces of love, hope, and liberty, in testifying of Christ, in teaching and guiding the believer, in convicting and converting men. He closed with an intensely earnest exhortation to the Christians before him to seek the enduement of the spirit for service. Many of his epigrammatic sayings seemed to strike home with great force, and to find a hearty response in the audience. Altogether it was a time of much spiritual stimulus and refreshment, and must have had a very appreciable result in the quickened zeal of these thousands of workers, as they went forth to the engagements of the day.

Towards the end of last week arrangements were made to secure, if possible, that those who had received distinct blessing during the past fourteen days, and those who had been impressed, should be gathered near the platform at the closing meetings, so as to be brought, if possible, to the point of decision. A space was reserved for these in the central section of the hall, and at the eleven o'clock meeting on Sunday several hundreds who had secured the necessary tickets were in their places. Before the meeting began the great hall was crammed to overflowing.

Mr. Sankey very pathetically sang that touching Gospel ballad, "To the hall of the feast came the sinful and fair." Mr. Moody spoke with wonderful unction on "The compassion of Jesus." The world, he said, is sighing for sympathy, and where can it be had if not from Him who was so deeply moved with compassion at the sight of human sorrow and suffering? The story of Christ raising the son of the widow of Nain was re-told, interspersed with many little touches that went right to the heart of the audience. As he remarked that many of those present had passed along that same highway of sorrow as this Jewish widow, the long-drawn sigh, the quivering lip, the moistened eye, told how he had touched a tender and universal chord. When he went on to tell of the comfort he had found in a time of personal bereavement, from the assurance of resurrection and reunion with loved ones beyond the grave, the whole meeting was deeply moved. The after-meeting bore a very large proportion in numbers to the entire audience. It was no easy task to separate from the crowd those who were avowedly anxious, but finally they were gathered on one side of the hall, and the workers had a busy time of it.

We have not space to report at any length the truly marvellous meetings in the afternoon and evening. The afternoon meeting of women was, surely, one of the most memorable that even Mr. Moody, in his long and successful career as a winner of souls, has seen. The address was especially telling, and it is no exaggeration to say that towards its close the vast assembly, not excluding many strong men on the platform, was dissolved in tears. In the immense after-meeting brief words of exhortation were given by Mr. Russell Hurditch and Rev. E. A. Stuart, in order that the way of life might be presented in different forms, and so none should be left without excuse. The responses to Mr. Moody's call for decision at the close were marvellous, embracing many who had lately been converted, others who had made up their minds to trust the Lord now, and others who were in soul anxiety. The number of those who stood could scarcely have been short of three thousand! The spectacle was one of the most solemn and overpowering that could be conceived, and carried one back in imagination to the days of Pentecost.

The last meeting of this ever-memorable day was another time of great power from the presence of the Lord. The words spoken and sung seemed to find a ready entrance and acceptance with the throng, and very numerous were the decisions to start for the kingdom. During his discourse on "Sudden Conversion" Mr. Moody made several references, by way of illustration, to the fact that slavery could nowhere exist under the English "Union Jack;" the feelings of the audience were raised to such a pitch that they could not refrain from applauding, till Mr. Moody expressed his dislike to it.

At the last three meetings of the day the tickets for the reserved space were exchanged for special tickets admitting to the farewell meeting on Monday evening. Before the close of the evening we understand that enough tickets had been distributed to fill the hall; of course these have not all fallen into the hands of young converts or inquirers; but the fact that they were ostensibly confined to these classes, and that all were taken up so readily speaks volumes for the wonderful blessing that has attended the labours of these two short weeks.

NOTES FROM WORKERS.

IN THE HALL.

Two young roughs were found lounging outside a coffee-house, and invited to Mr. Moody's meetings. One, the elder (they were lads of about fourteen, well known as disturbers of the Mission-house peace), had heard of the number of chairs at the hall, and, to see them, he consented to go.

They arrived at the the Mission-house with faces begrimed with dirt. "Mother was out. In the public, I suppose," was the reason given. "Would you wash here?" "Don't mind." Finding the water was hot, he showed much delight, calling the other boy over to feel it, and the amount of scrubbing he expended on his face raised anxious fears for its effect on the skin. He allayed these with the assurance, "It's all right. It's only dirt; it'll all come off;" as indeed it did, and he emerged from his washing a good-looking lad.

They reached the Priory without mishap, and one lad testified great delight at the number of chairs, saying he was sure there were three hundred in the middle of the hall. He could not be made to understand there were more than as many thousands; he said, they must have cost a lot. His next remark, on seeing Mr. Moody, was "Who's that chap standing up now? I saw him on a paper in the street, and on a jug too." When told that was Mr. Moody, and that he was a poor boy once, he seemed much struck, and said, "A poor boy like me?" After an interval, "What made him there?" When told it was because God loved him; he said, "Nobody loves me—would God love me?" After hearing He would, he remarked, "I should like to learn more about Him."

Mr. Moody gave out a hymn, telling all to sing. Our lad, equal to the occasion, says, "I can't sing, but I can whistle," and to his teacher's consternation he began. However that was quickly stopped, and he remained fairly quiet for the rest of the evening. At the end, when Mr. Moody asked all who wished to be prayed for to stand up, the teacher whispered to the boy, wouldn't he like to be prayed for? He jumped up before anyone else, indeed before it was time; then, when others rose, he got up again. Going away he said, "I am going to be gooder now: teacher, will you bring me again?" So he is to go again, and may the light of which he has had a glimpse, shine into his soul.

The other little lad, who had been to sleep with his head on a man's shoulder the greater part of the time, feelingly remarked, "It was very comfortable."

IN THE INQUIRY-ROOM.

Two men from an East-end lodging-house were persuaded to come to the meetings. One said he might as well go "to pass an hour." The first night this man came back very thoughtful, and when chaffed by the other men in the lodging-house said, "I only wish I was what to-night I heard I can be." The second night in the inquiry-room he said he had found peace. When tested he said he would "live it out." Nor did he stop at words, for that same night he went back and confessed Christ before all those men. It was no light thing. The man was as pale as death, but he bore all bravely. On the third night he came again, bringing with him three other men.

Another man from the East-end, on being pressed by one who had got him work, came to the meetings with his brother-in-law. He came avowedly to laugh; but in the evening, when he got home before his family, he told them all he had found Christ. His brother-in-law thinks "he is mad." The poor fellow before his conversion looked dull and half-stupid; now he looks intelligent and bright.

Another worker gives the following details of cases dealt with. A woman confessed that she was a backslider. Her husband is a very bad man, using profane language when he finds out that she has entered a place of worship. She owned that her sorrow had driven her from the Lord, but from that night she would ask Him to let her see differently. Her earnest desire was that she might enjoy restored communion.

Another woman, about sixty years of age, said, "I came here to-night simply to seek the Lord. I belong to a church and I often go to a Mission, but I cannot say I am a Christian, and I long to be one." The worker had a long talk with her, and she left looking brighter and saying, "I think it is clearer to me, and I will come again, for I cannot rest until it is settled."

A couple, man and wife, age about fifty-five or sixty. The man told me "he had always felt there was One above," and he often read his Bible. For some years he had longed to know how he could be a Christian, and be as happy as those called Christians were. Mr. Moody that night had spoken on believing with the heart and confessing with the mouth. The man seemed quite to understand it, and with tears said, "I see God will take me." When Mr. Moody repeated Isaiah xii. 2, the man following the words from my Bible, he stood up and repeated aloud twice, "I will trust and not be afraid, for the Lord Jehovah is my strength and song, He also is become my salvation." He left the meeting with his wife, who also fully decided, the man promising to join a Bible-class.

Another man and wife, both young, had a little baby with them. They were in a terrible state of destitution; no work, and home gone. They never mentioned this until it was drawn out of them. Here also, to all appearance, there was real decision for Christ. I saw the man next day and gave him a day's work, so as to have further conversation; the result was satisfactory.

At one of the early meetings an atheist came into the Hall out of curiosity; he was deeply impressed hy the Spirit of God. Two nights after he brought thirty-two atheists with him.

A lad, who had stolen the property of his master in the City, was brought by a pious mother to the meeting. By God's grace he was converted, and has since been reinstated in his master's employment.

A gentleman who had for some time been a regular attendant at God's house, went on Thursday evening to the meeting. The subject was "Confession to God and before man" (Rom. x. 5). He was angry at a remark which was made, and went out seeking to drown it in drink. The next morning, in his own chamber, a secret voice whispered to him. He wrote at once to a brother he had offended. After he had posted the letter, God brought peace to his mind. He is now endeavouring to bring others into the fold of Christ.

A young man and his wife, in answer to the petitions of a praying mother, were led to the meeting, where on their knees before God they obtained rest and peace. They are now rejoicing in their newly-found Saviour.

A young married person whose husband is now in prison, and who had long neglected God's house, came to the meeting on Monday, and went home not only rejoicing in peace, but with an intense desire that her husband should be brought to the knowledge of Jesus Christ.

A hairdresser, who lives among Jews, and had long neglected God's house, came to the meeting, and was seeking the Lord Jesus. His only obstacle to witnessing is Sunday traffic. Pray for him.

MEETINGS OF MINISTERS, &c.

In our last issue we briefly alluded to a meeting of ministers, &c., at Islington, on the morning of Monday week, to report on the course of the work and take counsel as to future action. In the afternoon of the same day Mr. Moody met the Wandsworth local committee, the choir and other friends, when an interesting conversation took place, and various matters arranged in view of the meetings which are to begin this week. The chief point discussed was the form the meetings are to take. It was stated that for the first week the week day meetings would be open to all, but during the second week the afternoon meetings would be for women only, and the evening meetings for men only. It has been found in the Islington work that many of the men whom it was especially desired to reach could not get into the meetings because of the crowds who came early and filled up the room. To obviate this it is intended to limit the later evening meetings at Wandsworth to men.

A most interesting meeting of the East-end ministers, presided over by Mr. Moody, was held at St. Benet's School-room, last Monday morning, preparatory to the Stepney Mission, which opens a fortnight hence. We are obliged, for want of space, to defer some notes of the proceedings till our next.

FROM "THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL CHRONICLE."

The immense crowds of people that attend Messrs. Moody and Sankey's services at Islington, and even fill the neighbouring chapels with their overflow, bring very forcibly home to our hearts the conviction that men do want the Gospel still; and that there is a great unrest in the souls of the multitudes; a great hungering for the Bread of Life. Somehow, they do not feel to get what they need in the formal services of the churches, and so they hopelessly fail to attend such services; but when some man comes who seems to have the message their hearts cry for, how the old soul-longings come back, and force them to go and hear the man, in the hope that he will have the very message and blessing for them.

It seems to us that a great lesson is being taught to all our Christian labourers throughout our land, by the crowds that stream to Mr. Moody's meetings. What is true of London is true of every city and town. The people may not attend churches and chapels, but they do want, and their souls do cry out for, pardon, salvation, and peace; and everywhere they would flock in crowds to the man whom they felt really had a message of pardon and life to speak to them. In one of our great cities the Town Hall is filled Sunday after Sunday with 4000 men and women, who listen to a young man who, without any sensationalism, speaks the simple Gospel truths with the pathos of conviction, and the plainness of one who means to reach all hearts.

But it may be said, Why can the few gather the crowds while the many, as sincere and earnest as they, can only win the respectable few? We cannot fully answer that large question, but we are quite sure that this goes a great way toward the answer—men like Mr. Moody get at their fellow-men through their emotions. Some of our preachers aim at men's hearts through their heads, and there is little access that way. The mass of men and women yield to those who get at their heads through their hearts.

THE COLAR MISSION, INDIA.

DEAR SIR,—I am thankful to find that, notwithstanding so many other calls for sympathy and help, the readers of THE CHRISTIAN still kindly remember the Colar Mission and Orphanage, which they so largely promoted at its commencement seven years ago. The Mission work goes on with much activity. Hundreds gather to hear the Gospel proclaimed at two preaching stations in and near the town of Colar, converts and orphans preaching to the people, and Mr. Sankey's hymns sung in the native dialect, led by the violin and voice of the blind orphan, Samuel.

Miss Anstey greatly desires to build a Mission-room at both of these stations, that the work may be carried on without interruption at all seasons. The day my last draft was received only one rupee was left in the house.

Yours truly, HELEN JAMES.

HARROLD.—A reading and coffee-room has just been opened here. Good papers and useful books are needed, and will be thankfully received by Mr. J. C. Croxford, Harrold, Bedfordshire.

A NEW LIFE OF CHRIST.*

SO many have undertaken to write for us the Life of Christ, that it might well be asked if there is either room or occasion for another. Readers of this latest endeavour to set forth in order the events of that grandest life ever lived on earth, will soon find that whatever merit attaches to former efforts, this fills a place and answers a purpose altogether unique. Dr. Edersheim is himself a Hebrew; he writes, therefore, as one well acquainted with the surroundings of Him who was sent primarily to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and whose labours in human flesh were confined to the land which was and is their special heritage. Consequently, we have in these volumes a realistic and copious description of Jewish life in the time of our Lord, as to its social conditions, manners and customs, sects and religious ideas, such as we have not met with in any other work of its class.

In giving these descriptions of the men and the times connected with the Saviour's life below, imagination is not the instrument employed, no fancy pictures are drawn, but facts, and well authenticated illustrations taken from real life, are gathered from a variety of sources, and skilfully woven together throughout the whole narrative. We seem to be mingling with the Scribes and Pharisees, to be moving among the very people with whom our Lord associated, and to know intimately all about their habits, principles, and pursuits. A list of more than 250 works of reference which the learned author has consulted, indicates the thoroughness and breadth of the research he has employed to give vividness and correctness to his sketch. Jewish traditionalism is dealt with most fully, and the entire contrast to it presented by our Lord's teaching is set forth with great clearness. The way in which He declared, in opposition to Rabbinical lore, the scriptural, moral, and spiritual elements of Old Testament truth, is shown to be a conclusive argument in favour of the assertion that the carpenter's Son could have been no mere human teacher, but was indeed the Messiah. How completely the whole current of thought and expectation cherished in those days was opposed to all that Jesus taught and practised as the Sent of God, Dr. Edersheim shows with great distinctness, and thereby disproves at once the mythical theory of accounting for the success of Christianity, which says that it is the outcome of legends formed in accordance with national ideas and expectations which at that time gathered round the person and work of the Nazarene. As a refutation of Jewish arguments against Christianity these volumes have a special value, and to Jewish readers must have a most convincing power.

The text of the Gospels is very closely followed throughout, so that the book is really a commentary as well as a life, and there is a great amount of valuable textual exposition to be met with in its pages. Seven years of untiring labour and unsparing pains have been devoted to this work, and we incline to think the results which must follow its publication and study will soon prove ample reward for all the care and toil bestowed upon it by the author. The notes at the foot of every page, together with the copious appendices at the end of the volumes, are specially designed for the use and help of students, and are very valuable in their criticisms of the sacred text, and in their presentation of Jewish ideas on subjects of first importance and concern in their connection with our Lord's teaching.

Altogether we hail Dr. Edersheim's contribution to the literature of the inimitable life of Christ with devout thankfulness, and give to it our cordial commendation. It is manifestly the work of one who is a master in Israel, and eminently qualified for the task he has performed.

THE LORD IS COMING.

(Tune 363, Songs and Solos.)

ROUSE, rouse, ye saints of Zion,
Your Bridegroom draweth nigh;
Faith sees his radiant splendour!
Now breaking in the sky.
This coming rapture—glory,
Each bounding heart shall share,
When his welcome voice resoundeth
In the air.

Oh, what joyful notes of triumph
Shall swell from every breast,
When the quickening shout of Jesus
Calls up his saints to rest!
Oh, what longed-for sweet reunions
Will loving hearts record,
In the coming bright "for ever
With the Lord."

Work, work, where'er the Master
Shows work is still undone;
In prayer and faith prevailing,
While souls may yet be won.
He cometh—quickly cometh!
Tell it over sea and land,
Bearing rich rewards for service
In his hand.

Walk, walk in separation,
In godliness and light:
In holy conversation,
With all your armour bright.
Keep ready for the Saviour!
Reflecting aye his grace,
Till He bids us rise to meet Him
Face to face.

Arrayed in wedding garments
We soon shall see the King,
In all the gorgeous glory
That none but he can bring.
Each pain and trouble over,
Each tear of sadness dried:
We shall dwell with him for ever
Glorified!

GIPSY SMITH IN ST. GILES.

REMARKABLE meetings have recently been held at our Mission Chapel, Little Wild-street, Drury-lane. Our good brethren, Gipsy Smith, from Hanley, with his sister and Mr. Evens, from Hull, came amongst us on Sunday, November 4, for a few days' Gospel services. The first gathering was in the morning at eleven, and was a most precious season. Each of the friends in turn sang and spoke with much power and unction, and at the close several inquirers were earnestly seeking the Saviour, but this was but the prelude of a most successful series of meetings.

On the Sunday evening the spacious Mission Chapel was densely crowded by the inhabitants of the district, and a solemn hush pervaded the entire assembly, and the after meeting will not soon be forgotten by those who were permitted to be present. The inquiry-room was thronged with men and women, young and old, all under the deepest conviction; a number of names were registered by our helpers as most hopeful cases.

The blessed soul-saving work continued until the last meeting on the Thursday night, when our friends were obliged to leave us for their own sphere of labour, where, I hear on good authority, a wonderful work is going on. On Monday, the 12th, we convened a Rejoicing Meeting, and nearly 100 persons attended by special invitation, all of whom had received blessing within about a fortnight, and it was truly delightful to hear the simple testimony of some of the most degraded as to the marvellous change they had experienced through the mighty working of the Holy Ghost. The mouths of all our workers are filled with praise, and we are expecting greater things. Brethren, pray for St. Giles. GEORGE HATTON.

THE RATCLIFF "BRIDGE OF HOPE."

WHILE so much is being written and said about the miserable condition of "Outcast London," it may be well to remember that to some of us this "bitter cry" is no new wail. It has sounded in our ears a long while, and still we hear it, night and day, week after week, month after month. It has entered so deeply into our hearts, that we have felt impelled as if by an irresistible force to come and live in the midst of these "abject poor," and strive, with all our strength, at least to do something to help and save some.

The facts lately uttered with such startling plainness, and which grouped together form such an appalling picture, are incidents we meet with nearly every day. Who so well as those who are living in the midst of this poverty and vice can realise the need of every influence for good that from any source can be brought to bear upon the people, because who so fully know how every effort is handicapped by this terrible overcrowding and vice encouraged on all sides by grinding poverty? When the Church of Christ is once alive to such facts as have been lately laid bare, the shame that such things can be in Christian England, in London, the richest city in the world, will be intolerable. There must then be speedy legislation, to prevent such cruel rents and overcrowding, while assisted emigration for those who would work if work could be had, will be a question for Government to take up as it has never done before. But while so many have been living in peace, forgetting the volcano upon which we sleep so calmly, there has been a great deal of quiet work done for God all over London, even in the very lowest strata of society, which has perhaps more than we imagine stayed (at least for a while) the upheaval of this surging mass of sin and misery.

Thank God! notwithstanding the terrible odds against which it has had to contend, the glorious Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ has not lost its power; and some at least from these depths have been brought out of their unspeakable darkness into the light and liberty of the children of God. Many of us, of different grades and different persuasions, have been working patiently for some years among "Outcast London," and God has marvellously blessed even feeble individual effort, inadequate as it has been, so palpably inadequate, as to be at times almost paralyzing. What will the power be when the one great Church of Christ awakes to her mission, and realises that each member has some part to take in living out the Life of Christ in this weary, sin-sick world?

I have been constrained to contribute my mite of testimony, arising from my experience in connection with the "Bridge of Hope" Mission in Ratcliff Highway. We have been working here steadily and quietly for nearly four years, among the very lowest in this district. Sometimes, lately, I have been inclined to think, almost too quietly, and we have, therefore, lacked the help and sympathy which I believe we should have, if the work were better known. It will be impossible, in the short space at my disposal, to sketch anything but the barest outlines. In our immediate neighbourhood (i.e., within a circle of about half a mile in diameter) are more than 200 houses of ill-fame. The open profligacy which pervades the streets can scarcely be imagined. I will not attempt to describe it. Think, in connection with this, of the terrible poverty and struggle for bread, of which most of us have read within the last few weeks, and which is felt here as keenly as anywhere; then, try to form some idea of the temptations to a life of immorality which beset the young girls around us.

Our work lies entirely among the women and children. To the utmost of our power we visit the bad houses, persuading as many as we can to leave their evil life, and come back with us to our Refuge. We get the young girls, those just over School Board age, to sewing classes, and endeavour, as far as possible, to gain influence over them. We have been able to open a Refuge, in which we can shelter 18 fallen girls; always full, and overfull. We have also begun a Training Home, for preventive work among young rough girls, also accommodating 18, so that our family daily numbers more than 40. During the year just ended 242 girls have passed through the Refuge; each one of this number has been individually helped and provided for, either in penitentiary, or in situation, or in some other way.

We gather the little children round us for Gospel services, and already hundreds of them know and love us. Many of them we have been able to remove from their vile associations, and place under Christian training. I do most heartily agree with Mr. Sims in his article in a recent number of the Daily News, in which he says it is with the children we must work, and that in many cases their removal from their present surroundings is imperative, or with them reformation will be almost hopeless. I have to-day a little girl of thirteen in the Refuge, whose hideous history I cannot bring myself to write. Years ago her mother sent her out to get money in the streets, and her father is answerable for the awful depravity in which she is now steeped. Instances similar to those cited in Mr. Sims' article I have met with over and over again. One case is an exact parallel. I found one day a woman living a life of vice in one little room, with two bright, intelligent children of eight and nine, a boy and girl. I visited her repeatedly, expostulating, reproving, persuading. One day my words took effect. With a little hand in each of mine, I left the house, and the mother followed. Since that day, now eighteen months ago, that woman has not swerved from a right course. She is now honestly earning her bread, and the children are cared for in a Christian home. I saw her a few days ago, and she told me—"Oh, ma'am, I am so happy; I would not go back to that old life for anything, and I am so thankful when I think of the children."

During the past twelve months the work has doubled; it is work laid upon us by God, and not undertaken without his distinct guidance. The pressure of it is sometimes very great: it is especially so just now. The piteous calls upon our help and sympathy increase every day, while the funds come in so slowly, that it is difficult day by day to meet the demands upon us. Is it too much to ask our fellow Christians to relieve us in this present extra anxiety? We cannot but believe they will sustain us in carrying this burden by their practical help, as well as by the remembrance of the work in earnest prayer. A report of the year's work is just issued, which gives many more details. I shall be happy to supply copies of this report to any who may wish for further information.

THEATRICAL MISSION.—Meetings have been held in Bath, in aid of the above society, by the secretary, Mr. Courthope Todd. At one of them it was stated that 3000 of Miss Skinner's "Friendly Letters" had been circulated at Christmas, and that one of them had been blest to a leading actress, who had since given up the stage.

NORWICH BIBLE FLOWER MISSION.—In the sixth annual report of this little branch of Home Mission work, the Hon. Sec., Mrs. Robert Adcock, says that during the past year 5357 bouquets of flowers, woollen cuffs, &c. &c., each bearing a text of Scripture, have been distributed among the sick, the aged, and infirm, in their cottage homes, or at hospitals, infirmary, workhouse, or other public institutions, an increase of 1024 upon the previous year. Mrs. Adcock expresses her gratitude to all contributors of flowers, woollens, &c., and in reference to the written texts, says: "We should be greatly obliged to our friends who write texts for us if they would confine themselves to those portions of Scripture which constitute distinct messages, such as, 'Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world.'"

GOSPEL WORK IN ITALY.

IN an article on the Evangelisation of Italy, Dr. Moir Porteous has given a most comprehensive survey of the various instrumentalities now employed in that land for the spread of the Gospel of Christ. We extract the following summary, believing that it will be of interest to many readers. The facts indicate a marvellous growth of Christian activity and spiritual life in that country where for so many ages Popery has reigned supreme, and the papal yoke has held in bondage all classes and conditions of men. Upwards of thirty distinct Christian agencies may be recognised as zealously engaged in propagating the Word of Salvation. Of Protestant Italian churches there are at least eight carrying on important operations in the desired direction. Of these, the first to be named is the Waldensian Church, with seventy-two ordained ministers, and a roll of 12,156 communicants, together with a large staff of week-day and Sabbath school teachers. At 228 places throughout the land the Gospel is preached by 120 Mission agents, 56 schools are opened, and a Bible-car is also at work.

The Free Italian Church has 50 gatherings or churches; 22 of them are in the principal cities, and a number of evangelists are occupied in connection with them in various districts. The Free Christian Church, with which Signor Gavazzi is connected, has 54 agents, 2034 communicants and catechumens, and 1007 scholars. This agency and the Waldensian Church are earnestly seeking for union into one.

The Wesleyan Methodists have 61 ministers and evangelists, 1672 communicants and catechumens, with 1932 scholars under instruction. Signor Cappellini also carries on a great work among soldiers coming to Rome. The Episcopal Methodist Church has 33 agents, 23 stations, 1050 communicants, and 381 scholars. The Baptist Mission, originated by United States Convention, has 22 stations, 12 ministers, and 200 members. The General Baptists have two agents at Rome, 20 members, and a school, and the Christian Apostolic Church (Open Communion Baptist) has 9 ministers in Turin, Naples, and Rome, 9 churches, and 343 members. Besides these there are independent organisations, some distinctly evangelistic, as the Harbour Mission at Genoa and Naples, the work at Spezia conducted by Mr. Clarke, and at Siena under the direction of Dr. Comandie. Twenty benevolent institutions, consisting of hospitals, convalescent homes, orphanages, and other similar agencies, are established in Rome, Florence, Genoa, Milan, and other places.

The Italian Evangelical Publication Society, under the guidance of Dr. Stewart, has nine depots, from which books and tracts are constantly being sent forth. The British and Foreign Bible Society has 40 colporteurs in Italy; the Scotch Bible Society, 11; while the Italian Bible Society has given an edition of 10,000 Testaments, and a Family Bible to the people. The British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews is at work in Rome, and the London Society is also there, and at Venice. Various foreign Churches, American Presbyterian, Methodist, Reformed French and German, German Lutheran, and others are also in the field. There are in all at least 400 places where the glad tidings are proclaimed, seven full congregations being in Rome. Indirectly many thousands, besides those coming directly under the influence of these varied agencies, are being reached, so that a glorious harvest must surely be reaped from these Italian fields. We may well praise and pray on their behalf, and rejoice that the people who erewhiles were sitting in darkness and the shadow of death are now so blessed with the light and liberty of the Gospel of Christ.

ISLINGTON.—Rev. S. Hutchinson, aided by the Revs. Preb. Wilson, T. Graham, W. J. Chapman, J. Shepherd, and a large number of workers, and fifty of Mr. Sankey's Priory Hall choir, began a Mission at St. Mary's Parish Church, Islington, on Tuesday, November 20. Special Missions are are also in progress at the church at Cloudesley-square, and at Vernon Chapel, King's-cross.

Notes and Comments.

OUR readers will be glad to know that the "Thoughts on Holiness," by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, which recently appeared in these columns, are now published separately. See "Notices of Books."

Answers to the question, "How shall the lapsed masses be reached by the Church?" are more numerous than practical. A Glasgow correspondent of The Christian Leader has responded, in true Scotch hard-headed and straight-to-the-point fashion, by saying—

"1st. Let the Church settle her differences and close her ranks. 2nd. Sever her unhallowed alliance with the world. 3rd. Proclaim anew the eternal truth that a man is to be prized solely for his sense and worth, and not for his social position or yearly income. 4th. Show the proof of her divine mission by the grand old text, 'To the poor the Gospel is preached.' Lastly, Cease not from her labours till by her real sympathy to the lapsed masses in their trials, and by her powerful aid in removing their grievances, they shall come to know and believe, even the poorest and most wretched among them, that godliness is profitable for the life that now is, as well as for that which is to come."

Many well-meaning people in our churches talk of the social problems of the day, bewail the sad state of things, theorise and speculate as to what ought to be done, but meanwhile do nothing to improve them. Eliphaz the Temanite once asked concerning a wise man, "Should he reason with unprofitable talk? or with speeches wherewith he can do no good?" The Apostle James also had such in mind when he said, "If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?" We need on all hands to press the old adage, "Deeds, not words."

Much has been said lately about the poverty of many parents making it impossible for them to provide boots or clothes for their children who are compelled to attend Board schools. "A Head Teacher" appealed, last week, in a daily journal for cast-off articles of clothing to be sent to teachers for apportionment to necessitous cases. Might not the managers of such schools, in the most needy districts, make arrangements for such gifts to be received at the school premises, and for supervision to be exercised as to their distribution? If donors knew that judgment was used in the selection of cases, so that the really needy were supplied, doubtless many would respond to so commendable an appeal. There must be tons of clothing lying unused, while thousands of children are perishing, whose lives might be saved if they were warmly clad.

Prebendary Capel Cure, preaching in St. Paul's Cathedral last week, emphasised the need for personal love and individual influence in endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor and needy in our "outcast" districts. The spirit of his words is very exemplary, when he says:—

"God had given them this work—this God-like work—to comfort and make fruitful human souls that were now outcast and wretched. Let each one take upon himself personally the carrying out of this work, not by setting sect against sect, but by unanimity of effort, each working as a separate influence in himself for the general good."

The Rev. Fergus Ferguson, of Glasgow, in speaking recently on the captivity of Israel, as referred to in Psalm cxxvi., thus applied the subject to the Church of Christ as at present seen among men:—

"And is not the Church in captivity to-day—the captivity of another Babylon—the Babel of our warring creeds—broken, disfigured, prostrate? Where is the body that ought to be "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners"?—the body that ought to be visibly one, reflecting the all-perfect truth, self-evidently divine, and irresistible in the force of her demonstrations? If all those scattered fragments were gathered up in one mighty, coherent, spiritual whole, what a body it would be! Terrible? Yes, terrible to iniquity and inhumanity everywhere. But even Christian people have so little hope of this, that when the Lord turns again the captivity of Zion, they will be like them that dream."

He is equally right in his statement of facts when he adds:—

"The world can only be converted through the Church; but in order to that blessed result, it requires to be abundantly apparent that the Church itself is a thoroughly converted body."

One of the first things the Church needs to be converted to is brotherly love, such love as would override bigotry, sectarian narrowness, and party strife. Our Lord Himself prayed his Father for the oneness of his Church, and urged as a plea, "That the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me."

The Bishop of Liverpool is by no means damped in the earnestness of his desire to cultivate fraternity of spirit, and to work with other sections of the Church. At a meeting he presided over at Mildmay, last week, referring to his recent Scotch experiences in reference to this subject, he said, "he found a much closer similarity between the Thirty-nine Articles and the Westminster Confession of Faith than between the Thirty-nine Articles and the Decrees of the Council of Trent, and he should do what he could to show how much common ground he had with faithful Protestants."

The death of Dr. William Rees, spoken of as "the presiding genius and the greatest ornament of the Eistedfodd," removes from Wales one of her choicest sons. He was a poet of much eminence, a writer of the purest Welsh, an orator of peculiar power, and a prince of preachers. His sermons were filled with the bardism of his nation, and his hymns are sung in almost every Welsh chapel. The Rev. Owen Thomas, for fifty years his intimate friend, together with the Revs. H. Stowell Brown, E. Hasson, and others, took part in the funeral service, which was attended by a vast concourse of people from the Principality and other parts of the country, many thousands being present.

Among the private exercises of the Christian life which are too often neglected is that of self-examination, and testing ourselves as to the motives and spirit by which we are actuated. For lack of this many are in danger of calling evil good, and good evil. It is quite true that the habit of introspection may be cultivated to an extreme, and so lead to morbid and self-contained experiences, but none the less is it essential for "every man to prove his own work," and to see to it that in all he does his eye is single, and his heart right with God. The day of trial by fire, that is coming on apace, will deal with secret things, and if we are wise we shall anticipate its action by looking beneath the surface even of our best deeds.

In recently noticing the pamphlet published by Messrs. J. Clarke & Co., Fleet-street, London, "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London," the price was erroneously stated in a portion of our issue to be 6s. per 1000; it should have been 6s. per 100.

The facts stated by Rev. J. W. Horsley, Chaplain of Clerkenwell Prison, when preaching at St. George's, Southwark, the other day, call for reiteration and serious reflection. He said:—

"The Great Plague left a dark mark on the history of London and of the world, and yet all who fell a victim to it did not equal the number of those who drank themselves to death in a year. Three times as many as fell at Waterloo in that space of time drank themselves to the grave. The year before last 26,000 people were apprehended in London alone for drunkenness, while during last year the number of persons arrested for a like offence had increased to 34,000. This increase of intemperance was marked all over England, for while for 1881 the number apprehended for drunkenness was 174,000, in the following twelve months the total came to 189,000, showing an increase of 15,000 for the year. It was his lot to learn that of every twelve people sent into prison nine came there directly or indirectly through the curse of strong drink."

Considering the great and constantly increasing influence of temperance organisations in our land, such a state of things is sadly disheartening, and proves to what a fearful extent the curse of alcohol has enthralled the people. But to thoughtful minds the revelation of such facts will only serve to stimulate yet greater zeal in the cause of abstinence and temperance reform, for if amid all the work done in such directions, drunkenness is thus raging, what would it have been if such work had not been engaged in? By all means let us face facts, let us know the worst of the foes we have to deal with, but let us not be daunted by them or discouraged, but rather roused to greater boldness and determination to do battle with them.

It appears to be true that the increase of drunkenness among women is greater proportionately than among men. In the Judicial Statistics for 1882 it is stated that of those who have been convicted for any crime above ten times are 4391 males and, 8946 females. A comparison of the past five years in this respect shows that this ratio has been steadily growing; 1878, 5673 females; 1879, 5800; 1880, 6773; 1881, 7946; and in 1882, 8946. Mr. Horsley states this preponderance of women is entirely due to the special character and increase of female intemperance. The same thing is said of New York City: in four years the number of women convicted of drunkenness more than five times, has been 9006; of men during the same period, 560.

The enclosures being made on Dartmoor and the neighbourhood have directed attention to one of the evils which exist in our national condition. The way in which landed proprietors and manorial lords appropriate to themselves ground which for generations the cottagers and rural poor have used and regarded as a common right, is a grievance to be justly complained of and condemned. This "land-grabbing," as it has been well termed, is spoken of in Scripture as a sin against God and man, and not a few great men in our land may well lay to heart the inspired words, "Remove not the old landmark, and enter not into the fields of the fatherless, for their Redeemer is mighty, and He shall plead their cause with thee."

To any Christian friends who may have a desire to carry on Mission work in a poor district of the West-end of London, near Oxford-street, the Editor can give information of commodious premises, well suited for the purpose, which can be had for a nominal rent.

Some of our readers are in the habit of reading extracts from our columns at their weekly prayer-meetings and mothers' meetings. We would suggest that the present is a good opportunity for others to do the same, so that the blessing now falling on London may be carried to remote districts.

A very successful and useful Convention of ministers and Sunday-school teachers connected with London branches of the Sunday-school Union, has been held in the City Temple. The importance of Sunday-school agency in the work of evangelising the Continent was ably dwelt upon by Alderman Sir W. McArthur and others, many practical suggestions being made for increasing the aid rendered to the Continental Fund. Bible-readings for the scholars formed another prominent theme, the Rev. John Morgan, of Whitfield Tabernacle, introducing it. Bands of Hope were also discussed, and their value in strengthening and furthering the influence of Sunday-school work was forcibly shown by the Rev. Chas. Garrett, who strongly advocated their union with the schools as mutually beneficial in every way.

Dr. Parker presided over the introductory service held in connection with the Convention, and struck the keynote in an admirable way by insisting on the one supreme object of Sunday-school teaching being the salvation of the scholars. His remarks on the value of vital godliness and experimental testimony over mere logic and learning, were specially good. He said—and the lesson needs enforcing—

"Christianity is not a clever attempt in literature, splendid dialectics—a new department of intellectual fence, assault, and battery. Christianity brings in living men, and, pointing to each of them, says, 'This is my argument—answer it.' There is no answer to godliness. There is always a reply to logic, but there is never any answer to purity, patience, sacrifice, the heroic life of Christ and every Christian. Fewer books and more men would be my 'short and easy method,' not with deists only, but with all classes of outsiders and unbelievers."

The first of the mission halls to be erected by the London Congregational Union has just been opened in Old Gravel-lane, Wapping, and is to be under the superintendence of Rev. G. S. Reaney, of Stepney. Mr. Samuel Morley, who has given £5000 for use in work of this kind, said at the opening meeting he wished it to be distinctly understood that there was to be nothing denominational about the movement. He further urged that the blue ribbon ought to be prominent in the work, as total abstinence had his fullest confidence as an important factor in the work of social and moral reform.

The new Lord Mayor is reported to have said at a recent banquet he attended at Chippenham, referring to his official position as head of the greatest municipality in the world: "May I do all to the glory of God, the good of His Church, and the safety, honour, and welfare of our Sovereign and her dominions." Such words indicate a spirit eminently commendable as the animating principle of men who occupy high places in our midst. So far as they are really made the basis of action by men of influence, they cannot fail to advance the cause of righteousness, and to promote the welfare of the community.

His lordship has lost no time in giving proof of the sincerity of his desire to act in the spirit of the words quoted above. We are glad to see that he has announced his intention to set aside the custom of State processions to church on the Lord's Day, publicly asserting that to employ so much needless labour, and that for mere pomp, on the Sabbath, is contrary to his conscientious convictions. Such a course will commend itself to all devout men, and do much to strengthen the hands of those engaged in maintaining the sanctity of the Day of Rest.

Dr. Pressensé, the well-known Protestant leader in France, has been nominated as a Life Senator in the French Assembly, by the Left Centre party. It is said there is great probability of his election. The influence of such a man in such a position would doubtless be of great value to French Protestantism.

The Nonconformist, commenting on the fact that a large number of church-goers are found in Mr. Moody's audiences, says, "While the churches furnish him with hearers from their congregations, he will find even in them plenty of work to do in his work of awakening." This is true beyond question. Moribund church-goers are by no means at a discount, and if some of these are but aroused and quickened into action the evangelists will by no means have laboured in vain. But it is gratifying to know that a large number have been reached at Islington who do not belong to this class, so that on all sides the Master is honouring his own work.

A correspondent, whose "letters for the Press are always condensed into the concentrated essence of condensation," says: "My secret of composition is that I believe Jesus Christ, and strike out every idle word." The consequence is that his addresses and letters are generally printed verbatim in newspapers, while others are ruthlessly cut down. All editors must wish that this wise man had many disciples and imitators. Reports have to be abbreviated on account of the exigencies of space, but it would be far more satisfactory if the writers would themselves revise their communications and erase every unnecessary word. We beg the special attention of all our correspondents to these remarks.

The visit of Sir Charles Dilke, President of the Board of Trade, to the East-end, for the purpose of personally inspecting some of the districts in which the outcast poor reside, is a step in the right direction. It certainly augurs well for a due consideration of what part the State can take in dealing with the terrible facts to which attention is now widely drawn. The quarters visited by Sir Charles Dilke are admirably adapted to bring him face to face with facts such as require to be seen and known by our legislators, ere they can possibly judge fairly the merits of the question involved. We are much mistaken if the public mind is not rapidly becoming so convinced of the need of action, that, if only the Department over which Sir Charles presides should prove itself in earnest, and prepared to act wisely and promptly, mere party consideration will be lost sight of, and general support be given to any plan which ensures genuine social reform.

Our new contemporary, The Christian Million, we are glad to hear, has already attained a considerable circulation. Its Luther commemoration number was interesting in matter and profusely illustrated. Considering the many new readers produced by the Educational Act, we welcome every addition to a healthy popular literature that will help in counteracting the baneful influences of the sensational and pernicious reading of the day.

Vacant seats in our places of worship might soon be filled if members of churches were to act upon the suggestion lately made in the columns of a contemporary, that all seat-holders who can should pay for an extra sitting in their church or chapel, and then make a point of trying to bring in some outsider every Sunday to occupy that seat. The invitation might be given to stragglers met with on the way to the services, or to non-churchgoing neighbours, and would be sure to lead to words of sympathy and goodwill, which would do much to draw the soul, not only to the sanctuary, but often to Christ Himself.

Mr. Moody, when he was a regular attendant at the services of the church he was connected with in Chicago, was in the habit of taking several pews, and making it his business to fill them in this manner, and he thus led many to God. Too often church members forget all but themselves, and their apathy chills and repels those who otherwise might easily be drawn to hear the word of life.

There are even in crowded London no fewer than seventy clear acres of land connected with Board schools as playgrounds. A deputation waited upon the London School Board last week, to urge the desirableness of opening these areas for the use of all children on Saturdays, holidays, and summer evenings, under the supervision of proper caretakers. Remembering what large numbers of children are shut out from any possibility of air and exercise, and also the value of physical education in developing both body and mind, there is everything to be said for such a request. It is referred to the consideration of a select committee, and for the sake of hundreds of thousands of little ones, who know nothing of recreation and sport, let us hope it may soon be granted.

"JOHN PLOUGHMAN'S" ALMANACK.

IF we did not know that Mr. Spurgeon has a thousand and one other things to do every week of the year, we should conclude that he spent all his time from January to December coining new saws and proverbs for this famous almanack (Passmore & Alabaster, 1d.) At the very lowest computation each of these 366 sparkling gems (next year is leap year) from wisdom's mine ought to be worth a penny to any man. When we find that he throws in seven original—very original—articles, three poems, five pretty pictures—not to speak of postal information—do we exaggerate in calling his broadsheet the biggest literary bargain of the season?

We are not going to infringe "John Ploughman's" copyright by any wholesale appropriation of his concentrated wit and wisdom; will he forgive us for just quoting these four lines that stand for four successive days in the coming month of March?

"A little each day is much in a year;
The house is enriched by saving the beer.
Pray light up each day with domestic delight,
And bring home the wages on Saturday night."

As for the original articles, it is only by tearing ourselves away from the perusal of them that we can refrain from begging, borrowing, or stealing the whole collection.

THE REVIVAL IN IRELAND.

WATERFORD.

ALTHOUGH they are now a little out of date, the following remarks from The Waterford Mirror, of November 8, as to the visit of the Evangelists to that city, are well worthy quoting: "The brief visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to Waterford was one of the most remarkable events in the history of the church in Waterford, and was attended with a degree of success which surpassed the anticipation of the most sanguine. It had the effect, not only of leading many out of darkness into marvellous light, but of uniting the various Protestant denominations together, heart and soul, for one common object. Christians of the several denominations laid aside their little points of difference, and gave each other the right hand of fellowship, for the purpose of promulgating the fundamental principles of their common faith, and inviting the careless and the unbelieving to accept the simple Gospel, and enter upon the Christian's path. And, as upon all occasions when there is a united and faithful effort on the part of those who believe, a pentecostal blessing was the result, such as, we venture to say, was never experienced in Waterford before. Numbers of educated people were enabled to grasp the simple truth for the first time; while numbers of careless ones, perhaps in answer to the prayers of a parent or a Sunday-school teacher, resolved to turn from the error of their way, and tread the Christian's path. Hundreds who had heard the Gospel in Sunday-school or in church in their younger days, but who, from one cause or another, had gone seeking pleasure in the things of this life, now assembled together, and, as it were, finding that all else was vanity and vexation of spirit, sang, 'Tell me the old, old story,' with unmistakable fervour.

"It now rests with the older disciples to watch over the young believers, and see that they are properly established in the faith; and we are glad to learn that the initiative step has been taken in the arranging for various meetings. There is nothing more calculated to drive a young convert to seek pleasure again in the world than the want of society; it will therefore be their own interest to meet together as often as possible, as it will be the duty of those advanced in the Christian life to bring them together, and to endeavour to infuse a kindly feeling amongst all. Certainly many will bless the day when Messrs. Moody and Sankey visited Waterford, and yet there is no reason why these good men should be depended upon for doing the work. They did not ask to tell us anything new, it was the 'old, old story'; but it was told with with a degree of determination and bluntness which had an overpowering effect. In London there is a great field of labour. Surely there ought to be a great shaking amongst the dry bones. We shall be expecting to hear of great results from day to day."

LETTERS FROM YOUNG CONVERTS.

By the kindness of the friend of whom mention was recently made in our columns, who keeps up correspondence by letter with those he deals with in the after-meetings, we are able to give some further extracts from letters he has lately received. They will help to indicate the deep reality of the movement begun in the south of Ireland by Messrs Moody and Sankey, and now being extended by the labours of Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan. We trust, also, they will be helpful to others who may at this time be just setting out in the Christian life:—

"I am very thankful to you for having written to me, and for sending so many texts. Please God I will write them out, in order to fix them on my memory. Soon after you had left me I found, or rather the Lord gave me, the most perfect peace. I can now say, thank God, that I know I am saved; it is no longer I think. I was almost afraid of being converted; I feared I should have been unable to give up all if I became a Christian. I did not then know that nothing could separate me from the love of Christ when once I was his. Still I felt a longing for salvation; I did not wish to be the only one among my friends who was unable to stand up and confess Christ. When you told me to pray I felt I did not know how to do so, for I had not prayed for several years; but after you had gone I asked the Lord to help me. As soon as I had done so I had the joy of realising, and afterwards confessing, Christ as my Saviour."

The young writer goes on to say how she longs to do something for her new-found Master, and hopes to devote herself to hospital nursing. She also thanks the friend who was the means of leading her into the light for a card he enclosed; many of our readers may like to know what it is; it can be had of Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. (3d. per doz.):—

IMPORTANT.

Say nothing you would not like God to hear.—Eccl. v. 2.

Do nothing you would not like God to see.—Titus ii. 7.

Write nothing you would not like God to read.—Heb. iv. 13.

Go to no place where you would not like God to find you.—Job xxxiv. 21.

Read no book of which you would not like God to say, "Show it Me."—John v. 39.

Never spend your time in such a way that you would not like God to ask, "What art thou doing?"—1 Thes. v. 15.

"Thank you very much for your nice letter. I like those verses you so kindly marked for me, especially John v. 24. I can now say that I have passed from death into life. When I read in Isa. liii. 4, 5, that He bore my sins and carried my sorrows, I feel that I do not love Him enough. I would like to love Him with my whole heart and soul and mind, for all his great love to me. I have been very happy since I was in Limerick, trusting in Jesus. It is so nice to have such a loving Friend to tell all your sorrows. I would now like my father to come to Jesus too; but I don't know how to begin to tell him about it. Would you please tell me how you would begin, if you were going to tell anyone?"

"I know you will rejoice to hear that I have accepted Christ as my Saviour. I can hardly yet realise his great love in dying for me, but I thank God I have been awakened to a sense of my sin and my need of a Saviour. I have been as bad as the young man Mr. Moody spoke of who would not 'seek first the kingdom of God.' I was brought up under the best of pastors, who took every interest in my welfare. I attended Sunday-school since I can remember, first as a pupil, next as a teacher. My father prayed for us and encouraged us in every good work, but though I did not scoff at God's word, I listened to others who did it, ay, and laughed with them. Often have I left the church or meeting-house resolved to lead a better life, but, alas! I thought to do so in my own strength. It was seed sown on stony ground; I fell, and comforted myself with the thought, 'I have time enough to repent.' I left my home in the country to take a situation. I had no doubt my dear old pastor often united with my family in prayer for me; thank God their prayers have been heard! One of my sisters has been to hear Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey; she had a desire to be prayed for, but had to leave in order to catch the train before I found courage to seek my Saviour openly. I would ask you to remember my sister in your prayers."

In a subsequent letter the same young lady writes: "I have had such cheering letters from home. My dear father and mother were so rejoiced to hear of my conversion, and my sister, you will be glad to know, has taken her stand on the Lord's side. It strengthens me to know this, and from my conversion she derives the same comfort. I fear my only brother, who is so very dear to us, is still outside the family of God. How I wish he could have heard Mr. Moody, but God is Love, and it may be He will have mercy on him."

"Your kind letter and card are indeed a great help to me. I feel sure there are many families here who lift up their hearts in praise to Him who guided you to Limerick. We read a portion of God's Word now every day, and it seems such a bond of union between us. Though our family circle is small—only my mother, my sister, an old gentleman who lives in the house, and myself—still, it is very nice to talk of, and praise, the one Lord. I applied for a class in the Sunday-school, and hope to be able, with God's help, to bring little ones to His fold. I called on the young lady I was speaking to you about, but could not see her; so I appointed to go again this evening. I have found out a few texts to take with me."

"Words fail me to express how deeply I appreciate your attention to me when I needed it so much. Your letter has refreshed me; oh, the joy I felt on reading over and over the many beautiful and soothing texts you have given me to search up in that fathomless Word of God. I am so comforted and happy now. My sister will rejoice when she hears the glad news. I cannot write half I would, my heart is so full of love to Him who has done so much for me."

"Thank you very much for your truly Christian letter; it did me great good to read it. You will be glad to hear that I am looking to and trusting in Christ as my Saviour. I feel so happy in his love, and I wonder why I did not give myself up to serve Him sooner. It all seems so simple now. Yesterday was my fortieth birthday, and I never spent such a happy one in my life. My dear husband is still undecided, but very earnest to be brought into the fold. I would ask you to pray that he may soon be led to accept Christ and live to his glory. I have read a great many of your texts and found them very comforting to my soul."

CLONMEL.

DEAR SIR,—Never has this town been visited by such a blessed season of revival as that which has attended the four days' Mission of Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan in the Skating Rink. The Mission commenced on Thursday, the 8th inst., and terminated Monday morning, 13th, with a short meeting for praise. As in other Southern towns visited, so in Clonmel, the most blessed results have been realised, and many have professed to have found "joy and peace in believing."

The meetings throughout were characterised by the most intense earnestness and solemnity, and from the start a real interest was awakened in the Gospel message, so powerfully preached and so beautifully illustrated by Major Whittle. Nothing could exceed the rapt attention and the manifest eagerness with which the "old, old story" was received by the crowds that attended the services. The powerful addresses and earnest and impressive appeals seemed to go straight to the hearts and consciences of those who heard, and to have been used by the Holy Spirit in bringing many souls from darkness to light.

The climax of interest seemed to have been reached on Sunday evening, when the Rink was crowded to its fullest extent by an assembly of about 800 people, many being obliged to stand through the entire service. At the after-meeting an opportunity was given to any who might wish to leave, but nearly all the congregation remained while Major Whittle explained more plainly the way of life, and earnestly besought all who were anxious about their personal salvation to decide that night. Nearly one hundred of all ages stood up, after the singing of that beautiful hymn by Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan composed during the Limerick Mission. It was a scene never to be forgotten, to behold the earnest countenances of all who were called to decision for Christ, and to hear them join heartily in the sweet chorus:—

"I will, I will, God helping me,
I will, O Lord, be Thine.
Thy precious blood was shed to purchase me,
I will be wholly thine."

There can be no doubt that a real work of grace has been begun in this place, that new life has been given to many, and rich blessing showered upon nearly all who have had the privilege of attending these meetings. Many souls have been brought to the light, and many households in our town are rejoicing to-day in the possession of a joy and peace never realised before.

At the praise-meeting held on Monday morning, nearly everyone present stood up to declare what the Lord had done for them. It was most touching and impressive to hear the testimonies borne to the power and grace of the Lord Jesus; in some cases the heart seemed too full for expression, some blessed the Lord for having been brought to peace and light, others for wonderful answers to prayer, and all for personal blessing received. The visit of Major Whittle and Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan to Clonmel will never be forgotten. The whole Gospel was proclaimed with power by the one, and most beautifully sung by the others. And the effect has been that God has wonderfully blessed it to many souls in Clonmel. May God grant that the work may be lasting and permanent, to the praise of his glory.—Yours faithfully, JAMES WILSON.

The Manse, Clonmel, Nov. 16.

REV. H. WEBB-PEPLOE AT CAMBRIDGE.

OUR usual Michaelmas Term Mission was held from November 11, 12, 13. We are still reaping the benefits of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's labours amongst us last year, and had hoped they would have given us two or three days again, but other arrangements prevented them. Many of the most earnest Christian workers in the different colleges date their decision for Christ to their visit.

This term Rev. H. Webb-Peploe conducted the Mission. We were fortunate in obtaining the University Church for the meetings, and on Sunday the 11th, about thirteen hundred undergraduates assembled to listen to a very earnest Gospel sermon. A large number remained to the after-meeting, and on the following days Mr. Peploe received many at his rooms for personal conversation.

On Monday, of course, there was not such a large attendance, but on Tuesday evening, being the last meeting, there were some hundreds listening with the greatest attention to Mr. Peploe's earnest appeals. But these "Mission Services" are yet comparatively new to such seats of learning as this, and the Vicar, who had been present at every meeting, thought that the after-meetings "disturbed the solemnity of the building"; so, to the universal regret, only the one meeting was held that night, but many responded to Mr. Peploe's invitation to meet him in Mr. J. E. K. Studd's rooms at its close. We have heard of several who have professed to receive blessing, and, though on a smaller scale, we trust that God has blessed this Mission as he did the one last year. Mr. Peploe also addressed the annual meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society.

On Tuesday last was held the Fifth Anniversary Tea-meeting of the Theatre Mission. Hon. Ion Keith-Falconer, M.A., presided, and several local clergymen and ministers took part. A good work is done by this agency, and we trust that as the winter nights come on many will be brought under the sound of the Gospel and receive its precious truths. We are sorry to hear that Rev. H. Trotter, vicar of the parish, is about to remove to Trowbridge. His work here has been much blessed.

HINTS FOR THE INQUIRY ROOM—4.

By Mr. GEORGE SOLTAU.

"The Kingdom of Heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind."—MATT. xiii. 47.

THE DEEPLY CONVICTED will, we trust, be the most numerous kind enclosed in the net, and to be gathered in. With these the essential thing is to ascertain how the Spirit of God is working in their hearts, and then select such Scriptures as may most fitly apply to their expressed need. Various groups of texts for this purpose were given under the title "Rightly dividing the Word of Truth" (THE CHRISTIAN, November 8.

(2) THE AWAKENED CONSCIENCE must not be conounded with the convicted heart. There is a common expression, "If I act up to my conscience I shall be accepted of God." This idea is altogether wrong. Conscience never leads a man to God, but makes him realise his distance from God. Adam and Eve had an awakened conscience in the Garden of Eden, and they hid themselves from God, doing their best to conceal from each other and from God their shame and sin. God called out, "Where art thou?" Mark the answer, "I heard thy voice—I was afraid—I was naked—I hid myself." No confession of sin; and this was followed by an attempt to shift the responsibility of sin on another. Between God and the serpent stood the guilty ones. They listened to the voice of God as He addressed the serpent—"The seed of the woman shall bruise thy head." This was the Gospel for them, to lead them to step over to the side of God, who would thus vanquish their foe.

But to step over to God involves being stripped of all covering made by oneself. See also Zech. iii. 3—5. God must clothe and cover the sinner. To explain this, note the following group of texts:—Prov. xxviii. 13; Ps. xxxii. 1; Prov. x. 12; 1 Pet. iv. 8; Prov. xvii. 9. How does love cover sin (Rom. v. 8)? The death of Christ covers the sin that would be death to the soul.

(3) THE ROUSED FEELINGS.—Luke viii. 13, "When they hear, they receive the Word with joy; and these have no root, which for a while believe, and in time of temptation fall away." This class of persons assent to everything you say, and tell you how beautiful the meetings are, how happy they feel, &c. If you suspect them to be unconvicted hearers, give them no encouragement, but ply them with a few pointed questions about sin; whether they think they have fallen so low as others; whether they have realised the deceitfulness of the heart as described in Jer. xvii. 9. How much punishment they think they deserve from God; and then ask them how they expect to withstand temptation. They will probably reply, "As long as I feel all right, no doubt I shall get on." Feelings do not alter facts. On the one hand, happy feelings do not remove the wrath of God from an unpardoned soul; nor, on the other hand, do the unhappy feelings and doubts of the trembling believer alter the fact of his security in Christ.

(4) THE BACKSLIDER is described in 2 Pet. i. 8, 9, and also in Luke xv. 11—21. It is impossible for us to decide who are really backsliders, and who have never received life at all, but have fallen away in time of temptation as described in Luke viii. 13. God alone can see the heart, and all who are born again will most assuredly be kept by His power, and know fully the meaning of the blessed words in Ps. xxiii. 3, "He restoreth my soul." A soul once saved can never be lost. The good Shepherd said, "No man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand" (John x. 29). We cannot say positively to anyone, "You are saved," but can only judge by the outward life and character. Matt. vii. 20, 21, "By their fruits ye shall know them." If therefore a person says to a worker, "I am a backslider," ask for an account of the conversion—time, place, circumstances, and so forth—and then put a few questions based on 2 Pet. i. 1—9. The two principal causes of backsliding will be found to be trusting to feelings instead of to the "precious promises," and lack of boldness in confessing Christ: virtue or courage has not been added to faith.

In verse 9, the words "cannot see afar off" are in the Revised Version rendered "he closes his eyes," denoting the voluntary shutting up of the heart, and sleep indulged in, preventing watchfulness. If there seems to be real godly sorrow for sin, and a consciousness of departure from God, use Hosea xiv. 4; Jer. iii. 12—14. Impress on him that he must return as a sinner, making no excuses for his wandering; that his language must be:

"Just as I am, without one plea,
But that thy blood was shed for me."

Deal with a mistaken backslider as with an ordinary inquirer, convicted of sin for the first time, and impress on all such that the power to keep from backsliding in the future is the laying hold of the truths concerning the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, revealing a present Saviour. Full surrender to the Lord must be insisted on, and a thorough searching of heart as to the causes of previous failures, that they may be honestly dealt with and confessed in the Lord's presence.

There are two Scriptures that often trouble the minds of uninstructed Christians—namely, Gal. v. 4, and 1 Cor. ix. 27. In the one, the expression, "Ye are fallen from grace" had reference to the error into which the Galatian Church had fallen, of supposing that they were in the first instance saved by grace, but had to maintain their salvation by the observance of Jewish ritual and legal ceremonial, losing sight of the truth that the God who pardons sin through grace, keeps the feet from falling also through his divine grace. The glory of salvation must be his from beginning to end.

The other Scripture, where the Apostle Paul says, "lest I myself should be a castaway," is an allusion to the practice at the annual games and athletic sports held in Corinth. He is saying, "I keep under my body," I am still in training, lest, when I have "preached to others," or acted as herald in summoning the competitors to start in the race, I myself should be disqualified for running, when my turn comes to compete; lest I should be rejected as an unfit competitor.

WORKING GIRLS IN LONDON.

ABOUT one hundred and forty young women belonging to the seven "Homes for Working Girls" in different parts of London, were invited to tea by Miss Morley, at Gordon House, Euston-square, on the 16th inst. These Homes are under the able direction of Mr. John Shrimpton, and superintended by Christian matrons; they are a means of doing much spiritual good among the young women, as well as affording them a refuge and home comforts which are not to be found in the majority of houses of business or lodgings. Mr. S. MORLEY, M.P., who presided, said that it gave him great pleasure to be a partner in so excellent a concern; he referred to the many temptations which beset any young woman in London, more especially those who come up from the country to make their way in life. He was thankful the advantages of these institutions were appreciated by the young women, where at a moderate cost they could live under happy Christian influences, and find a friend in the matrons, who were worthy of all praise for the admirable way they manage the different houses, and the good results which follow their efforts. He would specially urge upon them the advantage of the blue ribbon as a protection from temptation, and commended total abstinence as conducive to good health.

Rev. NEVILLE SHERBROKE said a few kindly words on the true characteristics of home as expressive of what those who are Christians have in Christ; he especially exhorted the young women to be careful whom they marry, and to have the courage to say "No" to the man who drinks.

Mr. SHRIMPTON closed the meeting by a few remarks on the use of books, and the value of these houses to those who occupied them. Further information may be obtained from him at 38, Lincoln's-inn-fields, W.C.

CITY MISSIONARIES AND THE POOR.

IT is a happy sign of the philanthropic and Christian spirit which exists in England at the present day that the revelations lately made in the pages of the "Bitter Cry of Outcast London," of the awful condition in which multitudes of the poor of London live, have so deeply stirred the public mind. Let us hope that much may be done by Government towards ameliorating the evil by wise and judicious schemes for the better housing of the poor. But, as Lord Salisbury has hinted, the remedy must be manifold in its nature, and the difficult problem of enabling the poor to live honestly on the wages they earn, and of purifying the moral cesspools which exist in our midst, must be approached in various ways. It cannot be denied that a moral reformation is essential if any schemes for the social improvement of the poor are to succeed. As Dr. Allon says, in the sermon you printed in your issue of the 1st inst.:—

"It is a sorrowful world mainly because it is a sinful world, not because of accident, or circumstances, or ignorance, or mistake, but because of sin. . . . . The problem then, is, How are the evils of life to be redressed? The indisputable reply is, Nothing will redress them that does not neutralise and reverse their causes. . . . . Clearly the only remedy for the evils of human life is the Gospel of Christ carried to individual man, received into personal hearts, preached to men everywhere."

The author of the "Bitter Cry" recommends the opening of Mission-halls. These may do much in the future, as they have in the past. But Mission-halls alone are not sufficient. Thousands of the poor do not care to go to any place of religious worship. They can only be met and reasoned with in their own homes. The experience of half a century has proved that this is the only really successful way of evangelising the very poor and the degraded. Patient, quiet, prayerful visitation, from door to door, and from room to room, must be unceasingly carried on in the "rookeries" of London if the debased and the criminal are to be won to Christ. This is exactly the method adopted by the London City Mission, which has at the present time 455 missionaries at work in the metropolis. As it is possible many of your readers may not know much about the City Mission, I may be permitted to say that it has agents in some of the worst districts described in the "Bitter Cry," and that they are doing a most blessed work. For instance, about 60 yards from "Collier's Rents" is a Mission-room where one of our best men has services on Sunday evenings, and on some of the week evenings. Every Sunday 140 of the poor may be seen crowded into the little room. On Monday evenings a prayer-meeting is held, and sometimes as many as twenty-nine of the poor people will offer prayer. If it is asked, why, then, do such plague-spots remain as a disgrace to our city, the answer is, that immediately people, having been reformed through spiritual influences, rise in the social scale, they remove to better neighbourhoods; others as degraded as they were take their place, and the work of reformation has to be repeated.

The Committee of the City Mission have no desire to take all the credit to themselves of the good effected. They are well aware that many Christian agencies are at work amongst the poor of London, and there is ample room for them all; but they believe that no organisation is so well adapted as their own for reaching the lowest stratum of society. Contributions to aid in the extension of the work to districts as yet unreached will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, Mr. Joseph Hoare, City Mission House, 3, Bridewell-place, E.C., or yours faithfully,

T. S. Hutchinson,
Clerical Secretary to London City Mission.

POOR CHILDREN IN CLERKENWELL.—We recommenced our Halfpenny Dinners to Poor Children, 336 of whom crowded in upon us at the opening. It was a sight not soon to be forgotten; we wished some of our friends had been present. "The Destitute Children's Dinner Society" will not continue the grants of former years to the poor children of "Ragged London in the centre." Any article of clothing for the aged, the sick, and especially the little ones, will be very thankfully received by W. Catlin, 17, Claremont-square, Pentonville, N.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Edwin Bayliss, blind evangelist, from Westminster, addressed the nurses at Chelsea Hospital, on Tuesday evening, by the special invitation of the chaplain, Rev. Sidney Clarke. Subject: "He preached unto him Jesus." A deep impression was made.

Manchester.—A twenty-four days' Mission, conducted by Mr. Geo. Hefford, has just been concluded here. The attendance has been good. Many professed to receive Christ as their Saviour, while believers have been much strengthened and encouraged.

Shettleston, N.B.—Mr. Cooper, of the London Evangelisation Society, has been labouring here for the last six weeks. The meetings have not been large, but some who formerly were professing Christians have been humbled, and are now rejoicing in a true hope.

Sadler's Wells Theatre.—Since our opening in October last, we have an average attendance of 800 on Sundays, afternoon and evening, in spite of bad weather and counter attractions of the Grand Theatre. On Sunday evening, the 10th instant, we had several anxious inquirers, and among the rest one of the most notorious characters in Clerkenwell.

Higham, Derbyshire.—Messrs. Wharton and Weaver have been here ten days. The meetings have been well attended, believers quickened, and souls awakened. The whole neighbourhood seems stirred. Continued prayer is asked that these evangelists may have much encouragement at Whaley Bridge, where they commenced meetings on Sunday, November 18. .

Mr. John M. McAuliffe has been labouring at The Ark, Droitwich, during October, giving Bible readings and Gospel addresses. Much blessing has been given to his efforts. He has now gone on to Cirencester, where he purposes staying till the end of the year, for service in that town, and surrounding villages on the Cotswold hills. His address is—The Hermitage, Cirencester, Gloucestershire.

Dunse.—A series of evangelistic meetings, held here under the auspices of the Evangelistic Association, and extending over four weeks, were brought to a close on the 11th inst. by Mr. James Balfour. This was Mr. Balfour s second visit, and at the close he had the pleasure of witnessing a growing interest in spiritual matters. All the ministers heartily engaged in the work, and felt refreshed by the outpouring of God's Spirit on themselves and on their people.

Brixton Y.W.C.A.—The third anniversary was held on Thursday, November 8, at 5, Mayall-road. A large number of subscribers and friends met in the afternoon, and listened with pleasure to accounts of the work accomplished during the year, all agreeing that larger and better accommodation was wanted to meet the need of the numbers now attending. Seventy-one young women in business accepted the invitation to tea at eight o clock, and several gave in their namesas wishing to join the Association. Gospel addresses were given, and the meeting closed with hymns.

Bootle, Yorkshire.—The annual meeting in connection with the Gospel Mission to carters was held on the 9th inst., at which about 500 persons sat down to tea. The report stated that during the winter months cottage prayer meetings are held in different localities, where some of the workers have been seen trying to persuade those who attend no place of worship to come to the meetings, and at some of them there could be seen thirty or forty listening attentively to the preacher's words. On Monday evenings there is held a Band of Hope, which is worked by a number of young men from the Sunday-school during the winter months. There is also a very blessed work carried on in the lower room on Sunday afternoons. This is superintended by Mr. G. Thompson, with a staff of thirteen teachers. There are 165 children's names on the book, with an average attendance of 120. The Mayor and several other gentlemen spoke in warmest terms of the work done by this Mission.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh is labouring in Jedburgh, N.B., this month.

Gospel meetings are being held at Blairgowrie, N.B, by Mr. George Hefford; prayee is asked that much blessing may rest on thr work.

Latimer Road, W.—It is with great thankfulness we are privileged to record a most successful Mission, by the help of God, conducted by Miss Ruth Barryman, from Nov. 4 to 12, at the People's Hell, Latimer-road, W. Great interest has been awakened during the week, and the meetings have been very crowded each Sunday night. Christians have been stirred up to a more earnest work for Christ, and many unsaved souls have been convinced of their lost and ruined state, and have sought and found the pardon and peace which is never refused to those who seek.

Newport, Isle of Wight.—On the 2nd inst., Leigh Richmond Hall was opened in the presence of a large number of sympathising friends. It is intended as a Y.W.C.A. and Y.M.C.A., and is, happily, opened free of debt, with the exception of £300 required for furniture, &c., help towards which will be thankfully received by Rev. H. C. Thwaites. The Hall, including all compartments, will accommodate from five to six hundred persons. A series of Gospel services commenced on the 2nd, at which a great many poor and ignorant persons heard the Gospel, it is hoped with good results.

BROOKLYN NOTES.

THE Rev. Dr. Pentecost gives a part of November to a series of evangelical meetings at New England Church, Brooklyn, aided by Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins. He gives the weekly exposition of the Sunday-school lesson to Brooklyn teachers.

Rev. H. A. Powell has succeeded Rev. W. F. Crafts at Lee-avenue, and welcomes sixty-five new families to his congregation, which add £400 to the pecuniary strength of the same.

The thirty-seventh annual meeting of the American Missionary Association closed a three days' meeting here on November 1. Receipts for the year, £62,000. E. P. T.

Rev. S. Colcord has been preaching seven years to the well-to-do classes at Chickering Hall. This work has closed, but he is hoping that a Church enterprise in that part of the city may yet be initiated in the near future.

The Central Church has dedicated a spacious chapel for the use of a large branch school, and for preaching services. The Nazarine Coloured Church is seeking, after six years' probation, recognition as a Congregational Church, which will doubtless be cordially extended, and thus place it the eighteenth of the order.

Rev. Hugh S. Pentecost, late of Brooklyn, has identified himself with the Congregational Church, and is labouring at 34th-street in New York. He says that he has ceased complaining that the churches do not go for the masses. There is twice as much done for them as for the spiritual good of the rich. He found four different Missions seeking to get a boy into their Sunday-school. Missions are planted in almost every street. Children attend two or more.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.—A correspondent sends us the following from her daughter who is engaged in Mission work in India:—"While in prayer this morning, I was led to pray that the Lord would lay it on the hearts of school proprietors to stir up the young people to take a greater interest in foreign Mission work. It is pitiful to hear the cry from all parts of the globe for more labourers, also for funds to send those willing to go. Will you, for Christ's sake, remind those who have children under their care of the grand opportunity they have of increasing the interest amongst the young for spreading the glad tidings amongst the heathen?"

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

A STRIKING TESTIMONY.

DURING the distribution of Gospels in Marseilles cemetery on the day when Catholics visit the graves of their loved ones once a year, to decorate them with flowers, the head of the police remarked, "Give more of your books, and there will be no need of us." It appears that the French police are wiser in their generation than many Christians who "disapprove" of the free distribution of the Bible. M. E. P.

ISERLOHN, WESTPHALIA.

The town of Iserlohr, noted for its Technical School, of which a full account was given some time back in The Times, was visited by Dr. Zieman last summer, and much blessing resulted from his labours. On the last evening of his stay, the project of building a place for evangelistic labours was brought forward, and since then, through the help of clergymen and others, the sum of 25,000 marks (£1250) has been raised. In order to complete the proposed edifice, which is to include a Christian inn, for poor travellers, and a Home for workmen's children, £1000 more will be needed. Help will be thankfully received by Rev. R. S. Ashton, Secretary of the Evangelical Continental Society, 13, Blomfield-street, London Wall, E.C.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN ROME.

Among other blessed evanglistic work going on in Rome, not the least interesting and useful is that connected with a hospital and dispensary in one of the lowest quarters of the city for poor Italian Protestants. In the same building with these a Mission hall was opened this year holding between three and four hundred people, where the Gospel is preached to the poor and the street beggars, both on the Lord's day and week days, when the room is usually crowded. The hospital and dispensary are attended, gratuitously, by an English physician resident in Rome, who cares for the souls as well as the bodies of the patients. Though intended chiefly for Italian Protestants, poor Roman Catholics are not refused admittance. A most interesting case of the conversion of one of the latter occurred this year. Funds are urgently needed for the support of this work Help may be sent to Mr. John Gason, M.D., 8, Via S. Sebastiano, Rome, or to Rev. E. C. Ince, Sunbury House, Watford, Herts. who is acquainted with the evangelistic and medical work above described from personal observation during a residence in Rome last winter.

A LUTHER MEMORIAL IN ITALY.

It is about seven years ago that the Gospel was first preached in its simplicity at Fontevivo, about ten miles north of Parma; it found but slight response there, but in a neighbouring hamlet the word was received with joy and ever-increasing power. From that time there has been regular preaching in the open air for the most part, there being no room capable of containing a hundred persons. Pastor Moreno thinks the time has come to build a chapel at Fontevivo; he has already purchased a site, and now seeks help from those desiring to spread the Gospel. There is a little church of twenty-two persons who have received the truth.

Mr. Moreno is himself a living example of the power of the Gospel. He was formerly a Sicilian monk, "Fra Benedetto." Meeting one day a colporteur, he saw among his books a tract called "The Mass," and thinking it orthodox in the Roman Catholic sense, he bought it. He read it the same evening, and came to this conclusion, "If this book is true, I can no longer celebrate mass." His conscience was straight, there were not two ways —so the next day he did not ascend the altar. He was abandoned by his community and his family. However, he sought the Truth, and the Spirit of God enlightened him without any external help. He struggled on about a year, and finding no other means of procuring support he became a shoeblack. Just then he saw in a newspaper an announcement of a service in an evangelical church; he went there and heard those truths proclaimed of which he had by degrees been convinced. He visited the pastor, who recognised in him a brother in the faith, and was by him invited to speak to the people. He ascended the pulpit in his monk's robes, that being the only dress he possessed.

From that time his vocation was decided, and after a time he became a pastor. He is also now co-editor of the Amico di Casa, a religious journal. Those who may wish to help him in the building of this chapel, are requested to send to Pastor G. Moreno, Via delle Lane, 5, Florence.—Journal Religieux.

TRACT WORKERS IN FRANCE.

A remarkably successful special attempt has been made by the Monthly Tract Society to bring the Gospel to the upper and middle classes in France. The secretary, Rev. W. Durban, has received from Pasteur Lemaire, the Paris agent of the Society, a most interesting report, containing extracts from letters sent by many to whom these superior and carefully-prepared tracts have been sent out during the last six months. Mons. Pietri, an ex-prefet de police, has written saying he will be happy to receive more tracts. A magistrate, although a Roman Catholic, sent a contribution as payment for the tracts and asked that the next series might be sent him.

Manifold are the proofs that multitudes are ready to receive the truth after long and gross darkness in France.

PARIS.

Droppings of the blessings which have long been prayed and watched for, have indeed been realised during the past fortnight, under the earnest and soul-stirring words of Canon Wilberforce, who began a Mission amongst the English who frequent our Mission Hall in Paris. With but a few hours' preparatory notice people were gathered together night after night, scores going away for want of room. The thirst for reality in spiritual things was surely visible in the hungry, searching looks of some of the audience.

On Sunday we had two meetings, that in the afternoon presided over by Lord Mount-Temple, when the address was given by Lord Radstock, who spoke with power to many. At the after-meeting, and at the crowded evening meeting, many testified that the truth had gone home. We longed that thousands of our country people could have partaken with us of the blessed privilege of listening to the loving words of these servants of Christ, who sought to bring home in our midst the reality of a living Saviour. Listening to Canon Wilberforce, we were forcibly reminded of a French proprietor whom we met not long ago, when seeking a new apartment for our "Governesses' and Artists' Association." On explaining to him that part of our work for which we needed the apartment was holding Bible-classes, the man asked what it meant? Upon explaining to him that the Bible was the book which God had sent us to tell of his Son Jesus Christ, he laughed, and said, sarcastically, "God! Do you not know that God has left Paris? Il y a pas de Dieu à Paris." Alas! these words convey the deadly narcotic which surrounds Paris, and which enslaves thousands of professing Christians—"Il y a pas de Dieu à Paris!" There sin is made easy. God is not here to see. We may live as we list!

We earnestly ask the prayers of all God's people that the droppings of blessing which have been so graciously sent us may be but the precursors of showers which shall attend the next visit of these dear servants of God to Paris. I must not forget to add that Lord Mount-Temple also presided at our Monthly Temperance meeting, when Canon Wilberforce instituted a branch of his Blue Ribbon Army, which now numbers over seventy members.

Will our friends praise God for what He has done, and pray for even "greater things than these" in our midst? Ada M. Leigh.

The Mission House, 77, Avenue Wugram, Paris.

REMARKABLE CONVERSIONS.

L'Evangéliste gives some additional cases of remarkable conversion which took place some months ago at Vallerangue, France, during an awakening. At one of the meetings a young man, about 25 years of age, was reached by the "Sword of the Spirit." He was very uncomfortable, could not sleep all night. It seemed as though a voice said to him, "You must get up and pray." But he heard also another voice at the same time, saying, "You know you have not prayed for twenty years; lie still; you will have plenty of time later on to pray; you are still so young." After a rather long struggle the young man was constrained to rise and fall on his knees. The light of day brought with it the first healing rays of the "Sun of Righteousness."

After one of the meetings in the country, the pastor says, I saw a woman who appeared much irritated. "What is the matter, Madam? what troubles you?" "Oh!" said she, 'you trample under foot holy things, and you change the worship we owe to God into a veritable comedy; but you won't catch me here again." She reckoned without God. At our next meeting she was there, begging, with tears, that we would pray for her. She found peace, and returned home full of joy. In presence of such a transformation her husband examined the cause, and, at the close of his research, he too had the joy of finding his Saviour.

At another meeting several persons were greatly offended at being spoken to as "unconverted." "What impertinence!" they said, "can they know what passes in our hearts?" Whether we are converted or not is no concern of theirs; they left the meeting declaring they would never return. A few days after one of these persons had a vision, in which she saw herself at the bottom of a frightful abyss, all her efforts to get out being without result. She saw the preacher at the edge of the abyss trying in vain to let down a ladder to her. She was desperate, when all at once the cross of Christ rose up before her and a strong hand laid hold of her and put her in safety. Whilst God was delivering this soul, he was also saving all the members of her family. Her husband and six other relatives all successfully found "the pearl of great price." Thus this little company, who would have nothing more to do with us, now fight with us under the standard of the cross.

YOUNG WOMEN AT REFRESHMENT ROOMS.—Miss C. M. Gough, 5, Theberton-street, Islington, has recently commenced visiting the young women employed at the London railway refreshment-rooms and other restaurants, by whom she has been well received and in some cases kindly requested to call again. She has the names of 330 girls on her books, to whom monthly packets of magazines, leaflets, text-cards, and the Y.W.C.A. Monthly Letter are sent. This work is carried on in connection with the Y.W.C.A., and already some of the young women visited have become members. She is desirous of holding some drawing-room meetings, and will be very grateful to any ladies who will give them an entertainment or provide the means for so doing. Communications may be addressed to the Hon. Secretary, Miss S. F. Stuart, 29, Cornwall-gardens, Queen's Gate, S.W., or to Miss C. M. Gough, as above.

HOME FOR BLIND WOMEN.—This Home in North London is altogether unsectarian, the only conditions for admittance being loss of sight, satisfactory Christian character, and old age. It has no paid superintendents, secretaries or collectors, and no endowment. The present number of inmates is twenty-one, and to maintain them, including rent and taxes, about £600 per annum is required. We understand that the committee cannot add to their number at present for two reasons—want of room and want of funds. To meet the first, they have recently made arrangements to purchase a very eligible freehold property for £1250 in Hanley-road, Hornsey-rise, where at least ten more can be accommodated. At first this will involve an additional outlay, but ultimately will be a great saving in rent. Contributions towards this will be thankfully received by the managers, Mr. and Mrs. Bright, at the home, 90, Junction-road, Upper Holloway; by the Hon. treasurer, P. Terry, Esq., 4, Shaftesbury-villas, Hornsey Rise, N.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Malton.—Mrs. J. W. Bradley, of London, visited this town on Tuesday the 13th. Her visit was very acceptable, her sincerity and earnestness being instrumental in persuading many.

Dewsbury.—During the past week a Mission was held in the Albert Hall, under the auspices of the Blue Ribbon Union, by Mr. Samuel Insull. There has been a good attendance each evening. Noonday prayer-meetings and meetings for women and children have also been held. Nearly 800 ribbons were distributed up to Thursday night, the pledges being 350.

Norwich.—Successful anniversary meetings were held on the 14th and 15th inst. at this place in connection with the Blue Ribbon Union. The report stated that at some of the meetings in neighbouring towns and villages as many as from thirty to seventy had signed the pledge. Councillor White, Mrs. Theobald, and Mr. Wm. Noble gave addresses, which were much appreciated.

Jersey.—Miss McLatchie has been labouring with much success in this island. The Temperance movement has received an impetus resulting in many pledges being taken. On several occasions 1500 persons were present, many of whom not only took the pledge, but received spiritual good. A register of the latter, as well as the former, was kept, and was open to all the ministers who had taken part in the movement. This is a practical way of seeking to gather up the results.

General Post-Office.—The sixth annual meeting of the Post-office Total Abstinence Society was held on the 15th inst. The annual report stated there were 204 members. They had now a library containing 300 volumes of Temperance literature. A new branch had been formed in the Savings Bank Department, from which good results were expected. Mr. S. A. Blackwood, Mr. B. Whitworth, M.P., and others, gave addresses on the benefits resulting from total abstinence, and expressed a hope that many more Post-office employés would join the movement.

Detroit.—Four days' Convention of the "Women's Christian Temperance Union" has just been held at Detroit. They were most extraordinary meetings in many respects; the numbers present, the excellent arrangements, the love and enthusiasm which prevailed, were most pleasing. On the first day Mr. Thos. Hardy, of Manchester, and myself, were introduced by Miss Willard, the President; the assembly at once rose, and sang one verse of the English National Anthem, very heartily. On Sunday, November 4, the same day on which Messrs. Moody and Sankey began their Mission in London, I had the privilege of preaching at Mr. Moody's church, at Chicago. He was remembered in prayer. I have not heard such good congregational singing since I left London. In the afternoon I found about 1500 persons, young and old, in the various classes. It is one of the most active churches in this city.

T. E. Murphy in Ireland.—There has been for some months past, sweeping over this ancient land, a mighty Temperance wave, which, we believe, will not stay its onward march until it has swept the malefic curse of intemperance from off the face of this country. All honour to the men who endeavour to lead their fellows within the Temperance Ark! Enrolled within their ranks is no more worthy, eloquent, or successful temperance pleader to be found than Mr. T. E. Murphy. Through his efforts many thousands have signed the pledge and donned the teetotal badge. At Ballymena over two thousand persons put on the blue. It was our privilege to attend some of Mr. Murphy's meetings, and for enthusiasm and attendance we have rarely seen them equalled. Many "cases" could be mentioned of the good results that have followed his visit to Ballymena and other places; but suffice it to remark that they have been striking and abundant. His first meeting since his return from England was held in Culleyhackey, where there was an overflowing attendance. The temperance folk in Ireland are under a deep obligation to God and to Mr. Murphy for his labours in this country, and we are confident that amongst those of others who have at much self-sacrifice endeavoured to hasten the dawn of brighter and more prosperous days in this land, the name of Edward Murphy will hold an honoured place.

Letters to the Editor.

A WORD TO AGNOSTICS.

Dear Brother,—Perhaps this may meet the eye of someone inclined to hold sceptical opinions, doubting the existence of a Deity and of a special providence. If so, let me ask him the following questions:—

Looking back into your own life, do you not repeatedly discern in the events of your personal experience—

A heart kinder than your own;
An understanding wiser than your own;
A hand stronger than your own?

Yours faithfully,

Lancaster, Nov. 15, 1883. Thomas Johnson.

A FAMILY QUESTION.

Sir,—As The Christian is a paper taken in and read by people of almost every denomination, I put a question in it which I should much like answered by some of your numerous readers. Is it right for parents to interfere with the religious views of their children after they have come to years of discretion? Is it right for a parent to insist on a child who has come to years of discretion, to attend the same church or chapel as its parents?

I am a great advocate for unity in families; I do not think anything more lovely or Christlike than to see a family undivided in their opinions regarding the religion they profess to follow, but I do think it would be an error to insist on any one of the members attending the same place of worship, if that member found he did not derive the same spiritual benefit he does by attending a place of some other denomination.—Yours truly,

A Parent.

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE JEWS' QUESTION.

Sir,—"A British Visitor in Germany" writes bitterly, but does not succeed in making out a very good case for the "Other Side of the Jews' Question." It is easy to fling out general accusations against a whole nation, but it needs something more than mere assertion to substantiate them. Some evidence is needed.

The one case cited by "A British Visitor" has been appealed against. The general charges of fraud and usury may appeal to prejudice, but are not proven. Are all Jews usurers? How about the small shopkeepers, artisans, and agriculturists who have suffered in the recent agitation? How about the women and children? How about the attacks on whole communities entirely Jewish?

If it be true that Jews are found to tempt "ignorant and innocent" peasants, are all to be condemned for the sin of a few? Does the "ignorant and innocent peasant," who buys what he knows he cannot pay for, come into court with hands altogether clean?

But even if usury were far more general among the Jews than it is, that would not justify rapine, plunder, outrage, arson, and murder. These are hardly arguments to convert a people to the service of a God of love and mercy. No doubt there are bad, unscrupulous Jews, but that does not justify a blind and wholesale condemnation of an entire people. Still less does it justify retaliation on the part of those who call themselves Christians. Least of all does it justify such attacks and outrages as have disgraced the civilised (?) Europe of the nineteenth century, and would have been a disgrace to the darkest of dark ages.

If "A British Visitor" really desires to win Israel to the truer service, let him refrain from sowing broadcast anonymous slanders; let him enter his protest against crimes committed by nominal Christians, and so do what he can to show that these evil deeds are not chargeable to Christianity; and let him, by active sympathy with the distressed (no matter from what cause), exhibit the beauties of the "better way," which "thinketh no evil," but "suffereth long, and is kind."—Yours faithfully, Arthur H. Finn.

GETTING A BLESSING.

Dear Sir,—In reference to a phrase often used in Revival times, the question has been raised, "What is it to get a blessing?" The Apostle Peter seems to have answered it conclusively (Acts iii. 26): "Unto you first, God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent Him to bless you in turning every one of you away from his iniquities." Nothing less than this the blessing which the Father sent the Son to bestow. M. G. D.

OUTCAST LONDON.

Dear Sir,—May I suggest an easily-applied remedy for the miseries of children like those mentioned in the heart-touching poem you inserted in a recent issue of your paper. Throughout our land there are thousands of comfortably-situated Christian families who could, with little trouble or extra expense, adopt as their own one or two such little waifs, give them an education, and start them in a useful calling. If they did not like to take them, ragged and dirty, straight from the streets, Miss Macpherson's, or some of the other excellent Homes, would no doubt be as glad to settle the children they have partly civilised, in England, as they would in Canada. Though these institutions deserve our earnest support, there is more work than they can do. Neither could it be done so effectually as by separate families rising for Christ's sake to take this responsibility. We should find that a large amount of misery would be removed, for in this, as in everything else,

"Many Littles mak' a Muckle."

Dear Sir,—I regret to find you say of the state of "Outcast London," the entanglement and complication are such that neither politician, nor philanthropist, nor Christian knows how to begin the much needed reformation. There is a remedy for it if the Christian Church will do its part in getting it adopted. Mr. Fawcett says an essential to the case is an increase to the wages of the workers. It is possible to procure this for them, and begin the work of levelling up.

The total profits of industrial life are more than sufficient to make comfortable all the workers, but the distribution is at fault. As now in action, labour, savings, and credit are the elements of trading; the two first being a natural, and the last a State-upheld arrangement. Combine the two former in an industrious man, with free play, and progress on the road to success is made, but early in the journey credit strikes in and puts tenfold steam power into the hands of the man of much savings (or capital), and a brake power on the man with little, which often shunts him into the horrors of "Outcast London." Workmen in co-operation and alone are driven back by this wretched arrangement of State support of credit, which, while adding to the riches of the well-to-do, presses down the wages of those having nothing, until shirts have to be made at 9d. per dozen, and body and soul can hardly be kept together, much less an appliance for decency procured. Attention to religion in such circumstances can hardly be looked for.

The Christian Church must combine to get the credit laws wholly, and not partially repealed, and itself set the example of "owing no man anything," which is the root of the evil.—E. S. Cooper.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN MALTA.

Sir,—Certain articles have lately apperad with reference to Malta and religious liberty as therein practised, and I think it well that the exact state of the case should be known. The French took and held the island from 1798 to 1800, when they were driven into Valetta by the inhabitants of Malta, and starved into capitulation by blockade by a British fleet. The Maltese ceded Malta to the English in 1800, and Articles 6, 7, 8, and 9 (signed, Malta, 15th June, 1802) of the Declaration of Right are published in full as bearing upon the religious aspect of the Declaration, viz.:—

"(6) That His Majesty the King is the protector of our holy religion, and is bound to uphold and protect it as heretofore; and without any diminution of what has been practised since these islands have acknowledged His Majesty as their Sovereign to this day; and that His Majesty's representatives have a right to claim such church honours as have always been shown to the regents of these islands.

"(7) The interference in matters, spiritual or temporal, of no other temporal sovereign shall be permitted in these islands, and reference in spiritual matters shall only be had to the Pope and to the respective Generals of the Monastic orders.

"(8) That freemen have a right to choose their own religion; toleration of other religions is therefore established as a right; but no sect is permitted to molest, insult, or disturb those of other religious professions.

"(9) That no man whatsoever has any personal authority over the lives, property, or liberty of another. Power resides only in the law; and restraint or punishment can only be exercised in obedience to law. Signed by all the Representatives, Deputies, and Lieutenants of the villages and towns."

Much has been quietly done to meet the views of foreigners residing and coming to Malta, but for years after we had those islands ceded to us, upon certain days in the year, kept as festivals by the Roman Catholics, all troops, British and Maltese, turned out, lined the principal streets, and presented arms to the Host and Roman Catholic Archbishop. About the year 1824 a Captain Atcheson, R.A., and General Denison, R.A., refused to fire a salute in honour of the Virgin Mary; were tried, cashiered, and only reinstated some forty years afterwards; more than one officer has had to leave the service for refusing to salute the Host. These staunch Protestants suffered for their principles, but the effect has been that Protestant soldiers are no longer called upon to salute the Host, and it has now to pass along in rear of the main guard, and is forbidden the principal street; quietly, but surely, have we, without insulting Maltese feeling, shown that we do not agree with their religion. But still no Gospel or Evangelistic work can be carried on, and any sect or individuals attempting it would be hunted out of the island. In March, this year, a man was mobbed and nearly killed for offering tracts of a purely Gospel and uncontroversial nature.

The late election turned entirely upon the point of introducing the English language into the law courts. The Ultramontane and Reactionary party, who gained the day, are afraid that the people would read too many English works, especially the Bible; and yet 22 per cent. more of the Maltese know the English than the Italian language, the language of the courts and the law. I know scarcely any other spot where religious superstition is carried to so great an extent as in Malta.

Notices of Books, &c.

SHOW YOUR COLOURS, a penny tract, by Rev. J. T. WRENFORD (Partridge & Co.), is calculated to stir up young Christians to decided testimony for Jesus.

THE BRITISH WORKWOMAN. Vol. for 1883. 1s. 6d. 27, Ivy-lane, E.C. For bold graphic illustrations, with readable and instructive articles, this volume is not an unfitting companion to the British Workman, of world-wide fame.

OUR LITTLE LADS is a new magazine, edited by Mr. A. O. CHARLES, of the Little Boys' Home, Farningham and Swanley. It takes the place of The Little Boys' Friend, and may be had at the office of the Little Boys' Home, Ludgate-circus, E.C.

ENGLISHMEN NOT ISRAELITES (6d.), THE TEN TRIBES, WHERE ARE THEY NOT? AND WHERE ARE THEY? (4d.), ISRAEL AND GOD'S PURPOSE (2d.), and several other penny tracts in relation to the Jews and the coming of Christ, by Rev. JOHN WILKINSON, may be had at 49, Newington-green, London, N.

THE EMPEROR'S BOYS. By ISMAY THORN. 3s. 6d. J. F. Shaw & Co. A good story, showing the contrast between truthfulness and untruthfulness. It graphically illustrates the terrible weight of spoken and acted lies, and is written so pleasantly that it will not fail to be read with great interest by those for whom it is intended. It conveys sound moral teaching.

THOUGHTS ON HOLINESS, by Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE. T. Woolmer, 66, Paternoster-row. An instructive and suggestive book, whose doctrine is according to godliness. There are no ambiguous statements; no toning down of God's Word to tally with human experience; no extravagant exhortations to an unattainable sinlessness. The author points upward and onward to Jesus, and yet shows how the Christ comes to dwell in the heart by faith. We heartily commend the volume as one of the most useful of gift-books, fitted to carry with it a perennial stream of blessing to the soul.

ALL PLAY. By ISMAY THORN. 3s. 6d. Shaw & Co. A pretty story for children, beautifully illustrated with pictures by T. Pym. Among works of its own class it has peculiar merit.

THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE MIRROR. Volume for 1883. 337, Strand, W.C. A collection of excellent stories bearing on temperance. It is illustrated, and also contains some very good poems set to music in old and new notations.

THE DOCTOR'S DREAM (same publishers) is a well-told story of Temperance work, which cannot fail to interest.

The packets of Temperance, Christmas, and New Year's Cards are prettily and tastefully got up with appropriate flowers, mottoes, and verses of poetry.

BATTLES WITH THE SEA; or, Heroes of the Lifeboat and Rocket. By R. M. BALLANTYNE. J. Nisbet & Co. A strong plea for our "Storm Warriors," especially to inland residents who never hear the roaring of the terrible sea.

AN INFALLIBLE WAY OF CONTENTMENT. 1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. A small volume of rare merit, and intended to console those who are passing through trial. It was first published in 1688.

THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES. 2s. Religious Tract Society. This is also a re-issue of a handy book for teachers: much of it, however, is re-written. It gives an account of the first age of the Christian Church, with chronological and other notes of contemporary events.

THE WELCOME, 1883. 10s.6d. S. W. Partridge & Co. This handsome annual, full of excellent illustrations of valuable and interesting matter, and elegantly bound, is a bulky volume at a comparatively trifling cost, containing as much reading as a small library.

LORY BELL: A Story about Trust in God. By KATE WOOD. 1s. 6d. S. W. Partridge & Co. The incidents are perhaps a little far-fetched, but the principal character, Lory, shows up well for all that is true and manly in a boy in the midst of conflicting and sometimes trying circumstances.

GARTON ROWLEY; or Leaves from the Log of a Master Mariner. By J. JACKSON WRAY. J. Nisbet & Co. A capital gift-book for all classes, old and young, lovers and married. A good story told with much feeling. No one will read it without having their faith in God strengthened.

INGLE-NOOK STORIES. By Mrs. STANLEY LEATHES. 2s. 6d. Shaw & Co. Another beautifully illustrated story-book for the youngsters. It gives them glimpses of fairyland, and is sure to awaken plenty of innocent and wholesome mirth, as well as teach them some very useful lessons for their conduct in life.

MELISSA'S VICTORY. By ASHTON NEILL. 3s. 6d. Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-school Union. In this book a special feature is the illustrations produced by the ink-photo process from pen-and-ink drawings. They are very effective, and serve to illustrate a story which is well told, and adapted for usefulness in Christian homes.

EVANGELICAL CHRISTENDOM (6d. T. G. Johnson, 121, Fleet-street, E.C.) for November contains an ample report of the Evangelical Alliance Conference at Norwich last month. The address by Dr. Oswald Dykes on "The Principles of the Evangelical Alliance" is a thoughtful and admirable exposition of the advantages of unity in the Lord's work.

A NEW YEAR'S GIFT. 3s. 6d. Marcus Ward & Co. Three handsome bijou volumes enclosed in neat case. They are by the author of "Morning and Night Watches," and entitled "Bible Heartsease," "Golden Grain," and "Bible Forget-me-nots." They form a very elegant present for the young, and may also be had lettered "A Christmas Gift," "A Birthday Gift," and "With Best Wishes."

THE LORD'S PRAYER: A Practical Meditation. By NEWMAN HALL, LL.D. T. & T. Clark. The author's well-known catholicity, evangelical fervour, and firm adherence to orthodox principles, are conspicuous features of this really stimulating and suggestive exposition of one of the most familiar portions of Holy Writ. There is an amount of freshness about the treatment of the prayer which is wonderful, considering how often it has been expounded and written upon. Great questions, theological and social, are dealt with practically and fearlessly, the spirit as well as the letter of each petition is clearly set forth, and illustrations taken from real life are freely employed to give point to the author's ideas. The book cannot fail to be popular and potent for good in its influence, even as it is pleasant and profitable in its style and contents.

MEN WORTH REMEMBERING. RICHARD BAXTER. By G. D. BOYLE, M.A., Dean of Salisbury. 2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Dean Boyle has given us in this work a most graphic and impartial portrait of the immortal author of "The Saint's Everlasting Rest." Baxter's lot was cast in troublous times to both the Church and nation. In these days of unrest it is most refreshing to stand aside for a quiet half-hour with Richard Baxter, to learn of him that "Meditation" is not dissecting one's own heart, but "lifting it up, and keeping it in heaven." The thoughtful perusal of such a work must make a lasting impression upon the reader's heart and mind.

BOOKS OF MESSRS. CASSELL & CO.

MARGARET'S ENEMY. By Madeline B. Hunt. 2s. 6d. A well-written and profusely illustrated book, in which the varied careers of two schoolgirls of quite dissimilar dispositions are narrated in an instructive and admonitory manner. The story carries with it a warning to the young to beware of a proud and haughty spirit. MR. BURKE'S NIECES. By Author of "Paws and Claws." 2s. A charmingly romantic account, written in a natural style, of two foundling girls who, after many vicissitudes, find their proper place in society, and live happily ever afterwards. It is an exceedingly entertaining volume for the little folks. Numerous pictures add much to its attractiveness. MAY CUNNINGHAM'S TRIAL. By Author of "Paws and Claws." 2s. Young lady readers will be certain to benefit from the study of this somewhat plaintive but chaste narrative of the lights and shadows of home life. It is full of beautiful woodcuts. LITTLE QUEEN MAB. By L. C. Silke. 1s. 6d. Boys and girls not yet in their teens will here be able to see themselves as others see them. The youthful vagaries of miss and master are pourtrayed in an entertaining style, and the consequent anxiety of their elders, whose proprieties are sometimes shocked. The book, however, ends with "bright prospects."

MR. FISHER UNWIN'S BOOKS.

Mr. Unwin, who has lately removed to 26, Paternoster-square, E.C., is certainly a most enterprising and judicious publisher. Four of his substantial and handsomely got-up volumes from the series, LIVES WORTH LIVING (3s. 6d. each), are before us. MASTER MISSIONARIES, by Dr. Japp, is just the book to place in the hands of a youth leaving school. It is full of interest and high purpose, together with freshness, originality, and Godward counsel. These "Studies in Heroic Pioneer Work" cannot be read without exciting the best impulses of the heart. By the same author is LABOUR AND VICTORY, a Book of Examples for Those who would Learn. The first-named should be on the book-shelf of every young man who is really in earnest to make his "life worth living." As aids to the formation of character, these sketches of great and noble lives should urge on many to "Labour and Victory." Of the same class is WISE WORDS AND LOVING DEEDS, by E. Conder Gray. When we say that it records in pure, stirring, and wise language the lives and work of such women as Sarah Martin, Madame Feller, and Mary Carpenter, we need but to add that a young Christian, to whom we have given the book, "wishes every girl could read it, for it is a real help." LEADERS OF MEN, by H. A. Page, is a collection of well-written, brief, biographical sketches, specially designed for young men; they embrace the lives and works of the Prince Consort, George Moore, Andrew Reed, Lord Lawrence, and others. The author has accomplished his task with care and skill. FOOTPRINTS (4s. 6d.), by Sarah Tytler, is a gem in every way. "Nature seen on its human side," by a quick eye and a loving heart, is one of the most beautiful and helpful of teachers. Miss Tytler's book sparkles with living truths; it needs no commendation, for both subject and author are above praise. LIGHT IN LANDS OF DARKNESS (6s.), being the second series of "Modern Missions," by Robert Young, ought to be in every Christian home. With such books—clear, comprehensive, and exact—we can take in at a glance the whole field of missionary enterprise. May this volume accomplish the evident desire of its author, and inspire those who read it with the purpose of one mentioned in its account of the Nestorians: "I must tell all my friends and neighbours of sin and of Jesus."

ANTI-TOBACCO SOCIETY.—This Society has issued an illuminated pledge-card, to include total abstinence from the use of "Tobacco, alcohol, and all other narcotics," which may be had at 56, Peter-street, Manchester.

WHAT SEEK YE?*

By GEORGIANA M. TAYLOR,
Author of "Oh, to be Nothing!"

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." —MATT. vi. 33.

SEEK ye first, not earthly pleasure,
Fading joy, and failing treasure,
But the love that knows no measure
Seek ye first.

Seek ye first, not earth's aspirings,
Ceaseless longings, vain desirings,
But your precious soul's requirings
Seek ye first.

Seek ye first God's peace and blessing;
Ye have all if this possessing.
Come, your need and sin confessing,
Seek Him first.

Seek Him first; then, when forgiven,
Pardoned, made an heir of heaven,
Let your life to Him be given;
Seek this first.

Seek this first—be pure and holy;
Like the Master, meek and lowly;
Yielded to his service wholly.
Seek this first.

Seek the coming of his kingdom,
Seek the souls around, to win them,
Seek to Jesus Christ to bring them;
Seek this first.

Seek this first. His promise trying,
It is sure—all need supplying—
Heavenly things (on Him relying)
Seek ye first.

Mission Appeals.

GEE-STREET MISSION, GOSWELL-ROAD, E.C.—Help is needed to carry on Christian work in this neighbourhood. Address: HENRY RUDGLEY, Hon. Secretary, 82, Wood-street, Cheapside.

CHURCH ARMY.—Rev. W. CARLISLE, 21, John-street, Adelphi, W.C., would be glad of magic-lantern slides for the purpose of keeping the people from the public-house. Meetings are held nightly, and their stock is very small. All sorts of slides can be turned to good account.

INDUSTRIAL AND RAGGED SCHOOLS, MAIDA-HILL, N.W. —Will you allow me to earnestly appeal to your readers resident in the neighbourhood of Maida-hill for some assistance towards the support of this School and Home for Working Boys, most of whom were originally entirely homeless and friendless. Contributions may be sent to me at 95, North-street, Edgware-road.—CHARLES TODD.

NATIONAL THRIFT.—For the purpose of further developing the work of the National Thrift Society, it is proposed to raise a sum of £1000. This amount we are desirous of raising before the end of the year, and, if possible, in contributions of £10. Any contributions would be gladly received by the Secretaries (Colonel H. Jasper Willett and Mr. T. Bowden Green), or by—Yours obediently, BYRON, Chairman of Committee, 1, Finsbury-circus, E.C.

A TEMPERANCE DEBATE.—Arrangements are being made for a public debate between Mr. C. R. Haig, wine and spirit merchant, and Rev. Dawson Burns, D.D., upon the question, "Is the sale of intoxicating liquors as beverages consistent with Christian principles?" The discussion is fixed for Friday, December 14, in the lower room of the Exeter Hall. To defray expenses, admission will be by tickets, for which a charge will be made.

SOUTHPORT.—Mrs. Joseph Lucas, of Sunderland, has recently closed an eight days' Gospel Temperance Mission in Southport in connection with the British Women's Temperance Association. The Mayor and many of the ministers of the town, with other gentlemen, entered heartily into the movement, which has proved a great blessing. About five hundred names were taken. The addresses have been most winsome and telling. The Mission has been really a Gospel Temperance Mission.

THE ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children,

Now Sheltering, Educating, and Training over 1,300 Poor Boys and Girls,

WILL (D.V.) BE HELD

THE SECOND WEEK OF DECEMBER, 1883.

A few Articles have already been received, but much more will be needed, and the aid of all is earnestly asked.

We would remind those friends whose busy fingers are at work on our behalf, that shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing are particularly valuable additions to the clothing room of our Bazaar, being much asked for and readily sold. Of course besides these we shall be glad to receive pictures, jewellery, old coins, old china, curios, musical instruments, and fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, books, drawings, bric-a-brac, and other examples of the thousand and one tasteful ornaments which are required to furnish bazaar stalls.

It is not necessary, we hope, again to remind our friends that, as in former years, the Sale will be conducted in strict harmony with the objects in view—no raffling or other doubtful measures being adopted to ensure success or to bring in money.

Gifts of plants, cut flowers, fresh butter, eggs, or confectionery will also be very welcome if sent in a day or two only before the first day of the sale.

All other gifts should reach us AS SOON AS POSSIBLE, but in any case not later than Saturday, 1st December, and should contain inside the parcel a complete list, with the name and address of the donor, so as to ensure acknowledgment. Carriage should be prepaid, and a separate advice of the despatch of the parcel should be posted to us two days beforehand. All articles and communications should be plainly addressed to 18 to 26, Stepney-causeway, London, E.

OUR WINTER'S WORK

AMONG NEGLECTED GIRLS AND POOR STREET BOYS.

Dear Friends,—Until quite lately we have been able to receive every case of real destitution making application. Now we have to hesitate—to delay—and soon shall have to refuse admission to many whom we must then

TURN AWAY FROM OUR DOORS.

Our Funds are, however, so low, that unless the Lord whom we serve lays our needs on your hearts, no other course will be open to us.

Very earnestly do I plead, therefore, that we may not be compelled to close the door in the face of any poor homeless little one seeking admission.

Your fellow-labourer among poor children,

T. J. BARNARDO.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

ADVANCED CASE of Mrs. M., reported by Miss L. BRIDGE, of SITTINGBOURNE.

Miss L. Bridge is an old patient of mine (see page 33 of my book on Consumption). About three months ago she wrote me as follows:—

"I have been sent for to see a poor woman who requires your treatment as soon as possible, aged 27, married, with four children. After the birth of the last, now 11 months old, her illness began. First symptoms, ulcerated mouth, with loss of appetite. This followed by a cough troublesome at night, expectoration thick and of darkish hue, pains in the back and side, spasmodic breathing, hectic flushes, loss of flesh in every part of the body. The patient has seen the good effects of your treatment on Mr. S——, who has not had one day's illness since, and calls himself, a wonder.'"

Medicine and a letter of instructions were immediately sent.

I have just received a letter from Miss Lucy Bridge, in which she says:—

"I am happy to inform you that Mrs. M—— is (to use her own words) quite well. It is surprising to see the effect your medicine has had in so short a time. All the unfavourable symptoms have disappeared."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

"SCENES FROM THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS."

—A Poem—

BY

RICHARD BALL RUTTER.

ANTIQUE STYLE.

TRÜBNER & Co., LONDON.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"Treats some of the more striking episodes in Bunyan's Allegory in good and scholarly Spenserian metre," &c.—Graphic.

"The volume merits attentive perusal, and that and careful comparison will show that in pouring from an older to a modern vessel the essence is retained. The work is a fine specimen of typography by Mr. Bellows, of Gloucester, and is most handsomely got up in antique print and style," &c.

Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Chronicle.

"Even those who are most familiar with the Pilgrim's Progress, and who are most critical in their examination of such a work as that before us, will give Mr. Rutter's volume a warm welcome.

"Its pages have a sustained elevation throughout, and the various scenes have a distinct literary merit apart from the interest of the subject," &c.—Western Daily Press.

"'The Land of Beulah,' and 'The Description of the Celestial City,' are both very grand, and worthy of special notice," &c.—British Friend.

AN EXAMPLE, AND AN INVITATION.

Our Lord was engaged in the glorious work of preaching and teaching, and there came unto Him a large company of "Outcasts," having with them those that were "lame, blind, dumb, maimed, and many others." Our Lord received them, and healed them, and blessed them, and the multitude "glorified the God of Israel."

Jesus said to his disciples, "I have compassion on the multitude .....I will not send them away fasting, lest they faint by the way" (Matt. xv. 32).

"Then Jesus took the seven loaves and the fishes, and gave thanks, and brake them, and gave to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude."

The sympathy and compassion of our Lord, and his care for the bodies of the poor, are worthy our imitation.

Every Sunday morning at the Seamen's Bethel, Old Gravel-lane, London Docks, a company of poor creatures, selected by the Missionaries of the Mariners' Friend Society, the Police, and Dock Officials, among the outcasts of our dense river-side population, are provided with a FREE BREAKFAST, after which the Gospel is spoken to them.

Like those of our disciples, our provisions are limited. They were privileged to give the Master, for the hungry people, "seven loaves." Will not some readers of THE CHRISTIAN help us to imitate our Lord in not sending them away fasting?

Donations may be sent to FRANCIS J. SHELTON, Hon. Sec., 19. Old Gravel-lane, E.; or JOSEPH MOORE, Treasurer, 9, Morgan-street, Bow, E.

WHY MAGNETISM CURES RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, &c.

It appears that scientists have allowed one true source of scientific knowledge to escape their notice; they have failed to "look abroad into the varied field of nature," so as to recognise that a force is in operation which is not supernatural, while it is as certainly superhuman—i.e., beyond man's power to comprehend. Superhuman in its origin, inexplicable in its operation, but not supernatural, because existing actively in nature, and conserving one harmonious purpose in sustaining life. Innumerable facts and phenomena hitherto ascribed to the supernatural, or classed as spiritualistic, and perhaps within the region of the miraculous, rest upon a solid natural basis. What an apparent miracle is health! yet how natural, because the God of nature undoubtedly ordained health as the birthright of every living thing! But if we have lost the birthright, how can it be regained? We speak of physical force and mental force, muscular force and nervous force, all of which are comprehended in the one fact of our existence—organised matter, plus life. A deficiency of force becomes apparent in the organism when this animating principle of life is unduly taxed; therein we see cause and effect, as far as the patient's weakness is concerned; but we do not as clearly comprehend that such means as heighten this force act as manifestly on the patient's weakness by removing the cause. When surprising cures result from natural causes, and are effected by the great remedial agents which the Creator has placed within our reach, there need be no scepticism or doubt respecting the origin of the cures, or question as to the course to be pursued by invalids.

From Mr. BENJAMIN BRONSDON, Great Bentley, near Colchester.

November 21, 1883.

"I was reduced to a very weak state by rheumatism, and began to despair of ever getting over it, but soon after using your appliances, as directed, I began to gain strength, and was soon able to do my work with pleasure, and have continued free from rheumatism ever since—now nine years.

"Last summer, finding myself a little run down, and my nervous ystem affected, I wrote to you again for advice and treatment, and with a like result. I now enjoy my food, and am in good health every way.

"My wife has also been benefited, and others to whom I have recommended the treatment. All this induces me to say that if anyone would like to write me for information I will gladly reply."

From Mrs. GLOVER, 243, Tabard-street, Borough, S.E.

November 19, 1883.

"Early in the present year my daughter was suffering from acute rheumatism. When in great pain it occurred to me to use such appliances as I had by me, and the amelioration of her symptoms was so marked that I came to you for advice and treatment for her. After this her recovery was astonishingly rapid, and many other symptoms of constitutional weakness have disappeared. At this season of the year her hands and feet have usually been covered with chilblains, but this year there is not the least appearance of them, which I feel sure is due to the use of your appliances.

"I may add, that it was through the benefit I myself had derived from the treatment which led me to try it for her, and I shall always be glad to answer any inquiries respecting the cases."

Those desiring further information on rheumatic affections and their cure, are referred to No. 2 of "Uniform Efficacy of Magnetic Treatment," post free on application, from B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

The Christian.

THE MOODY AND SANKEY MEETINGS.

THE meetings of our American brethren deepen in intensity and interest, and if a tithe of the circumstances connected with them could be told they would read like a romance. For, indeed, what events in our outward human life can have the depth of interest which attaches to the experiences of the conscience under the searching power of the Word of God?

Mr. Moody's visit to Barnsbury in 1872 is a very noteworthy episode in his life. There was an invalided Christian sister who, having heard of Mr. Moody, was drawn out in prayer that he might be sent to Arundel Chapel. Mr. Lessey, who had also heard of him, wrote asking him to preach one Sunday in his chapel. Mr. Moody did so. The morning service had not apparently much life in it, either to himself or to the congregation. A lady went to the invalid and said, "Who do you think preached this morning?" "I have no idea." Then after a pause, "Not Mr. Moody?" The affirmative reply filled her with joy and led to praise and renewed supplication for blessing. That night, at the close, a most unexpected interest was manifested: the greater part remained to the second meeting, when anxious ones were asked into the vestry; that room was quickly filled. Mr. Moody had to go to Dublin the following night, but Mr. Lessey invited those who had come forward as inquirers to meet him on that evening. So many came, and the impression was so evident, that the minister telegraphed to Mr. Moody to return as soon as possible. The result was that 185 were received into church-fellowship.

These circumstances are recalled by the receipt of a letter to Mr. Moody from one of the present officers of the church, which we subjoin:—

"It having been stated several times that the results of your work at Arundel-square Chapel (Rev. T. Lessey's), eleven years ago, amount to nothing, I have carefully analysed the church-roll, and find that the 185 members who were admitted at our church-meeting, after your visit, can be accounted for as follows:—

Still in connection with us.....	27
Known to have died.....	11
Transferred to other churches	46
Left without transfer, but known to be workers at other churches..	56
Leaving unaccounted for	45
	185

"But of these last some are gone abroad, some are probably dead, and others may be working unknown to us, so that we have cause for thankfulness that you visited us then."

One reason why preaching has become so tame is that the Word is not used as a sharp two-edged sword, piercing to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, discerning the thoughts and intents of the heart. But when this is the case; when the hearers writhe under the penetrating words of one who discourses of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, and are then encouraged and assured of pardon if confession be made to the God of love, their hearts are reached, and smitten consciences cast out their sorrows and find peace with God through Jesus Christ. And although the sins may be small per se, they are mountains to smitten consciences.

Some striking cases of restitution have come to our knowledge. Take the following as examples:—

A married woman, who was in service eight years ago, had taken various small articles, ornaments, and books, which belonged to her mistress. She said those little things had tongues by day rebuking her in the kitchen, sitting-room, and bedroom, saying, "Thou shalt not steal." And in the night for nearly a week the eyes of the stolen ornaments on the chimney-piece in her bedroom looked like eyes of fire, saying, "Thou shalt not steal." When she asked the clergyman to whom she unburdened her mind what she should do with them, he told her just to do what Mr. Moody told her: make restitution—send them back. She sent the articles in a box, and wrote a note asking forgiveness. The box duly arrived, addressed to her former master, a gentleman at one of the Government offices. But recent events have made people suspicious of dynamite, and the gentleman was aided by the police in opening the box, which was found to contain the pieces of lace and other items of apparel, ornaments, and books, which had become such a source of unhappiness to her who had taken them.

Amongst other articles restored by one who had been a domestic servant, was a Bible, which had been taken several years before from her mistress, who had since died. The book was returned to the husband, who had married again. Some lines which he found written in the Bible recalled all his Christian wife's prayers for him; he became convinced of sin, gave himself to Christ, and at once began to pray for the conversion of his present wife.

We are told that some merchants in Cork say they made more out of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings than by the Industrial Exhibition, in consequence of old debts which had been paid after Mr. Moody's appeals to make restitution.

It is satisfactory to know that the Rev. D. Wilson, the aged Vicar of Islington, has written on behalf of himself and the clergy of his parish, to express their deep sense of the value of this Mission. He says: "A strong and widespread impression has been produced. Our aim will be to deepen and sustain it in our several districts. May the Divine blessing continue to follow you and Mr. Sankey in your good work, and may your own souls be refreshed with heavenly dews of grace."

The following letter and editorial note appeared in last week's Nonconformist and Independent:—

"Sir,—In your leader on Mr. Moody's Mission, you speak of Mr. Moody's 'systematic avoidance of all contact with churches,' and of 'a mode of operation which ignores existing Christian churches.' This is so at variance with our experience in Leeds last spring, that I am desirous to know whether Mr. Moody is working in London on a different plan from that adopted here. The Committee at whose invitation the evangelists visited Leeds, and who made all the arrangements from first to last, was largely representative of 'the churches' of this town. It was composed of pastors and men known as active workers in our churches, including several evangelical clergymen of the Church of England. In the inquiry-room it was the same. Lists were made as carefully as possible of the 'inquirers,' and their names and addresses forwarded to the ministers of the churches which (if any) they belonged to, or near whose places of worship they lived, with an urgent request to look after them and gather them into church fellowship. Mr. Moody not only welcomed the co-operation of pastors, and gave them a prominent place in his meetings, but evidently set great value on their personal sympathy, public and private. I think I may add that those who most heartily stood by him have reaped the greatest benefit in their churches from this Mission. These remarks apply quite as fully to his coadjutor, Mr. Sankey. Certainly we had no notion that 'the churches' were 'ignored' in Leeds.—I remain, most truly yours, Eustace R. Conder.

"Leeds, Nov. 13.

"[As far as we know, the active managers of these services are Evangelical Churchmen, Presbyterians, and Plymouth Brethren. This we state not as conveying any reflection, but as a matter of fact. But we believe that the movement has the sympathy, and, as far as is possible, the co-operation of the Christian churches of the metropolis. If the Committee are acting along independent lines, we suppose it has been found that such an organisation as was found practicable in Leeds could not practically be adopted in this heterogenous London. —Ed. N. and I.]"

The Committee are not "acting along independent lines." The invitation to Messrs. Moody and Sankey to come to London at this time was signed by about 300 ministers, representing the Church of England and the Evangelical Nonconformist bodies. An adequate number of front seats is reserved on the platform for such ministers, and every one of them is cordially welcomed. No "organisation" existed at Leeds which is not equally practicable in London, so far as ministers and churches choose to avail themselves of it. If any have not done so, the fault does not lie with the Committee.

Of the 300 ministers who signed the invitation, 68 were of the Church of England, 59 Congregational, 56 Baptist, 46 Wesleyan, 28 Presbyterian, 12 Primitive Methodist, 8 United Free Methodist, &c. The Congregationalists were also represented by Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., Mr. J. H. Fordham, &c. The overflow-meetings are held in the nearest available place. At Islington they were at Union Chapel (Congregational); at Wandsworth they are at the Presbyterian Church; at Stepney they will be held in the Parish Church, and in a hall connected with Stepney Meeting-House (Congregational). These facts are sufficient to show that there is no "systematic avoidance of all contact with Churches," nor any "mode of operation which ignores existing Christian Churches;" but that the very reverse "mode of operation" has been systematically adopted.

RESCUE WORK IN POPLAR.

MISS STEER is quite right. "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London" is well known to us rescue-workers in the East-end. And also in the West there is a wail of sorrow that surges up through the tinsel and glare of "gay" life. Its echo reaches those who listen for it; the tones are deep, and very, very sad. Adding up the record of work done this year, I find it stands thus: Married, 4; died, 2; dismissed, 6; left by their own desire, 11; sent to hospitals, 8; sent to unions, 6; to lunatic asylums, 3; to Homes, 24; to friends, 22; to service, 120; emigrated, 14; at Poplar, 10; at Walthamstow, 20. Given the means, and a few more earnest workers, instead of 338, we might count three or four times the number of assisted girls.

No one but those who have it to do can tell the pain it is to see a pale, anxious face, with tearful eyes, turn away hopeless from the door when you say, "We cannot take you in." For three years and a half, living in this beautiful home, I have been spared this sight, though my tender-hearted helper in Poplar has had to face it over and over again. Returning, as I am, to Poplar to live, I dread the winter, and the stern necessity of saying to God's creatures — women whose souls Jesus died to save—"You must go away; we have no room." To read, to write, to hear of these things is comparatively easy, but to face them needs a courage that I lack, and my heart would sink within me if I did not know that "the silver and gold is the Lord's."

After the 30th of this month my address will be Manor Cottage, Kerbey-street, Poplar, and I purpose to be at home on Wednesdays from two to five to meet friends who wish to know the details of this work. Anna Wilkes.

"The Christian" Pulpit.

WHAT CHRIST OFFERS TO BE.

CLOSING DISCOURSE AT ISLINGTON.

By Mr. D. L. MOODY.

CHRIST is all to us that we make Him to be. I want to emphasize that word "ALL." Some men make Him to be "a root out of a dry ground," "without form or comeliness." He is nothing to them; they do not want Him. Some Christians have a very small Saviour. It is not that He does not want to be a great and mighty Saviour; but it is that they are not willing to receive Him fully, and let Him do great and mighty things for them. Others have a mighty Saviour, because they make Him to be great and mighty.

If we would know what Christ wants to be to us, we must first of all know Him as our Saviour from sin. When the angel came down from heaven to proclaim that He was to be born into the world, you remember He gave his name, "He shall be called Jesus, for He shall save his people from their sins." He did not come to save us in our sins, but from our sins.

Now, there are three ways of knowing a man. Some men you know only by hearsay; others you merely know by having once been introduced to them, you know them very slightly; others, again, you know by having been acquainted with them for years, you know them intimately. So I believe there are three classes of people to-day in the Christian Church and out of it: those who know Christ only by reading or by hearsay, those who have a historical Christ; those who have a slight personal acquaintance with Him; and those who thirst, as Paul did, "to know Him and the power of his resurrection." The more we know of Christ the more we shall love Him, and the better we shall serve Him.

Let us look at Him to-day as He hangs upon the Cross, and see how He has put away sin. He was manifested that He might take away our sins; and if we would really know Him we must first of all see Him as our Saviour from sin. You remember how the angels said to the shepherds on the plains of Bethlehem, "Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people; for unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord" (Luke ii. 10, 11). Then if you go clear back to Isaiah, 700 years before Christ's birth, you will find these words: "I, even I, am the Lord, and beside me there is no Saviour" (xliii. 11). Again, in the First Epistle of John (iv. 14), "We have seen and do testify that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world." All the heathen religions are teaching men to work their way up to God, but the religion of Jesus Christ is God coming down to men to save them, to lift them up out of the pit of sin. In Luke xix. 10 we read that Christ Himself told the people what He had come for: "The Son of Man is come to seek and save that which was lost." So we start from the Cross, not from the cradle. Christ has opened up a new and living way to the Father; He has taken all the stumbling-blocks out of the way, so that every man who accepts of Christ as his Saviour can have salvation.

But Christ is not only a Saviour. I might save a man from drowning and rescue him from an untimely grave, but I might probably not be able to do any more for him. When the children of Israel were placed behind the blood, that blood was their salvation; but they would still have heard the crack of the slave-driver's whip if they had not been delivered from the Egyptian yoke of bondage: then it was that God delivered them from the hand of the king of Egypt. I have little sympathy with the idea that God comes down to save us and then leaves us in prison, the slaves of our besetting sins. No; He has come to deliver us and to give us victory over our evil tempers, our passions, and our lusts. Is there any professed Christian here who is a slave to some besetting sin? If you want to get victory over that temper or that lust, go on to know Christ more intimately. "Who delivered, who doth deliver, who will yet deliver" (2 Cor. i. 10). So He brings deliverance for the past, the present, and the future. How often, like the children of Israel when they came to the Red Sea, have we become discouraged because everything looked dark before us, behind us, and around us, and we knew not which way to turn. Like Peter we have said, "To whom shall we go?" But God has appeared for our deliverance. He has brought us through the Red Sea right out into the wilderness, and opened up the way into the Promised Land. But Christ is not only our Deliverer;

HE IS OUR REDEEMER.

He has bought us back. "Ye have sold yourselves for nought; and ye shall be redeemed without money" (Is. lii. 3). We "were not redeemed with corruptible things as silver and gold" (1 Peter i. 18). If gold could have redeemed us, could He not have created ten thousand worlds full of gold? Gold is so common in Heaven that the streets are said to be paved with it.

When God had redeemed the children of Israel from the bondage of Egypt, and brought them through the Red Sea, they struck out for the wilderness, and then God became to them their Way. I am so thankful the Lord has not left us in darkness as to the right way. There is no man here who has been groping in the darkness but may know the way. "I am the Way," says Christ. If we follow Christ we shall be in the right way, and have the right doctrine. Who could lead the children of Israel through the wilderness like the Almighty God Himself? He knew the pitfalls and dangers of the way, and guided the people through all their wilderness journey right into the Promised Land. It is true that if it had not been for their accursed unbelief they might have crossed into the land at Kadesh-barnea and taken possession of it. But they desired something besides God's Word, so they were turned back, and had to wander in the desert for forty years. I believe there are thousands of God's children wandering in the wilderness still. The Lord has delivered them from the hand of the Egyptian, and would at once take them through the wilderness right into the Promised Land if they were only willing to follow Christ. Christ has been down here, and has made the rough places smooth, and the dark places light, and the crooked places straight. If we will only be led by Him, and will follow Him, all will be peace and joy and rest.

In our country when a man goes out hunting he takes a hatchet with him, and cuts off pieces from the bark of the trees as he goes along through the forest. This is called "blazing the way;" he does it that he may know the way back, as there is no pathway through these thick forests. Christ has come down to this earth; He has "blazed the way," and now that He has gone up on high, if we will but follow Him, we shall be kept in the right path. I will tell you how you may know if you are following Christ or not. If someone has slandered you, or misjudged you, do you treat them as your Master would have done? If you do not bear these things in a loving and forgiving spirit, all the churches and ministers in the world cannot make you right. "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his" (Rom. viii. 9). "If any man be in Christ Jesus he is a new creature; old things are passed away, behold all things are become new" (2 Cor. v. 17).

LIGHT UPON THE WAY.

Christ is not only our way: He is the Light upon the way. He says, "I am the Light of the world" (John viii. 12; ix. 5; xii. 46.) He goes on to say, "He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." It is impossible for any man or woman who is following Christ to walk in darkness. If there is a soul here in the darkness, groping around in the fog and the mist of earth, let me tell him it is because he has got away from the true light. There is nothing but light that will dispel darkness. So let those who are walking in spiritual darkness admit Christ into their hearts; He is the Light. I call to mind a picture of which I used at one time to think a good deal, but now I have come to look more closely, I would not put it up in my house except I turned the face to the wall. It represents Christ as standing at a door knocking, and having a big lantern in his hand. Why, you might as well hang up a lantern to the sun as put one into Christ's hand. He is the Sun of Righteousness, and it is our privilege to walk in the light of an unclouded sun.

Many people are hunting after light and peace and joy. We are nowhere told to seek after these things. If we admit Christ into our hearts these will all come of themselves. I remember, when a boy, I used to try in vain to catch my shadow. One day I was walking with my face to the sun, and as I happened to look round I saw that my shadow was following me. The faster I went the faster my shadow followed; I could not get away from it. So when our faces are directed to the Sun of Righteousness, the peace and the joy are sure to come. A man said to me some time ago, "Moody, how do you feel?" It was so long since I had thought about my feelings I had to stop and consider awhile, in order to find out. Some Christians are all the time thinking about their feelings; and because they don't feel just right they think their joy is all gone. If we keep our faces towards Christ and are occupied with Him we shall be lifted out of the darkness and the trouble that may have gathered round our path.

"COME A LITTLE HIGHER."

I remember being in a meeting after our civil war in America broke out. The war had been going on for about six months. The army of the North had been defeated at Bull's Run; in fact, we had nothing but defeat, and it looked as though the Republic were going to pieces. So we were much cast down and discouraged. At this meeting every speaker for awhile seemed as if he had hung his harp upon the willow, and it was one of the gloomiest meetings I ever attended. Finally an old man with beautiful white hair got up to speak, and his face literally shone. "Young men," he said, "you do not talk like sons of the King. Though it is dark just here, remember it is light somewhere else." Then he went on to say that if it were dark all over the world, it was light up around the Throne. He told us he had come from the East, where a friend had described to him how he had been engaged in the ascent of a mountain with the intention of spending the night on the top, in order that he might be there to see the sun rise. As the party were climbing up the mountain, and before they got to the summit, a storm came on. This friend said to the guide, "I will give it up; take me back." The guide smiled, and replied, "I think we shall get above the storm soon." On they went, and it was not long before they got up to where it was as calm as any summer evening. Down in the valley a terrible storm raged; they could hear the thunder rolling, and see the lightning's flash; but all was serene on the mountain top. "And so, my young friends," continued the old man, "though all is dark around you, come a little higher, and the darkness will flee away." Often, when I have been inclined to get discouraged, I have thought of what he said. If any of you are down in the valley amidst the thick fog and the darkness, get a little higher; get nearer to Christ, and know more of Him.

Let me say, before I pass on, that when Christ expired on the cross, the light of the world was put out. God sent his Son to be the light of the world, but men did not love the light because it reproved them of their sins. When they were about to put out this light, what did Christ say to his disciples? "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me" (Acts i. 8). He has gone up yonder to intercede for us, but He wants us to shine for Him down here. "Ye are the light of the world" (Matt. v. 14). So our work is to shine, not to blow our own trumpet so that people may look at us. What we want to do is to show forth Christ. If we have any light at all it is borrowed light. Someone said to a young Christian: "Converted! it is all moonshine!" Said he: "I thank you for the illustration: the moon borrows its light from the sun, and we borrow ours from the Sun of Righteousness." If we are Christ's, we are here to shine for Him; by and by He will call us home to our reward.

I remember hearing, some years ago, of a blind man who sat by the wayside with a lantern near him. When he was asked what he had a lantern for, as he could not see the light, he said it was that people should not stumble over him. I believe more people stumble over the inconsistencies of professed Christians than from any other cause. What is doing more harm to the cause of Christ than all the scepticism in the world is this cold, dead formalism, this conformity to the world, this professing what we do not possess. The eyes of the world are upon us. I think it was George Fox who said every Quaker ought to light up the country for ten miles around him. If we were all brightly shining for the Master, those about us would soon be reached, and there would be a shout of praise going up to heaven.

A TEACHER, KEEPER, AND SHEPHERD.

People say: "I want to know what is the truth." "I am the Truth," says Christ. If you want to know what the truth is, get acquainted with Christ. People also complain that they have not life. Many are trying to give themselves spiritual life. You may galvanise yourselves and put electricity into yourselves, so to speak; but the effect will not last very long. Christ alone is the author of life. If you would have real spiritual life get to know Christ. Many try to stir up spiritual life by going to meetings. That may be well enough, but it will be of little service, unless they get into contact with the living Christ. Then their spiritual life will not be a spasmodic thing, but will be perpetual, flowing on and on and bringing forth fruit to God.

Then Christ is our Keeper. A great many young disciples are afraid they won't hold out. "He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep" (Ps. cxxi. 4). It is the work of Christ to keep us, and if He keeps us there will be no danger of our falling. I suppose if Queen Victoria had to take care of the crown of England, some thief might attempt to get access to it, but it is put away in the Tower of London, and guarded night and day by soldiers. The whole English army would, if necessary, be called out to protect it. And we have no strength in ourselves. We are no match for Satan; he has had six thousand years' experience. But then we remember that the One who neither slumbers nor sleeps is our keeper. In Isaiah xli. 10, we read, "Fear thou not, for I am with thee; be not dismayed, for I am thy God. I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." In Jude also, verse 24, we are told that He is "able to keep us from falling." "We have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the Righteous" (1 John ii. 1).

But Christ is something more. He is our Shepherd. It is the work of the shepherd to care for the sheep, to feed them, and protect them, "I am the Good Shepherd; my sheep hear my voice. I lay down my life for the sheep." In that wonderful tenth chapter of John, Christ uses the personal pronoun no less than twenty-eight times, in declaring what He is and what He will do. In verse 28 He says, "They shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." But notice the word "man" is in italics; see how the verse reads: "Neither shall any pluck them out of My hand"—no devil or man shall be able to do it. In another place the Scripture declares, "Your life is hid with Christ in God" (Col. iii. 3). How safe and how secure!

Christ says, "My sheep hear my voice, and they follow Me" (John x. 27). A gentleman in the East heard of a shepherd who could call all his sheep to him by name. He went and asked if it was true. The shepherd took him to the pasture where they were, and called one of them by some name. One sheep looked up and answered the call, while the others went on feeding and paid no attention. In the same way he called about a dozen of the sheep around him. The stranger said, "How do you know one from the other? They all look perfectly alike." "Well," said he, "you see that sheep toes in a little, that other one has a squint, one has a little piece of wool off, another has a black spot, and another has a piece out of its ear." The man knew all his sheep by their failings, for he hadn't a perfect one in the whole flock. I suppose our Shepherd knows us the same way.

"MY SHEEP KNOW MY VOICE."

An Eastern shepherd was telling a gentleman that his sheep knew his voice, and that no stranger could deceive them. The gentleman thought he would like to put the statement to the test. So he put on the shepherd's frock and turban and took his staff and went to the flock. He disguised his voice, and tried to speak as much like the shepherd as he could, but he could not get a single sheep in the flock to follow him. He asked the shepherd if his sheep never followed a stranger. He was obliged to admit that if a sheep got sickly it would follow anyone. So it is with a good many professed Christians; when they get sickly and weak in the faith, they will follow any teacher that comes along, but when the soul is in health, a man will not be carried away by errors and heresies. He will know whether the voice speaks the truth or not. He can soon tell that, if he is really in communion with God. When God sends a true messenger, his words will find a ready response in the Christian heart.

Christ is a tender Shepherd. Some of you may think He has not been a very tender Shepherd to you: you are passing under the rod. It is written, "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth" (Heb. xii. 6). That you are passing under the rod is no proof that Christ does not love you. A friend of mine lost all his children. No man could ever have loved his family more, but the scarlet fever took one by one away; and so the whole four or five one after another died. The poor stricken parents came over to Great Britain, and wandered from one place to another here and on the Continent. At length they found their way to Syria. One day they saw an Eastern shepherd come down to a stream and call his flock to cross. The sheep came down to the brink and looked at the water, but they seemed to shrink from it, and he could not get them to respond to his call. He then took a little lamb, put it under one arm; he took another lamb and put it under the other arm, and thus passed into the stream. The old sheep no longer stood looking at the water, they plunged in after the shepherd, and in a few minutes the whole flock was on the other side, and he led them away to newer and fresher pastures. The bereaved father and mother, as they looked on the scene, felt that it taught them a lesson. They no longer murmured because the Great Shepherd had taken their lambs one by one into yonder world, and they began to look up and look forward to the time when they would follow the loved ones they had lost. If you have loved ones gone before, remember that your Shepherd is calling you to "set your affections on things above" (Col. iii. 2). Let us be faithful to Him and follow Him while we remain in this world. And if any of you have not taken Him for your Shepherd, do so this very hour.

ALLELUIA.

HE is reigning, Alleluia!
Blessed, blessed reign of peace
King and Saviour, now for ever
Shall Thy government increase.
All I yield to Thy dominion,
Love, omnipotent to save;
Rule me, glorious Redeemer,
I am free when most Thy slave.

He is saving, Alleluia!
Full salvation, full and free;
Marvellous the love that waited,
Waited long to give it me.
I am yielding, only yielding
To the grace that stooped to win:
His the glory, Alleluia;
Mighty Victor over sin.

He is keeping, Alleluia!
He my Keeper and my King,
Oh, the rest, and oh, the safety
That His government doth bring.
Watching, warming, cleansing, healing,
Keeping heart and mind and will;
Guarding, cheering, and controlling,
Blessed Master, keep me still!

MR. SCROGGIE IN AYR.

THIS evangelist commenced a fortnight's Mission in Ayr on Sabbath, Nov. 4. Special prayer-meetings were held during the two preceding weeks in the different churches, the ministers of which presided. At Mr. Scroggie's first meeting, the large new Town Hall was completely crammed; during the first week the attendance was fair, although not up to the promise of this opening service.

From the first fruit was gathered, and although during the second week the attendance did not increase, the interest decidedly deepened; nightly a considerable number remained to the second meeting, when Mr. Scroggie gave a short address followed by personal dealing, and there were always, we believe, cases of blessing. On several occasions quite a number stood for prayer. Some of the cases dealt with have been of a most interesting and encouraging nature; and already both the Young Women's and the Young Men's Christian Associations have received considerable additions to their membership.

MISS MACPHERSON AT HOME.

THE upper room in the Spitalfields "Beehive" was filled on Wednesday evening last week by a goodly number of Christian workers from all parts of London. They had gathered to welcome home their dear friend, Miss Annie Macpherson, who had been absent in Canada for five months. A bright little band of children were also present, gathered in during the past few weeks; their happy, smiling faces told of the loving care expended on them in the Hackney Training Home. The meeting was presided over by Mr. H. A. Maude.

Miss Macpherson began her address with a note of praise for the loving-kindness and tender mercy of our God, who had given to her three bands of children—nearly 200 in all—safe and prosperous voyages. Whilst others, of whom she had heard, had suffered shipwreck, losing all they had possessed, she had been mercifully preserved during thirty voyages across the Atlantic, and no less than forty bands of destitute little ones had crossed the sea and found a home and kind friends on the other side.

The burning words of Mr. Geo. Holland on "London's Bitter Cry" touched all hearts.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for ensuing week:—Dec. 2, 1 Sam. xvi. 1—13; Dec. 3, 1 Sam. xvi. 14—23; Dec. 4, 1 Sam. xvii. 1—16; Dec. 5, 1 Sam. xvii. 17—27; Dec. 6, 1 Sam. xvii. 28—42; Dec. 7, 1 Sam. xvii. 43—58; Dec. 8, 1 Sam. xviii. 1—16.

For the Young.

"NEVER ABLE TO PLAY."

Dear Young Friends,—

SEVERAL times last spring I sowed seeds, and waited in vain to see the tips of little plants forcing their way to the surface and into the light. In my summer garden, however, there were plenty of gay flowers which a few months before were mysteriously wrapped up within the minute circle of a tiny, dry-looking seed; when I looked at them and enjoyed their sweet perfume in the twilight, I was glad that I had faith enough to sow the little morsels and wait.

Some of the plants were what is termed Alpine, their proper home being far up the mighty mountains of Switzerland, where the air is very pure and the snow rests. I valued them very highly, and watched their growth with deep interest, and my friends were astonished to see them, simply because they were growing where no one would expect to find them.

It is difficult to grow them, strange to say, for you would think that they would enjoy the warmer climate of this country and the milder winter, but the secret is in imitating, as far as possible, the conditions of their home; that is, in giving them something like a deep covering of snow in the winter—snow to keep them warm—and in placing them in the hot sunshine in the summer. Without that they wither away. Give them all sunshine or all snow, and they neither spring nor bloom.

I often think that some of the dear little ones in the Cripples' Home at Bray, Ireland, resemble these wonderful Alpine plants. It is a striking sight, thousands of feet up the slopes of one of the great snow-capped Swiss mountains, when the climber comes upon a dazzling sheet of the Gentian or the Alpine Forget-me-not; but it is a far more wonderful thing when we come upon a beautiful flower of peace and happiness in the midst of an atmosphere of sorrow and suffering—sorrow in place of the snow, and, instead of the earthly sunshine, the light of the love of Jesus.

One of these little flowers lately faded away—a little fellow named Henry Keegan, only fourteen years old, who for more than half of his life was a great sufferer from hip disease. It would be very touching if they put on his tombstone, "Never able to play," and it would be very true, for always, when the other children were trying to hop about on their crutches, he used to sit and draw upon a morsel of paper, or knit stockings, all his suffering being borne patiently and without a murmur. Just think for a moment how terrible it would seem to you if you were told to-day that there could not be any more cricket or lawn tennis or school games, and that in future you would have to sit still, your limbs useless! Well, under such circumstances, tiny Henry Keegan made the Bible his constant companion, the tenth verse of the forty-first chapter of Isaiah being one of his chief comforts, as it was of the dear lady, Mrs. Sullivan, to whom he owed his happy home in Bray.

It is strange and sweet to think that the friendship which has been severed in Mrs. Sullivan's death has now been renewed in heaven. Do you ever remember that earth's best friendships are worth but little if there is not in them the germ of friendships in eternity?

When the little fellow's last days came, there was no fear or murmuring; "the peace of God" ruled in his heart unbroken, his oft-repeated request to the lady at the side of his crib being, "I should love a little prayer," and the last words he uttered being a wish that someone would repeat his beloved tenth verse of Isaiah xli.

Some of you sowed part of the seed which sprang up into the comforts round about the suffering and peaceful Henry Keegan: and when you read these lines you will, I am sure, be glad that God put it into your hearts to give to the Cripples' Home the little gift for Christ's sake. The story I have told may encourage you to give more to that Home. I trust it may, for all that you offer in the right spirit will spring up, and, with God's blessing, blossom and bloom.

LATTER-DAY DELUSIONS.

IN fulfilment of the Lord's warning (Matt. xxiv. 23—27), there are many saying, "Lo here!" "Lo there!" One styling himself "Star of the East," and hailing from Bethnal Green, declares that "The Messiah is on the earth—Judge and King." Another who signs himself, "Michael the Archangel, Prince of the Holy Covenant," and who claims to be the prince of Ezek. xliv. 3, issues "The Midnight Cry: An Address to the Saints of God, by One having Authority." Another writes the Lost Secret, and still others are claiming to speak by Divine authority.

All of these, however, were preceded by Frederick Boyce, who was once a useful city missionary; but having been deluded into thinking himself to be some great one, has been but too successful in deluding others. He has sent forth "God's Last Warning Message to the Churches," in which he says, "The judgment hour is come, and Christ is now present as the Judge." But Jesus said of such, "Believe it not, for as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west, so will the coming of the Son of Man be." Having called upon us, and requested us to publish his lucubrations, he wrote us the following letter:—

"To the Editor. Sir,—You have to perform a solemn duty. You are called upon to publish a series of papers by Divine Authority: hereafter to be preserved only as the Special Advent number of The Christian. The original must be strictly adhered to. Be faithful to your trust. Let no man turn you from it. A grave responsibility rests upon you."

He now publishes this letter, and says: "These words were spoken in the same way as the Lord often spake by the prophets of old. Inspiration is therefore claimed for them." He does not add that he wrote another letter, giving us forty-eight hours for consideration and acquiescence, otherwise he should hand us over to evils of divers kinds. But "the curse causeless did not come." We should not have mentioned this but that we are receiving letters from deluded people seriously charging us with hiding the Lord's message. Other friends are drawing the conclusion that because we have not publicly repudiated the teachings of Mr. Boyce, we therefore endorse them. We should hardly have expected this, seeing the emphatic way in which this self-constituted prophet condemns us in his pamphlet. However, it now seems necessary that we should seriously warn our readers against being led away by these delusions. We are reliably informed that a lady in good position in the South of Ireland has been so carried away by them that she has left husband, family, and home, in order to join Mr. Boyce's new "sect," and thus gain a place among the 144,000 faithful saints who, according to the new prophet, are to be translated speedily.

HARVEST GLEANING IN LEEDS.

DEAR SIR,—At a time when so many are praying for a blessing upon the work in London in which our friends Messrs. Moody and Sankey are engaged, and when possibly the enemy is whispering doubts as to whether it will prove lasting, it may not be out of season to report how far this has been the case in Leeds. It is difficult in all cases to tabulate results; I speak only of what happens to have come under my own notice.

First I will record one case of special interest. Coming out of our Mission-room after the evening meeting a few Sundays ago, I was stopped by a middle-aged woman, who asked to speak to me. I looked at her and remembered the face, but could not recall the name. "Sir," she said, "don't you remember T——? I want to tell you the history of my life, but it is a tale of sin." I appointed a meeting on the next Sunday, and the woman went away. Gradually the details of T——'s past history came back to my recollection. Twelve years ago she had been one of the most active teachers at the Sunday-school, and a regular attender of the meetings. For a time she seemed hopeful, and thought herself converted, till she came under the influence of a companion who lured her away to ruin. Her fellow-teachers saw the danger and warned her of it, but to no purpose; T—— was haughty, she knew her own business best, so she was left at last to her own devices.

It was a sorrowful history to which I had to listen the next Sunday. "Oh," she said, "if I had only followed your advice ten years ago, what suffering I should have been spared! I knew I was wrong, but was too proud to confess it. For years after we last met I went on in my old way, hating my sin, but having no power to escape from it. At last Mr. Moody came to Leeds; that was last spring. I went to hear him twice, and was persuaded to enter the inquiry-room. I then resolved at any cost to renounce my sin, and I believe that I was forgiven; but it has been hard times since. Do you know that I have twice been tempted to destroy myself? It seemed as if no one would help me. The recollection of the past follows me wherever I go. Oh, if I could only escape from the consequences of my sin! Still I read my Bible, and try to look to the Lord. A few weeks ago I remembered a promise you made to me when we last met; you said that if ever I was willing to do differently you would be my friend. Something seemed to say to me: 'Go and tell him all,' so you see I am come."

The sorrowful face told how much she had suffered; it seemed as if twenty years, instead of ten, had passed over since last we met. Further inquiry has proved the reality of T——'s repentance, and it is hoped that this sister, who has experienced so much sorrow from sin, will also know the joy of entire deliverance. Had it not been for Mr. Moody's visit, she might still have been in the grasp of the enemy.

A few evenings ago, when coming home in the train, I was greeted by a gentleman whom I did not know, but who remembered having seen me at the Moody and Sankey Mission. "How do your cases stand?" was my inquiry. "I can only tell you," was the reply, "that seven who were then converted are now meeting regularly in my class. In a Congregational Church near us ten young men were admitted into membership soon after the Mission, whose conversions were more or less owing to it."

Another case is that of a man who came to one of the meetings partially drunk. He was going out when a faithful brother stopped him, and we three remained together in the hall till eleven o'clock at night. First the poor fellow cried bitterly, as only a drunken man can cry; by degrees the effects of the drink passed off, and then my fellow-labourer poured in the oil and wine of the Gospel. At last the man saw that he was forgiven, and we left the hall together, he having first signed the pledge and received the blue ribbon. He is still doing well, being looked after by Christian friends. Many other similar instances could be related.

HINTS FOR THE INQUIRY ROOM—5.

By Mr. GEORGE SOLTAU.

"The Kingdom of Heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind."—Matt. xiii. 47.

THE Formalist may stroll into the inquiry-room to see what is going on, unable to understand all the stir about "being converted," "being saved." John Bunyan has well described him as saying, "I was born in the land of Vain Glory, and I am going for praise to Mount Sion." His speech will betray him. He will tell you that he does not believe in this sort of thing at all, that people who are regular in their attendance at church or chapel do not want any such religious excitement. As a rejoinder, ask him to explain the meaning of the words in Rom. iii. 22, "There is no difference: for all have sinned." Suggest to him that very possibly he is described by the Lord Jesus, in John x. 1, as one who has not entered in by the door, and therefore is a thief and a robber. So question him about Scripture as to make him reveal his ignorance of the Word of God, and then take him to 2 Tim. iii. 5. Such are still further described in verses 7 and 8 as "ever learning, and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth—reprobate [or, of no judgment] concerning the faith."

The Inquisitive Talker will be full of foolish and vain questions, trying to appear really anxious for information. He is fully described in 1 Tim. vi. 4, 5: "He is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings . . . supposing that gain is godliness." The Apostle Paul then gives his advice as to how to deal with them, "from such withdraw thyself." There is no better plan that we can adopt.

The Sceptic.—We shall probably meet with many sceptical minds, of various shades of unbelief. We may find some have become so on account of the inconsistency of nominal Christians amongst whom they may have been thrown. Such will need much patience and tenderness, for they must be won back.

Another class will have been brought up such from childhood, and will therefore be thoroughly ignorant of the Scriptures. They will need instruction in the elementary truths of the Gospel.

A third class will have renounced all faith in God and revelation, in order to give unbridled rein to their lusts. They will need solemn and stern reproof.

An Athiest will be a rare individual in the Inquiry-room. Most men believe in God in some way or other. Argument will not avail much, but the sharp sword with two edges is still the effective weapon; it divides asunder the joints and marrow, and is the discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Let it be wielded with precision, and held in the grasp of faith, and it will work wonders.

It will be desirable to find out at the commencement of a conversation what has induced the sceptical frame of mind, and so be guided as to the line of truth to advance. For the first class mentioned, point out that the very existence of nominal Christians, having the form of godliness without the power, indicates the existence of true Christians somewhere. Satan always makes counterfeits of God's realities, and tries to pass them off as current coin. Inquire what the heart is needing, what causes dissatisfaction and unrest, and then simply tell out God's resting-place for weary hearts, God's provision for hungry and thirsty ones. In Heb. xi. 6, it is declared, "Without faith it is impossible to please Him." In Heb. ix. 22, "Without shedding of blood is no remission." In Heb. xii. 14, "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord." These are the three requisites. Faith is the gift of God, remission of sin the gift of the Lord Jesus, holiness is the gift of the Holy Spirit: thus is all the soul's need fully met.

For the second class adopt a line of questioning that shall elicit from them a statement of their definition of God; endeavour to make them define their own ideas of what their God requires; what are his laws and principles, and then ask whether they have acted up to their own light, or whether they have not transgressed times without number what they acknowledge to be the laws of God. "Whom ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you." Let such be led to see that the God who knows them has described them in his Word, that he has also set forth the only deliverance from the power of sin, and the only source of knowledge of Himself, namely, the Lord Jesus. "I am the way, the truth, and the life." Keep the conversation as much as possible to the question of deliverance from sin, and do not be drawn into discussions on the punishment of sin.

With the third class of unbelievers, who boast in their shame, discussion is unnecessary. Read to them solemnly such passages as Jude 10, 11, 16; 2 Peter ii. 9—19. Unveil by these Scriptures their private life and thoughts. Let them realise the authority of a book that throws light upon their conduct and character, and that, with equal clearness, shows them their doom. The mere brag of infidelity will be silenced by the majesty of the Word of God. It will be worth while also to inquire very closely from all these unbelievers, how much they have read of the Bible, and what they know of it. In many cases their own ignorance will be an effectual barrier to a prolonged discussion on their part, and God may, in his mercy, give them a teachable spirit that they will listen to his Word.

The Jew must not be shut out from the place of blessing, but be heartily welcomed as having a special claim on the mercy of God. To him point out that the character of the God of Abraham is unchanged and unchangeable. His name is still Jehovah. He declared in Leviticus xvii. 11, "It is the blood that maketh atonement for the soul." And He has ordained that the High Priest alone shall enter into the Holiest of all with the blood of the Atonement. Remind him that he has neither priest nor sacrifice now, therefore, the way to God is effectually closed. The promises of Is. xliii. 25—27, and xliv. 22, are as true for the Jew to-day as for the Gentile, if only he will believe the report of Is. liii., and see how all is fulfilled in the Cross of Jesus of Nazareth. The prophecies of the Old Testament set forth two great events; the first, the coming of a suffering Messiah, to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself; the second, the coming of a glorious Messiah, to take his kingdom and reign in righteousness. The two prophecies point to the same person, the Immanuel, born in Bethlehem, wounded for our transgressions, whose soul was not left in Hades, and who now sits at the right hand of God until his enemies be made his footstool.

In conclusion, let us remember the command of the Lord to his disciples in Mark ix. 19, concerning the lad with a dumb spirit, "Bring him unto Me." This is his word to us, and this word we must obey. We shall find Him still the same as in the days of his earthly ministry, for He still "goes about doing good, and healing all who are oppressed of the devil."

[These "Hints" are about to be published in a separate and convenient form.]

NEW BRIGHTON Y.M.C.A.—The annual meeting of this Association was held on the 19th inst. in the Victoria Hall. Mr. T. A. Leigh read the report, which stated that the work of the past year had in many respects been even more encouraging than that of the previous year. The prayer-meetings, Bible-classes, and evangelistic services, had been much appreciated. Thousands of excursionists had heard the Gospel in the tent, during nineteen Sundays, with encouraging results. Seventy-three pledges had also been taken during the year. The Chairman said, apart from the work done by the Church organisations, he believed a good deal could be effected on an undenominational platform, such as that of their Association; their report showed that the work was being efficiently carried on.

ENGLISH WORKING MEN IN PARIS.

THERE are many English working men in Paris for whom a home is greatly needed. Miss Ada M. Leigh writes to us that during the last seven years 547 men have joined a Bible-class, which has been held at one of the halls connected with her Mission. This summer eighty-five have been regular attendants. They became so interested that they asked to be allowed to have a prayer-meeting and also a singing class, at which they learnt many of Mr. Sankey's Songs and Solos.

This hall is now wanted for the winter work of the Mission. The men themselves have petitioned Miss Leigh, urgently requesting her to provide a home for them where they can have comfortable lodgings, and hold their meetings. A house has been found capable of being divided into a dining hall, and one for evangelistic and temperance meetings, with rooms for them to lodge. It would be carried on upon Temperance principles.

Miss Leigh pleads for £500, to establish this home for working men, among whom a good work may yet be done in Paris. Her address is, 77, Avenue Wagram, Paris.

EARL CAIRNS ON CHRISTIAN MISSIONS.

THE annual meeting of the Church Missionary Society was held on Monday week, in the Kirk at Gatehouse, N.B. Rev. J. Coates, minister; Rev. E. Walton, chaplain, and rector of the English Church at Calais; also the Rev. J. Thomas, as deputation, addressed the meeting.

Earl Cairns, who presided, and was introduced by Mr. Horatio Murray Stewart, said: There are several reasons why we are called on to further missionary work, and hold missionary meetings. The command: "Go ye into all the world," was not intended to be limited only to those few disciples to whom the words were addressed; it ought to be our delight, as it certainly is our duty, to carry the Gospel message to all parts of the world. Those of us who have already received Christ into our own hearts, and who know the blessing of having our sins forgiven through the death of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, cannot rest unconcerned about the spread of this glorious message. God uses men and women as his instruments, to convey his goodwill to men, in telling them of his great love wherewith He loved us, and that they also may be saved through Jesus Christ. It encourages those who have gone forth as missionaries when they know that we at home are thinking of and praying for them, and that while they are suffering loneliness and hardship, with all the separation and self-denial involved in being severed from home, there are hearts following them, and earnest, prayerful effort being made on behalf of the glorious work they are gone to do. Lord Cairns then spoke of the marvellous success that has been vouchsafed in many places—Sierra Leone, several parts of Africa, China, and Fiji.

CORRECTION.—The name of the gentleman who has commenced a work among sailors at St. Helena, is Mr. Arthur St. Quintin, not Mr. Henry St. Quintin, as stated in our notice recently published.

OUTCASTS OF SPITALFIELDS.—A large number of the wretched wanderers of this deplorable section of East-end misery were gathered together to a tea on Wednesday week and at breakfast the following morning in Thrawl-street, Brick-lane. It is impossible to convey an accurate idea of the squalid, dissipated appearance of many who were present. Help, immediate and permanent, was freely offered to all who had any desire to escape from their miserable life. Six young girls were taken from the breakfast meeting by a lady connected with the Rev. R. C. Billing, Rector of Spitalfields, to a Home, and others have applied to the office of the Midnight Meeting Movement, 8A, Red Lion-square, W.C.

Mr. MOODY'S SCHOOL for YOUNG LADIES At Northfield, Mass., U.S.A.

WE noticed in THE CHRISTIAN a few weeks ago an article on Mr. Moody's Seminary for Young Ladies in Northfield; the data given were so insufficient, and in several instances incorrect, that we felt justified in writing a little note to correct the mistakes, that Mr. Moody's many friends across the water who have not been privileged in seeing his great work here, may at least form a fair conception of it.

The school is young, now only entering upon its fifth year, but its five years have told well; its founder and his coadjutors have much to thank the "Father" for in its promise for the future.

Northfield is justly called "one of the loveliest towns in all the Connecticut valley." Lying along the river, its one principal street, nearly three miles in length, bordered on either side by grand old maples and elms more than a hundred years old, the quiet ancestral town has such a look of perfect contentment and rest, that one enters it with a sigh of comfort and leaves with a sigh of regret. There could not have been a better place for this school of the Lord's planting, through the instrumentality of his servant Mr. Moody and his friends.

The school grounds occupy the loveliest spot in all Northfield, and they are being made more beautiful each year. A series of natural terraces furnished delightful building spots, and these, with the river running just below, and the great hills on the farther side and in the rear, leave nothing to be desired that nature could furnish.

Driving up the street from the little station we first pass Recitation Hall, a neat brick building in which the entire school is gathered for chapel exercises in the morning, and for the recitations during the day. A short distance beyond this is Mr. Moody's own residence, occupied in his absence by the school; back of this on the hill, down which it is a work of art to come without tumbling, on a frosty winter's morning, stands the "Seminary" so called, a large and handsome brick building completed two years ago. From the windows of this building the view in all directions cannot be surpassed. Looking towards the north you see New Hampshire and Vermont, and by a little stretch of the imagination you can see the far-famed White Mountains. Down on the street, almost in front of the Seminary, stands "Bonar Hall"; these, with the small white farmhouse and yellow barn, complete the school buildings. Just over the hill from the Seminary is the house in which Mr. Moody was born, and where the dear old mother now lives.

In this circle of buildings were gathered this year 140 young ladies every day. This year opened with a larger number of pupils than in any year before, and every home is filled beyond its "quite comfortable" capacity. A new building is projected, and will, it is hoped, be ready for occupancy at the opening of another school year.

God, in his infinite mercy, has blessed this school richly. The motto chosen for it at the dedication of the first building, "I the Lord do keep it; I will water it every moment; lest any hurt it, I will keep it night and day," is fixed in the heart of every young lady who goes out from its halls. The influence of Mr. Moody is felt here, we believe, as in no other place in the world; and this influence, wrought into earnest, Christian, womanly character, is carried into almost every New England village, as well as into homes in the middle, western, and southern States. What more fitting monuments of our beloved evangelist's work?—more enduring than marble, because they shall reach into the eternity beyond. Happy is the man whose history is written out in Christ-like, powerful lines.

What of the advantages and the expenses in Northfield Seminary? The advantages are those of a good English course, with a three years' Latin course, and a year each of French and German for those who desire. All are taught vocal music free of charge, and instrumental instruction is given on very easy terms. The curriculum of study includes a thorough Bible course, and to stand well in this study is held in greatest esteem by the young ladies.

All this, with the exception of instrumental music, and a small extra charge for French and German, may be obtained for 100 dollars per year, which includes board and tuition. In this way the excellent advantages of the seminary are put within the reach of just the class Mr. Moody desires most to reach; the class which without this opportunity would be debarred the privilege of other than a very common school education.

There are a number of free scholarships, which are granted each year to those who otherwise would be unable to enter the school. A few scholarships have been taken by benevolent friends of the school, a scholarship costing 3000 dollars, and proving a blessing to many who are not so prospered with means as those who can give, and a greater blessing, we often think, to the giver.

A hearty Scotch lady, a friend of Mr. Moody, gathered for the school many choice articles in North Africa and the Holy Land, including two bricks from Babylon, and this gift has the honour of forming the nucleus to a promising museum.

Over these 150 girls a corps of eight teachers is given charge, and these have the opportunity for engaging heart and soul in a work which in its breadth and reach the world nowhere else affords. Nowhere does consecrated effort tell more mightily for the Lord, we believe, than here, in the everyday work of this school of God's planting.

A FRIEND.

STEAMER FOR WEST AFRICA.

A SMALL iron steamer built for the use of the coloured missionaries at British Sherbro, West Africa, has left London for Freetown, Sierra Leone. She is 60ft. by 12ft. and is named John Brown, in memory of the martyr of Harper's Ferry. This Mission occupies a coast line of about 150 miles. Fifteen stations are already occupied, from which the Gospel is carried into 179 towns and villages, which, but for this agency, would have been left in total spiritual darkness. There are at present engaged in the work twenty-eight coloured missionaries, teachers, and helpers. There are 362 in full church membership. Besides, there are fourteen Sunday-schools established, with 420 scholars and fifteen day schools, with 371 pupils. The need of a small steamer to maintain constant communication between the stations has long been felt.

The peculiar feature of this Mission is, that Africa's own sons and daughters are exclusively engaged in the work. These can stand the climate of tropical regions which is so fatal to white men, as the record of all missionary societies show. There is practically no limit to the extension of this work but the want of funds. Anyone wishing for further information respecting this great work can have full particulars by writing to the Hon. Secretary, Rev. Dr. Bevan, Freedmen's Missions, 18, Adam-street, Strand, London.

RETURNING.*

By ANNA SHIPTON.

ONCE I said: O Master, tell me
How thy kingdom to obtain;
What shall fit me for thy presence?
How thy favour may I gain?

"Leave," He said, "thy rich possessions,
Come, and thou shalt fitted be
For the kingdom of my Father:
Take thy cross and follow Me."

Then I turned me full of sorrow,
Counting up life's precious store;
For I knew not all the idols
Cherished in my heart before.

But the Saviour looked upon me,
And He loved me; oh, how well!
Love awaked new life within me,
Light upon my spirit fell.

Then how poor were my possessions,
And my treasures mean and dim:
Jesus Christ had smiled upon me:
I returned and followed Him.

O my Lord, thy smile was favour,
Though on my cold heart it shone;
And thy love is life eternal:
So my wandering heart was won.

MRS. HAMPSON IN NEW SOUTH WALES.

THE Sydney correspondent of The Nonconformist and Independent, writing in October, thus refers to the wonderful evangelistic work of Mrs. Hampson in that city:—

"During her eight days' mission, congregations of from five to six thousand have met, night after night, to hear her, in a large exhibition building of wretched acoustic properties, and yet in which, with little effort, Mrs. Hampson makes herself distinctly heard. The congregation steadily increased during the time, and on the last evening as many thousands were shut out as obtained admittance. There were also held during each day sectional meetings, at which addresses were given. The movement has excited considerable interest, and various opinions are expressed to account for its wonderful success. Some ascribe it to the advertising adopted, others to a woman preaching, others to her wonderful voice, and not a few to the colonial love of novelty. But having had opportunities of carefully watching the movement from the beginning, I unhesitatingly look to a higher source for the motive power. Many believers have for months past been crying to God for some means to be employed by which the thousands of the careless and the sceptical outside our churches might be reached, and the churches themselves be revived. This lady has apparently been sent in answer to their prayers. She is known to spend much of her time during the mission in secret communion with God, and though she has nothing but the simple Gospel to offer, she so offers it that hearers lose sight of the messenger in the message, and are arrested by the truth as they have but rarely been arrested before. There is no hysterical excitement, only calm reasoning and most earnest entreaties. Sceptics listen with awe, and not a few are found afterwards in the inquiry rooms seeking Christ. Believers say they enjoy religion as they enjoyed it when first they found the Saviour.

"Mrs. Hampson has the support of ministers of all sections of the Evangelical Church. By an admirable system adopted in the inquiry rooms, every inquirer is commended to some minister and church to be watched over after the evangelist leaves. Night after night the inquirers' rooms have been very full; hundreds profess to have found peace. Unfortunately, at the close of the mission, Mrs. Hampson lost her voice, but by complete rest she has partially recovered, and will hold a few final services before leaving the colony."

THE PEOPLE OF MOROCCO.—2.

By Mr. Wm. MACINTOSH.

CROSSING over the narrow traits for the first time from Europe to Morocco, the traveller will find himself transported more suddenly than he could have dreamt of into the midst of a world diversely new in the extreme strangeness of all its scenes in contrast to anything he has seen before; and yet old and quaint in its very newness, more than the far East itself. The tide has been long flowing from West to East, but we have forgotten that before it turned or began to flow a counter-tide or gulf-stream had flown from East to West, that has long settled into a great stagnant pool close to our very shores. So vast and immovable is this stagnant pool, that, humanly speaking, something like the skill and indomitable vigour of a Lesseps, in a spiritual and Christian sense, is needed to devise a scheme, or, rather, discover the means of applying the scheme which Divine Grace has devised, by which the Dead Sea of Mohammedanism, whose tide has long lain stagnant and unthought of at our doors, may be put in motion by the living tide of the love of God being let in; that the bitter bitumen waters may be healed, that can only in their present state destroy verdure and maintain desolation.

The evangelisation of the Mohammedans of the world, numbering nearly 200 millions, has yet practically to be begun. It is indeed a great problem, of which the seven millions of Morocco are but an item; but it never will be solved unless the Christian Church sets herself in right earnest to the task. Humanly speaking it is hopeless, but, while we find it written "It is not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts," it is also written, "concerning the work of my hand, command ye Me." In view of these two utterances, we may well face the task, and consider the problem.

And surely it is not unnatural that we should lay hold of the part nearest to us. In the case of Morocco, the far East has come to our door, so much so that the orientals themselves have named it in their Arabic tongue "The Extreme West," and besides being near, a great part of the country is open to us, and many of the people, notwithstanding the degradation of masses of them, are willing to and interest to what a Christian missionary has to tell them. Perhaps more than others they ought to be approached prudently, patiently, and humbly, but I feel sure that real and persevering effort on their behalf will not be in vain. And we must not forget that the deeply fallen condition in which our Moslem brethren of the same human race are found was in great measure originated, and has been perpetuated by the faithlessness, errors, and suicidal strife of backsliding, idolatrous, and degenerate Christians.

If Christians had remained faithful to their calling till the time of Mohammed, the probability is that the false religion which he gave birth to would never have seen the light of day, and if they had been faithful since his time, his deceptive system would have had no place to stand on. But alas! it has grown, and has filled the world with its dark shadows, and it is no easy problem now to get the light of life to penetrate it, and it is all the harder because our own hands, the hands of our fellow-Christians of former days, tied the knots. We, by them, have forged the chains and fetters of errors and darkness by which Satan has so long and so firmly bound them, and by which he still holds them fast. But this fact only makes the call to us Christians of the present day all the louder to arise and bethink ourselves of our relation to Mohammedans, and it makes our responsibility all the heavier, for it fixes on us the sin of Christians of other days, and so long as we refuse to make the most strenuous and persevering efforts to lead back to the way of truth Mohammedans whom their errors and heresies turned so far astray. Alas! if the Christians of Arabia and Syria had been faithful to their Lord, and to the teaching of the Gospel, and if the crusaders of Europe had but gone forth in their day in the name and power of the Lord of hosts, bearing the word of truth, the sword of the Spirit instead of the sword of steel what misery would the world have been saved from, and what an unspeakable loss would the Church of Christ have escaped!

But even now, through Divine mercy, the case is not hopeless. Let us return unto the Lord in this matter, confess our sin and the sin of our forefathers, and surely He will return to us, and cast light athwart the dark spiritual waste. And when the subject in its magnitude comes to be realised and considered, doubtless the mountains of difficulties and obstructions will be removed. As of old, "the gates of brass will be broken in pieces and the bars of iron shall be cut in sunder," and the Lord Himself shall lead the way. In the meantime, let us up pray Him to whom belongs the harvest to send and work by whom He will, that of the outer world, and especially those lying nearest our own shores, and so long neglected and forgotten, may be enlightened with the Light of Life. And let us no longer remain under the reproach of the priest and the Levite who "passed by on the other side" the miserable and helpless man so urgently in want of their aid. Sure enough poor Morocco has been "stripped, wounded, and left half dead" by the devil, and has been "passed by" by generations of Christians, and many a good Samaritan who knows what "neighbour" means; will be needed to go out and show "compassion," by binding up its wounds and pouring in "oil and wine," and "taking care" of it, until souls, sick and sunk in sin and mauled by the devil, are restored and saved.

Mr. Mackintosh writes from Tangier, Morocco, on Nov. 17:—

"We arrived here safely three weeks ago, and were kindly welcomed by former friends, among Jews, Mahommedans, and Spaniards. I trust the Kabyle Berber Mission may be practically encouraged in their efforts to establish a basis at Tangier, with the view of future work in Morocco. I trust they may soon have the means in hand for the house here, the purchase of which they have been negotiating. Even men of the world, who have been long resident here, acknowledge that schools and a medical mission combined would be an inestimable blessing, especially for the Moorish population.

"In passing through the south of France and Spain, we were cheered and helped on our way by warm-hearted servants of God at Bayonne, San Sebastian, Madrid, and Malaga. We found Spaniards in the trains quite grateful to receive Spanish Gospels and Mrs. Grimké's text cards, and the few words we could speak to them in their own language they were glad to hear. We did not land at Gibraltar, but we have heard of a work of grace appearing there among the English soldiers. The Soldiers' Institute, kept there by Mr. and Mrs. Holmes, and aided by a few earnest Christian officers, is a great boon. But we long to hear of work among the Spanish-speaking population of Gibraltar.

"We miss Miss Herdman this winter in Tangier to do the same good work which she did last winter and spring, in visiting so many Spanish and Jewish families. We hope some, like her, knowing Spanish, may come to this place before the winter is past. We had a cheering visit from Mr. Glenny a week ago."

DEACON ABRAHAM IN PERSIA.—By letters received from Ooroomiah, Persia, we learn that the Nestorian, Deacon Abraham, has met with an accident which has laid him up for some time. He fell off a horse and broke his arm. He was, however, getting gradually better. He had hoped to have arranged for a journey to England, to revive the lapsed interest of English Christians in the affairs of his orphanage. But the accident has necessarily led to the postponement of the journey. The funds previously contributed by his English friends are now exhausted. Any help for the work among the orphans may be forwarded through Mrs. Sarah Francis, Inglesby House, Stoke Newington Green, London, N.

A CITY POLICE FESTIVAL.

A SOMEWHAT novel, and certainly very delightful, kind of social gathering was held at the Young Men's Christian Association, 186, Aldersgate-street, on a recent evening. Mr. THOMAS RUSSELL, missionary, who presided, gratefully acknowledged the rich supply of fruit and flowers that were spread upon the tables, the gifts of Christian friends; there were pine-apples, grapes, oranges, apples, figs, and nuts. He then gave a suggestive address on "A basket of summer fruit" (Amos viii. 1).

Inspector CARTER said it gave him great pleasure to be present and to witness this expression of kindness from their friends and specially from their Missionary and his devoted wife. "We are keenly alive to the beauties of nature and the power of sympathy. Our public duties often exclude us from the privileges that other citizens enjoy. It has been said a policeman's hand is against every man, but that is not true. It is our duty to prevent evil, to protect life and property, 'to do justice, love mercy, and walk humbly with our God.'"

Inspector TAIT said: I can praise God for saving me and all the members of my family, and I desire that this joy may be known by all men. Praise the Lord, "He hath brought us into his banqueting-house, and his banner over us is love."

The next part of the programme was "Fruit and Conversation." The stewards distributed the fruit to all the company, and they seemed heartily to enjoy it. While they conversed together, Mr. F. BASTABLE (foreman of the Underground Railway Works in the City, where 2000 men have been employed) spoke on "The power of a mother's prayers." P.C. SMITH made some telling remarks on "Come over the Line"—the line of decision, of separation, and of consecration. He then sang the hymn as a solo. Sergeant BLEASE sang, "Almost Persuaded," and told the best way of being "fully persuaded." P.C. MARTIN, who wore his uniform, spoke on glorifying God in the family, in the church, and in the world.

Superintendent FOSTER, who was cordially received, said: There are some who think that a policeman can perform his duty better for being a Christian and a sober man, and I am one of those who think so. Like some of the speakers here to-night, I must say that what good there is in me can be traced to early training in piety. I sincerely wish our Missionary success in his noble work.

During the evening several ladies and gentlemen sang a selection of Sacred Songs and Solos. Portions of the flowers and fruits were sent to the City Police Hospital and to the sick wives and children of the City Police.

BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE SOCIETY OF IRELAND—Last month the General Board of this Society met in Dublin. The appointment of several new colporteurs was sanctioned and districts assigned to them. A conference of colporteurs was held afterwards. The men came up from all parts of the country. They had private meetings among themselves for prayer and conversation relative to the work carried on in their several districts. The reports were most encouraging, and the men returned greatly encouraged and refreshed by their meetings in Dublin.

ORPHAN GIRLS AT BRIXTON.—"The Brixton Orphanage for Fatherless Girls" has been enlarged, and sixty more children have been admitted, making 180, all of whom are trained as domestic servants. The cost of clothing, maintaining, and educating each child is less than £10 a year. As there are no paid officers of any kind, the orphans receive the full benefit of all contributions sent. The cost of the new buildings and furniture amounts to £3000, of which £2000 has been raised, leaving £1000. The Hon. Treasurer is Mr. E. C. Smith, 1, Lombard-street, London, E.C.; the Hon. Superintendent, Mrs. A. Montague, Brixton Orphanage, Barrington-road, Brixton, S.W.

Notes and Comments.

A MOVEMENT is on foot for securing greater practical unity among the various evangelical agencies in Italy. Prayer is desired that the deliberations of the brethren there may be guided to wise and profitable issues.

An esteemed friend who lives in the country sends a communication, in which the following passage occurs :—

"We are just now being moved by the revelations that are being made as to 'how the poor live;' and 'Outcast London' is filling us with dismay. The energies of practical, godly people will naturally centre in the great metropolis, and the prayers of very many will go up on behalf of the mighty city. But how about towns and villages lying but a very short railway-run from London? How about the poor and the outcast in such places? And who is going to petition for them? Look at that file of tramps in the principal road of a town twenty-one miles from London—men, women, and children, ragged, filthy, and vile! Go back to the beginning of their life's history, and it will be found that they were born in misery, cradled in sin, and brought up amid hatred, ignorance of God, and want. Who is to blame? As they march along for their night's lodging at the Union, they take the middle of the road; they are too dirty and shunned to take the side walk. Nobody notices them, for nobody cares for them; they are the scum of the earth's outcast ones."

While the millions of Outcast London and other large cities will of necessity claim a first place in the thoughts and plans of the Christian philanthropist and reformer, the hundreds of outcasts in the country ought not to be overlooked. We know that some friends in the country make special efforts to evangelise the tramps in their neighbourhood; probably others may find or make the opportunity of taking up this branch of service.

A correspondent reports an evangelistic tour through parts of Sussex. The facts he relates indicate a state of ignorance and depravity as sad as any to be met with in the midst of our crowded city areas. The pernicious dogmas of Romanism, Ritualism, and Hyper-Calvinism spread their withering influence over many districts, while few workers on the lines of pure Gospel truth are to be found counteracting their influence.

Save that Romanism and Antinomianism have perhaps a stronger hold in Sussex than in most other counties, there is reason to fear that our rural population throughout the land is in a similar state of deadness to spiritual truth, and of exposure to error, as that pointed out by our correspondent. Bright exceptions to the rule are, we know, to be met with in some of our country villages, but it is a pressing want, that wider Gospel effort be made in country as well as town; on all sides more labourers are required.

The Southern Cross emphatically protests against the employment of girls as barmaids in public-houses and gin-palaces. Our Melbourne contemporary thinks—and we quite agree—that this practice, if not forbidden, should be strictly regulated by law. We re-echo with earnest endorsement the words: "It is cruel and unjust in the extreme to allow parents to expose their daughters, or girls to expose themselves, to the constant and shameful temptations incident to a barmaid's calling." But what shall be said of parents who need restraint in such a course? Strange, indeed, is the parental spirit which can be party to such an engagement for a daughter.

We are glad to receive the following note from a correspondent in Chelsea :—

"It may interest you to know that portions of THE CHRISTIAN, which I send weekly to Cottyam, Travancore, India, are often translated into a Malayan newspaper by a native clergyman. It is truly appreciated."

A useful hint on the duty of rendering back to God a fair proportion of his temporal gifts to us, may be gathered from the following extract, taken from a deacon's experiences, as recorded lately in The Christian Statesman :—

"I am now entering upon the year 1882: my business last year was more prosperous than ever. As I have been balancing the accounts in my ledger recently, I took a piece of blank paper, and wrote along the top—

DEACON HOWELL. In account with THE LORD.

DR.

To Pardon from sin;
A hope for the future world;
Good health;
A prosperous business;
Attendance upon Divine service;
The joy of Christian children;
Continual increase of value of lands;
100 or more acres of good farm-lands.

CR.

By Cash paid for pastor's salary $50.00
Benevolence 15.00

"I looked the piece of paper over very carefully, and was compelled to admit that the amounts placed to my credit do not balance any one of the debits. The question flashed into my mind, 'How much owest thou unto thy Lord?'"

We are glad to note that Mr. Spurgeon has been lifting up his powerful voice on behalf of early closing. The public are by no means alive to the duty of consideration for shopkeepers and their assistants in reference to the long hours they are often compelled to keep open, owing to the late shopping of a large portion of the community. Mr. Spurgeon says, in a letter just sent to the Early-closing Association—

"I greatly sympathise with all reasonable attempts to shorten the hours of shopkeeping. In many cases there is no need for the cruelly long hours, and the public should see to it that they are not continued. I know that specially early closing on one evening in the week is a boon which seems to alter the whole face of things, and gives the worker something to cheer him in his weekly labours. I wish it might become the universal custom to close at five on Wednesday or Thursday. Few movements would be more beneficial. I wish you the utmost success."

It really rests as much with the public as with employers to bring about a change in this respect. Only let the people refrain from shopping after dark, and the cost of keeping open would make it to the shopkeeper's interest to close early. Thought on such subjects would soon lead to action, and action to needful reform.

It is greatly to be desired that Ireland should occupy a place of special and thoughtful concern in the hearts and minds of English Christians. On every ground we owe it to the inhabitants of the sister isle to bear their needs before God, and to use every possible means for promoting, temporally and spiritually, their national welfare. One of our leading statesmen said the other day, what most people will admit to be true, that "there was no country on the face of the earth which had been so misunderstood, so misgoverned, and so completely handed over as a shuttlecock to be played with for the benefit of parties in England." Such statements illustrate and enforce the duty of English Christians to care for and sympathise with Irish needs.

The protection of the Bechuana tribes from marauding Boers, who would subjugate and oppress them, is surely a duty that our Government owes to a people whose devotion to ourselves in the past has been marked, and whose progress towards civilised independence has thus far been most cheering to witness. We are glad to see that an influential address, signed by Earls Shaftesbury and Grey, Lords Ebury and Stanley, the Lord Mayor, and many others, has been sent to the Earl of Derby, as Secretary of State for the Colonies, urging the claims of the Bechuanas upon English consideration and support. The ground for taking this step just now is the visit of delegates from the Transvaal Government to his lordship for conference on the subject of the annexation of the Bechuana territory to the Transvaal.

The last issue of Africa, a quarterly review and record of Mission work in the Dark Continent, is full of valuable information, and affords much ground for hope and encouragement as to the prospects of its evangelisation. One article deals with the question of the abandonment of Bechuanaland to the Transvaal, and says that "Bechuanaland is the key to the interior of Southern Africa." The opinions of Drs. Moffat and Livingstone are quoted as dead against England allowing the work of Christianity and civilisation to be lost in that district, as it must be if the Boers are to take possession of it.

The references made in the same journal to the Livingstonia Mission are of an interesting character, and indicate progress. It is with sadness that we learn of the death of Mr. Jas. Stewart, C.E., to whose skill and devotion the Mission, under God's blessing, owes so much. The report speaks of his arduous work, in road-making, and pushing forward to Tanganyika, concluding with the words, "Mr. Stewart's success in the past, and the experience he has acquired, encourage the hope that, under Divine providence, he may succeed." Since the publication of these words he has been called up to the Lord, at the early age of forty years; he succumbed to an attack of the malaria which has laid low so many brave toilers in the African field.

The saddest feature of the news from Africa seems to be that connected with the slave trade, which is carried on vigorously in the Soudan, and many other districts. One eye-witness says that in spite of the firmans of the Sultan, and English treaty influences, the trade on the Red Sea is very flourishing. To quote his own words: "I see nothing around me but slavery. Slaves to the right of me, slaves to the left of me. Let Europe decide, once for all, to put a stop to this vile traffic."

The war news from Egypt is sadly disquieting, and fills the mind with anxious concern as to its results. The successful encounter of the false prophet of the Soudan with the Egyptian army is calculated to arouse the fanaticism of Mahometans all over the world, while it adds to the difficulties of our own government in relation to its occupation of Egypt. France and China, too, seem ominously near to evil issues of their late misunderstanding. The signs of the times grow more threatening as the months advance. Momentous, indeed, may be the events dependent upon the near future; we tread upon ground which upheaves with forces capable at any time of completely changing the whole aspect of the world's affairs.

The five memorial stones of Dr. Barnardo's reconstructed "Edinboro' Castle," at Limehouse, were laid last Monday afternoon in the presence of a vast and deeply interested assemblage. The Lord Mayor, the City Sheriffs, and their retinues attended in state, and everything passed off with much éclat. A report of the proceedings will appear in our next week's issue.

The scientific arena has just been bereft of one of its most skilled and practical experts. Sir William Siemens, whose death occurred last week, ranked first in eminence among the savants of electrical science, and as a civil engineer he was unrivalled. His fame is world-wide, as also the respect in which he was held, honours having been heaped upon him by foreign societies as well as those of our own country. It is only about a year since the Queen conferred upon him the honour of knighthood.

It is a striking illustration of man's inability to direct his own way, or rule his own destiny, that a man possessed of power to utilise the mightiest forces of nature, and of skill to unlock the secrets of science which have been hid for ages, should have met his death through a sudden stumble and fall in the street. And yet it was the case with Sir William Siemens; to use the words of a contemporary, "So slight a shock as a street stumble cut short the vital energy of one who wielded Jove's thunderbolt, and added fresh glow to the fires of Vulcan throughout our land." Surely it is true that "the righteous, and the wise, and their works, are in the hand of God."

The action of the Lord Mayor, in reference to discontinuing Sunday State processions, has called forth a letter from the Bishop of London, congratulating him on the step he has taken. The Bishop states that he has for some years past refused all invitations to preach on Lord's days where the Lord Mayor was expected to attend in state, on the ground that the custom tended more to evil than good. Let us hope the knowledge of these facts will serve to stimulate on all sides a deeper regard to Sabbath keeping. It is a subject to which attention needs to be continually drawn.

The remarkable zeal and vigilance of the Church of Rome may well serve to quicken Protestant Churches to similar earnestness in the promulgation of truth. At a meeting of the Royal Asiatic Society last week, Mr. Habib A. Salmoni read a paper on the importance to Great Britain of the study of Arabic. In the course of his remarks he said: "It is a well-known fact that the Propaganda at Rome maintains a constant succession of pupils in the Eastern languages, notably Arabic, whose services are at the disposal of the College at all times." It is in this way Rome maintains an influence all over the world, which gives her a foremost place in the intrigues and councils of nations remote as well as near. It is for those who hold the truth to be equally keen sighted and diligent in cultivating opportunities for its dissemination. It is strange, as Mr. Salmoni said, that, remembering "Her Majesty the Queen rules over a larger number of Mohammedans than any other potentate, and that the interests of Great Britain in the East are vast and complex," so little attention is paid to the study of languages closely allied with Oriental laws and religions.

Earl Granville's assurance that in the instructions given by the Government relative to the new treaty between Great Britain and Corea, opium is inserted in the tariff as a prohibited article, will be received by many with feelings of lively satisfaction. It may, we trust, be regarded as an instalment of the larger act of righteousness which shall soon be performed, namely, the complete suppression of the iniquitous traffic so far as British interests are concerned in all parts of the world.

Anent the letter which appeared in our columns of the 15th inst., on the duty of giving away spare or cast-off articles of clothing, a correspondent writes to us from Devonshire, stating the great need he finds in his work of visiting the poor among the Lord's people, for such aid to be rendered. It is an opportunity for showing the spirit of loving regard for others, which Christians who have it in their power should not be slow to embrace. Among other acts of mercy Christ marks out for blessing in his parable in Matt. xxv., is this, "I was naked, and ye clothed Me."

If only men of wealth could be brought to consider the responsibility involved in the possession of enormous revenues, while works of love and mercy are at a standstill for lack of funds, we might soon see an advance of needed reforms. It seems a fearful fact to contemplate, that while multitudes are perishing for lack of food, and through having to exist in habitations unfit for human occupation, rich men in our city are spending, as in one case we hear of, £20,000 on a stable, and in another, £5000 on a billiard-room. Wealth is a great privilege, if rightly used, but the selfish misuse of it, to the forgetfulness of the poor and needy, is a crime, and forms a glaring breach of both tables of the moral law.

We regret to hear that, through the death of many of the friends of the work during the past two years, the "Evangelistic Mission" is greatly needing funds for the current expenses of its many branches. This Mission is doing a good work amongst the outlying masses of our city and country populations. We sincerely hope that new friends will be induced to come to its assistance, and that old helpers will liberally respond to the present need.

Rev. R. Dawson, Secretary of the London City Mission, in a letter sent to the Nonconformist and Independent, observes that there is a bright side as well as a dark one to the subject of "Outcast London." He very justly points to Ratcliff-highway and some districts of Shoreditch and the Borough, where Christian work has been long and vigorously carried on, and asks us to compare them with what they were twenty-five years ago. A volume, as he says, might be written, full of facts giving blessed proof of what the Gospel, faithfully and practically proclaimed, can, and has, effected in the most destitute homes of want, and even in the vilest dens of infamy. It is well to bear in mind that the case, sad as it is, is by no means hopeless, or beyond Gospel remedy.

Mr. Dawson fairly claims that much has been done through the labours of the City Mission with its 450 agents, and urges that amidst other schemes being started for dealing with districts yet unreached, the Mission he represents should receive greater support. We trust his plea will meet with the hearty response that it certainly deserves.

The following paragraph from a contemporary casts a painfully lurid light on one dark phase of our social life:—

"In connection with the suicide a few days ago of a young woman from one of the Thames bridges, a large number of persons came to view the body to identify it as their daughter, and no fewer than three did so identify it. They were all mistaken, as it happened; but the fact, nevertheless, is unpleasantly suggestive of the number of young women who must be at present wandering out of sight of their parents, and sufficiently unhappy, in the opinion of the latter, to commit suicide."

"Outcast London," alas! comprises many who are far removed from the ranks of the very poor, but whose lives are sadder and whose future is even darker than that of the unhappy starvelings over whom Society has lately been shedding its collective tear.

The Ecclesiastical Commissioners are doing something to atone for past transgressions as proprietors of public-houses. "The Golden Lion," near the Surrey end of Blackfriars Bridge, having been vacated, the Commissioners declined to transfer the license to a firm of brewers who applied for it. Moreover, they have let the premises to Mr. J. W. C. Fegan, of the Southwark Boys' Home, for half the rent offered by the brewers. Mr. Fegan has fitted them up as an evening resort for the many well-conducted working youths who live around the Home. It was opened on Monday week, and has already attained considerable success.

This work of sheltering the poorer youths of the city, and encouraging them in all that is lovely and of good report, is one the importance of which cannot be exaggerated. We sincerely trust this fresh effort by Mr. Fegan will not only be increasingly popular with the class for which it is intended, but will meet with the warmest support of all who have at heart the welfare of "our boys." Such men as Mr. Fegan in the South, Mr. Aulay Macaulay in the West, and Dr. Barnardo in the East, are real benefactors to the community.

Mr. and Mrs. George Muller made a brief stay at Colombo, Ceylon, en route for India, by the steamship Siam. Mr. Ferguson, editor of The Ceylon Observer, opened his house for a drawing-room meeting, at which Mr. Muller gave one of his characteristic addresses, urging his Christian friends to a simple and prayerful dependence on God for daily guidance and strength. Mr. and Mrs. Muller were greatly pleased with the glimpse they were able to get of the rich tropical vegetation and scenery of the spicy isle.

After twelve months' work with the "Short Blue Fishing Fleet," the committee of the Thames Church Mission have increased reason to thank God for having been led to extend their operations to the Deep Sea Fishermen. Numerous testimonies have reached them from the men themselves, who, of course, derive the most direct benefit. An exceedingly gratifying expression of opinion on the part of the owners of the fleet has just been made to the Society, and this is the more valuable as being entirely spontaneous. "Our men," say Messrs. Hewitt, "have been completely revolutionised. We believe that great good has been done, and we very gladly become annual subscribers of £10 10s. to the funds of the Mission." The following testimony was added verbally: "Any man in our employ who in future wishes to 'lie to' on the Lord's day, instead of fishing with the rest of the fleet, has our permission to do so."

Messrs. Moody & Sankey in London.

A VISITOR INTERVIEWED.

SUCH a popular and far-reaching movement as that in which Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey are the most prominent figures, ought to be looked at from many different points of view. Anyone whose duty it is to chronicle, as best he may, the course of the work, will welcome all the help he can procure in the discharge of an agreeable, but difficult task. Following the example of his ancient confrère, the "Jerusalem reporter," whom Mr. Moody imaginatively represents as "hunting for items" down the Jericho-road, one of our representatives chanced the other evening to encounter at the Priory Hall a much esteemed gentleman, whom he personally knew in connection with evangelistic work. This good friend had come from a distance of several hundred miles to be present, and to give a helping hand in the inquiry-room, where, it may be said, a long and happy experience has made him a winner of souls. He has been busy at it, at least, since the memorable days of awakening in Scotland and Ireland over twenty years ago. It need scarcely be said that Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings in each of the three kingdoms have had a share in his prayers and his personal endeavours. Though the snows of age are now thickly falling on this "brother beloved," he retains all the enthusiasm of youth Active service for his Master, combined with great natural geniality of temper, has yielded to him the rich reward of a green and fruitful old age.

After the warmest of mutual greetings, the writer asked his friend what he thought about the progress of the London work. "Come and breakfast with me to-morrow, and we will talk about it." The invitation was accepted with as much alacrity as it was given. Next morning found the reporter and the worker vis-à-vis at a table in the spacious coffee-room of a hotel at one of the London termini. The claims of nature were speedily satisfied, and then—to business. The art of interviewing has scarcely been acclimatised in this country as yet, and what follows will seem a very one-sided conversation. But this servant of the Lord needed no ingenious prompting or pumping. It might truly be said of him: "My heart is inditing a good matter: I speak of the things which I have made touching the King; my tongue is the pen of a ready writer." All that the scribe had to do, therefore, was to keep his pen moving apace, and to be silent:—

"Let me say I am delighted with these Priory Hall meetings—delighted with the immense audiences, and with the undoubted results. I feel most thankful to the Lord that He is giving to the two evangelists such a measure of bodily health and strength, and that their voices stand the strain so well. I think unceasing prayer should be made for them. I do believe that Mr. Sankey's voice is sweeter, rounder, and more melodious than it was years ago. I have been so thankful also to see such union and loving brotherhood among the ministers and other friends on the committee. I have been keeping my eyes open, and have been delighted to see how the secretaries and all those in charge of the details have worked together, so that everything goes on with smoothness and harmony. Then it has seemed to me a blessed thing to find some of your City men of large means not only on the platform but at work; in two instances particularly I have observed with Bible in hand earnestly engaged in conversing with anxious souls.

"Another thing has greatly cheered me. Certain London ministers, I believe, have said that they have not met with any of those said to be converted at the meetings eight years ago. On one night alone I suppose I saw from a dozen to twenty stand up—though they were not wanted to do so—and say that they were converted during the last visit of the evangelists. The fellows could not be kept silent; they thanked the Lord, not only for their own conversion, but for that of various members of their families, and for the way in which He had kept them steadfast. And here let me remark that I have heard of many cases of blessing through Mr. Sankey's singing. It is an undisputed fact that thousands go to these meetings to hear Mr. Sankey, and I consider the song a most essential feature of this work. Too much prayer cannot be made that our dear brother's heart and voice may be kept in tune. There are a thousand good talkers for one good singer. I am certain that these songs have a most blessed softening and sanctifying influence. I have often felt, too, that the few words of Scripture, the little anecdote, or the earnest prayer by Mr. Sankey before he sings, have a very wholesome effect in solemnising the minds of the people as they listen to the Gospel in the song.

"You ask about my personal experiences with inquirers? Well, I cannot say much about that; there is little use in your writing things that have been written a hundred times before. But I may say that I have been thankful to see so many competent workers dealing with the anxious ones in the after-meetings. I have noticed that to a large extent the women have spoken to those of their own sex, and the same with the young men. That I think is a very advisable thing. Now pardon me if I give a few the result of my own experience. The first thing a worker ought to do is to ascertain the special difficulty of the anxious one. Let him then endeavour to meet that difficulty out of the Scriptures, and closely confine the conversation as far as possible to that particular point. If the mind of the inquirer is satisfied on the special point that troubles him, as a rule he will jump immediately into spiritual peace; that, at any rate, is my experience. Having accomplished this, the worker may then go on to speak about the future. Many are afraid to trust Christ for salvation, because they think they will not hold out. It ought to be impressed on them that if they should yield to temptation, they must go to the Lord and confess the thing on the spot, pleading his promise, 'If ye confess your sins,' &c. Show them also that they have a living High Priest, an Advocate with the Father, One who will never repulse those who go to Him for help. Assure them also, from the Scripture, that if they have truly believed on the Lord Jesus, and trusted in Him for salvation, they are his once and for all; neither man nor devil can pluck them out of his hand, and that He has promised never to leave them or forsake them. My experience has been that when poor anxious souls are clearly made to understand these points, backsliding, as a rule, will be only temporary. They will return to their Lord much more quickly than others who have not been grounded in these blessed truths.

"In cases where the anxious have been addicted to any evil habit, such as that of yielding to strong drink, or opening their shops on the Lord's day after they had been enabled to trust the Lord as their Saviour, I would strongly urge them that, by the help of God, they must give it up altogether. I had cases of this kind the other night—one, a man in a good position, and having a Christian wife. He was utterly broken down, as I tried to show him the awful sin he had been guilty of in bringing such misery into his household through strong drink. I do not think, from what I saw of the man, that anything will tempt him to drink again, the other deciding not to open his cigar-shop again on the Lord's day. My experience of work among soldiers, sailors, police and others of that class in life leads me to believe that 95 per cent. of those who fall away do so through strong drink. The worker should avoid all mere controversies with the anxious seeker. If he should come in contact with a sceptic or an infidel he should at once make him withdraw to a place where the conversation will not be overheard by others, who are probably anxious, and would be distracted by the discussion. I saw a case of this kind in the hall the other night, and the effect was very bad. Sometimes the object of the sceptic is simply to scatter his poison, and he should not be allowed the opportunity of doing so.

"I think it is a good thing, when the worker has been enabled to point the inquirer to the Saviour, before separating to give him some passages or chapters bearing on his case for private reading at home. The other night I had a talk with three young men together. They just seemed to be hanging on my lips for guidance as to the future, and I was able to give them suitable portions of Scripture to read. This leads me to mention another point that seems to me of the greatest importance. During the present campaign in London, by a moderate calculation, Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey will probably reach, through the meetings, making allowance for those who will attend more than once. It is impossible to believe that by the present system of procedure all those who may be anxious, or who are brought to decision at these meetings, can be followed up; unless some steps are taken at once, many of those who profess to believe on Christ, humanly speaking, will never be heard of again, through change of residence and otherwise. It is most advisable, therefore, that the workers should take the names and addresses of those whom they have reason to believe are truly decided for the Lord, and should, as far as possible, communicate with them afterwards. It is well to write letters to them, if the worker has the time and is gifted in that respect—for it needs a special gift. But a good book sent to the young convert will often be of the greatest help, and will be eagerly read. For instance, I sent some little books to the three young men to whom I have already referred. The following night one of them came up to me (with a countenance beaming with joy)—the one whom I thought the least satisfactory of the three—and thanked me very heartily. He could only have got the two books that morning, but he told me he had nearly read the whole of the largest one, and he was delighted with it. I think it would be a good thing if some members of the committee would undertake to receive from any one contributions of books, such as Mr. Moody's Addresses and others that could be mentioned, suitable for this purpose. Many of the workers perhaps could not afford to provide them, and the same is true of most of the young converts themselves. But I doubt not there are those who would gladly help in such a good work; I would myself be glad to give 50,000 copies of a little book containing appropriate Scripture that has been greatly used in this work. In a city like London, with a large migratory population, it will be found that many of the converts will be lost sight of if they are left unvisited for a month; unless they are communicated with at once by sending them a good book or religious periodical, as I have suggested, they may never be heard of again by the workers.

"Just one other thing I would like to suggest, as it is, to my mind, a matter of the deepest importance. Committees would do well to arrange for prayer-meetings each evening, one to be held by the female workers, and the other by the males, in some adjacent building, while the earlier part of the meeting in the great hall is proceeding. These two companies should be in prayer to God for his blessing on the Word as it is at the moment being spoken by the evangelist. When the second meeting begins these two bands of praying workers should break up and go to the larger hall, to be ready for conversing with the anxious. They will be able to enter on this solemn work with much better preparation of the heart than they otherwise would be. I have had some experience of special evangelistic work among various classes in the place where I reside, and I attribute the success that has attended our meetings to the fact that we have adopted this plan. I have invariably found that the blessing in the after-meetings is in proportion to the amount of earnest, united prayer by the workers while the Gospel message is being delivered."

Reporter.—"You have helped, I understand, in giving out tickets at the Priory Hall, during the day, to those in the neighbourhood who personally applied for them?"

Worker.—"I have. There have been several workers always in attendance, both inside and outside the building. Many have come for tickets who were more or less concerned about their souls. We have prayed with them, and read the Scriptures with them; in fact, it has been a kind of continuous after-meeting. Some came in anxious for salvation, and left in possession of it."

As nearly as possible this is the bulk of the interesting and practical remarks of the worker to the reporter, who departed well-pleased with the interview, and mentally hoping that he might be able again to meet this good brother on some future day.

MEETING OF EAST-END MINISTERS.

This conference in St. Benet's Schools on Monday morning, November 19, was a very lively one. There was a good muster of local pastors and other earnest Christians belonging to the different sections of the Church. Although on some of the points discussed there was by no means complete unanimity of sentiment as to methods, there was substantial agreement on the whole. All seemed thoroughly in earnest, and anxious to secure for the coming meetings the conditions that would bring about the greatest results.

Before considering the East-end work, reports were given by three ministers from the North who had come down for the purpose, notwithstanding the early hour. When people get into the spirit of these meetings they do not appear to take the element of personal trouble into account. Rev. Ed. Stuart, of St. James's, Holloway, said that the work in the North of London had been wonderful in its results. One difficulty had been felt, which perhaps the clergy and ministers could do something to obviate—the Christian people crowding to the meetings, and taking up the best places. Rev. F. C. Lillingston said many more would have been blessed if they could have got into the meetings. It was extraordinary to see the spirit of inquiry among the people; when they were shut out of the larger meetings they gladly went to the overflows in Union Chapel, although the preachers there, with the exception of Mr. Sankey, were men they could hear any day.

Rev. C. Sawday, of Vernon Chapel, King's Cross, said he had been labouring for twenty years in the North, and he had never known such a spirit of desire among the people to hear the Gospel as he had met with the last fortnight. Having gone all through the Mission in the Agricultural Hall eight years ago, he did not hesitate to say that the work this time was far deeper than on that occasion. The district around Vernon Chapel was in some respects one of the worst in all "Outcast London," but he had found on the part of the ungodly a great desire to go and hear Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey; they had hardly met with a single rebuff in the work of visitation. It was also clearly proved at the ministers' meeting in Islington the previous Monday that the regular Sunday services had been as largely, and in some cases more largely, attended, notwithstanding the attractions at Priory-hall. He could add his testimony to what Mr. Lillingston had said after the "overflows:" Dr. Allon's Chapel was crowded night after night, and large numbers stood up for prayer in the after-meetings, many of them being educated and well-to-do people.

These testimonies were borne out by several of the East-end friends. Rev. W. Tyler said he had heard of some going to the meetings all the way from the east. A gentleman from the London Hospital said he was utterly astonished at the extent of the work that was being done. He had met with not a few cases in the hospital of those who were not in the habit of attending church or chapel, but had been blessed at these meetings.

A long and warm discussion followed as to the conduct of the coming meetings in the East. Ultimately it was agreed that the afternoon and evening meetings for the first week should be open to both men and women, but during the second week the evening gatherings should be limited to men. This course, though open to some objections, was considered to be the best fitted to reach the crowds of working men whose occupations prevented them from securing admission by an early attendance at the hall. The Children's Special Service Mission are to conduct meetings for children on Saturdays, and on the same evenings there will be Gospel Temperance gatherings. Arrangements are being made for overflow meetings, and altogether there is every indication of a good time when the evangelists break ground in the East.

THE WORK AT ISLINGTON.

The farewell meeting at Islington on Monday week was worthy of being reported in some detail; but so much has happened since that it can only be dismissed in a sentence or two. The hall was densely crowded; Union Chapel was also crowded by the overflow. Mr. Moody's last sermon at the Priory was a stirring exhortation to the new-born babes to seek and find all their well-springs in Christ, who is not only a Saviour, but a daily Deliverer, the Way, the Truth, the Life, and the Shepherd of the sheep. In his closing prayer Mr. Moody invoked God's richest blessing, not only on the converts, but on all who had taken any active part in the work—committee, stewards, choir, policemen, reporters, everybody. The after-meeting was a grand one; the very latest bit of work done on this Priory site was the pointing of anxious souls to the Saviour. So it was also at Union Chapel, whither Mr. Sankey had bent his footsteps after singing his last solo in the great building. Mr. James Balfour, of Edinburgh, spoke as well as Mr. Sankey, and a late hour in the evening found the latter still surrounded by groups of interested listeners, to whom he was expounding the way of life.

THE CHURCHES FOLLOWING UP.

The Mission at St. Mary's Parish Church, Islington, has concluded. It was conducted by Rev. S. Hutchinson, assisted by several clergymen and part of the Priory Hall choir. One could not be long in the old church during the Mission without being struck with the results of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit to the neighbourhood. The hymns and voices were the same, and the same spiritual influences were manifest. The clergy put the way of life plainly before the people, many of whom were willing and ready to receive Christ. It was not difficult to persuade them to remain for the after-meetings; they were already constrained. The Priory Hall Mission had broken the cursed spell of diffidence in speaking to the clergy. "I have wanted," said one inquirer, to Mr. Hutchinson, "to speak to you for twelve months past about my soul. I have no difficulty now."

Every house in the district was visited in one day. A churchwarden, who looked at first with suspicion upon the Mission, was found singing tenor in the choir the second evening. Several working-men who were impressed at Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings were amongst the inquirers, and found peace. Some of them turned out and invited the people on the next evening At one of the services Rev. Daniel Wilson, vicar, said he was thankful to see so many present. He hoped that in many cases a lasting impression would be produced, and that all of them might be quickened and strengthened spiritually. They were apt to be satisfied with mere outward service. He hoped that the continuation of the meetings for a few more days would strengthen and deepen the work of God amongst them.

Several aged persons have found the Saviour. A man and his wife, both over sixty years of age, were saved at one of the after-meetings. This great work of God is spreading and deepening amongst many families.

The special services at Vernon Chapel commenced on November 25. Last week Rev. C. B. Sawday preached four times at Upper Holloway (Rev. J. R. Woods), and once at Cross-street; in both places the special services have been well attended, with gracious results.

BY MR. J. J. ATKINSON, PRIORY Y.M.C.A.

Words fail to convey an idea of the remarkable results of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Mission in Islington. The fourteen days can never be forgotten by those who had the privilege to watch the workings or take part in the ministration. For weeks beforehand the members of the Priory Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association had, with one heart and voice, wrestled with God in prayer that showers of blessing might fall upon the spot made sacred and memorable to hundreds of young men in all parts of the world. These prayers were abundantly answered. Whole households have yielded their hearts to the Lord; hundreds of backsliders have been restored. Not only were workers diligent in the inquiry-room, but in every nook of the Priory grounds earnest men and women, whose faces told that the burden of souls was resting upon them, might be seen rescuing outsiders, and pointing them to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world." The afternoon Bible-readings were times of refreshing to the children of God, lifting us out of this struggling life, and giving a foretaste of the higher communion.

Mr. Henry Thorne conducted some overflow-meetings in the Y.M.C.A. Priory Hall, and the Lord gave him conversions every evening. He commenced a Mission to young men only on Tuesday, Nov. 20; although the numbers are not large, owing to the special Missions in nearly every local church, God is owning his labours. The first night a gentleman from Wales, who came expecting to hear Mr. Moody, upon finding that he had left came into the Hall. God met him; he yielded his heart to Christ, and went back to his home rejoicing. Results must be left until the light of eternity reveals every man's work.

DOWN LODGE HALL, WANDSWORTH.

After a fortnight's hard and continuous work at Islington, it might have been expected that the day's Evangelists would interpose at least a single rest between the closing there and the opening at the south side. Not so. Little more than a round of the clock elapsed after the last echo of their voices died away in the Priory Hall, ere the same voices were sounding out the message of salvation by speech and song in the Wandsworth building.

In several respects the transition from north to south was a marked one. Islington is a great centre of population; Wandsworth is a straggling suburb. Islington is, perhaps, the most zealous and the most united, in an evangelistic sense, of any district in the whole of the metropolis; Wandsworth is not credited with enjoying such warmth and cohesion—"dead and alive" is the expressive adjective we have heard applied to it. However that may be, the first week's work in Down Lodge Hall has given ample cause of rejoicing. The hall, built in the corner of Dr. Watney's grounds, has been the rallying point for many of the earnest pastors and Christian workers, not only in the immediate neighbourhood, but from such places as Richmond, Wimbledon, &c. Curiously enough, the opening meetings, like those at Islington, were signalised by a storm of wind and rain. If the spiritual breezes blow and the showers of blessing fall as they did in the north, Wandsworth will have good cause to be grateful for the visit of the evangelists.

And we believe it will have abundant cause. The sowing and the reaping began together. The first afternoon gathering did not fill more than two-thirds of the great hall, but it was a most solemn and fruitful season. Mr. Sankey sang "Nothing but leaves," and "Here am I; send me." Mr. Moody spoke with unusual vigour and effectiveness on the need of faith, courage, perseverance, and sympathy on the part of believers if those outside were to be brought in. Almost everybody stayed for the prayer-meeting, at which Mr. Joseph Balfour, of Edinburgh, told a remarkable story of answered prayer, thus encouraging the audience to cast their burdens on the Lord. Many of them did so; a stream of touching petitions, briefly expressed, on behalf of unsaved relatives and friends, poured in from all parts of the hall, and not a few stood up to request prayer on their own behalf. This was repeated in an increasing ratio at each afternoon meeting during the week. On Friday afternoon Mr. Moody said he was greatly encouraged by the growth of the interest, and urged the Christians to redoubled faith and effort during the remainder of the Mission. At this meeting more than 100 rose for prayer.

The evening meetings have been crowded (after the first evening to overflowing), and the power of God has rested on the truth both spoken and sung. The audiences have evidently been of the very kind whose attendance was desired, and if the experiences of the workers could be collected, they would show that great numbers who once were afar off have, by the saving grace of God, been brought nigh to Himself.

CHILDREN'S SERVICE.

On Saturday afternoon there was a Children's Service, in Down Lodge Hall, arranged for by the Children's Special Service Mission, and conducted by Mr. J. W. Jordan, who was supported by a large number of other workers in this Mission. The attendance altogether reached about 1400, and there was the utmost quiet and attention throughout the service. Mr. Jordan's address was upon the word "Sins," shown in red letters on a large sheet, which, read downwards, formed an acrostic. Only one line was uncovered at a time, as each division of the subject was reached, but at last the children could read "Saviour, I * * * , Need Salvation," and they were told each to put their own name into the blank space after the word "I." Not only the need of salvation but also the way of salvation was very simply and clearly explained, and earnestly enforced. We have no doubt there will be a still larger gathering for Mr. Jordan next Saturday.

LAST SUNDAY'S MEETINGS.

Taking it first and last, Sunday was a great day in Down Lodge Hall. Mr. Moody remarked during the week that he had been told that Wandsworth people did not rise early enough on the Lord's day to attend an 8 o'clock meeting. This information was not altogether incorrect, for the numbers at the early meeting were not up to the customary standard on such occasions. Mr. Sankey's rousing and tuneful messages were "It may be in the morning," and "Must I empty-handed go?" Very fervent were the responses to the petitions by those leading in prayer for rich blessing on all the varied engagements of the day, not alone at the hall, but throughout the neighbourhood.

Mr. Moody's exhortation was based on the word "Willingly" (Ex. xxv. 2). It is not the value of the gift we bring to God that He regards, but the spirit in which it is brought. He asks his children for heart service. Those who have but one talent—and every Christian has that, at the least—are as pleasing in his sight as those who have many, provided it be faithfully used in his service. Among the incidents used by Mr. Moody to illustrate the subject was the story of the Sunday-school teacher who had no particular scruples about being absent from her Sunday class, because it consisted of "only five little boys." "Why," exclaimed the speaker, "in one of these five little boys a new Reformation may be slumbering." At the close he asked if it were a great thing to expect that 500 of his hearers would each lead one soul to the Saviour during the week. He asked all who were willing to be used in this way to rise, and a goodly number responded.

The forenoon meeting was large and good. Mr. Sankey's second solo, "My Mother's Prayer," appeared to effect some of the audience greatly. At the outset of his discourse Mr. Moody remarked that the reason so many were moved to tears at the song was because the word "mother" is the sweetest in the English language. A woman sitting near the front was constrained to lift up her voice and say, "Especially when the mother is a kind one." Mr. Moody went on to speak, in a grandly impressive address, of the "Love of God," with which even a mother's love will not bear comparison. The after-meeting was a reaping-time of great power.

The women's meeting in the afternoon was another season of profound interest, and the manifest presence of the Lord. Mr. Sankey having sung "I shall be Satisfied," Mr. Moody expatiated on the cry of a weary world for rest, and the impossibility of finding it anywhere but in Christ. He related a circumstance which, he said, had much encouraged him. The other evening four men left the meeting to go to their homes by train, in company with a Christian worker. On quitting the meeting they were undecided, but ere the journey had ended three of them had crossed the border-line of decision. The fourth took the same step before the next day had dawned, and all four are now rejoicing in the assurance of salvation. In the after-meeting the workers present were not sufficiently numerous to deal with the inquirers individually, and the latter had therefore to be spoken to in groups.

A grand audience greeted the Evangelists at the evening hour. The central area of the hall was one solid phalanx of men. Every foot even of standing room seemed taken up, and there must have been close on 6000 persons within the walls. Mr. Sankey having sung "The Ninety and Nine" and "What shall the Harvest be?" Mr. Moody proceeded to unfold the eternal truth that "whatever a man soweth that shall he also reap." The great audience hung on the lips of the preacher, many of them listening with eyes and ears and mouth. At the close of the discourse probably not more than 1500 persons left, and to this leviathan after-meeting Mr. Moody addressed himself. Having in his sermon sent the sharp ploughshare of conviction up and down the congregation, he now sounded out the Gospel message of forgiveness to the repentant. When it came at last to the testing time, and he called for responses from all who were willing to take up their cross in the public confession of Christ, the "I wills" came thick and fast from every point of the compass. Some of them were given with wonderful emphasis, as if the speaker had resolutely determined to take the step advised by the preacher. Quoting Isa. xii. 2, Mr. Moody exclaimed "Get both your feet fair and square on this word of the Lord, and then the waves of hell will come dashing up against you in vain." Many more "I wills." "Am I making it too easy, Mr. Rainsford? They can come if they will, can they not?" "Yes; whosoever will let him come." I could stand here all night and see these young men getting up," Mr. Moody continued, as the responses flowed in. "We want a great band of young men to come out boldly on the Lord's side, do we not, Mr. Williams?" "That is the very thing we want," quoth Mr. George Williams. By and by, as all heads were bowed in silence, Mr. Moody asked that those who had spoken out, and any others who had not reached the deciding point, should stand; a great company did so, and when the second meeting was at length dismissed, there was ample occupation for the workers in pointing the wavering and the doubters to the Saviour.

INCIDENTS OF THE WORK.

If one could but follow the far-reaching ramifications of this awakening, a most marvellous story would be the result. Now and then an incident comes to light that illustrates the way in which the good work spreads and grows. Here is one case. When the Evangelists were in Ireland, a Christian widow heard Mr. Moody speak of the blessing that followed the faith of the four men who brought their palsied friend to the Saviour. The message went straight to her heart, and she at once began to act upon it. She had a young son engaged in commercial pursuits in England, for whose salvation she longed. She mentioned the matter to a friend, and said she believed the Lord would save her boy, though at that moment she could not see how it was to be brought about. The answer to her desire came sooner, perhaps, than she expected. Her friend gave her an introduction to the gentleman whose work in following up these meetings, and writing letters to young disciples, has already been described in our columns.

The mother wrote to this Christian gentleman giving particulars, and entreating him in some way to get her boy within the saving influence of the Gospel at these London meetings. The young man resides in a country town at some distance from the metropolis. It was arranged with his employers that he should be released from business so as to enable him to spend a Sunday in London, and attend the meetings in Priory Hall, returning to his work on the Monday morning. He came up to town, and was entertained by the friend to whom his mother had written. He attended three of the meetings in the Priory Hall on the second Sunday there. To make a long story short, he was deeply impressed by Mr. Moody's evening sermon to men, on "Tekel," and was the same night led to a conscious acceptance of salvation, through the kind and faithful words of his host. Next day he went back to his provincial home, and began at once to confess Christ, testifying before others of the grace of God that had saved him, and was saving many others through these meetings. It need scarcely be added that the mother's heart is rejoiced beyond measure at the result; another member of her family was converted at the meetings in Ireland, while her own faith and love have been greatly stimulated.

A young lady residing some score of miles distant from Cork, went to one of the meetings there and was greatly blessed in her soul. Writing afterwards to a friend she said she was induced to go through hearing the meetings and the Evangelists spoken against; she wished to judge for herself.

The following is an extract from a letter by a lady in Cork, who attended one of the meetings there, accompanied by a young nephew: "Mr. Moody's sermon has had a great effect on little Harry. He is only sorry he had no opportunity of telling Mr. Moody that he accepted Christ at one of the meetings. He and I were on the front row, just under the preacher. Mr. Moody fixed his eyes on little Harry's earnest face looking up at him drinking in every word. In a pause, Mr. Moody said, 'My boy, I have good news for you to-night; I offer you pardon and salvation, through Jesus Christ.' Those were the words, as nearly as I can remember. Ever since Harry has made up his mind that he accepts the offer; the child really has given up his self-willed ways, and obeys me now in every way. With a little nod and whisper he says, 'You know, auntie, I accepted the offer, and I get help now to give up my own way.'"

A worker at the Priory Hall noticed one woman with a sorrow-stricken face. A few words of inquiry brought out the words, almost choked with sobs, "I've tried and tried to be good, but it's no use; I grow worse and worse the more I try." She was pointed to Jesus, and after a brief struggle, she said, "I will trust, and not be afraid." Her name was given, but, alas! she could give no address. Drink had robbed her of a good situation. Christian friends have placed her in service, where it is hoped her future life will prove that being much forgiven she loves much.

On another seat sat a respectably-dressed woman, with a hard look on her face. Beside her was her daughter, one who knows Jesus. With thankfulness she saw a Christian worker drew near; the mother did not wish to be spoken to. A few questions, and the difficulty came out. She had a quick temper, and thought she could not be a Christian. She was pointed to Him who is "Mighty to save," and "Mighty to keep." The hard look died on her face and tears gathered in her eyes. With a few words of earnest prayer she cast herself at Jesus' feet. A hearty "God bless you!" and a warm shake of the hand, and mother and daughter, rejoicing together, parted from their friend and went home.

The crowd passed out one evening after the wonderful story of the Prodigal Son had been told with great power. At the end of a seat sat a woman. The address, she said, had interested her, and she would like to hear more. A worker brought her nearer the front, and sat beside her. "Would you like to know that your sins are forgiven?" "It would be no use," was the quick answer; "I have a wicked, blaspheming husband; what is the use of my going one way and him another?" "Why should you both perish?" "I don't want to be lost, but I am a sinful woman." "Will you not say, like the young man Mr. Moody has been speaking of, 'I have sinned?'" On her knees a short, true prayer was uttered, "O God, I have sinned; save me!" Before leaving she said, "I'll go straight and tell my husband; I'm so glad I stayed to-night."

The Pall Mall Gazette quotes from The Tablet the following "Catholic view of Messrs. Moody and Sankey:"—"Where is the secret of the success of Moody and Sankey? Well, we Catholics need make no difficulty in admitting that the undoubted zeal and earnestness of these American evangelists is divinely blessed. 'Spiritus Domini replevit orbem terrarum.' Nor, however defective the teaching of these missioners may be, can we but sympathise with their hearty endeavours to bring under the influence of the Gospel, as they conceive of it, those who are living 'without God in the world.' If they make the powers of the world to come a reality, and the first of realities, to many who had not before thought of anything but this visible scene and its petty interests; if they present 'a God to pray to,' before multitudes who had only known of one 'to swear by;' if they reclaim thousands from sin to virtue—and that they do this is open to no doubt—so far we hold that they are doing a good work, and wish them God speed. So far. But no farther."

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Wallingford.—Captain Baring has, through the past week, held services in the Town-hall here, which was crowded every night; consequently we had to adjourn to the Corn Exchange on Sunday, where nearly a thousand people met both afternoon and evening to hear the Gospel faithfully preached. The impression made upon numbers was very remarkable. C. F.

Southwick.—Mr. Israel Sida has just concluded a ten days' mission at this place. He writes: "From the first the meetings were well attended; the school-room was crowded each night, and after-meetings were held, with glorious results. Special meetings were held for men only, and women only, also for children." He will be glad to help any clergyman, and may be addressed, 46, New-road, Littlehampton.

Crow, Hampshire.—Mr. M. Boyd has been labouring here with much success. One incident, mentioned by a correspondent, is that of nearly every person employed on one farm being converted. The farmer now gathers his men daily for prayer. At Lower Kingston the same encouraging results have been realised. Sinners have found peace in Jesus. Prayer is asked for Mr. Boyd's labours at Colchester and elsewhere.

Newsome.—Mr. G. H. Somerset Gardner has just held a successful ten days' Mission here. Meetings took place every morning for children, and every afternoon, in the mill sheds of Messrs. Tayler and Littlewood, for the factory hands. The Mission services closed on Sunday week, when the evangelists had an extra afternoon service in the Parish Church, for men only. In the evening it was a cheering sight to see the communion rails crowded by anxious seekers. Mrs. Somerset Gardner also held daily meetings in the parish schoolroom, for women only; on the closing day over 250 were present.

Mr. Charles Carter, well known to many of our readers as a faithful preacher of the Gospel in connection with the Evangelisation Society, recently left for Australia on board the Carlisle Castle, for the benefit of his health. A letter has come from Mr. Carter, stating that he has safely arrived. He reports much blessing on the journey; several on board ship appear to have been brought to a saving knowledge of the truth.

Michaelchurch, Ross.—The Lord is giving us good times among the people in the locality. We opened our house for simple Gospel meetings, only expecting some neighbours. The people are thronging from all the villages around from five to six miles; the numbers are growing every week, with signs following, till we do not know where to pack them. We get about 170 into our house. I believe, by what we see already, the Lord is going to give a shower of blessing on this place. S. P. Diprose.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith have conducted a very successful Mission during this month at Lake-road Chapel, Portsmouth. Many persons have professed to find the Saviour at the meetings. On Sunday week, at the early meeting at 7 o'clock, about 1200 persons were present, though the rain came down in torrents. The services for men only, and for women only, have been attended by over 2300 each time. On Sunday, not only was the spacious chapel crowded, but the large schoolroom adjoining was also closely packed. The Word has been proclaimed by our brethren with great power and unction.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

There are over 10,000 pledged abstainers belonging to the Soldiers' Total Abstinence Association in India.

Messrs. Booth and Glover, the Gospel Temperance evangelists, will sail for Melbourne by the ss. Orient, from Plymouth, November 30.

The Prince of Montenegro, a short time since, issued an order closing all the drinking-places in his dominions. The Emperor of Japan has appointed a commission to consider methods of achieving the same result.

The Southern Cross says:—Mr. J. W. Child, evangelist, has just held a Gospel Temperance Mission in Ballarat. As one of the results of the Mission, between 600 and 700 signed the pledge of total abstinence, and over 1500 put on the Blue Ribbon.

City of London Total Abstinence Union.—The first of a series of meetings in the larger warehouses of the City and districts was held on Monday, November 19, at the rooms of Messrs. J. and R. Morley, Charterhouse-street. Mr. Samuel Morley presided. The object of the Union is to promote total abstinence amongst business young men. During the evening an able address was given by Mr. W. Barker, Q.C., bearing more particularly on the social aspect of the question, followed by an able and telling speech from Dr. H. S. Paterson, who brought home with great force and power the medical side of this question. Following this meeting will come other warehouses, such as Messrs. Meeking; Maple; Tapling; Brown, Davies; Sharp, Perrin; Seaincourt and Colman; Spreckley, White and Lewis, &c.

The Church of England Temperance Society held its twenty-first anniversary in St. James's Hall, on the 20th inst., at which the Lord Mayor (who presided), the Bishops of Rochester and Carlisle, and others spoke. Speaking of the misery of the poor of London the Bishop of Rochester said that until we could succeed in changing the habits of the people, and deliver them from the curse of the demon drink, that misery would continue. Canon Leigh advocated the guarantee fund of £25,000, towards which £2000 had been subscribed, for the purpose of helping forward the work of the society, and meeting the numerous calls now pressing upon them. Several working men bore testimony to the good work of the society, and to the benefits of total abstinence. The Conference of the Women's Union of the Society, which was held at Exeter Hall on Wednesday morning, was very successful. The Rev. Canon Ellison gave some startling statistics relating to grocers' licences, which go far to show the urgent need for repressive legislation. There are no fewer than 2696 shops in London so licensed, and these circulate 10,000,000 bottles of spirits annually.

MR. HASLAM AT WESTON-SUPER-MARE.

THE Mission just concluded at Christ Church, Weston-super-Mare, conducted by Rev. W. Haslam, has been one which has manifested the character of God as the Hearer and Answerer of prayer in a very signal manner. The Vicar, Rev. Colin Campbell, together with his church workers and others, had for many weeks past united together in praying for a blessing, and besides this they had spared no trouble in making the necessary preparations, a matter most essential to the success of a Mission.

Though having a commodious church, seating more than 700 persons, it was thought advisable to provide extra accommodation, and with great ingenuity over 300 sittings were added. Not in vain; for every night they were filled by an eager and attentive congregation. On the last Sunday all efforts failed to make room for the numbers who flocked to the church. The night being dark and wet it was a great disappointment to the many who had to be turned away.

The Lord Himself was present by the power of his Spirit to own and bless the earnest pleadings of the Mission preacher. His originality and peculiar power of proclaiming the Gospel in a simple and forcible manner produced great effect, and there is abundant reason to believe that God has used his servant in a marvellous way, by bringing home the truth to the hearts of hundreds. The addresses were so arranged as to reach all classes. With solemn warning the condition of the unsaved was set forth, and, thank God, many were persuaded to yield themselves up as "lost and undone" to the Saviour of sinners, and they are now rejoicing in forgiveness. The unhappy condition of the backslider was also vividly set forth, so as to constrain not a few to "return unto the Lord." Believers have been aroused to their privilege of working not for salvation, but out of love to Him who saved them. More than this, they have been cheered and animated with the bright and glorious hope of the Christian—the Coming of the Lord. This was the special subject of some of the morning addresses.

The Mission was brought to a close on Tuesday week, by a service of Praise and Thanksgiving. Large numbers of requests for praise were sent in. At the close more than 300 communicants remained and partook of the Lord's Supper.

Meetings for women were held every afternoon by Mrs. Haslam in the Mission Hall. Day after day it was found necessary to get promises from some not to attend, in order to make room for others to do so. Thus has God answered prayer, in not only making the people willing to come, but by bles sing them when they came.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.—A few days ago Mr. Henry Green, the well-known shipowner, kindly presided at an interesting meeting, held to commemorate the first anniversary of the opening of the Tilbury Mission Hall. It appeared from a statement by Mr. E. J. Mather, secretary, that the provision for the instruction of the navvies now at work in the docks had been well appreciated, as was evident from the number in attendance. It was very interesting to hear addresses from the working-men themselves, who testified to the good they had received since the hall was opened. One young navvy excited special interest by telling the manner in which he had been led to give his heart to the Saviour. He had been attracted to the hall by hearing voices within singing, "Where is my wand'ring boy to-night?" On Friday evening last Mr. Mather gave his interesting illustrated address before a large audience in the National Schools, Trinity Church, North Hampstead. Bishop Parry presided.

Notices of Books, &c.

THROUGH THE BIBLE is the title of a new calendar and almanack for reading through the Scriptures in a year. Hamilton, Adams and Co.

GOSPEL AND TEMPERANCE STORIES. By L. F. MAUDE-HAMILL. 337, Strand, W.C. Good stories for young people, written in a pleasant style, and intended as a Christmas gift.

SONGS OF CHEER FOR HOURS OF PAIN, by Rev. C. BULLOCK, 1, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., have reached their twenty-fifth thousand—a good proof of their popularity and worth.

SEVEN BLESSINGS FROM THE BOOK OF PSALMS, AND OTHER BIBLE THOUGHTS, by M. E. (Richard Willoughby, 27, Ivy-lane), is well got up, and furnishes good reading for saint and sinner.

Mr. John Shrimpton's LETTER TO SCHOOL BOYS is now published in a very neatly-bound book form. 1s. Nisbet & Co. Boys, old and young, ought to be the better for reading these manly, Christian words of counsel and advice.

The Christmas number of THE GRAPHIC (1s.) is perhaps more attractive than any previous issue of this popular serial. The two large coloured plates are sure to have a permanent place on many nursery walls. It is a wonderful production.

A very choice and varied collection of CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR CARDS, is furnished by Messrs. Marcus Ward & Co., Chandos-street, W.C. For gracefulness in design and richness in colouring, they will compare well with any in the market.

THE ANGEL IN THE MARBLE, AND OTHER PAPERS. By GEORGE F. PENTECOST, D.D. Hodder & Stoughton. A very helpful collection of short practical papers, applying the great truths of Scripture to the daily and hourly walk of the believer. The chapters on "Little Things" and "Salvation" are especially excellent.

THE WILLOW PATTERN. By Rev. HILDERIC FRIEND, late Missionary in Canton, China. T. Woolmer. A picture of the domestic and religious life of the Chinese. The volume is a striking account of the dreadful and awful superstition in which the "Celestials" live, and a strong plea that they should have a place in our sympathy and prayers.

We have received several packets of Mrs. GRIMKÈ'S landscape, ship, and flower illuminated text-cards; they are exquisitely got up, with portions of Scripture in bold letters, both appropriate and attractive. We very cordially commend them to our readers. The large floral and landscape quarto text cards in English, Chinese, and Urdu, are beautifully got up, and well worth framing. They may be had of Mrs. Grimkè, Prestwich, Manchester.

THE VOICE OF JESUS DAY BY DAY. F. M. MACRAE. Nisbet & Co. The author provides in this little volume refreshing spiritual good for faint and weary pilgrims on the heavenward journey. Dr. Hugh Macmillan writes a commendatory preface, in which he pays a well-deserved tribute to the success of her effort. Poetry, narrative, and Bible comments combine to form a most interesting and helpful book, alike instructive and consolatory.

ADDRESSES DELIVERED ON VARIOUS OCCASIONS. By the Rev. FRANCIS PIGOU, D.D. Nisbet & Co. These addresses are mainly occupied with the Christian ministry, its discouragements, responsibilities, results, &c. There are chapters on Woman's Work, and on Revivals, which have not a few good and useful points. Allowing for a stronger spice of sacramentalism than we care to partake of, there is very much in the book that is calculated to be of service to those who form the classes addressed.

STUDIES IN THE CHRISTIAN EVIDENCES. By ALEX. MAIR, D.D. T. & T. Clark. A decidedly useful and valuable contribution to the theological literature of our times. It is not written for professional students or scientific men, but for thoughtful people who have been brought into contact with the doubts and difficulties of the age, with a view to strengthen their faith, and confirm them in their adherence to orthodox truth. Such books, in days of mental disquietude like the present, are to be cordially welcomed, and warmly commended.

CHRISTIAN WOMANHOOD. By MARY PRYOR HACK. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. A third galaxy of godly women whose useful lives are here presented by Miss Hack's pleasing pen, for the benefit and emulation of their sisters. The best known to the public are the last Duchess of Gordon and Miss F. R. Havergal, but each in her special sphere was a telling witness to the goodness and grace of God, and adorned the doctrine of their common Lord and Master. A most excellent gift book for young ladies.

Mr. Abraham Kingdon, 52, Moorfields, Moorgate-street, has just brought out an abbreviated sketch, in French, of the life of Stephen Grellet, a small book of about fifty pages, but full of the most striking incidents, showing how God led and prepared this young man to be a bright and shining witness for the truth. Those who can read French will find much pleasure and profit in its perusal.

MORAL EDUCATION. An Elementary Manual for the use of Schools, Colleges, and Families. By Rev. PETER PRESCOTT. 2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. In this useful manual facts and incidents, biographical and historical, have been drawn from various quarters. It shows how education, to be worthy of the name, must appeal to the whole nature of man, to the heart as well as the head. The purpose of the work is to lay deep in youthful minds the foundations of morality. The author asks, "Since the great majority of our legislators have received their education at the large public schools, if, in those schools, they had received sound and thorough instruction in the principles of morality, would the opium traffic ever have been suffered to come into existence?" He thinks that the Golden Rule is as worthy of being taught, and as necessary, as the Rule of Three. Most readers will be of opinion that he might have expressed it even more emphatically.

A POPULAR INTRODUCTION TO THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE. By Rev. T. G. CRIPPEN. T. and T. Clarke. Those who desire to trace the stream of human opinion through the manifold currents of religious thought back to the fountain-head from which originally the stream of sacred truth gushed forth, cannot do better than commit themselves to the guidance of Mr. Crippen. Rare assiduity of research, clearness and fairness of expression, mingled with thoroughness of detail and plan, mark his work. As a handbook to the history of the numerous sects and parties, creeds and formulas, practices and beliefs which have divided Christendom from earliest times until now, the volume is unequalled. More scholarly and philosophic works on the subject have been written, but none more useful or impartial. It is an indispensable manual for inquiring minds, interested in the investigation of truth.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL PUBLICATIONS.

Among the new books and new editions issued from the Sunday School Union, Old Bailey, suitable for presents and prizes during the coming season, the palm must be given to Mr. James Crowther's contributions. THE UNWRITTEN RECORD, THE STORY OF THE WORLD WE LIVE IN (2s. 6d.), is worthy of a place in every Sunday-school library. In a fascinating manner the author ranges the world, so to say, from cellar to garret, and from the storehouse of nature and the relics of antiquity, produces innumerable proofs to confirm the Scripture story. UNCLE JAMES' SKETCH BOOK (1s.), written in the same engrossing style, but for younger children, unfolds some wonderful features of animal and insect life. CELEBRATED DUNCES (2s. 6d.), by Tom Brown, consists of short but entertaining biographies of dull and backward boys who became great men. Its heroes, however, are not all alike worthy of emulation, being gathered from a wide circle and of various degrees of excellence. MISS BLAKE'S TINIES (1s. 6d.) cannot be too highly commended. It reads like the real experiences of the devoted Sunday-school teacher of a large infant class. ANTHONY ROGERS (1s. 6d.) also denotes a close personal acquaintance with the thoughts and ways of the working classes. COUSIN DORRY, OR THREE MEASURES OF MEAL (1s. 6d.), happily relates how a good example told upon the characters of some ill-behaved children. A LIFE'S MOTTO (1s. 6d.), is interesting, but rather sensational, and WILLIE ANSON (1s.), appear to be written to inspire boys with the right motives for getting on in life. In KIDNAPPED (1s.), a Tale of the Last Century, by Ascott R. Hope, boys will find something infinitely more to their own taste. MISS STEPNEY'S FORTUNE, ALICE WILMOT'S SECRET, and GERTY'S CHILDHOOD, are prettily-got-up sixpenny books for girls, by well-known writers. The annual volume of THE CHILD'S OWN MAGAZINE (cloth, 1s. 6d.) is a charming book for the little ones, full of pictures, poetry, and easy reading. The S. S. Union have also issued an attractive series of New Year addresses. That addressed to S. S. teachers by Dr. Culross, entitled WHAT ARE YOU AIMING AT? is specially good, and together with THE SETTING FORTH AND THE RETURN, for elder scholars, by Mr. F. J. Belsey, J.P., of Rochester, should have a wide circulation. THIS HOUSE TO LET, FURNISHED, addressed to boys and girls, is capital; we can answer that every recipient will read it. Two thoughtful addresses to parents, entitled CHRISTIAN NURTURE and TAKE CARE, complete the list. The same house also send us three new packets of reward cards, entitled PRECIOUS PEARLS, DIAMONDS FROM THE MINE OF TRUTH, and WONDROUS WORDS OF LOVE, containing well-chosen texts adorned with naturally arranged groups of flowers and grasses. It was a happy thought to gather into portable shape a collection of the S. S. U. sheets of hymns suitable for Christmas. These we have in TWENTY-ONE CHRISTMAS HYMNS AND SONGS, quarto shape, containing most of the old favourites, and in SIXTEEN CHRISTMAS PIECES, with the music both in old notation and tonic sol-fa; both books are strongly bound up at 2d. each. THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER'S POCKET BOOK contains all that is necessary by way of programme for a teacher who uses the International Lessons; it gives other useful matter, with room for notes.

MESSRS. JOHN F. SHAW & CO.'S BOOKS.

A very attractive budget of seasonable books comes from this enterprising house. NORA CLINTON; OR, DID I DO RIGHT? (3s. 6d.) by Emilie Brodie, is a girl's book of a thoroughly wholesome tone, and written in an earnest, thoughtful style. It deals with things of to-day, and practically disposes with a light, though skilled, touch, of many doubts and difficulties which enter into the experience of young people. The evils of Continental schools are forcibly illustrated, and altogether the book is one to be heartily recommended for a girl's perusal and profit.—WALTER ALISON: HIS FRIENDS AND FOES (3s. 6d.), by L. M. Ridley, is a well-worked-out story; if rather romantic and improbable as to plot, we feel sure the boys will like it, for its bright bracing peep into boy-ways, both at home and abroad.—MARJORY'S PROBATION: CHAPTERS FROM A LIFE STORY (3s. 6d.), by J. S. Ranking, is very simply told, but written with a gentle pathos that will touch the heart. It sets forth the power of Divine grace in the life of the heroine (there are, indeed, two heroines) over what at first appears to be a lifelong sorrow, and the gradual perfection of her character in the "cleansing fires" of affliction, when taken from the great Refiner's hand.—ALICK'S HERO (3s. 6d.), by Catherine Shaw, is from beginning to end bright, helpful, and good. "Alick's Hero" is a youth who, with the ordinary temptations of such as himself, is enabled to resist his "giants" and to come off conqueror, through the grace that is in Christ Jesus. He and Alick are not impossible boys, and Mrs. Shaw has added to our delight in noble boyhood, as well as to her own reputation, in this latest and most charming of her works. HIS MOTHER'S BOOK (2s. 6d.), by the Author of "Little Freddie." This short story, consisting largely of the briefest dialogue, might have been issued in a shilling form for the amount of matter which it contains. The story itself is rather improbable, and though its aim and motive are good, there is no encouragement to merely human boys in the almost immaculate character of "Little Bill." BLIND NETTIE; OR, SEEKING HER FORTUNE (1s.), by Louise Marston. This prettily-told, interesting tale will win golden opinions from a large class of readers. It tells of the life and aims of a poor blind girl who, in her efforts to gain a livelihood for herself and father, comes upon "the unsearchable riches," and so realises her fortune. CHICK; OR, YET THERE IS ROOM (1s), by M. S. McRitchie. We can say nothing of "Chick" that is not praise; it is a sweetly tender story of a child who, in simple faith receives, and in heroic trust testifies for, "King Jesus." There is good, thoughtful writing in this little volume, and one bright, uplifting hope marks its tone and teaching throughout. SOMETHING FOR SUNDAY (Second Series), HAPPY HOURS WITH THE BIBLE, by C. Shaw (1s.) Forty-eight Bible subjects which will be welcomed by parents and teachers of the young as one of the best and most profitable means of spending a Sunday hour or two, that has yet been devised. Even the youngest may take part in this interesting plan for "searching the Scriptures."

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

THE BAND OF HOPE REVIEW (1s.), Partridge & Co., is also as full as ever of good things for the young, both in matter and illustrations.

CASSELL'S ILLUSTRATED ALMANACK (6d.) maintains its reputation for attractiveness and for variety of useful information.

THE FAMILY FRIEND (2s. 6d.), S. W. Partridge and Co., is beautiful without and within; plenty of good reading for the older members of the family, and abundance of fine pictures for the children, with music for all.

Old Jonathan. 1s. 6d. W. H. & L. Collingridge. This old-established favourite contains, in addition to much interesting reading, excellent engravings of the late Mr. T. B. Smithies, the late Archbishop of Canterbury, Printers' Almshouses, Wood-green, &c.

The British Workman Volume for 1883 (1s. 6d.). Partridge & Co. This volume has a special interest, as containing a life-like portrait of its late editor, Mr. T. B. Smithies. The beautiful pictures and capital stories eminently adapt it for the British workman.

Our Boys and Girls' Volume for 1883 (1s.), 2, Ludgate-circus-buildings, E.C., has many articles that will interest the young. The majority of the pictures are on the Sunday-school lessons. First Readings is a little book of Scripture texts, in large type, for the young; they are wisely selected.

The Annual Volumes of the Sunday at Home and the Leisure Hour (7s. 6d. each), Religious Tract Society, amply maintain the traditional excellence of these popular serials. There is the same variety of suitable reading matter as before, and the engravings are of a superior character. These elegant volumes would be a great acquisition to any village or working men's library.

MR. QUARRIER AND HIS WORK.

AFTER another year of active and blessed work in rescuing the young street pariahs of Glasgow, and helping them to a happier life, Mr. Quarrier has been giving an account of his stewardship. An extract from the speech of Dr. Cameron, M.P., who presided at the twelfth annual meeting, in James Morrison-street, last week, will give a good idea of Mr. Quarrier's operations: "The other day," said Dr. Cameron, "in company with Mr. Quarrier, I paid a visit to the Bridge-of-Weir Homes. I found that quite a village of cottages had grown up. They were tasteful, clean, and airy, situated in a beautiful country, having on one side a rippling burn, which flowed into a river that skirted another side of the site; it must have seemed little short of Paradise to those outcasts accustomed to feed on garbage and sleep on stairs, whose rescue constitutes such a large portion of Mr. Quarrier's work. The boys and girls, in numbers of twenty-five or thirty, lived in each of these cottages. The 'fathers' were tradesmen, and taught trades to those of the boys who were not intended for emigration, while the 'mothers' drilled the girls in household and laundry work. The boys and girls received their education at the hands of an excellent schoolmaster and his wife. If sick, they were carefully attended to in a beautiful cottage hospital, which formed part of the settlement. At the end of each week, to encourage them in good conduct and application, I found they were given a penny in the shape of pocket-money. To many people this would appear a piece of extravagant waste; to my mind it seemed a most judicious expenditure, for it appeared to be admirably calculated to stimulate in them the feeling which everything in connection with the Homes was directed to foster, that they were not merely a class of charity children apart, but were with people who were warmly interested in their welfare, and who felt happiness in their happiness, and in their enjoyment.

"This is a vast improvement, in the way of training, on the wretched surroundings from which they have been rescued. But the training in any institution must be far inferior, as a training for the battle of life, to the real home life which Mr. Quarrier finds for them in Canada. Accordingly every year some hundreds of them are sent off to Canada. They are there received into a Home which Mr. Quarrier has succeeded in instituting for them, where they are kept until they are drafted off to the homesteads of those comfortable peasant proprietors with whom that country abounds, and who are only too glad to receive them in return for their labour and their company. The younger ones among them are eagerly sought in adoption by families who have been rendered childless either through the affliction of God or in consequence of their families having grown up and left them, and under their tender care they often lose even the recollection of their earlier miserable days. The elder boys and girls are apprenticed as helps on those farms. Everything tends to make their mode of life practically similar to that of the children of the family. The farmer's life in Canada is a life of hard work, and the children of the family have to participate in hard work, but the importance and the scarcity of labour there has this effect, that it renders these emigrated children at a very early age able to command good wages and to do for themselves in the world. It is now twelve years since Mr. Quarrier sent out the first batch of these children emigrants to Canada, and already many of his children are settled, married, and doing well there. Those children who are, from physical causes or otherwise, unfitted for emigration, are trained to some trade or useful calling at the Bridge-of-Weir Homes. Employment in Glasgow having been procured for them, they are not thrown upon their own resources, but they find in this building a home where they are carefully looked after, and where they are only expected to contribute a portion of their earnings to their maintenance.

"The work appears to me to be a most noble and philanthropic one. It seems to me doubly noble from the manner in which Mr. Quarrier has gone about it—not as a recreation, not as a mere branch of his occupation, but as the sole object of his life. It appears to me to be a work which confers hardly greater benefit upon those who are immediately the objects of its philanthropy than upon the community at large, whom it rescues from the growth in their midst of a class who would hardly fail to take a criminal revenge upon society for the criminal neglect to which they have been subjected at the hands of society in their earlier years."

Among the speakers was also Sir William Collins, late Lord Provost of Glasgow. In his interesting speech he said he had no doubt many of those who were rescued and sent to Canada would rise up to be a credit not only to Mr. Quarrier, but a credit to their country in the land of their adoption. Some of them had been trained and were preparing for the ministry; others were beginning to occupy positions of usefulness as solicitors and otherwise, so that he thought they had reason to be proud of the work and the worker. When in the presence of these young people he was sometimes almost disposed to doubt that they were picked up where he knew they were. He ventured to say that, for the general intelligence of their appearance, one might suppose that the children had all come out of West-end houses. This showed the great moral change which resulted from the physical change they had undergone. Sir William commended Mr. Quarrier's work to the liberality of the public.

Mr. Quarrier himself subsequently addressed the assembled friends of the Mission. During the year, he said, 554 new cases had been dealt with. Each of these new cases was a sad history of want, of sin, and suffering. But that was not all. They refused nearly as many as they had received, because they considered the cases not suitable for them. He thought it would be interesting to give the histories of one or two of the children who had been dealt with. In November last, Katie R—— was brought to them. Although only five years of age, she had known what it was to suffer from the brutality of a stepfather, who often put her mother outside the door, and said the same house would never contain them both. There were a number of similar cases, but he would give them one of a different kind. Johnnie and Annie D——, ten and six years, the father at the time in the poor-house dying, and the mother dead. The father died shortly afterwards, and the two children were now in happy homes in Canada. He felt sure that their helpers would agree that the money devoted to helping such children was well spent. The accommodation, notwithstanding all their efforts to keep pace with the requirements, was rather limited. On the previous night, he had received a letter from the Clyde Trustees stating that, as they were now prepared to go on with their new docks, the Homes in Govan-road would require to be vacated in May next. This was a pressing need that must be provided for. No doubt it would be so far met by the two houses that were now building, but they wanted other two Besides, they wanted a large school-room to hold 200 children. They had a school at present in the Bridge-of-Weir Homes that held about 300, but they wished one to accommodate 200 more. That would enable them to deal with a thousand children annually, or even more.

Were the numbers of children on the streets growing more or less? He could say that the number was not one whit less. The population of Glasgow was increasing at the rate of 20,000 a year, and there were always a number getting pressed against the wall and requiring help and sympathy. As to the amount of money in hand at present, it was only just about a week's supply—that meant about £200. Notwithstanding the large and increased expenditure which was necessary during the past year, the money provided had been sufficient to meet it. It might be interesting to some of the helpers to know what money the Lord had sent him during the last seven years. In 1872 he received £1649; in 1873, £2320; in 1874, £2650: in 1875, £10,098; in 1876, £7031; in 1877, £7385; in 1878, £9617; in 1879, £8933; in 1880, £10,342; in 1881, £14,794; in 1882, £12,623; and in the year just closed, £12,552—in all, £99,992.

We hope many friends of the poor and neglected children will send to Mr. Quarrier for a copy of his report just issued; his address is 318, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow.

Letters to the Editor.

EMIGRANT ACQUAINTANCES.

WE have received several replies to the question of a correspondent in our issue of November 15, whether some plan could not be suggested for enabling Christian emigrants to become acquainted before starting. We cannot give space to these replies at length, but we subjoin the purport of them:—

Mr. Edward Trotter, writing from the "Emigrants' Christian Home," Blackwall Station, London, E., says that the meetings held there for emigrants have been the means of uniting the Christians about to go abroad. The result has been the establishment of daily meetings on board the emigrant ships, which have proved a great help to the young converts, and a blessing to the unsaved. It has also been of great assistance in strengthening those who were abstainers, and to those that joined in this Home. The manager, Mr. Wilkie, will be glad to hear from any Christians intending to emigrate. A number of emigrants will be leaving for Queensland at the beginning of December.

Mr. E. J. Mather, Secretary of the Thames Church Mission, 31, New Bridge-street, Ludgate Circus, London, E.C., writes that the chaplain or missionaries of that society visit every emigrant ship that leaves the Thames, distributing Christian literature and holding Gospel services. Arrangements are also made by these workers as far as possible for the holding of such services by volunteers throughout the voyage. Mr. Mather adds: "All emigrants supplying their names, and the name of the vessel by which they purpose sailing, to the offices of this Mission, shall be personally sought out on board, and helped by every means at our disposal."

Mr. Charles Dickie, London Agent of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, writing from Queen Anne's Chambers, 62, Holborn Viaduct, E.C., says: "As one thoroughly alive to the dangers surrounding young emigrants, of both sexes, I shall be glad to render assistance in the manner desired to any Christian intending to emigrate to the United States or Canada. To those who may so desire, and can produce satisfactory testimonials, I shall be pleased to give letters of introduction to Christian friends in America, from whom they may be sure of a hearty welcome on their arrival."

Mr. S. Finlayson, 352, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow, thinks of emigrating to Manitoba next spring, and would be glad to hear from any Christian farmers who have similar intentions.

EVANGELISATION IN GERMANY.

Dear Sir,—Allow me to rectify some serious mistakes which Dr. Baedeker has made in his letter, inserted at page 19 of your journal, Nov. 15, on the "Evangelisation Society for Germany" and the Evangelical Alliance in our country.

1. Dr. Baedeker says that Methodists have been excluded from the Evangelical Alliance in Germany. The fact is, that several Methodists are members of the West German branch of the Alliance, of which I am president.

2. Dr. Baedeker further says, a truly Evangelical Alliance should also comprehend some leading Free Church brethren. The fact is, that in our branch of the Alliance several leading men of the Congregationalists and Baptists have not only been, and are still, members of the committee, but have always taken an active part as speakers in our annual gatherings.

(3) Dr. Baedeker indirectly warns English Nonconformists against supporting our Evangelisation Society, as consisting of strict State churchmen. The fact is, that when we opened our Home and chapel for evangelists in Bonn, October 26, several well-known German Free Churchmen attended, and gave contributions, whilst stiff Churchmen kept away, and only large-hearted, truly evangelical Churchmen rejoiced in our plans. And such are all the members of our committee. The other fact is, that in the eyes of strict Churchmen our committee is far too liberal, and that is the reason why they keep aloof.

(4) Dr. Baedeker suggests that an Evangelisation Society should be started more on the principles of the Alliance, recognising the evangelistic work carried on hitherto by Baptists, Methodists, and others. The fact is, that the first evangelist whom we asked to labour in Berlin, Herr von Schluembach, came from America, where he was for 15 years a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Rev. Mr. Barchwitz, who afterwards took up his work for a time, belongs to the same body. Our friend, Dr. Ziemann, whom I have introduced to some pious pastors in Westphalia, came also from a foreign Church. We rejoice in true unsectarian evangelistic work whoever is carrying it out.

But the most striking fact, established by the testimony of all our evangelists, including Schluembach and Ziemann, is this, that the masses in Germany can only be reached in connection with the National Church. All evangelists of the Baptist, Methodist, and other churches, working exclusively for their special denominations, have never reached the masses, except in small numbers. As the aim of our Society is to reach the neglected masses, we must strive to co-operate with truly Evangelical ministers of the National Church.

Those of your readers who know the real state of things as they now exist in Germany, will understand the necessity of such a principle. We must not judge from our own standpoint, when settling plans for another country, where national feelings and customs are diverse from our own, In so doing we hinder rather than further the work of God, from whom alone comes "wisdom profitable to direct."—Yours faithfully,

Bonn. Theodor Christlieb, Proff.

Requests for Prayer.

Weaver, in National Hall, Glasgow, on Dec. 2.——For blessing on special services at St. Silas Church, Bristol, from Nov. 21 to Dec. 2.——That blessing may be given to the Gospel work carried on among the City police and the police throughout the United Kingdom.——For special services at Westonzoyland, by Mr. Thomas Wales, from Nov. 18 to Dec. 2.

TWO EARNEST WORKERS GONE.—We regret this week to report the decease of two brethren, who for years have been active labourers in different corners of the Lord's vineyard. Mr. Daniel Cooper, Secretary of the Rescue Society, lately went to Australia for the benefit of his health; news of his death has come by telegram. A good and greatly-needed work thus loses a valuable helper. Our venerable friend Mr. Knight, of the Fairlop Friday movement, and of Albion College, South Hackney, fell asleep on Sunday last at the good old age of eighty-five. Mr. Knight's funeral will be at Abney-park Cemetery on Saturday next, at 3 p.m. Old scholars of Albion College, and other friends who have co-operated with our departed brother in his varied labours, are invited to be present.

PERISHING LONDON.

THE LONDON SAMARITAN SOCIETY

AND

HOMERTON MISSION.

Appeal to all who love the Lord Jesus Christ for means to continue the daily Free Dinners to Destitute Children, and Boots and Clothing and Free Breakfasts for the Outcast and Starving on the Lord's Day mornings.

The following extracts, taken from the many letters we receive almost daily this time of the year, will de cribe this section of our work, and the widespread necessity for it, better than any general statement we can make:—

One says—"We know that many frequently come to school without breakfast, and remain the whole day without food, except that which is given them by the teachers."

Another writes—"Our children come from the poorest homes, and the tales I sometimes hear make my heart ache."

A third writes—"During the cold weather boys and girls have asked me to allow them to remain in school during the dinner-hour by the fire. They would get no dinner if they went home, and preferred to stay in the warm."

Our loving Master said, "Give ye them to eat;" and I earnestly ask his people to enable us to do so. Donations will be thankfully received by Mr. HENRY HICKS BOARD, Secretary; or the Director,

JOHN JAMES JONES,

57 & 59, Ludgate Hill, LONDON, E.C.

Donations for the LONDON SAMARITAN SOCIETY are also received by the Bankers, Messrs. Fuller, Banbury, Nix & Mathieson, 77, Lombard Street, E.C.; and by the Auditors, Messrs. Josiah Beddow & Son, Chartered Accountants, 2, Gresham Buildings, Basinghall Street, London, E.C.

"Treats some of the more striking episodes in Bunyan's Allegory in good and scholarly Spenserian metre," &c.—Graphic.

"The volume merits attentive perusal, and that and careful comparison will show that in pouring from an older to a modern vessel the essence is retained. The work is a fine specimen of typography by Mr. Bellows, of Gloucester, and is most handsomely got up in antique print and style," &c.

Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Chronicle.

"Even those who are most familiar with the Pilgrim's Progress, and who are most critical in their examination of such a work as that before us, will give Mr. Rutter's volume a warm welcome.

"Its pages have a sustained elevation throughout, and the various scenes have a distinct literary merit apart from the interest of the subject," &c.—Western Daily Press.

"'The Land of Beulah,' and 'The Description of the Celestial City,' are both very grand, and worthy of special notice," &c.—British Friend.

EIGHTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN."
WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
PHTHISIS, with GENERAL ANÆMIA. CASE of Miss BARTLETT, of DULWICH.

I had lost sight of this patient till last month, when she wrote me to send her some of my books, saying, "Your treatment has done me so much good I am glad to recommend it to everyone I meet."

On referring to the case in my books, in the years '80 to '82, I find she was living at Wimbledon, and came to me on the recommendation of a local minister, also from seeing a notice of my treatment in the Christian Herald. She paid me four visits at different periods, corresponding between.

When she first came she had suffered from weakness and cough, more or less, for ten years. A little blood-spitting had occurred; the cough had been very bad. Dr. P., the family doctor, predicted, "Consumption, without the greatest care." The symptoms all indicated this; in addition to which there were swellings of the feet and ankles, by no means a favourable sign. On examination I found her lungs exceedingly weak, on the verge of phthisis.

This patient would, no doubt, have got well more rapidly had there been a perseverance with medicine, without intermission, from the time that she commenced.

I spoke of "Anæmia:" this condition was manifest. There is a lack in such cases of the red particles of the blood: pallor, weakness, shortness of breath, and palpitation, were present. Accordingly, in conjunction with my usual treatment, she had to take a prescription of iron, quassia, and glycerine.

This patient got well, and wrote me last month from College-road, Dulwich, as above named.

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

THE EMPIRE LAMP
(RIPPINGILLE'S PATENT)
IS THE
MOST BRILLIANT AND ECONOMICAL DOMESTIC LIGHT EXTANT.
It equals Gas for simplicity, but surpasses it for illuminating power.
It burns without a chimney, a pine-shaped globe only being required, which has never been known to break from the heat of the flame. It will give more light than any other lamp with a wick of equal size. The combustion is so perfect that it deodorises the oil and burns absolutely without smell, giving an intense pure white and beautiful light. It is unrivalled for simplicity in lighting, cleaning, and trimming, and is, in fact, the perfection of artificial light.
Suitable for Cottage or Mansion, Churches, Chapels, &c.

Illustrated Catalogue, with full particulars, and giving valuable hints on domestic lighting and the management of lamps, free on application.

AN EXAMPLE, AND AN INVITATION.

Our Lord was engaged in the glorious work of preaching and teaching, and there came unto Him a large company of "Outcasts," having with them those that were "lame, blind, dumb, maimed, and many others." Our Lord received them, and healed them, and blessed them, and the multitude "glorified the God of Israel."

Jesus said to his disciples, "I have compassion on the multitude .....I will not send them away fasting, lest they faint by the way" (Matt. xv. 32).

"Then Jesus took the seven loaves and the fishes, and gave thanks, and brake them, and gave to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude."

The sympathy and compassion of our Lord, and his care for the bodies of the poor, are worthy our imitation.

Every Sunday morning at the Seamen's Bethel, Old Gravel-lane, London Docks, a company of poor creatures, selected by the Missionaries of the Mariners' Friend Society, the Police, and Dock Officials, among the outcasts of our dense river-side population, are provided with a FREE BREAKFAST, after which the Gospel is spoken to them.

Like those of our disciples, our provisions are limited. They were privileged to give the Master, for the hungry people, "seven loaves." Will not some readers of THE CHRISTIAN help us to imitate our Lord in not sending them away fasting?

Donations may be sent to FRANCIS J. SHELTON, Hon. Sec., 19, Old Gravel-lane, E.; or JOSEPH MOORE, Treasurer, 9, Morgan-street, Bow, E.

THE COMING DAY.

COMMENTING on a Socialist poem recently published, called "The Coming Day," a daily contemporary, criticising the vagueness of the poet's sketch, has the following statement: "After all," says the critic, "a vision is never drawn to scale like an architect's plan; and what can be more sublimely vague than the great petition which for centuries has enshrined the best aspirations of the Western world, 'Thy kingdom come: thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven'?" Is it really so? Are these heaven-taught words of prayer really vague and shadowy? Or do they not rather demonstrate clearly and unmistakably the glorious character of the millennium God has planned and promised to the world? That a day shall come when universal blessedness will take the place of general trouble, and peace and plenty crown the days of all mankind, is no mere fancy but a sober fact, no poet's dream but sure prophetic promise. Poverty, injustice, and all the ills the down-trodden and oppressed of mankind complain of, shall disappear, and the just rights of man be universally secured. The inspired prophets of God have set forth the true character of the reign of righteousness and peace which we are taught to pray for and expect, and that in terms by no means ambiguous or shadowy. They point us to a kingdom in which the Christ is King, the will of God the only law, submission and obedience to that will the spirit of all its subjects, those subjects being all the peoples of the earth, and the Christianity which contains within itself everything calculated to refine, elevate, and sanctify mankind, the creed and practice of every son of man. Let us turn to some of the inspired descriptions of the coming kingdom of God: in vain shall we search for vagueness in their terms, bright and glowing as a summer sky are their scenes, clear and distinct as bells at even are their tones. Let us look and hearken:—

"It shall come to pass in the last days that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. And many peoples shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And He shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many peoples: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more" (Is. ii. 2—4).

No more tyranny or oppression then; no more injustice or wrong.

"The mountains shall bring peace to the people, and the little hills—by righteousness. He shall judge the poor of the people, He shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor . . . . He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass; as showers that water the earth. In his days shall the righteous flourish, and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth. He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth. All kings shall fall down before Him, all nations shall serve Him." (Psalm lxxii.)

Take another of these Divine Testimonies:—

"All the ends of the earth shall remember and turn unto the Lord; and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before Him. For the kingdom is the Lord's: and He is the governor among the nations." "The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

There is no vagueness here, it is all clear enough both as to means and end. And yet the common idea of the millennium of the Bible is, that it is vague and undefinable. Even many Christians shun the theme as difficult, and remote from the common lines of sacred thought, while most are content to enshrine an assertion of its reality among the things to be believed, without attempting to realise its promises and prospects. With such, any effort to present to the mind a clear conception of the personal reign of Christ is regarded as chimerical and dangerous.

Is there not a need for preaching "the Gospel of the Kingdom," as well as "the Gospel of the grace of God"? "Would it not be well to set forth with greater fulness not only "the sufferings of Christ," but also "the glories that shall follow"? Would not more open, clear, and definite testimony as to the royal crown our Lord shall wear as King of men be wisely mingled with our faithful preaching of the doctrine of his cross? He did not more surely come to suffer than He shall come to reign. The prophecies of his humiliation which have been so wondrously and literally fulfilled are not more certainly from God than those which (as yet unfulfilled) point us onward to his exaltation as King over all the earth. Why is so large a portion of the sacred Word occupied with the future of the world's history, if we in its exposition are to treat the subject with reserve, and pass it by as nebulous and vague?

Sound and clear teaching on the true character of the coming Kingdom of God, the means by which it shall be set up, and the preparation needful in view of its approach, is requisite in days when men are persuading themselves that social reform and universal prosperity can be brought about by anarchy, communism, and democratic lawlessness To turn the restless minds of men, burning with a sense of wrong and thirsting for better surroundings than their lot in life affords, away from vain and hopeless efforts such as demagogues and agitators would lead them to make, to Him who is at once the Saviour of sinners and the friend of man—to point them, not to strife and discord, but to the Prince of Peace, proving how, not by the upheaval of society through secret plottings and political conspiracies, but by the glorious appearing of the King of kings, the regeneration and reorganisation of the world must be brought about—this surely is a work worthy of our earnest attention and our steadfast aim; work in harmony with Christ's commission to his disciples, and with the example of all who have gone forth as the inspired heralds of his Word.

Nor will such work paralyse or even interfere with the present duty of the Church to labour for the promotion of everything calculated to benefit society and alleviate its many ills. Our mission to-day is to present Christ as the Saviour from sin, and in proportion as we succeed in drawing men to Him and discipling them to his service, we shall succeed in raising them from the degradation and distress incident to the reign of sin, and the usurping rule of Satan as "the prince of this world." Ardent pre-millennarians cannot fairly be charged with indifference to existing evils, proofs to the contrary abound in the annals of past and present social and evangelistic labour. But none the less do such work "unto the Kingdom," knowing that until it comes partial success is all they can secure. Hence it is ours to proclaim the coming King as well as the risen Saviour, as the Hope of the world.

The Word of Truth deals not alone with spiritual and eternal prospects, primary and conspicuous as its presentation of such themes may be. The redemptive work of Christ includes more than the salvation of the soul, it contemplates the overthrow of Satan's power in our world, the restitution of all things, and the reconstitution of society at large on the basis of righteousness and truth. We have a Gospel for the world as well as for the Church, an evangel for creation as well as for the sinner, "because the creature itself also (the groaning travailing creation) shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." A better time is coming, the Golden Age is at hand, and as surely as the Lord liveth, all flesh shall see the salvation of God. Dark and lowering as the sky may now appear, sad and sorrowful as are many signs of the times, discordant and tumultuous as are the passions of mankind, unbelieving and almost despairing as are many around us, it shall yet come to pass that—

"A king shall reign in righteousness, and princes rule in judgment. And a Man shall be as an hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. And the eyes of them that see shall not be dim, and the ears of them that hear shall hearken. The heart also of the rash shall understand knowledge, and the tongue of the stammerers shall be ready to speak plainly. The vile person shall no more be called liberal, nor the churl said to be bountiful" (Isa. xxxii. 1—4).

Heartily and intelligently may we therefore adopt Dr. Bonar's words of "faith and hope" and say:—

"Great King of kings, why dost thou stay,
Why tarriest Thou upon thy way,
Why lingers the expected day?
Thy kingdom come!

"Sin has prevailed on earth too long;
Ages of evil, pain, and wrong,
Have marr'd the meditated song,
Thy kingdom come!

"O King of glory, King of peace,
Bid all these storms and tumults cease,
Bring in thy reign of righteousness;
Thy kingdom come!"

"For Jesus' Sake."

By GEORGIANA M. TAYLOR.

"FOR Jesus' sake" all sin forgiven!
"For Jesus' sake" sweet rest!
'Tis this glad word has wooed and won
My heart to love Him best.
His praise I sing, my Lord! my King!
Who died my peace to make;
And all the day, and all the way,
An echo in my heart shall say,
"For Jesus' sake!"

"For Jesus' sake!" These precious words
Shall be like pinions swift,
To waft my prayers through heaven's gate,
And bear back many a gift.
Each answer free God sends to me,
Then joyfully I'll take,
And all the day, and all the way,
An echo in my heart shall say,
"For Jesus' sake!"

When often, like a wayward child,
I murmur at His will,
Then this sweet word, "For Jesus' sake,"
My restless heart can still.
I bow my head; and, gently led,
His easy yoke I take!
And all the day, and all the way,
An echo in my heart shall say,
"For Jesus' sake!"

In suffering sore, or toilsome task,
His burden light I'll bear;
"For Jesus' sake" shall sweeten all,
Till his bright home I share;
And then this song, more sweet, more strong,
In heaven my harp shall wake;
Led all the way, till that glad day,
Eternally my heart shall say,
"For Jesus' sake!"

"I can Bear anything Now."

GOING into one of our large West-end shops early one Monday morning, I observed that the young woman who served me appeared to be suffering from cold. She remarked that the shop was always cold on Monday mornings. I suggested that as customers increased she would not feel the cold so much. I was greatly surprised by her quick reply: "Yes; but I have such a bright prospect before me, I don't mind all these little trials now as I used to." I imagined she might be anticipating a holiday, or possibly marriage, and expressed sympathy in her anticipated pleasures. I said I hoped she might fully realise all she looked for. Her prompt reply was: "Yes, I am sure I shall. I am looking to be with Jesus. He has saved me, and I can bear anything now that I have that prospect."

She went on to tell me that a year and a half ago she entered on this blessed life, and with a glowing smile, remarked: "I have been so happy ever since!" I inquired what she was doing for Him, who had done everything for her, and had given her such a fortune in his love. She replied: "I have a class on Sundays, and I do love it so. I am always looking out for opportunities of speaking a word for Jesus." The dear girl's full heart seemed relieved of its burden of joy by these few words with a fellow pilgrim, and I need not add how my own soul was refreshed, and my heart gladdened, to find this sister in Christ so ready to tell of his love.

Can we not adopt some plans yet untried for meeting the spiritual need of the hundreds of young men and women in our City and West-end shops? F. D.

An Undenominational Church.

WE have read in The Postman for November a deeply interesting article entitled, "An Experiment in Village Church Life." It seems that at Benson, a village on the Thames, of some 1200 inhabitants, there has been for several years past a successful effort to sustain church-life and action apart from Denominationalism.

Five years ago a few men of fervent spirit and wide Christian sympathies banded together to provide a place of worship, which should be the home and centre of work, not for a sect, but for all believers in Christ who desired to unite on a purely Christian basis, and with no sectarian object in view. Their leading principle was thus expressed:—

"We believe that a church is an organised assembly of believers, that the ends of its institution are exclusively spiritual, and that all who profess faith in Christ, and whose conversation is such as becometh the Gospel, are entitled to church membership."

The result was that a building was soon erected, persons of various opinions on minor points, but one in Christ, were enrolled as members of the community, and a pastor obtained like-minded with themselves. The outcome of the plan thus far has been most satisfactory, both as it refers to the edification and comfort of the church, and the influence exerted on the world. The ordinance of the Lord's Supper is, of course, regularly observed. Baptism is not practised in either form, but left in each case to the private judgment of members, who are advised to give effect to their own convictions. Both sacraments are regarded as Christian privileges, not as church rites. The last annual report shows a happy and thriving state of things, and speaks of encouragement on all sides.

Why should not similar efforts abound in towns as well as in villages? It is true that where wider scope is found for work than village life presents, sects and parties do not stand so much in each other's, and, worse than that, in Christ's way, but everywhere Christian communion and power for good would be increased by the true principle of church organisation being recognised, and isms of all kinds disowned. That principle we hold to be union on the ground of faith in the Lord Jesus as the Saviour and Ruler of his people, the one only Way, Truth, and Life.

NORWICH.—Mr. Frank H. White has recently delivered in the Victoria Hall, in this city, three lectures on the Tabernacle of Moses and the Temple of Solomon, illustrated by his beautiful and costly dissolving views. The hall was well filled and the lectures were highly appreciated. Mr. White preached in the hall on Sunday, November 18, to a very large and most attentive congregation.

SOLDIERS AT ALDERSHOT.—Some time ago you kindly inserted a few lines from me in your valuable paper about my wife's Mission basket for Miss Daniell's Soldiers' Homes. This year has proved a successful one, and she is anxious to carry on the work; she would be greatly obliged if your readers would assist her in this by sending contributions of work, paintings, china, &c., prepaid.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.—"Last year," says a writer in the Chrétien Belge, "I asked some of the teachers to meet me half an hour before the opening of the Sunday-school for prayer; three or four responded to the invitation; the number has steadily increased, so that we now number from twelve to fifteen. The prayers are only of one minute's length, and much edification results from listening to and joining in these short prayers. This meeting has a double effect—the teachers, male and female, are no longer late in the school, and they are full of zeal in giving their lesson."

For the Young.

"JESUS IS WITH ME."

THERE was once a little girl who attended our Sunday-school, whose name was Eliza. Her parents, though poor in this world, were rich in Christ. This little girl was left one afternoon to mind the house while her parents went out on business.

It was getting towards evening, and on my visiting rounds I came to her door. I knocked, and in a moment Eliza came and opened the door with light in hand. "Is your father at home?" I asked. "No, sir." "Is your mother in?" "No, sir." "Who else is at home besides you?" "Only Jesus," was her reply, her face beaming with joy. "Are you not afraid to be left by yourself in this house?" "No, sir, because Jesus is with me." How sweet and simple was her trust in Jesus.

After a little talk with this dear child, I went away reflecting on the words, "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye cannot enter the kingdom." This girl continued to love and serve her Saviour, first at home, where her piety was shown by a meek and quiet spirit; afterwards in the work-place, where she was employed among a number of girls. By-and-by Jesus became so very precious to her, that she felt sure God would have her directly engaged in his work. So, after much prayer for guidance, she was sent with others to fields of labour in Scotland, Ireland, and other parts, to seek souls for Jesus, whom she loved so dearly. God has greatly blessed and owned her testimony to the saving of many. I hope this true narrative may inspire the hearts of many young readers with the same love, faith, and zeal, for our loving Lord Jesus.

A GERMAN LEGEND.

When God the Lord had made the whole wide world, and saw that it was all good, He sent all the animals to Adam that he should give to each its name; but all the flowers He placed before Himself, and went from one to another, telling each its name, so that they all knew what they were to be called.

But one little flower had looked up so happily with its blue eyes at the blessed God, opening its golden heart to Him, that it quite forgot all about itself, and so did not know its name. It was very much ashamed, and bowed down its blossoms and buds, saying, "Ah! dear Lord, be not angry with me; I could not help gazing at Thee, till I forgot everything, even the name Thou gavest to me; wilt Thou tell it me again? and I will not again forget." Then God looked kindly at the little flower at his feet; "I am not angry with you; that you forget yourself is no sin, only 'Forget-me-not;'" and with that He went away, for the dear Lord could not stay long by a little flower—earth and heaven wait upon Him. But the flower was very happy, and is so to this day; every one loves it.

Dear children, we should all be flowers in God's garden. What name has God given you? Have you also forgotten it? Then bow before his feet, and let Him give you the best name, the name that is above every name, the name of your Redeemer—Christ-ian. Hide yourself in Christ; forget yourself; then will God imprint in your heart, "Forget-Me-not."—Die Sonntags-Schule.

Miss Anstey's Colar Mission.

DEAR SIR,—The following important extracts from a letter recently received from Miss Anstey, of the Colar Mission, call for much prayer on the part of the Lord's people, and I trust an increasing interest may be stirred up in the hearts of many on behalf of the blessed work in that devoted labourer's hands. In the letter from which these extracts are taken, Miss Anstey speaks of the great straits she is in. When expressing her warm acknowledgment for the £50 donation lately given through THE CHRISTIAN, she ventures the earnest hope that eleven other like donations may be given before the year is out, to cover the ordinary expenditure of the Mission. I feel sanguine that the present great need will find a response in the hearts of many who have it in their power to relieve Miss Anstey from anxiety, so that the work in her hands be not hindered.

Yours faithfully, SUBSCRIBER.

EXTRACTS.

"COLAR, October 12, 1883,—Colar is in a wonderful state of excitement; the officials are greatly at the bottom of it. The Dervan has written to state that the Deputy-Commissioner is bound to keep order, &c., and therefore, if he forbids us to preach in the streets we must obey him. The Deputy-Commissioner, who is a bigotted Brahmin, says that the preaching is distasteful to the majority of the inhabitants of Colar, and so we are forbidden to preach. They are very angry because I have purchased a site in the very heart of the pettah (town). We went down and took possession in the name of the Lord. The roofs of the neighbouring houses presented a picturesque scene, with the inhabitants gazing at what was going on. They fetched musicians to make as much noise as possible to drown the sound of Gospel singing and preaching, but it failed. Next day the Amildar begged us not to go down as the Deputy-Commissioner was away, and he was responsible for the peace. We heard that more than a hundred people were waiting for us; we kept away, and went elsewhere, amongst the pariahs (lowest classes), who listened to the Word gladly.

"Yesterday, the Deputy-Commissioner having returned, went to the spot and said we should not be allowed to build on it (so the man who sold it to me said). They wanted the man who sold it to us to sign a paper, saying he had given it to a temple. This he refused to do. They thought he would overlook the item in the paper to be signed, but he saw it, and said, 'How can I sign this paper when I have sold the land to Miss Anstey?' Then they wanted him to say he had sold it on the condition that we would not build a church on it, but he refused to say so. In the market-place we are expressly forbidden, by the Dervan, to preach. I have written to explain that I have hired a stand there, but in the meantime I have purchased a splendid site, which commands the market. Hundreds collect there every Thursday, and they listen with deep attention to the Gospel news.

"Poor Colar is a dark, bigotted place, and has long been in a dead slumber; but now it is being awakened from end to end from its deadly sleep. The people say they will kill us if we go down again to preach on the site in the heart of the bazaar—no doubt they will. A large stone, on one occasion, was thrown with violence into the carriage; it struck me with full force in the face so that I was nearly stunned, and I could hardly tell what mischief had been done. Again and again, to the endangering of life and limb, large stones are thrown by mischievous persons."

A YOUNG LADIES' PAPER.—We understand that, on January 1, a new monthly paper will be issued under the auspices of the Young Women's Christian Association (Partridge & Co. 1d). General information as to business engagements and recreation will be given, as well as reports upon Christian work.

SMYRNA REST.—Mrs. Grimston writes of the usefulness of this Rest, where recently a number of sailors met for prayer and Bible-reading day after day while their ships were in the Bay. One owns to being the only one in his family undecided for Christ; another takes the pledge; while a third comes to tell of the death of a messmate, and is spoken to on the subject of being ready. Conversations and meetings are held as often as opportunity offers, and this Rest is also a place of retreat for sailors when ashore. Help for this work may be sent to Mr. S. S. Bagster, Conference Hall, Mildmay-park.

NOTES FROM THE UNITED STATES—3.

By GAWIN KIRKHAM.

CINCINNATI.

AFTER a hasty visit to Louisville and the mammoth caves of Kentucky, I reached Cincinnati, a city of some 300,000 souls, on Saturday evening, October 13. Next morning I asked the manager of my hotel where I could hear a good sermon. With something like a sneer in his tone, he replied, "People here go to church more for the singing than the sermon." In a ramble through the streets I noticed, as at St. Louis, all the walls and windows covered with theatrical announcements, and, as there, with one exception, relating to the plays for this particular Sunday. Where there are many theatres and saloons there is sure to be much vice: hence this city has been called "the Paris of America."

In the course of my walk I saw a number of young ladies with Bible and hymn-book in hand enter St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church. I followed them and found a large Sunday-school setting down to its morning work. What specially struck me was the large proportion of young people in attendance. While the teaching progressed, I was shown over the Wesleyan Women's College, by its President, this being the place from which the young ladies I had noticed came. It is a very complete institution and has 100 students. Returning to church I heard a good stirring sermon. When finished, the minister invited any troubled ones or those who wished to join the church to come to the communion rails, and he would speak to them. The first to respond was a man of gentlemanly bearing, who knelt down as a true, tearful penitent. It had a remarkable effect upon the large congregation, but with the exception of two, who came for church-membership, no one followed his example.

In the afternoon and evening I heard Mason Long, the converted gambler and saloon-keeper, speak. The story of this man's life, prior to his conversion, some six years ago, is

AN AWFUL RECORD OF EVIL.

It was during a striking Gospel Temperance movement at Fort Wayne, Indiana, that he was laid hold of, first for Temperance, and then for Christ. For some time past he has been travelling through the States in a wagon drawn by two fine horses, which he delights to tell the people he purchased with money saved from tobacco. He has also in the wagon a quartette for singing Gospel songs, accompanied by an organ. Hundreds gathered round this wagon, and when it was lighted up at night the effect was very striking. He told what God had done for him, and did it in such an earnest, yet modest, tone, that the large crowd stood spell-bound. Yet he used great plainness of speech in showing up gamblers and saloon-keepers. His earnest pleading "to save the boys," as he frequently put it, must be accompanied by the happiest results. Thousands of copies of his autobiography have been sold.

My personal labours in the city were not great. But in two evangelistic meetings I addressed in the Y.M.C.A. Rooms, and in three open-air addresses, there were tokens of the Holy Spirit's work. A policeman, sent by a Jew to stop me, said, "I'm very sorry, for I'd rather serve God than man any day."

WASHINGTON.

From Cincinnati to Washington, over the Alleghany Mountains and by Harper's Ferry, is more than 500 miles. It was very pleasant to see a well-kept, finished city, after the unfinished ones of the West. I was also struck with the large proportion of coloured people in a population of over 150,000. At my hotel I found one of these, a waiter, studying for the law, when his day's work was over. I was informed that open-air preaching was prohibited, though a policeman stood by while I spoke in one of the principal thoroughfares, without interference. One evening I heard an address in All Souls' (Unitarian) Church by a Brahmin named Mozomdar, secretary of the Brahmo Somaj, a new sect in India which seeks to free the Hindoos from superstition, to lessen the evils of caste, and to elevate women. His address was intently listened to by a large congregation, but, alas! it only placed our adorable Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ as one among many, instead of giving Him his true place as "Head over all things." Altogether the meeting was but a cold affair, as there was not a note of song or word of prayer.

Working Lads in Devonport.

SIR,—I need not generalise on the great need there is to seek to bring spiritual and mora influences to bear on the young working lads—the apprentices, errand boys, masons' lads, and market boys—of our town. How to reach the hearts of these lads, to win their confidence, in efforts for their good—that was the problem I set myself to solve two years ago, in the town of Devonport. I hired the hall of a coffee house weekly, on the early closing night, and distributed handbills to the effect that meetings and entertainments would be there held "for working lads, and errand boys only. Admission free." The first night about 100 boys came, and a meeting, beginning with prayer and hymn singing, was got through fairly well. The next Wednesday quite 200 lads arrived; at the third meeting perhaps 300 were present.

After this the hall was so overcrowded, with consequent confusion and disorder, that admission by ticket, on personal application, was necessary. Over 600 boys applied for tickets. We then formed Sunday-afternoon Bible-classes and held evening meetings after the churches and chapels were closed, the attendance almost equalling the Wednesday night meetings. After six weeks we formed our "Working Lads' Temperance Brigade." One hundred lads joined the first night, and our numbers have steadily increased. We have now 885 members, and a branch at Launceston numbering 100 members. The boys officer the brigade themselves. Drum and fife bands have been formed, and clothing clubs, savings banks, &c.

After a year we were able to start an institute for working lads. One room is set apart as a hall for Gospel and Temperance meetings, Bible-classes, night schools, &c.; one as a reading and recreation room, and one as a gymnasium, with an experienced instructor. During the year it has been open about 600 lads have, for longer or shorter periods, been members. It is open daily for their use, and the Sunday afternoon and evening meetings are held there. Mr. Edward Arrowsmith, when on a mission here, addressed the boys, expressing great interest in the work.

The whole work is carried out on broad unsectarian lines. The institute is supported fairly well from local sources. We sadly need a better building, if only the money could be obtained—to build, or alter, an existing place—for which £1000 would be required. The whole expense, however, of the Gospel and Temperance work has, for these two years, fallen on Mr. ——. I venture, therefore, to ask Christian friends to help me to extend this work. I should be thankful for gifts of books, Bibles, Sankey's hymns, illustrated papers, tracts, &c., and especially lads' clothes. Many of our lads have happy homes and appear to want nothing but sympathy and guidance; others—poor boys—want everything: clothes, boots, and often food. Many would gladly come to the Sunday Bible-classes and meetings, but the want of the Sunday suit keeps them hanging about the streets and lanes near their homes, hardened and reckless. I shall be glad to communicate with anyone willing to help in extending the work, as God may send the means and show the way.

THE WANDSWORTH MEETINGS.

PERHAPS the most noteworthy feature of the Wandsworth meetings during the past week was the efforts made to bring in "outsiders." Mr. Moody made strenuous efforts, with the willing help of the workers, to accomplish this, and their efforts have not been without success. Professing Christians, and church or chapel goers generally, were urged to take advantage of the afternoon Bible Readings and to absent themselves from the evening gatherings, thus leaving room for those whose daily avocations prevent their early attendance. The Bible Readings have therefore been larger than during the previous week, and have been times of much spiritual power and refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The half-hour prayer-meeting that follows the address Mr. Moody declares to be the most solemn of all the engagements of the week. All who have any personal burden, or concern for the salvation and sanctification of those dear to them, are encouraged to present their petitions. Certainly, nothing could be more touchingly impressive than the stream of requests that comes from all parts of the assembly at these prayer-meetings. One day Mr. Moody was specially moved by the requests presented by children on behalf of drunken fathers. "We are hearing from all quarters of men being blessed. I believe it is God answering the prayers of his children at these meetings."

Those who wished to secure a seat at the evening meetings favourable for sight and hearing, have had to be on the spot about an hour before the advertised time for commencing. But this, as Mr. Moody well knows and frequently says, is just what cannot or will not be done by the very class he most wishes to reach. Many working men will come dropping into the hall almost at the last moment, and if all the seats are taken up, probably they do not feel sufficient interest to stand through the service in a remote corner of the hall. Even if they do, the distance from the preacher is so great that he stands little chance of bringing the truth to bear upon them with effect. To obviate this a plan has been adopted that has evidently worked well. Several rows of seats in the very front of the central section are reserved specially for working men. As they arrive they are passed up by the stewards and seated right under the eye of the speaker. From the appearance of those who filled up these reserved seats at the evening meetings last week, no reasonable doubt could be entertained that they were the very sort wanted. In their every-day working garb, and mostly innocent of all acquaintance with toilet requisites, they were probably in nine cases out of ten those who never darken the door of church or chapel from one year's end to another. The free and easy nature of the preliminary service of song soon sets them at their ease, albeit they look rather awkward and shy at first. A few friendly words from Mr. Moody, or a little bit of musical drill, made them feel quite at home, and secured their attention for the evening.

While these rough, hard-fisted, and rather grimy-looking fellows evidently enjoyed the singing of the Gospel hymns, comparatively few of them chimed in—a sure proof that they were not habitués of any religious service. Mr. Sankey and his helpers did their best to interest and impress these men. Then Mr. Moody's sturdy, vigorous exhortations and appeals have been such as they could easily grasp and understand; his words did not go over the head of the dullest of them, but struck home with wonderful directness and power. In some of these discourses one could not fail to notice the dexterous way in which the evangelist appealed to the common sense of his hearers, convincing them by the reductio ad absurdum process of reasoning. When expatiating one evening on the scripturalness of sudden conversion, or instant salvation, he gave a supposed conversation between an anxious inquirer and one of those "modern philosophers" who object to evangelical views of conversion. To be consistent with his theory of "gradual conversion," this philosophor's advice to a man who had been in the habit of stealing say £100 a year, would be to reduce the amount by one-half the next year; thus, in process of time, he would be converted! These illustrations, if somewhat grotesque, were effective in paving the way for the enforcement of the truth that a man must thoroughly, and at once, break with sin, if he would enter into the kingdom of God.

On Friday evening Mr. Moody preached on "Excuses." His burning words had a wonderful effect in cutting the ground from under the feet of all who seek to postpone their acceptance of God's invitation to be present at the Marriage Supper of the Lamb. During the twelve years of his evangelistic labours he said he had probably heard as many excuses as most men; he could not say that he had ever found one that was more reasonable than those offered by the three men mentioned in the parable of our Lord. One of the popular "excuses" offered by those who are pressed to accept this invitation is that the Christian life is a hard and gloomy one. "I would like," exclaimed Mr. Moody, "to take the most faithful follower of the devil in all London, and place him on this platform alongside of an experienced servant of the Lord Jesus Christ: let the electric light be turned on them, and their very faces would soon tell us who had been serving the hardest master. Those who have never served Jesus Christ are not capable of judging; the men who have known both sides are the men to tell which is the best. I'd like to ask every Christian man here if he has found Christ to be a hard Master." To this challenge there came a good many negative responses. "You seem to say it rather faintly," said the speaker. Whereupon there were stentorian shouts of "No!" "No!" "I have worn Christ's yoke," continued Mr. Moody, "about twenty-five years, and I declare I do not know that I have got it on, it is so light." Another popular "excuse" mentioned was the lack of moral courage to confess Christ. The searching words of the preacher on this point found their mark in one case at least that was unmistakeably revealed in the after-meeting. A young person to whom one of the workers spoke, was trembling from head to foot with emotion, insomuch that she seemed to have lost the power of utterance. The worker ultimately discovered that the way of salvation was perfectly familiar to the one who was so troubled, but she lacked the courage to take a bold stand for Christ before her friends and neighbours. This after-meeting was one of the best and largest of the Wandsworth Mission.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MEETING.

On Saturday evening last I went to Down Lodge Hall. At first I must admit to a feeling of disappointment, caused by my ignorance of the fact that the renowned Missioners did not conduct meetings on Saturdays, that day being their day of rest. However, my disappointment was forgotten when, on entering the building from the platform entrance, I saw about 2000 people who had gathered together for the purpose of hearing Mr. William Noble, of Hoxton Hall, speak on Gospel Temperance. As this mass of people—mostly of the working class—rose to sing a hymn of praise, I mentally thanked God that that movement was becoming a power in the land.

Mr. Noble first of all introduced one or two helpers, and asked them to give "a few words of testimony." Mr. J. Christie Mackenzie said that in his Family Pledge-book, from July 24, 1882, to November, 1883, he had recorded 1571 pledges. This is an average of twenty-three per week for the sixty-eight weeks. Surely, I thought as I listened, this ought to stimulate other temperance workers. This gentleman said his boy was sitting at the breakfast table a few days previous, when the little fellow, desirous of being very helpful, began to cut some bread; the knife slipped, and he cut his finger to the bone. He was sent at once to the surgeon, and when he returned the first words he said were, "Oh, papa! I wish I had not touched that knife." That was what many a poor man said who had been wounded, not only in the flesh, but in his soul, by the steel of the devil's alcohol; he came to tell them of the surgeon of total abstinence, and of the great Physician, the sympathising Jesus.

A Thames bargeman in a homely manner told how greatly he had been blessed in purse, mind, and soul by his thirty-six years' total abstinence. After he signed the pledge he went and bought his Father's will for 4d. (producing a Testament). Though he could not read a word of it then, he praised the Lord he could read it now, and that it was the rule of his life. Referring to his temporal prosperity, he said the Lord had prospered him so much that he was recently able to give £50 towards helping forward the Lord's cause. At one time, at Gravesend, he was in great danger from a very heavy sea, and thought probably he should find a watery grave; but he opened his little Testament and read, "I go to prepare a place for you," and "In my Father's house are many mansions," so felt if he had met with a watery grave it would only have been an exchange for a heavenly mansion. The influence of this simple speech was greatly felt; it was told with that confidence which comes from conscious possession. No one who listened to the bargee could doubt but that Christ was to him "a living bright reality."

Mr. Thorn, a carpenter, next followed with an earnest appeal to the working men to come over on to the side of total abstinence.

Mr. Noble then spoke. He knows how to touch the right chords in the human breast; his address was not a temperance one, with "a dash of the Gospel," but a thoroughly earnest Gospel Temperance speech. Mr. Noble believes that life reformation must commence at the Cross of Christ, and he seeks to make his hearers believe the same.

At this point (while the choir was singing) the Temperance workers moved about the building, and met the personal objections of those who were "almost persuaded" to sign the Temperance pledge. The result proved that many had been influenced by the addresses, and only needed the kindly invitation. Mr. Brooke followed with a short, earnest address on the commercial bearing of the subject. He, like the bargee, had been rescued from the sea of intemperance, and landed safely on the shore of Gospel Temperance.

I left the meeting cheered and encouraged with a feeling of gratitude to God that He had raised up men who had consecrated their time and energy to the rolling away of England's greatest curse. Nellie E. Mate.

LAST SUNDAY AT WANDSWORTH.

On Sunday morning at eight, Mr. Moody spoke to a large body of Christian workers, and others. The pivot of his address was the distinction between the Holy Spirit dwelling in every believer, and the same Spirit resting on those who seek Him for power in service. People speak of a second blessing, but the disciples received many successive "blessings:" "Receive ye the Holy Ghost" (John xx. 22): "While He blessed them He was parted from them" (Luke xxiv. 51); "They were filled with the Holy Ghost" (Acts ii. 4); "They were again filled with the same Spirit" (Acts iv. 31). A comforting thought for those who had lost their power was that Samson's hair had not, thank God, been pulled up by the roots. It grew again, and his power returned. The address was marked by frequent quaint, pungent, and encouraging remarks.

In consequence of indisposition, Mr. Sankey was unable to be present all this day; ladies and Mr. Earle, the leader of the choir, rendered efficient service by singing solos with excellent effect. There can be no doubt that the gift of song, as exercised by the choir, or by individuals, or by the whole congregation, has a most beneficial influence upon the mind of speaker and hearers. As Elisha was calmed by a minstrel before he prophesied to the kings, (2 Kings iii. 15), so the effect upon the preacher of the stirring or plaintive melodies which form so considerable a part of these services is very perceptible. The number who rose for prayer at each of the evangelistic meetings was beyond counting. Cases of very considerable interest are met with in the inquiry-room; many backsliders are restored; some leave one meeting under deep impression who return at another and find rest; while numbers accept Christ as their Saviour on the spot.

After the evening meeting Mr. George Williams gathered into a side room about 150 young men, chiefly those who had recently decided for Christ; after several testimonies had been given, it was proposed to form a Young Men's Christian Association in Wandsworth, and steps were taken to that end.

THE MUSIC OF THE MEETINGS.

(From "The Nonconformist and Independent.")

"How far, Mr. Sankey, is your singing in its expression and phrasing the result of premeditation, and how far is it due to the impulse of the moment?" We are speaking to the evangelist in the tiny sitting-room of a small house in North London, where, for the period of the London Mission, he has found a temporary shelter for his family and himself. "I am no musician," he replies; "indeed, I am no singer. I was never taught to sing. When I began this work, I asked Dr. Root, of Chicago, how I could best preserve my voice from wear and decay. He told me to sing naturally, and never to force the tone. I have tried to follow his advice, and I am thankful to say I have kept my voice wonderfully. Maybe, if I had gone to a master he would have ruined it in trying to make it better. Such things have happened. As to my singing, there is no art or conscious design in it. I never touch a song that does not speak to me in every word and phrase. Before I sing I must feel, and the hymn must be of such a kind that I know I can send home what I feel into the hearts of those who listen. I find it much more difficult to get good words than good music. Our best words come from England, the music which best suits our purpose comes from America. Your composers, apparently, do not care to write simple things such as we need. We can get plenty of the grand and solid style, but though that is useful now and again, our services could not thrive upon it." And so the chat proceeds.

There has been plenty of debate over these American Gospel song-tunes. Are they legitimate church music, and if not, is it wise to employ a musical idiom in the prayer-meeting and Mission service which cannot be tolerated in the church? Taste formed on Bach, on the simpler counterpoint of our stately old English hymn-tunes, or on the warmly-coloured modern tunes of Dykes and Barnby, finds these American pieces hopelessly insipid, not to say vulgar. Their structure is, indeed, extremely slight. The old hymn-tune, with fundamental harmony at each beat, moves with the stride and strength of a giant, while the attenuated effect of these American tunes is largely due to their changing the harmony but once in the bar. The frequent employment of march rhythm is also distasteful to the ear which has fed itself upon good models. Again, the plan of these tunes is bad enough to start with, but still worse when they multiply by the hundred, so that it settles into a mannerism. Not much fluency or power of caricature are needed to manufacture them by the dozen at the pianoforte extempore.

Yet, after the musician has vented his spleen upon this degenerate psalmody, an important fact remains. Music in worship is a means, not an end, and we are bound to consider how far these tunes serve their end in Mission work, which, after all, has not musical training for its object, so much as the kindling of the Divine spark in the hearts of the worshippers. Without doubt these songs touch the common throng; they match the words to which they are sung, and carry them. The American Gospel hymn is nothing if it is not emotional. It takes a simple phrase, and repeats it over and over again. There is no reasoning, nor are the lines made heavy with introspection. "Tell me the story simply, as to a little child." The feelings are touched; the stiffest of us become children again. Now, as these hymns are slight and simple, so they naturally suggest slight and simple music. Some of these American tunes have found their way into our standard collections, and have been re-harmonised with chords changing at each note, like orthodox tunes. This is mere editorial pedantry. From every point of view they are much better left as they are.

Mr. Sankey and his singing have in several ways distinctly advanced our church music. To him more than to any living person must be attributed the ripening of opinion in favour of organs in Scotland. He did not argue the lawfulness of instrumental accompaniments in Divine worship, but he superseded argument by making people feel that organs were consistent with devotion and helpful to it.

Of course, like all blessings, organs may be so used as to become a curse. As we converse with Mr. Sankey on this point, he says: "I use my reed-organ just to support my own voice or the voices of the choir. But, oh! the rushing and roaring of the organ that often greets me when I attend a church. The din is sometimes so great that I cannot sing. If the organists must make a noise, let them play a solo. When voices are singing they ought to be at the top."

The power of expression, and especially of soft singing, is another lesson that those who have ears to hear may learn from Mr. Sankey. We remark to him that while in his own meetings expression is used to intensify the force of the words, no sooner is his influence withdrawn than Mission choirs sink into a level and noisy monotony. He admits the fact, and regrets it. The softest singing he finds to be, spiritually, the most impressive. "It is the still small voice," he says. "Often when I meet a new choir for the first time I find them singing as if for dear life; and the impression prevails that not to exert the full power of voice is to show lukewarmness in the cause. The choir fears that, if they sink their voices to a whisper, there will be a collapse. I tell them that the only collapse I fear is lest by the absence of expression they should fail to make the music touch the congregation. Their best singing, I warn them, will be their softest, and the softer it is the more impressive will it be. Of course we have plenty of passages in our hymns that demand loud and rousing singing. But there is no need to call the attention of choirs to these."

Mere "shading" is not the only useful lesson taught us by Mr. Sankey. He shows us what may be done to relieve the sameness of congregational singing. The American Gospel song has borrowed from secular music that most social, most heart-impelling contrivance, the chorus. This unites soloist or choir with the congregation in inter-reacting sympathy, drawing all into the circle. The vast majority of the pieces have a refrain, burden, or chorus, which a congregation picks up by ear in a moment. Others have a recurring line, like No. 304, "Come, Great Deliverer, come," which the congregation hurl back upon the smooth voices of the choir. Mr. Sankey, as we talk to him, multiplies examples of the kind. A hymn, to which he has himself composed the tune, "Take me as I am," has been sung, each of the first three lines by a third part of the congregation, the whole joining in the fourth line, "And take me as I am." At Leicester the meetings were held in a skating-rink, in which there was a far-off end gallery, nearly an eighth of a mile away from the platform. Mr. Sankey announced the hymn—

> "We shall meet beyond the river
> By-and-bye; by-and-bye."

He said he would sing the first line himself; the choir were to sing the first "by-and-bye," and the people in the distant end gallery, the second "by-and-bye." This last response was so long in coming, that on the platform they thought the direction had been misunderstood. Almost as if, indeed, from another world, the words at last floated to them, touching most powerfully the feelings of the congregation below. It is, of course, a question to what extent such methods can be introduced in ordinary services. As employed by Mr. Sankey they are spontaneous and intensely devotional. Elsewhere they might become formal and artificial. But we may safely use any such means, so long as hearts are touched by them.

Mr. Sankey was not the first "Gospel singer," but he has, more than any other, inspired imitators. Singing such as his is now a common part of the services by which all the churches are endeavouring to reach the masses. He is not a trained vocalist. A singing-master would find faults in every measure that he sings. His style is more recitative than singing; he sacrifices time unnecessarily to impulse and feeling. The effect is often jerky, intermittent, disconnected. It is speaking with a sustained voice. But his earnestness is so apparent that it covers a multitude of faults; indeed, his transparent naturalness and his fervour so fix our attention upon what he is singing that we do not think of the faults. If Mr. Sankey were a finished singer, it is possible that he would touch his audiences less. He is utterly lost in his theme, and thinks no more of how he looks or how his voice sounds while he is singing, than does Mr. Moody while he is preaching. Every word throbs with feeling, and in yearning, pleading phrases the large tender heart of the man is especially conspicuous. "Gospel singers," who wish to follow in Mr. Sankey's footsteps, may go elsewhere to learn vocalisation, but from Mr. Sankey, if from no higher source, they must learn to forget themselves and sing straight from the heart.

NOTES AND INCIDENTS.

Among the readers of your accounts of the blessed meetings at Priory Hall, and of the "Notes of Workers," there are doubtless many anxious parents, deeply interested in the fact of so many dear young people brought back to the Good Shepherd's fold. May I add, for the encouragement of such, yearning for the salvation of their own children, my personal observation as a worker at the hall, that the majority of the young people with whom I conversed were children of praying, anxious parents.

A Mildmay Deaconess.

Y.M.C.A., THE PRIORY, ISLINGTON.

Mr. Henry Thorne has closed his Mission to young men in the Priory Hall. The Word has been spoken with the demonstration of the Spirit and with power. Young men night after night have yielded their hearts to the Lord; the members also have been strengthened in their Christian life. At the closing of the Mission on Friday evening, a number of young converts rose one after the other and testified to new interests, hopes, and realisations through the appeals of Mr. Thorne.

HOW THE BABIES ARE DISPOSED OF.

The following extract from a private letter of a lady who attended one of Mr. Moody's afternoon meetings at Wandsworth last week is interesting, as showing what becomes of some of the babies, while their mothers go to the hall. The lady says:—"I heard of something on coming out which pleased me immensely. Two small, tattered children inquired of me 'where the babies were minded?' I did not know, but felt curious; so I followed the little inquirers up to Down Lodge itself, where there was a small crowd of mothers and babies. I asked one woman about it, and she told me that the ladies at Down Lodge, with their nurses, undertake to mind the little children while the mothers attend the meeting. She said, 'There is a large room with fires, and toys all round, and a real lady is nursing my Polly, and Polly has some cake and milk.' There! I call that real good of the ladies at Down Lodge; especially as some of the babies are not over clean. The said Polly was, though, and chubby and kissable."

A BACKSLIDER RESTORED.

A friend sends to us the details of an interesting case. Six months ago the writer incidentally heard of a young man who had not only left his first love, after a Christian profession of several years, but had imbibed sceptical views. Three months later the writer met at the house of a friend in London a young man towards whom he was greatly attracted, and who turned out to be the very sceptical backslider of whom he had previously heard. He invited the young man to visit him, and having thus formed an acquaintance, sought to lead him back to the fold whence he had strayed. Notwithstanding his earnest entreaties and fervent prayers, the young man still lingered in the cold shades of doubt and negation, though at times there were symptoms of his yielding. Having casually observed in our columns the programme of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Mission at Wandsworth, the writer at once took steps to secure the attendance of his friend at the meetings. They went on several occasions; the young backslider was spoken with by Mr. Moody as well as others, but apparently he showed little signs of relenting. Finally, however, on the evening of Sunday week, when Mr. Moody spoke on "Sowing and Reaping," he stood up among those who were desirous of being saved, and in the subsequent inquiry-meeting he definitely yielded his heart anew to his Lord.

MAKING RESTITUTION.

The following letter has lately been sent to a friend:—

"I would like to give my testimony to the power of God's grace to change the sinner. I was brought into the fold during Mr. Moody's first visit to Ireland. I was attracted to the meetings more by curiosity than anything else. After being under conviction for a few days, I was able to rest my soul on John iii. 16. That night two of my fellow-workmen professed faith in Christ; one of them, with myself, is still pressing forward, while the other returned to his wallowing in the mire.

"The three of us had taken some of our master's property. We knew that we could not serve Christ without confessing our sin to our Master and making restitution. One evening Mr. Moody preached on Zaccheus. We saw ourselves in Zaccheus, and the Spirit brought home our sin; so we resolved we would confess to our master, even though we should be put into prison. Thank God, he forgave us, when we brought back what we had taken away.

"Though we were young, we began to work for God at once in whatever way we could. I believe that was one reason why we had no desire to go back to the world again. I was a bookbinder by trade, but I resolved I would give myself entirely to direct Christian work. I helped at meetings, and in my spare moments I improved myself. Three years ago I left business and went to college to prepare for the ministry. The Lord brought me through my examinations, in answer to prayer. I shall take my degree next year, if the Lord will, and, with his blessing, after that I shall go either to America or Australia to labour for the Lord there. I am engaged in Mission work at present, which the Lord is blessing."

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.—Miss Skinner intends, through the City Missionaries, to distribute her "Friendly Letter, addressed to Barmaids," in directed envelopes, with Christmas cards, in each public-house in Bath. She thinks that other ladies would like to imitate her example. Miss Skinner has a barrow, which has been used in Caxton Brigade work, and would be happy to give it, stocked with her "Friendly Letters," &c., to any society or Christian worker who could make a good use of both in the Lord's service. The recipient would, of course, pay the carriage from Bath.—Address, Miss Skinner, 5, St. James's-square.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONFERENCE IN CAPE TOWN.

THREE years ago I sent an account to THE CHRISTIAN of a Sunday-school Conference held at Stellenbosch, about thirty miles from Cape Town. It was then intended to form a South African Sunday-school Union, and the following year an elaborate scheme was submitted at another Conference held in Cape Town. It was, however, found impracticable to carry this out. The difficulties in a thinly-populated country, in which two different languages (Dutch and English) are spoken, proved insuperable. A united committee was, however, appointed for the purpose of arranging an annual Sunday-school Conference. Preparations were made for again holding a Conference at Stellenbosch last year, but in consequence of the terrible outbreak of smallpox, which was then raging in Cape Town, in which thousands died, this had to be abandoned.

This year a Conference has been held in Cape Town, from October 18 to 21. The Triennial Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church, which was sitting at Cape Town, kindly set apart the 19th for this object, so that their ministers and others might be free to attend it. We have had meetings in which the presence and power of God's Holy Spirit have been powerfully felt, and believe that much blessing will be the result. Besides the large number of ministers and elders present from all parts of the Colony, from 150 to 200 Sunday-school teachers came in from the country districts, for the greater part of whom free board and lodgings were found by the Reception Committee. Representatives were also present from the Orange Free State and the Transvaal.

The Conference opened by a prayer-meeting, in the South African Mission Chapel, on the evening of the 18th, presided over by Rev. William Murray, and addressed by Rev. A. Kriel in Dutch, and Rev. G. Murray in English, Rev. G. W. Stegmann, sen., also speaking in both languages. Rev. A. Kriel spoke of the Conference at Stellenbosch, three years ago, as having been in many respects a turning point in his life. He drew the attention of Sunday-school teachers to the words of Jesus to Peter before He said, "Feed my lambs:" "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou Me more than these?" Love to Jesus, above all else, must be the chief characteristic of the Sunday-school teacher. It was to such that Jesus said, "Feed my lambs." Rev. George Murray read the tract entitled "A Minister's Dream," and urged the teachers to examine their hearts, and see if their zeal for Christ was sincere and real, or if self had any part in it. The prayers were full of solemn confession of failure in the past, of humiliation before God, and of longings for increased consecration in the future.

The morning of the 19th was set apart for an examination in Dutch, of the deaf and dumb pupils at Mr. Labat's school for mutes, at Worcester. They are taught to speak by watching the motion of the teachers lips. The large Dutch church was crowded, and a sum of nearly £90 collected in aid of the institution. In the afternoon and evening a Sunday-school Conference was held in Dutch in the Wesleyan church. Papers and addresses bearing on Sunday-school work were given by Revs. G. W. Stegmann, sen., E. Z. de Beer, Adrian Hofmeyr, and A. Murray. They were marked by great earnestness. Rev. A Murray said that the needs of the Sunday-school teacher were the same as those of the minister. At a Ministers' Conference held recently at Worcester, these had been spoken of as threefold, viz., prayer, consecration, and the indwelling power of the Holy Spirit. These were absolutely necessary to make a successful Sunday-school teacher. Sankey's hymns were sung in Dutch. About 600 were present at each of these meetings. Further instructive papers were given by Revs. P. Tearle (Wesleyan), W. Jarvis (Congregational), and one of the American lady teachers at the Huguenot Seminary, Wellington.

Questions were invited from those present on any subjects bearing on Sunday-school work. Unfortunately time did not permit of their all being answered. The following were, however, replied to by Rev. A. Murray, viz., "What should be done in the case of teachers who indulge in purely worldly amusements but who continue to teach in the Sunday-school? "Tell them they must choose between one or the other. One or the other must be given up." "What is to be done in the case of a teacher who feels his or her responsibility so deeply as to wish to resign in consequence?" "Thank God that you feel it at all. Go to Him and cast yourself upon Him in your weakness and your insufficiency; do not give up, but seek with more earnest prayer and consecration that God will fulfil His promise to give to those who ask; and to supply all your need through Christ Jesus." He entreated those present to take hold of God by believing prayer—yielding themselves to Him to be cleansed from all sin—that He may work in them according to His own will. Thus would they become truly successful in their classes, and be the means of leading their children to Christ.

On Sunday afternoon a united service of teachers and children was held in Dutch and English in the large Dutch Reformed Church. Between 5,000 and 6,000 people were gathered together in the large building, which is the second largest under one span in the world. Some of these were Malays, who looked very picturesque in their peculiar costumes of brilliant colours. Addresses were given by the Revs. C. Murray and J. H. Hofmeyr. This service closed the proceedings of the Conference, which will, we trust, be long remembered by those present, encouraging them to more earnest efforts to bring their scholars to the Saviour.

Cape Town, October 22. C. E. COOK.

The Lads of South London.

WRITING as to the opening of the reconstructed "Golden Lion," in Southwark, to which we referred in our "Notes," last week, Mr. J. W. C. Fegan says:—

"Our plans are to keep the conversion of the lads as our definite aim, and to make the secular instruction very thorough. It has been very cheering to hear how they appreciate the comforts and advantages they now enjoy instead of having to listlessly lounge about the streets, or sit cabined up in their overcrowded homes.

"A kind Christian lady and her daughter have generously undertaken to pay the rent, and a gentleman, anxious that the lads should have really competent teaching—especially in drawing—bears nearly all the expenses of instruction. I would be very grateful for any parcels of books, illustrated papers, magazines, &c., sent carriage paid to my address below. I think any friends interested in the welfare of working youths who may find time any night to pay 'The Golden Lion' a visit will leave convinced that our effort, to a great extent, very cheaply and unostentatiously solves the difficult problem, how to retain a hold upon the elder scholars in our Sunday and Ragged-schools. May I add that in view of winter frosts and snows, I will be most thankful for left-off clothes of any description, however well worn, for the very deserving poor, whose struggles to keep body and soul together are painfully before me day by day and night by night.

"The Boys' Home, 95, Southwark-street, S.E."

Y.W.C.A., SOUTHAMPTON.—This Association has prospered during the past year. The monthly meetings have been well attended and helpful to many. A useful Registry-office has been a boon to a number of young and friendless girls. The "Home" is much appreciated, and many young women have been led to the Lord Jesus Christ.

Y.W.C.A., GOSPORT.—The annual winter tea of this association was held in St. Matthew's School-room on November 20, when about 130 members and friends were present. Major Poole, of Southampton, gave a striking address on "The Companionship of Christ." Prayer is asked for a blessing on the work during the winter among the young women of Gosport.

Mission Work at Lewisham.

TWELVE months ago, under the title, "A "Woman's Work at Lewisham," we gave an account of the evangelistic work conducted in that metropolitan suburb by Mrs. Canning Pysh. A few days back the second anniversary of the Canonbury Hall Mission was held in the Lewisham Public Hall. Colonel Wilmot Brooke, of Blackheath, presided, and the gathering was a numerous one. Addresses were delivered by the Chairman, also by Mrs. Pysh, Rev. G. Pysh, Mr. Nott, Mr. and Mrs. Bunning, and Mr. Richard Turner.

The report, read by Mr. Joseph Pitter, showed that the work in connection with the Mission is going on with unabated vigour and success. The "marching out" of the Mission is conducted as before, with singing, addresses, and prayer, and is very effective in attracting an audience for the indoor services. During the summer months there were out-door services on Blackheath. A week scarcely ever passed without some souls being brought to Christ. Much success has attended the Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance work, conducted by Rev. G. Pysh, more than 500 pledges having been taken during the year. The only matter for regret is the want of a larger building in which to hold the services and meetings. Efforts to obtain a more commodious place have hitherto failed, but the hope of getting a suitable building is still entertained. There is every indication that with a larger structure for the indoor gatherings, o much more extended work might be carried on. The want of a suitable site, rather than the mere question of funds, has been the chief obstacle to the attainment of this object.

A Fresh Departure in Chicago.

IN a recent issue of the Chicago Advance the following short article is given as representing the "first fruits of the Christian Convention" held in that city some months ago under the presidency of Mr. Moody:—

"Rev. Dr. Scudder, pastor of Plymouth Church of this city, has taken a step in the right direction for reaching the masses. For many years the audiences in Plymouth Church have been small; the wealth and social surroundings of the organisation have been considered among the reasons that the common people were not brought in. That they have had good preaching is well known. This is specially true since Dr. Scudder has come to the pulpit—a man whose fame is national, and whose success in San Francisco and Brooklyn has been beyond question. But still, the audiences, while large in the morning, were small in the evening.

"Last Sabbath morning Dr. Scudder preached no sermon, but in a vigorous address told his people, in substance, that he could not preach to empty seats; that he would not, and that there was one of these three courses open to him: To suspend the Sabbath evening services, to go back to Brooklyn, where he had a call to open a new enterprise, or to adopt a measure which he then proposed. It was this: To have a large chorus choir, of say 100, for Sabbath evening; to have the seats free; to have that part of the city districted and visited by members of the church inviting persons to the meetings; to introduce popular hymns, and in every way show that the services were for everybody. His congregation adopted his plan heartily, and 10,000 dollars were raised at once, to pay off a small debt remaining on the church, and provide funds for the great choir, and the new hymn-books for popular singing.

"We have not the least doubt of the success of this movement. People will come to the finest church or hall, if there is anything to come for, and they know that they are welcome. No fine church ever kept a poor man from its door if he knew that he was wanted, and that there was something for him inside."

A LECTURE SERMON.

ON Tuesday evening, Nov. 27, Mr. Theodore West, of Darlington, a former resident of Leeds, whose father attained a high position in his profession of analytical chemist, gave a very interesting lecture in the Friends' Meeting House, Leeds, on "Construction and Design in Nature." The lecture was illustrated by coloured drawings and specimens of the work of bees, ants, and wasps, the mechanism of shells, and the human eye and hand.

After describing the intelligence of ants and bees in their constructive works, their care for their young, their forethought in storing food, &c., the lecturer said he thought that we knew too little, or regarded too little the wonderful qualities of these apparently insignificant creatures, who were as much deserving of honourable titles as our great and learned men who had letters added to their names. The ant, for instance, was a mining engineer, a civil engineer, an agriculturist, and a sanitary inspector of no mean capacity, as he had found to his cost in Australia, where everything eatable which could be got at was cleared away by them with marvellous celerity. The bee was the prince of mathematicians, having constructed its cells on such perfect principles that a slight mistake in a table of logarithms was brought to light by two German mathematicians, who were calculating the angles of the greatest strengths, combined with the largest capacity, and found the angle of the bee's cell was right, while the table was slightly inaccurate.

The marvellous efficiency of the human eye and hand were touched upon as far as time would allow, the lecturer not omitting to give honour to the great First Cause. Specimens of shells were shown, including the Nautilus, to illustrate the beautiful symmetrical curves which no compass can execute; and the question was asked, was it possible to attribute the skill and wisdom shown by these humblest creatures in the scale of nature (slugs and snails) to anything else than the Divine intelligence which created them? When man learned drawing or modelling, he had to go through a laborious process of training, beginning with the simplest lines and forms; but these creatures, without any such schooling, constructed, out of the lime in sea-water and sea-weeds, dwellings of exquisite beauty of form and colour. The lecturer had ground down some of the larger species of shells to show their internal structure, and dilated upon the freedom, beauty, and accuracy of the lines, which none could see without admiring.

The lecture was listened to throughout with unabated interest by a mixed audience, many of whom were working men who attend the Friends' Adult Sunday-schools. What an open field there is for sermons of this kind among the hard-headed practical working men of the present day, many of whom are led away by the shallow arguments of infidels! Our Saviour's example in preaching may surely be followed with advantage. He knew well how to interest the masses. "The common people heard Him gladly." His parables from nature, his illustrations from everyday life, his spiritual truths drawn from outward and familiar objects, were eagerly listened to, and those whose spiritual eyes and ears were open, saw and heard the wonderful things He was never weary of unfolding.

There can be little doubt that the remarkable success which has attended the work of the American evangelists has been due in part to their seizing upon familiar objects for illustrating Divine truth. We fear that too much of the preaching of the present day has been above the heads of the masses; and not till we can do as the Saviour did—appeal to the poor and ignorant (and such appeals are as effectual among the rich and educated)—shall we find that they will come to hear. J. L.

HITCHIN COLPORTEUR SOCIETY.—The sales during the past year at the Society's prices have amounted to £785, consisting of over 12,000 books, 31,000 small books and magazines, 6000 Religious Tract Society Tracts, 19,000 Drummond's Stirling tracts, and 250,000 Little Pilgrim series; there has also been a free distribution of 5000 tracts.

Working Men in Kentish Town.

MALDEN Hall, one of the Evangelistic Mission buildings, was on Wednesday evening, Nov. 28, the scene of a meeting of three hundred working men. Three lines of railway, London and North-Western, Midland, and North London, have their goods yards in or adjacent to Kentish Town, and the evangelistic efforts put forth at Malden Hall have reached a number of railway men and others.

About twenty ladies presided at the tea-tables; after tea a social meeting was held, at which various members gave individual testimonies of experience of conversion and of Christian life.

The hymn, "Now, just a word for Jesus," appropriately commenced the meeting for testimony, and after prayer, one who announced himself as a working man somewhat sermonised the guests. He was followed by a Midland Railway signalman (himself a convert at Messrs. Moody and Sankey's work in 1875), who testified that he would not exchange the joy which Christian life carried with it for a thousand worlds. There was a manliness and a straightforwardness about this stalwart signalman's utterance which contrasted favourably with the effort at preaching of the preceding speaker. "A ruler once came to Jesus by night," with the refrain, "Ye must be born again," was then sung with great heartiness. Scarcely had the last note died away, when a voice was heard, "I am a living witness that this is true." It came from one who said he was a bricklayer, and that his besetting sin had no less than three times brought him within a few inches of the public executioner's rope, but who testified that through the preaching of three gipsies God had saved his soul. In strange contrast as to matter, but with an enthusiasm of manner which made his utterance indistinct, one who is a wood-chopper gave his testimony, which was deep and solid, as from one of the Puritan Fathers of two centuries ago.

Quickly and adroitly Wm. Grove, Dr. Barnardo's helper in Gospel work in the East of London, arrested the attention of the meeting by one of his characteristic addresses, which so vividly present the reality of the conflict between the forces of good and evil. Mr. Grove's home-thrusts were keen, and evidently carried conviction to his listeners. An engine-driver on the London and North Western followed; in homely phrase, but with an intensity of earnestness which was well in harmony with the tone of the meeting, he testified his experience of the attractive power of the Cross. The engine-driver was followed respectively by a stone-mason and by a stone-sawyer, and after the hymn "I shall be satisfied" had been sung as a solo by a Midland Railway accountant, the meeting was concluded in the usual way. It is clear that the methods adopted at Malden Hall have succeeded in reaching the working classes to a considerable extent.

FREE CHURCH MOVEMENT IN NORWAY.—Among recent movements for the advancement of the Gospel on the Continent, there is one well worthy of the sympathy of Christians in this country. It is a remarkable work of grace which is leading to the formation here and there of Free churches in Norway—which, in the words of a Glasgow clergyman who knows them well, "are becoming centres of blessing to the communities in which they are placed." The movement commenced in 1876 under the leadership of the Rev. Paul Wettergreen of Arendal, a minister of the State Church, who had laboured for many years as a missionary in South Africa. Influenced by the desire for spiritual independence, he organised a church on a Presbyterian basis. This little church now consists of some eight congregations; and as a proof that it was commenced in no narrow sectarian spirit, it has many sympathisers among the pastors and laity of the National Church, who have not themselves seen their way to join its communion. Indeed, as the church is entirely missionary in its character, and as the field in Norway is very far from being overtaken by the existing organisations, many hail it as a new power in the evangelisation of the country.—Christian Leader.

Notes and Comments.

OUR readers will observe that the meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey at Wandsworth closed yesterday (Wednesday); the opening meetings at Stepney take place this afternoon and evening (Thursday), at 3 and 8. All information may be obtained from the Hon. Secretaries, at the Stepney Green Hall, Harford-street, and Ben Jonsons-road, London, E. Friends in the country may apply to Mr. Robt. Paton, 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C. Further details will be found in our list of "Forthcoming meetings."

We are glad to learn, by a recent communication from Port Elizabeth, that the Rev. J. Mountain is recovering his health, which had become seriously impaired through overwork. At the date of writing he had returned from a sea voyage, and was purposing to take a further period of rest up country before resuming active evangelistic and temperance work.

The annual meeting of the Pastors' College was held last week at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. Both by his remarks on that occasion, and by his reference to the subject in this month's Sword and Trowel, Mr. Spurgeon shows he is by no means moved from his determination to stand by orthodox truth, spite of those who brand him with narrowness, and charge him with attempting to force back the clock. With characteristic firmness and quaintness, he says:—

"If we could put the clock back to the right time, as shown by our Lord and the Apostles, we would gladly do so; but this is beyond our power. The pretended advance is evil, and only evil. Each man must, however, answer for himself unto God. All we ask is to be clear of complicity in this boastful progress beyond what is plainly revealed. What next is to be done we cannot yet tell: but it would be idle to pretend to a fellowship which we do not feel. We do not regulate our theology by a clock, but by eternal truth. We may not know what's o'clock in the Christian world, but we believe in 'Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever.'"

Mr. Spurgeon is not alone in his wonderment as to where men are drifting in these days of changeful creeds and loosening hold on truth. We thoroughly sympathise with his words at the meeting referred to, when he said:

"He was sure they wanted particularly just now men who would teach definitely the Gospel of Jesus Christ. He did not know where the churches were going to. Instead of revelation, which they all once believed to be infallible, they were now relegated to thought, which meant fancy, which meant nonsense generally in the long run, as to any chance of blessing the sons of men thereby. Therefore they needed to have a college which was not ashamed to be thought dogmatic and positive. He would sooner have no men in the college than there should be any doubt as to their belief."

A correspondent speaks of meetings held in his own town, where Christians of all denominations are invited periodically to assemble on the ground of their common faith in Christ, and that for mutual edification. Such a plan must tend to break down the spirit of sectarianism and party strife; if wisely conducted these meetings must conduce greatly to awaken desire for undenominational action all round. There surely is enough in Christ to furnish a centre of loving unity for those who are his, without having recourse to minor differences, and making them badges of party distinction.

The West Lancashire Railway certainly presents features in its management of a very exemplary character. Mr. T. Gilbert, the General Manager, writes to the British Women's Temperance Association stating that no intoxicants are sold at any of its station refreshment rooms; the whole of the company's officials are total abstainers, and no man receives an appointment unless he has been an abstainer of some standing.

The sentences passed upon Messrs. Wardle and Watters, the two City men just convicted of fraud on the River Plate Bank, ought to have a wholesome effect. The guilt of these men was only enhanced by their position in society, and by their previous reputations for probity. Such advantages placed it in their power to commit the crimes for which they have been punished. The nature of their crime renders it necessary to read a lesson unmistakable in its character to the business world. The foundations of commercial and professional confidence would be rudely shaken if they had many imitators, and the rigorous hand of law must be invoked in all such cases.

We wish we could believe that these convictions will serve to check the spirit of commercial gambling which has become so common of late years. It is well that the light should fall upon the dark spots of City life, even though, as in this case, it throws a lurid glare upon the proceedings of some of its prominent actors. Dishonesty is ever impolitic in the end; he who hastes to be rich, and is careless of principle in the means he employs, sooner or later must reap the fruit of his ill-doing, however much he may seem to prosper for a season.

A writer in The Standard says that some seventy or eighty tons of good nutritive food were lost to the toiling millions of London, Manchester, &c., on one day this month at Inverness, because the railway charges are so heavy that no London buyers could be found. Surely a monopoly exercised with such inhumanity calls for Government interference. The freight of a barrel of herrings to Germany or Russia is 1s. 6d. to 2s. To London by rail it is about 12s. The correspondent adds:—

"If our railway rates for the carriage of fish were reduced, as they might be, to within reasonable bounds, the shoals of fish swimming on the south-west and west coasts of Ireland would find hands to catch them and markets ready to receive them in all our large manufacturing towns and seats of commerce. The Irish people would thus be benefited inestimably, and commerce would find its way into channels hitherto a stranger to it."

The Vicar of Burton-on-Trent requested the Bishop of Lichfield to sanction the removal of Rev. W. J. Smith from the curacy of that parish on the ground of his having offended the brewers of the town by his advocacy of total abstinence principles. The reply of the Bishop is in the affirmative! So we have the edifying (?) spectacle of a bishop and a vicar uniting to oust a brother minister from his sphere of labour, because his fidelity to conviction on the drink traffic and its curse to the land is likely to deprive the Church of gold and silver, derived from the promoters of the traffic. Comment is needless; only too plainly does the fact speak for itself, and thousands will know how to apply it to the detriment of truth. The old cry, "The craft is in danger!" has once more prevailed. Still, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians."

Among the "Centres of Spiritual Activity" (to quote its own heading), The Pall Mall Gazette has just included the Positivist place of assembly known as Newton Hall. A description of the work carried on there appeared last week from the pen of Mr. Frederic Harrison. He tells us that the discourses there delivered, and the great ends aimed at, all centre in "one Gospel, and that is the perfecting of man's life on earth by a truly scientific understanding of man's powers, limits, and wants." In the endeavour to educate the people in this direction the Positivist finds his ideal religion, and claims to have a really spiritual end in view.

Mr. Harrison says the fault of the churches is that in their eagerness to be spiritual they are ceasing to be human, and he asserts that Positivism enlarges the sphere of religion, and broadens it till every common act of existence is a religious act, and the rule of man's spiritual nature is acknowledged in industry, art, politics, and every social institution and habit. All this sounds well, but observation proves that in actual fact Positivism, instead of spiritualising the secular, so secularises the spiritual that spirituality is entirely lost. It is by bringing every secular act to the height of true religion that we really sanctify and ennoble life, not by bringing religion down to the secular level. The gospel for which Mr. Harrison pleads aims at levelling down; that of Christ, at levelling up.

A letter appeared in the Port Elizabeth Telegraph, of October 18, which completely refutes the statement made by Mr. Anthony Trollope and others to the effect that when the Kafir is taught to sing psalms and read books he becomes sly, a liar, and a thief whom it is impossible to trust. The writer is Rev. Samuel Brook, a highly esteemed missionary clergyman in Port Elizabeth, one who has been much blessed in Christian work among the natives. Mr. Brook says of the sure results of faithful Gospel teaching:—

"These effects may be seen in the Missions to the Kafir race in St. Stephen's, the Wesleyan, and the Edwards' Memorial. I will leave those who know more about the two last-named to speak on their behalf, and only refer to St. Stephen's Mission as the one on which I can speak confidently. The native Christians belonging to it are industrious, sober, and honest. During the many years I have had the oversight of it, not one has been convicted of theft or drunkenness. It is not the native Christians, but the native heathens, who swarm round the doors of canteens, and are daily brought up before the magistrate, and are to be found in our prison—the dirty Kafir whom Mr. Trollope and the Welsh Diogenes consider such a trustworthy servant in his ignorant state; but whom the missionary converts into a liar, a thief, and a dangerous character."

Nothing can be more unworthy of literary men, and travellers who profess to be interested in the welfare of distant lands, than to make statements prejudicial to Christian labour among the heathen without having taken pains to investigate the facts. Mr. Brook justly says, those who write and speak as those named above have done, are to be condemned for making their damaging assertions without due inquiry or proof. Faithful missionaries in all parts of the world are able to challenge fullest inquiry into the character of those converted by the grace of God from heathenism to the Gospel of Christ.

A striking sign of the times, and of the current of thought in our day, is found in the fact that the English Church Union should have thrown open its rooms for a series of conferences on Socialism. Canon Shuttleworth spoke on the subject the other evening, and said that Socialism proper dated from Christ, and that wherever Christianity had been predominant, sooner or later Socialism appeared also. The Canon gave but little clue to what he means by Socialism. It would be well for all who deal with that topic, to carefully analyse it, and clearly define what they intend by it, as various ideas wise and otherwise, are attached to it.

The question of overwork at schools, which has much occupied public attention of late, has received practical illustration at Bacup. Dr. Brown, the medical officer, stated at a meeting of the Town Council there the other day, that a girl had just died from inflammation of the brain, brought on by overpressure at school. He said education nowadays was often pushed to such an extent that childhood was robbed of all its happiness and joyousness. It tended to physical and mental deterioration. There is at least sufficient truth in this to make the subject one worthy of serious attention.

The influence exerted by David Strauss and his writings on the religious thought of the age has been pernicious in the extreme. The upas tree of modern scepticism has grown and flourished in the congenial soil of his productions, so that multitudes have been injured by its deadening influence, and poisoned by its evil fruit. It is with the deepest regret that we see in The Standard for November 24 an appreciatory reference to him, and his friendship with the late Princess Alice. That he should have been able to assert that his work on Voltaire owed much to her influence, and received her approbation, is a fact which adds nothing to the value of the biography just published, and which would have been wisely omitted.

Recollections of the life of a princess who was so gifted and beloved, and who is still so sorely missed and lamented as the Grand Duchess of Hesse, will be looked forward to with great interest by a large number of readers. Many of them, we apprehend, will see with sadness the prominence given by the editor to her intimacy with the German sceptic. Already there is a deplorable readiness on the part of those who ought to be firm in their defence of the truth, to favour and patronise literary men who are known enemies of Christianity. It is to be feared that an example set in so high a quarter will prove injurious to many young minds, some of whom may not be able to resist the influence of Straussism so successfully as we are glad to believe the Princess did.

After a long and faithful Christian pastorate, Rev. W. Poole Balfern, of Brighton, is compelled through advancing age and sickness to retire from active public work. A number of friends, representing various denominations, desire to show their appreciation of the services he has rendered to the churches, by raising a substantial testimonial on his behalf. We feel sure that many who have no personal acquaintance with Mr. Balfern, but who have received profit from his numerous poetical contributions to the Christian Press, will be glad to join in this expression of sympathy and regard. Mr. S. Comber, 6, Shaftesbury-road, Brighton, Honorary Secretary of the movement, will thankfully receive communications.

We understand that a brief memoir of the late Lord Congleton, with portrait, will appear in the January number of Footsteps of Truth.

A correspondent, writing to us on "The East-end Question," makes some pertinent suggestions. Many, he remarks, who excuse themselves from relieving the poor and needy on the ground of inability, might well consider how much they waste on useless indulgence. Many smokers spend a shilling per week on tobacco, moderate drinkers two and three shillings on their glass of ale, and others spend in needless trifles of various kinds equal amounts. Only half these sums would suffice to bring fire to some cheerless hearth, bread to some empty cupboard, or help in some other way to a destitute home. The worth of a single shilling to a match-box maker, who earns a paltry twopence per gross, is wealth itself, slight as it may be to many who throw it away on mere selfish whims.

Selfishness is not the crime of the rich alone, nor are they the only class responsible for the due discharge of the duties of benevolence. Among the lower middle class, and even on the part of the really poor, there may often be seen examples of charity and self-sacrificing kindness to others worthy of highest commendation. We are all bound by the law of Christ to bear one another's burdens, and if to do so necessitates the denying ourselves some of the little extravagances of life, all the more shall we reap the blessing pronounced on those who consider the poor.

One good result of the agitation on the condition of "Outcast London," is that landlords and sub-landlords are being compelled to set their houses in order. A case, tried at the Southwark police-court last week, proves that a man who rents a house for the purpose of letting out rooms is responsible for their being habitable and clean. The defendant, in this case, renting three houses in Mint-street, was fined twenty shillings and costs for each house, for allowing them to be filthy and in bad repair. A little more sharpness and close inspection on the part of medical and sanitary officers will do good service.

London's "Bitter Cry" is finding an echo in other places. A correspondence has been going on for some days in the Daily Telegraph, revealing the fact that in the royal burgh of Windsor, under the very shadow of our Queen's palatial abode, a state of things exists that is a burning disgrace to the sanitary authorities of the town. The Rector of Windsor has manfully espoused the cause of the poor and needy in his parish; we trust he will not relax his efforts till this shameful social abuse is rectified, and the proprietors of these "wretched tenements" are compelled by the strong grip of the law to make them at least approximately fit for human habitation.

A correspondent points out an inaccuracy that he has discovered in the printing of the "brevier 16mo" edition of the Revised New Testament. In 1 Cor. iii. 5, the word "Lord" is transposed. In the pica and nonpareil editions the passage reads correctly: "What then is Apollos? and what is Paul? Ministers through whom ye believed; and each as the Lord gave to him." Those who happen to possess the brevier edition should make the necessary correction.

The new Irish Gospel song, "I will," words by Major Whittle, and music by Mr. J. McGranahan, will be given in our next issue.

A large number of friends assembled on Saturday afternoon last in Abney Park Cemetery for the funeral of the late Mr. G. J. Knight, of Hackney. After the service in the church, Rev. W. Tyler and Rev. W. Cuff conducted the meeting round the grave. Testimonies were given by them and also by Messrs. Harding, R. C. Morgan, and W. Noble, to the Christian character and long life of usefulness of their departed friend. A monument to the memory of the late Dr. Ellis was afterwards unveiled.

From time to time serious complaints have been made as to the prevalence of gambling on ocean steamers; hitherto it has seemed difficult to bring about any abatement of the evil. The following cablegram from the New York correspondent of The Standard appeared in that journal last week:—

"A prosecution in the police-court to-day has exposed an extraordinary story of gambling on board the Cunard steamer Servia, and Henry Rice has been compelled to refund to Robert Sullivan a sum of 2780 dollars, of which Sullivan charged Rice with having cheated him. The other passengers say it is merely a quarrel between the two over the division of their winnings from twenty others, who lost various sums, averaging 200 dollars each. One passenger lost 1500 dollars; two Englishmen, brothers, lost 500 each. One passenger landed in a penniless condition. An American, returning from Oxford, assisted by others, forcibly compelled the restitution of the money that had been won from a young man coming from India. The play was generally high, and frequently the loss of hundreds of dollars depended on the toss of a coin. Money was also lost at card playing."

We observe also that an action for libel brought by another well-known company against the Montreal Witness, because of adverse comments as to the gambling permitted on their Transatlantic steamers, has been decided in favour of the newspaper. We trust these public exposures may help in the suppression of this crying offence against public morals.

The Vienna correspondent of The Standard furnishes its readers with an interesting account of a second proposed tour of exploration in "the Dark Continent," by Dr. Holub, under the patronage of the Austrian Government. One paragraph in the statement is peculiarly gratifying:—

"As a proof of the instinctive good sense of some of these [Central African] tribes, Dr. Holub mentions the fact that two kings, Montsoua and Khama, with whom he is personally acquainted, do not permit the importation of alcohol in their dominions, and that any European who transgresses that law is published."

Observers of the sky have seen with wonder and delight, during the last week or two, the unwonted brilliance and beauty of the sunsets, and in some cases the sunrise, with which we have been visited. Their magnificence has been such as is seldom seen in our isles, and glowing descriptions of the phenomena have appeared in various journals. The suggestion is not far to reach, that if we are careful to observe the spiritual horizon, we may be permitted to see yet clearer and brighter manifestations of that better Sun, whose beams are indeed healing and life-giving to those on whom they fall. Amid prevailing gloom, He shines forth, often when least expected, always when looked for with eagerness and faith.

THE REVIVAL IN IRELAND.

TRALEE.

SIR,—On Wednesday, November 14, their Mission in Tralee was opened by Major Whittle and Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan. The notice of their intended visit had been short, but the committee, consisting of persons of different sections of the church, working in pleasing harmony and with a hearty goodwill, gave themselves to making the necessary arrangements. United prayer-meetings were held twice each day to invoke the Divine blessing in preparing the hearts of the people for the reception of the good seed the Lord's servants were about to sow.

When, then, the labourers appeared they found a people awaiting their message in a prayerful and expectant spirit. Nor were they disappointed. Never since the year 1859, when the great wave of revival which passed over Ulster, in its rebound struck the shores of Kerry, has such a general religious movement been witnessed in Tralee, reaching to the surrounding country. By the end of the third day it was found that the "Protestant Hall," where they had till then assembled, was too small to receive the crowds which were likely to attend. The committee decided to accept the use of the large granary opposite Day-place, which Mr. Latchford was kind enough to place at their disposal, and which was opened for the services of Sunday, November 18. Here, to large and deeply-interested audiences, the Gospel as powerfully preached and effectively sung.

Daily the interest increased. Tidings of the great season of blessing reached the country, and brought many together from distant parts of Kerry. Indeed, from town and country, persons of all persuasions crowded to the granary. Many testified to having decided for Christ, and to having found peace through believing; while believers had their faith much strengthened, and their love much increased.

On Wednesday, Nov. 21, the week terminated, for which period only the Evangelists had intended to have continued their services. Encouraged, however, by the great success attending their labours, they, at the request of the committee, kindly consented to prolong their stay till after Sunday, the 25th inst., a day not soon to be forgotten in Tralee. Major Whittle's loving and stimulating address to Christian workers at 8 a.m., and his clear expositions of truth and forceful appeals to the unsaved at 8.15 p.m., were manifestly used of God, as also were the sweet songs by Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan. Some bore testimony at the close of these services to having been made the recipients of blessing.

On the platform were to be seen friends belonging to the different Protestant denominations. An efficient choir, supplemented Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan's loving work. If no other benefit resulted from their visit, that of the brotherly love among Christians who had previously but little fellowship, were in itself a revival for which to praise God. The evangelists leave Tralee, followed by the prayers of many who expect to hear great and good tidings of their successful labours through Ireland. Nothing could be a greater misfortune than that at this crisis their labours in this country should be interrupted by their being called away to any other sphere.

JOHN WOODS BALLARD,
Methodist Minister.

(From Another Correspondent.)

The visit of Major Whittle and Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan to Tralee has been marked by manifest blessing. Last year you called attention to the newly formed Prayer Union for Ireland. Christians everywhere took it up, and in the visit of the American evangelists to the south of Ireland, and the reception they have met within each city and town, many have seen the opportunity of this answer of our God. Thanks be to Him for the glad reception and welcome given to the message of salvation by numbers, who, by their quiet and attentive demeanour, their earnest looks, and attentive smiles and tears, proved how gladly they listened, many perhaps for the first time, to the preaching of Jesus. As it was in Limerick, in Cork, in Waterford, in Clonmel, and on one happy night even in Killarney, so has it been in Tralee. Such a collection of diverse creeds had never before been seen. Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Methodists, Protestants, Catholics, all sat together, held by a common interest and attraction—the cross of Christ. No breath of discord blew. Major Whittle was assisted in prayer at the meetings by all the Christian ministers and workers in the town; and if one or two had at first felt misgiving at methods so new and strange to them, before the end all doubts disappeared, and the preachers by word and song had the hearty co-operation of every minister of Christ in Tralee.

This fact of itself is of extreme value in the presence of the oft-repeated taunt as to the divisions of Protestants. Tralee now knows, and Kerry knows that in the preaching of Jesus as the only Name under heaven whereby men must be saved, sin conquered, and righteousness accomplished we are, with all our divisions on minor questions, solid in our unity.

Of Major Whittle's addresses it is needless to speak, more than to say that God gave him a wonderful wisdom in his choice of word and anecdote, led him to propound with his natural energy and persuasiveness the grand old truths in great simplicity, and with terrible faithfulness to expose the horrors of sin and its penalty. Nothing could have been better or more suitable for the occasion. And yet, without the singing of his friends, Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, the same meetings or results would not have been seen. For Ireland and her need the virtue of the Gospel in song is clearly established. The precious truths in the language of Scripture float into the very hearts and souls of our people on the wings of the sweet melody, unchecked by any thoughts of controversy or opposition, and doubtless numbers were first led to attend the services from their curiosity to hear the singers. Mr. McGranahan's adaptations of Scripture were specially effective; each word was distinctly heard, and fastened by the song on the memory of the hearer.

The men's meeting, held after each night's service, was very remarkable, as one after another of young and middle-aged men stood up, and in simple language, often in quivering voice, told the fact of their conversion. These testimonies are first steps in bearing the cross, and a fine instrument of confirmation, testing the moral courage or giving it birth. This is so everywhere, but in a small provincial town it is far more difficult, and more blessed therefore, than elsewhere, inasmuch as everyone who rises is known to almost all present.

The closing night (Sunday) must have a word to itself. Perhaps 700 persons were present—a wonderful sight in Kerry. The Lord gave the word on "I am the Way," and great was the power and persuasion of him that published it. After opportunity was given for some to leave, no appreciable difference in the numbers could be seen. All who had received blessing were asked to stand. A large number thus testified their thankfulness to God for his saving grace. And when Major Whittle offered a little card for Scripture reading and simple helps for young believers to all who, at the meetings, had received the knowledge of forgiveness, or who had been restored from backsliding, over 120 persons gave in their names and addresses, and received the card. Truly our hearts were full to overflowing, in praise to God for his goodness. Many kings and prophets have desired to see the things which we see and have not seen them. How, then, should we send up our thankful songs to Heaven!

The platform of the station was crowded on Monday by those met to say "good-bye" to our dear friends. Parting hymns were sung and tears of mingled joy and sorrow shed. And so they left, bearing with them many an earnest hope that they might soon return to help and further the good work done.

LIMERICK.

At Limerick that Monday night a grand meeting filled the theatre, some 100 being turned away for want of room; and as the preacher reasoned of righteousness and judgment to come from the words, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked," &c, men testified to the full work of conviction and conversion to God being accomplished in them. At 7 a.m., on Tuesday, before starting for Mallow, Major Whittle met the young Christians for prayer, and the time was one of power and blessing. He was much cheered to find the converts brought in during his previous visit with Mr. Moody standing strong and steady, with no flagging of zeal or effort in the local workers.

opened well. With one regretted exception, the ministers are united in the work. The afternoon meeting, held in the Methodist Chapel, on account of the pre-engagement of the Ball-room for an exhibition for that day, was one of exhortation to Christians, kindling enthusiasm, searching the heart, and afresh consecrating the life to God's service. In the evening a phenomenon took place not hitherto witnessed in this town of comparatively few professing Christians: about forty persons stood up, in the face of their friends and neighbours, to express their desire for light and life.

This at the very outset was encouraging. That a single and a first address should so move the assembly, that about one-fourth of it should express their sense of awakened conscience, was no little thing, and a good augury for what should follow. Next day and Thursday the meetings were held in the Ball-room, with increased numbers. The afternoon address on "The Lamb of God," and the evening on "Be sure your sin will find you out," deeply moved the assemblies. Though this despatch leaves before the last day's meetings, evidences are not wanting that the town is already visited with a religious awakening of a very decided character.

The weather throughout the whole time in Tralee and Mallow has been as wet as it could be, and that is saying much, so that the large attendances have been the more remarkable, numbers walking and driving long distances in cold and rain to hear the glad tidings. It is the unanimous feeling of Irish workers that this Mission ought not to cease, that a turn in the tide of our spiritual deadness is come, that signs are visible of a new era of blessing for Ireland, and that neither the need of London nor any other claim ought to take our brethren away from the dark provinces of our land, where rays of light are beginning to penetrate.

Will your readers continue in prayer for Ireland? We asked three things: that order might be restored, that the people might be made willing to hear the Word, and that Christians might not be slack to speak it. The first prayer has been granted to a considerable extent; of the second we have some hopeful first signs; let us not fail in the third. God has shown us that America can speak his Word to Ireland more acceptably than home witnesses, and that music gives easy entrance to the heart of the people, for the "Wonderful Words of Life." Let us not fail to learn the lesson He is teaching us, nor to perform it.

Another friend, writing about the return visit of the evangelists to Limerick, and the meeting in the theatre on the evening of Monday week, says:—

"It was a time of great heart-searching; the stillness that pervaded the place was very marked. At the close of Major Whittle's address, Mr. and Mrs. McGranaham, with the choir, sang 'I will,' all joining in the chorus. While the hymn was being sung some thirty rose and professed to accept Christ. We have never seen such real enthusiasm at the return of any preacher before. I am sure the Major and his companions were very thankful that they had been led to come.

"The 7 a.m. prayer-meeting was gladdened by having Major Whittle to lead it on Tuesday.

For that morning it was thrown open to all, so that we had a full room; some 250 were present. Half an hour is the usual time for the meeting, but on this occasion it lasted an hour and a half. At one time some of the audience might be heard quoting some of the promises; at another, short prayers were offered, and then a short address was given by the Major. At the close Mr. Fitt asked for special prayer for the work of these brethren in Mallow, whither they were going, and three hearty prayers were offered. This daily morning meeting keeps up well; it is attended by forty to fifty men. I think the numbers are increasing.

"These evangelists see a harvest ready to be gathered in every place they visit, and their hearts are drawn out to the South and West of Ireland. A very great work could be done this winter through this district if they can see their way to remain. Will you ask the Christians in London to pray for the work in Limerick and the South generally?"

WATERFORD.

The revival meetings in Waterford, says the local Mirror of November 22, during the current week have been as large and as enthusiastic as those of the past week. The Rev. Mr. Line's Bible-class for young men on Sunday morning, and the meeting conducted by Mr. Thomas Downey in the afternoon, were both crowded. The weekly united prayer-meeting in the Protestant Hall, on Tuesday evening, was again crowded to excess with an enthusiastic assembly.

Women and Temperance.

THE annual meeting of the East London Women's Christian Temperance Union was held on Tuesday evening, Nov. 27, at Limehouse Town Hall. The meeting was well attended. Lady HOBART, who has lately returned from Canada, spoke of her visits to emigrants whom she had known some years back in East London, and who are now comfortably settled in Canada. She remarked that those who totally abstained from strong drink were decidedly the most prosperous, and recommended total abstinence as a remedy for much of the sorrow and suffering of the working population, both here and across the sea. At the same time, she said that the happiest families she had seen were those who, while abstaining from the intoxicating cup, had also the blessing of a true faith in Christ, and who were serving God and living to His glory.

Miss HASTINGS, of the London School Board, told her experience as school-board manager, and of the importance of women's work in this cause. She related a very interesting case of a teacher, who had been reported as giving way to intemperance. She found that weak health had led to the habit, and having been ill herself she could sympathise and help her. After earnest conversation and prayer, the teacher had been led to abstain; through continued sympathy, she was able to keep in the path of sobriety, to redeem her character, and retain her situation.

Miss MACPHERSON exhibited a drunkard's neck-tie, which caused a great sensation. Miss MARGARET COLES spoke of the different reasons that women give for not joining the Temperance movement, and founded her remarks on the words of St. Paul, "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak." The Treasurer reported the Union to be in a prosperous condition, and all felt encouraged to go forward in the great work of the Temperance Reformation.

BLUE RIBBON CLUB, BEDFORD.—After a fourteen days' Mission here in February last, a gentleman provided rooms over his stable for the working men who had become abstainers. These soon became too small, and now other and larger rooms are occupied. There are 190 members, a great number of whom were drunkards. It is entirely managed by the men themselves. Mr. A. Jones, Blue Ribbon Club, Greyfriars-walk, Bedford, will be glad to give information.

Mr. T. E. Murphy in Ireland.

A MOST successful Gospel Temperance Mission has been concluded at Holywood, co. Down. The meetings were held for three consecutive nights in the Town Hall, which on each occasion was taxed to the utmost in accommodating the hundreds who thronged to hear Mr. T. E. Murphy. The entire Protestant clergy heartily seconded the efforts of Mr. Murphy, and zealously entered into the spirit of the proceedings, which were most enthusiastic throughout.

Mr. Murphy delivered one of his effective Temperance addresses in Parsonstown, on Friday week. The meeting was held in a large room granted by Mr. Dooly, the principal hotelkeeper, and a staunch abstainer. The Ven. Archdeacon Chester, a thorough Temperance man, occupied the chair. The meeting was a complete success. Several took the pledge and donned the blue ribbon; amongst them were some influential persons whose example in that respect will do good.

A very successful meeting was held in the Methodist Church, Roscrea, co. Tipperary, on Monday evening, November 26. Mr. Murphy compelled the attention of an overflowing audience to the well-expressed facts and forceful arguments with which his lecture abounded. About 140 "donned the blue."

Mr. Murphy last week addressed three large and successful gatherings in the Assembly Rooms, Cork, the scene of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's recent mission in that city. Many were induced by his earnest and persuasive utterances to give their personal adhesion to the cause. Mr. Murphy had a meeting at Queenstown on Friday.

Among the Bird Fanciers.

IT is now twenty-one years since a band of workers connected with a united fellowship and prayer-meeting in the East of London engaged in theatre and open-air services on Sundays. The results were most satisfactory. Not only were the workers bound together in holy and happy fellowship, but many souls were saved, and much permanent work for God was done.

Omitting, on this occasion, Miss Macpherson's grand Mission and her noble persistence in doing good, my present wish is to call attention to Clubb-row, Sclater-street. In that notorious Sunday "Fancy Fair," the Gospel has been continuously proclaimed to scores and hundreds of idlers to whom Sunday is the great fair day for birds and animals. To describe the scene would be difficult. The crowd numbers hundreds and thousands of the unwashed and unkempt class. These men look upon Sunday as their day of special business. From ten o'clock until two great numbers congregate to buy, sell, chop and change birds, dogs, goats, and other live stock. The idea of church or chapel-going is not known. These men mean business for five or more hours—then the public house.

Thank God, however, all is not dark. The Sunday preaching has been owned. Some of "the Fancy" have been brought to the Saviour. The services go on regularly, and a Mission hall close by the preaching stand has been erected. Mr. Knowles has been most diligent during twenty years past, always at his post. The preachers for the "fancy" are men well suited for the work. The addresses are short, pointed, clear, bold, and persuasive; anecdotes and facts are interspersed with doctrine, precept, and kind appeals. When one describes his conversion it is with telling power and effect. Tears are often seen to drop on the back of the hand, and the head sinks somewhat on the neck. The preacher, a little elevated upon a stool, surveys scores, if not hundreds of faces, many of which indicate interest, feeling, and remorse and hope. We fully believe that large numbers of brands are continually plucked from the burning at the Sclater-street services.

Open Doors in Germany.

MY DEAR SIR,—As promised, I send you a short notice of the work in Germany. Thank God, I am greatly encouraged. I find wide open doors and eager listeners, and I have been privileged to see signs following the preaching of the Word. Much interest is here manifested from quarters one hardly expected, while the opposition also comes from unexpected quarters. For instance, the Commander of this great garrison has issued an order, unasked, which gives soldiers who wish to attend the meetings leave to stay out. The secular Press also speaks of the meetings most favourably. A clerical correspondent, on the other hand, writes: "As Dr. Ziemann is coming from the land of the spleen his doings will not surprise, and one need not fear his influence; the good sense of our people will simply ignore him!" Another writes: "It is a sign of our time that a medical doctor travels from town to town to hold Gospel meetings in inns and dancing saloons, as if we had not churches and pastors enough to satisfy the people!"

However, "the good sense of the people" seems to discern the truth of God, and they come in such crowds that, had I helpers, I could have nightly overflow-meetings. I ask for prayer for myself, and that God would raise men to carry on this work.—Yours faithfully,

Wesel, Nov, 27. H. P. ZIEMANN.

Railway Gatekeepers.

A CALL FOR CHRISTIAN LADIES.

I AM happy to say that 180 ladies are now helping in the Mission to Railway Gatekeepers. About 2000 families are receiving the monthly packets. Many letters received by our kind helpers show how fully the dwellers in the railway-crossing cottages appreciate this effort to benefit them. All the railways, having termini in London, viz.: The "Great Northern," the "Great Western," the "Great Eastern," the "London and North Western," the "Midland," the "South Eastern," the "South Western," the "London Chatham and Dover," the "London, Brighton, and South Coast," also several of the Scottish, North of England, and Welsh lines of railways have had monthly packets of cheer and words of sympathy sent to the gatekeepers of the level crossings over their entire systems.

Some of the Scotch and North of England railway lines have yet to be supplied. We shall be glad if fifty ladies will kindly respond, who will be willing to take up this little service for the Master, to send a small packet of periodicals monthly to twelve gatekeepers, each at her own expense. This would complete the supply to all the railways in Great Britain. Communications to be addressed to the Honorary Secretary, Miss Watson, who will gladly forward gatekeepers' names with full particulars.

Y.W.C.A.—A well-attended meeting was held on November 29, at Mrs. Seymour's, Wilton House, Hackney, E., to consider "The need of a Y.W.C.A. Institute in that district;" W. G. Habershon, Esq., in the chair. After the opening address by the chairman, a brief statement was made by the organising secretary, and addresses were given by Mr. Robert Burn, Mr. M. Rose, and Rev. J. H. Piggott. A resolution was passed to obtain local help, also to open a branch institute of the Y.W.C.A. Several ladies present were requested to form a committee to organise and carry out this project. G. H.

THE EDINBORO' CASTLE.

LAST week we announced the interesting ceremonial, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, of laying the "memorial stones" of Dr. Barnardo's new "Edinboro' Castle," at Limehouse. The Daily Chronicle thus pleasantly reports the proceedings:—

"The ceremony took place in a lofty pavilion on the site of the new Mission Hall. Most of the space was occupied with a sloping gallery, accommodating some two thousand persons. The civic procession was half an hour after the time fixed. The Lord Mayor, Lady Mayoress, and Mr. Sheriff Cowan, were conducted to the dais by Dr. Barnardo and the committee. After singing and prayer, Mr. Samuel Gurney Sheppard, chairman of the committee, in the absence of Lord Cairns, the president, and Lord Kinnaird, the vice-president, offered the welcome of the committee to the civic party. He expressed his satisfaction that the philanthropic work of which Dr. Barnardo was the moving spirit was becoming appreciated by the nation at large. The first stone was laid by Mr. W. Fowler, M.P., the treasurer of this philanthropic enterprise. He stated that ever since he had been connected with it he had taken a deep interest in the London poor. What the hon. member appreciated in Dr. Barnardo was this—while many other folk were talking, he set about doing something. 'At present,' said Mr. Fowler, 'we have a wilderness of talk and a multitude of suggestions, but I believe myself that nothing will do any good without a real improvement in the habits of the people. If you can once change the habits of the people, you will change their dwellings.' He added that he sympathised with Dr. Barnardo's work, because alongside of practical effort, he cut at the root of misery and vice in preaching the Gospel. The best peroration possible was contained in a promise of a donation of £100 towards the new hall. Three stones were laid in succession by the Rev. W. Tyler (acting as proxy for Sir James Tyler), Mr. Samuel Gurney Sheppard, and the Hon. Emily Kinnaird. After that some little fellows from one of the Homes gave a hand-bell ringing entertainment, and several ladies presented purses containing contributions.

"Dr. Barnardo followed with a genial address, in which he set forth the facts connected with this branch of his work. He stated that £4,124 had already been raised to meet the expense that would be incurred in the erection of this new hall. Of this amount one anonymous friend gave £1000; another, £400; Mr. W. J. Palmer, of Reading, £500; Mr. Livingston Learmouth, £500; Messrs. Cory, of Cardiff, £500, with promise of addition; Sir J. Tyler, £250; Mr. Gurney Sheppard, £100, &c. The most satisfactory part of all was that the Mission-hall congregation, poor as they were, proposed to take upon them to raise £500 of the amount required. In conclusion, he denied that the working classes repudiated the Gospel, and expressed his opinion that, if anything, the East-end was better affected to it than the West-end.

"The Lord Mayor, having laid the principal memorial stone, congratulated Dr. Barnardo on the work he was doing. He went on to refer to the general awakening to the fact within the last few weeks, that there were vast masses living in our midst whose condition was such as to demand general sympathy. There were poor everywhere; but what made the lot of East London so sad was that the well-to-do did not live among the poor there, but they were left to themselves. There were poor in other places, in Liverpool, for instance, but the rich dwelt among them, and took an interest in them. In the East-end of London ministers found it difficult to obtain Sunday-school teachers and lady visitors. While concurring that improved dwellings and education were important as far as they went, the Lord Mayor expressed his deep conviction that there was only one way to alleviate human misery, and that was in 'God's blessing on the preaching of his Gospel.' It was impossible, he thought, to over-estimate the usefulness of a hall like that, in which the Gospel would be preached to the masses who would not enter handsome churches or chapels. Everyone would be glad to have the masses in the regular places of worship; but as the repugnance existed, the only alternative was to promote Mission halls in their midst. He hoped Dr. Barnardo's appeal would be liberally responded to by the public."

In a communication to ourselves, Dr. Barnardo writes as follows:—"I would lay earnest emphasis on the fact that if we meet the poverty and squalor around us by social measures only, and omit the earnest preaching of the Gospel in the common language of the common people, we shall greatly weaken our hold upon vast masses of the population. For this reason, therefore, if for no other, Mission halls deserve the warm support of Christian people in very different stations in life. I am sorry to say that we have not progressed as well with our fund as we had hoped. The entire receipts of the day were but £550, of which £250 had been promised beforehand, so that the net proceeds were only £300.

"It may be well to point out that all the decorations were supplied by Messrs. Defries, of Houndsditch. We only hired them for the day at a merely nominal cost, Messrs. Defries doing the work at a rate much below their ordinary charge.

"It is hoped that the hall will seat 3500, and will be opened in the middle of January. We want to open it free of debt, and would be very thankful for help, in promises or money, for the £3000 yet required."

Sermon-lane Mission, Islington.

I HAVE read with much pain and sympathy the little book entitled, "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London." As a worker among the poor of Islington for 40 years, I can truly say that in this pamphlet not half has been told of what I have seen and witnessed, especially during the past 15 years. Many hundreds at this season of the year are asking us for bread. It was on account of the great distress—many almost dying with starvation—that we opened our hall fifteen years ago for a Sunday morning free breakfast, and for soup dinners on week days during the winter months. Every winter many thousands of the ragged and destitute are supplied with a good meal. The main object of the meetings is to bring them under Gospel teaching; a short service is always held after the breakfast and dinner.

The results of these meetings during the past fifteen years are more than we can describe; many lads, who were a pest and a disgrace to society, are now respectable; thieves and burglars are now leading honest lives; young prodigals have been restored to parents and to homes; poor lost girls of a tender age are now leading virtuous lives, while many who lived in filth, drunkenness, and begging, are gaining an honest living; others have passed away from the wretched garret or underground kitchen into the Lord's presence, blessing God that ever they attended our Sunday morning breakfast meetings, for it was there that they met with Jesus.

Our Mission is quite unsectarian and is entirely supported by voluntary help; at the same time, it has the sympathy of every minister of the Gospel in the neighbourhood. The winter season is again at hand, but our funds are quite spent; we greatly need help to feed and care for the poor London outcasts in this part of the City, so that the "Bitter Cry" may be turned to songs of praise to God. George Fuller.

SOUTH LONDON.—The first of a series of Monthly Meetings for Christian Workers will be held at the Penarth-street Mission Hall, Ormside-street, Old Kent-road (near the Old Kent-road Station of the South London line), on Tuesday next, the 11th inst. Tea at half-past six, p.m.; address at half-past seven. All Christian workers are cordially invited. Friends who intend partaking of tea are requested to send in their names, on or before the 9th inst., to the Superintendent, Mr. S. Clayton, 85, Montpelier-road, Peckham, S.E.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

FRENCH BIBLE SOCIETY.

THE pastor of a church in the south of France, composed principally of working men, takes the following means of adding to the funds of the Society. He says: "I perform no marriage service without presenting a Bible to the newly-married pair, stating that it is an absolute gift to those who cannot or will not pay for it, but that I trust on that day of joy and happiness they will be willing to help to spread the glad tidings to those who know it not. For ten years at only one or two marriages have I received less than five francs, and at only two have they given me nothing at all. The amount contributed to the society has been tripled by this means."

NOYON, FRANCE.

A correspondent writes to us pleading for some Christian family to go and reside at Noyon, and let him have a room in their house for holding Gospel services, hitherto held in a dancing hall. He is unable to do much there, having a congregation of about 400 to attend to in and around Channy. Ladies who could do missionary work, would find many opportunities of serving the Lord here. Anyone desirous of knowing more of this may write to Pasteur Aimé Cadot, Channy, France.

PARIS.

Madame Robin, 26, Rue Clavel, Belleville, Paris, has established a "Maternal Refuge" for the reception of destitute young girls, where they will be cared for, trained, and taught some method of earning their living.

With a view to the further evangelisation of Paris, meetings similar to those held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey last year will be organised successively in the different Temples in conjunction with the pastors and laymen. The first series of meetings will take place in December, and will be presided over by Rev. R. McAll.—Le Christianisme au XIX. Siècle.

The Mayor of the Fourteenth Arrondissement in Paris, hearing of a meeting for women in a hall in his jurisdiction, the doors of which were left open during the meeting, judged it to be a meeting in the open air, and so punishable. Dr. Darcus, the medical man who has given his services gratis for the McAll dispensary, is also interdicted, his great success having provoked the priests and the freethinkers.

THE MCALL MISSIONS.

In connection with Mr. McAll's work, the first Gospel Hall has been opened in Algiers. The meeting was numerously attended, and perfectly quiet, though some Freethinkers had declared their intention of creating a disturbance. Our friend is full of courage, and thinks of hiring a second room shortly. Mr. McAll has organised a series of evangelical addresses in Paris. The first was delivered November 14, by M. Réveillaud, his subject being "The Source of Liberty." Others followed, on the 20th, by Messrs. Th. Monod and R. Saillens.—Le Christianisme.

Another new meeting-hall has recently been opened in connection with the McAll Mission in Paris. This makes the eightieth in France. A fifth hall has been opened at Bordeaux. M. de Rougemont is opening similar halls in Algeria. Mr. McAll has convoked a conference of Christian workers in Paris for prayer and consultation as to new efforts and new methods. There was much enthusiasm, and much earnest work is looked for as a result during the winter.

JUBILEE OF THE EVANGELICAL SOCIETY.

This noble society, which celebrated its first jubilee on the 24th of April last, has found in its new secretary, Pastor Monrou, an able and eloquent historian of its fifty years of labour and struggle. The annual report (Cinquantenaire de la Soc. Evangelique de France, 1833—1883) is devoted this year to a review of the Society's history from the beginning, and a most interesting one it proves to be, and one which we commend to all our readers, anxious to know how the work of God has been proceeding in certain parts of France, and the various vicissitudes it has met with. The report may be had on application by post-card to the Secretary, at 76, Rue d'Assas, Paris.

COREA.

A high official from the peninsula of Corea, who himself became a Christian in Japan, has induced two American missionaries to undertake a trial journey in that hitherto almost closed land. The result will be watched with the deepest interest.

BAVARIA.

The King of Bavaria has agreed to allow Pastor Schlegel, the superintendent of the Berlin Town Mission, to give public addresses in the kingdom of Bavaria for two years, on the aims of and need for such a Mission; also permission to collect, at the close of such meetings, the free-will offerings of the audience. Pastor Schlegel, however, may only visit those places where the ecclesiastical authorities agree in desiring such advocacy.—Evangelisch-Kirchlicher Anzeiger.

MALTA.

Notwithstanding the difficulties which exist to the spread of the Gospel in this island, a blessed work has been going on among the soldiers. A few months ago, Miss Todd, of the Soldiers' Home, Maryhill, N.B., paid a visit to Malta, and held a few meetings with the soldiers, with the result that several of them were brought to a saving knowledge of the truth. Letters have been received from the commander of a regiment there giving testimony to the reality of the work.

JAPAN.

At the present time a very large number of natives are joining the Evangelical Christian churches; very soon they will be able and willing to make considerable contributions towards the support of their own churches and schools. The native Christians build their own churches, pay their ministers and teachers, send their own missionaries to those parts of their land untouched by Christian influence, and establish religious newspapers and journals. All this, though scarcely more than ten years ago they were forbidden, under the severest punishment, from confessing Christ.

BELGIUM.

If anyone is asking whether the evangelistic work in Belgium results in real conversions, he will find a satisfactory answer in the forty-fifth annual report of the Belgian Evangelical Society. Besides many other facts, it gives, under the heading "Ripe Fruit," some instances of triumphant deaths which are very significant. The word "conversions" can be used with different meanings when speaking of missionary work such as ours. There are conversions to Protestantism merely; such are not of much worth, except that they may lead to something better—conversion to Christ Himself. Thanks be to God, we constantly see Roman Catholics become, in a very short time, and often at once, regular and earnest disciples of the Gospel. Forsaking from the first, not only Romanism, but disorderly habits, drunkenness, quarrelling, and pleasure seeking, and applying themselves to the study of the Bible, they make a bold profession of their new faith, in spite of opposition, ridicule, and other obstacles. Our work in Brussels, of which I wrote to you some months ago, is making progress. We expect soon to open a new hall; will not some English friends come over and help us?—Truly yours,

ALBERT BROCHER, Pastor.

Sart Dame Avelines, Brussels.

BIBLE WORK IN SPAIN.—Mr. T. S. Marks, Chelwood House, Whetstone, sends us a circular, in which a detailed account is given of the Bible printing work of Mr. George Lawrence in Spain, and which he some time since placed at the disposal of the Trinitarian Bible Society, Newgate-street, E.C., who have undertaken to bind and distribute them. The value of the unbound copies thus handed over is £1200, "So that," says Mr. Marks, "the conditions of the trust have been more than fulfilled, while many thousands of portions of the Word of God have been printed and circulated."

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

SOUTHSEA.—We commenced tent work on Southsea Common in the month of June last, and continued meetings every evening for about fourteen weeks, which resulted in much blessing in bringing many souls to Christ. Since then we have been working away among the masses of this large and growing town, in the different halls which we are hiring for the purpose.

On November 21 we had our second anniversary, when some stirring addresses were given, which, I believe, will be a blessing to the many young believers then present. I am thankful to say that the young converts stand well; many who were brought to the Lord in the tent two years ago are now earnest workers for Him. We should like to build a plain suitable hall that will seat from 300 to 400 people, where we could invite the working classes to hear the Gospel. I mention this for the prayers and sympathy of the Lord's people.

JOHN DENNING.

LEICESTER.—Mr. Lamb writes of great blessing having been given here during the visit of Mr. Richard Weaver. He says: "Our meetings from the first have been full of interest and power. Among the anxious were men whose faces showed traces of sin, also drunkards, blasphemers, and fallen women. On the last Sunday every part of the large Rutland Rink was crowded, all intent upon hearing the Word of God. At the after-meetings many sinners, burdened with sin, were led to Christ and enabled to sing for joy."

MR. W. D. DUNN in GREENOCK.—On the invitation of the Y.M.C.A., Mr. W. D. Dunn, evangelist, commenced work in Greenock on Saturday, November 10, and continued nightly till November 26. The evangelistic meetings were not largely attended except on Saturday and Sunday evenings; a goodly number professed conversion at every meeting. The Christians got a special blessing at the Bible-readings. The fellowship-meetings on Mondays were times of power, and the after-meetings testified in the most touching way to prayer being answered in the case of the unsaved.

CLAVERDON.—At the invitation of the Vicar of Claverdon, preachers from the Evangelisation Society have from time to time conducted special services in schoolrooms and other buildings, which have at all times been well attended; and some are to-day rejoicing in Christ as their Saviour, who have been saved by God's grace, through attending these meetings. Mr. John Elliott has just concluded a most encouraging and soul-stirring Mission. Night after night the numbers increased, till the various buildings were crowded with a most eager and attentive congregation. It has been a most cheering sight to see the people coming along the dark lanes after a hard day's work. God has blessed his servant in telling out the old, old story to the conversion of many souls.

MR. GEORGE C. NEEDHAM.—This servant of Christ has been labouring with much success recently, at Newport, Rhode Island. A writer in a local paper thus speaks of one Sunday's services: "The large morning congregation in the United Congregational Church listened breathlessly to his expository sermon, which was given under the following heads: (1) Christ came and put away sin by sacrifice; (2) He appears now in the presence of God as our Priest and Mediator; (3) He will come again in Person to raise the dead and translate the living, who are found watching for his second appearing. At three o'clock Mr. Needham preached in the Second Baptist Church, on the text, 'It is high time to awake out of sleep.' His sermon was an earnest appeal to indifferent professors and slumbering church members to stir themselves in behalf of the great mass of ungodly people in the city. At half-past seven the Friends' Meeting House was overcrowded. The address on the 'Friendship of Christ' was full of anecdotes to illustrate each point. At the close of the sermon a second meeting was announced, the room being filled. Several persons wished to be remembered in prayer, and decided to lead a new life, through faith in Jesus Christ."

BLANDFORD.—Mr. John Bain, of London, has been conducting an eight-day Mission in the East-street Hall here. The meetings have been well attended. Many Christians have been led to renewed consecration to Christ, whilst several persons have sought the Saviour. The prayer, praise, and promise meeting, held on Monday night, was an exceptionally glorious time.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE NOTES.

THE "Unpledged Abstainers' Union" has erected in Southend a polished granite drinking fountain, and is now taking steps to get up an equally good drinking trough for animals.

A COLONIAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.—The sum of £500 has been voted by the Total Abstinence Society of Melbourne as a nucleus to found a Temperance Hospital in the colony, on similar lines to the London Temperance Hospital.

THE closing meeting of a very successful Gospel Mission in the Corn Exchange, Basingstoke, on Monday, November 21, was presided over by the Rev. R. Shields, and addressed by Mrs. Bradley and Mr. John Hilton.

CHESTERFIELD.—Mr. A. G. Marment, 77, Sheffield-road, writes encouragingly of a Gospel Temperance Mission. Drunkards have become sober, and men and women have been led to Christ. But owing to lack of funds through an impending strike, the work must be stopped unless help is at once received.

GUERNSEY.—Mr. P. J. De Carteret and Miss McLatchie have been holding successful Gospel Temperance meetings in this island. The audiences have been very large and the results encouraging. Mr. and Mrs. De Carteret and Miss McLatchie are organising a six months' campaign in the United States, whither they hope shortly to proceed.

SOUTHPORT.—The work accomplished during Mrs. Joseph Lucas's recent Mission, extending over eight days, has resulted in 433 pledges being taken, 560 blue ribbons donned, and forty-one ladies joining the association. This now makes a membership of 113 ladies, all eager and willing to throw in their influence in waging war against so deadly a foe.

BRISTOL COTTAGE MISSION, BARTON HILL.—This Mission was re-opened on November 9, in the old Mission premises, which had undergone considerable alteration and addition. The great difficulty in the old buildings was to seat those who came. The opening meeting, presided over by C. B. Kee, Esq., of Blackheath, supported by Churchmen and Nonconformists, was a most interesting one. A week of special meetings have since followed. There is a spirit of deep inquiry at work in the district, and we have had proofs of this in the number of men and women staying behind to be spoken to. There is a band of praying men and women connected with the Mission, whose influence is felt all around and in the workshops.

SHOP ASSISTANTS.—At a recent conversazione of the Shop Assistants' Unsectarian Bible Class, the appearance of Mr. George Williams, chairman of the evening, called forth a hearty burst of applause, and his opening address, if short, was yet earnest and hearty in its tone. Mr. T. Sutherst dealt in a very business-like way with the Bill which it was intended to bring before Parliament during next session, if possible, and as each important clause was explained by which minors were not to be allowed to work more than 12 hours, and adults were to have an hour and a half for meals, while young ladies were not to stand more than four and a half hours, and a general half holiday was to be granted. These clauses were greeted with rounds of applause by the particular section whom they concerned—only perhaps with this exception, that the marks of approbation which greeted the announcement respecting the clause affecting the gentler sex were considerably heartier and louder than the others. Mr. F. Henson, in an incisive discourse, showed how late hours tended to promote drunkenness. Among those present were the Rev. B. Sackett, Mr. H. Child and Mrs. Child, Messrs. Morley, Anderson, and Larkin, the secretary and assistant secretary respectively of the Early Closing Movement; Mr. Harris and the hon. secretary, Mr. A. A. Clarke.

Notices of Books, &c.

Songs of Peace. By Margaret Haycraft. Nisbet and Co. Abounds in soothing, strengthening thoughts, and in scriptural teaching.

The Table Talk of Doctor Martin Luther. Fourth Centenary edition. T. Fisher Unwin. This selection from Luther's choice sayings, in its quaint vellum dress, is a very appropriate souvenir of the recent "Commemoration."

Spiritual Gleanings. By Rev. W. H. Wheeler. Jarrold and Sons. The book has two parts, the first treating on objects of creation used as metaphors in the Word of God; the second is on subjects connected with daily life. Many helpful words of an expository and spiritual kind are to be met with in its pages.

The Scripture Pocket Book for 1884, and the Young People's Pocket Book (Religious Tract Society), are models of what such books ought to be. In addition to a daily text they contain a mass of information on the most necessary subjects, as well as illustrations.

Daily Evening Rest; or, Thoughts of Peace about the Master. By Agnes Giberne. Jas. Nisbet & Co. Thirty-one short chapters, setting forth, in simple but glowing phrase, the ineffable glory of the Lord Jesus Christ in his varied offices, and the many-sided aspects of his life and work. A welcome contribution to an exhaustless theme.

Who gave us the Book? By Rev. Chas. Bullock, B.D. "Home Words" Office. A well-merited tribute to William Tyndale, to whom England undoubtedly owes a debt of undying gratitude. The book is timely, well written, and inexpensive. In four chapters Mr. Bullock traces, in graphic style, the history of the great translator's life, times, and work.

Life's Music; or, My Children and Me. By Mrs. Hornbrook. James Nisbet & Co. The gifted writer of this thoroughly enjoyable and profitable story has kept well in view the fact that the music of human life is made up of varied notes. If her narrative is not a veritable one, it reads as if it were. Without actually preaching, she weaves many a sermonette into her tale, which is one that will do anyone good to read.

Footsteps of Truth. Edited by C. R. Hubditch. 3d. J. F. Shaw & Co. This magazine keeps up its reputation for spiritual and practical articles. "Heaven in Preparation," by G. F. French, and "Paul a Pattern Saint," by G. Hucklesby, are both worth perusal, besides other useful notes for Bible readers and Bible-readings. The present number concludes the first volume, and therefore contains an index and preface by the editor.

Illustrations of Fulfilled Prophecy. By J. E. Gregory. 2s. 6d. J. Woolmer. This book, we are told, addresses itself to elder scholars and thoughtful men with little leisure for reading, rather than to professional students of the Word. The object is not controversy, but the illustration of fulfilled prophecy as a matter of fact. Only he who knoweth the end from the beginning could have foreseen and foretold how numerous and minute predictions could have been verified. It proves that the Book which contains them must be the Word of the mighty God.

From Messrs. Macniven and Wallace we have received the first of three series of lectures in course of delivery in Edinburgh. The Primitive Church, by Rev. A. F. Mitchell, D.D., is full of information, and assists inquiry upon questions of deep importance and interest to all Christian minds. Another, A Young Man: his Faith, by Rev. Prof. Charteris, D.D., was delivered in connection with the "Church of Scotland Young Men's Guild." It is stimulating, instructive, and evangelical. Owen, by Rev. W. H. Goold, D.D., is the first of a third series of "The Evangelical Succession" volumes. It is worthy of a place among the valuable productions by which it has been preceded.

Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton have just added four booklets to their "Ninepenny Pocket Series." The Despised Friend, by C. H. Spurgeon, is a plain and searching message about the Saviour, addressed both to saint and sinner; Stumbling Blocks Removed, by Dr. Brooks, of St. Louis, is a portion of his larger work, "Life through the Living Cue," and will bring peace to many anxious inquirers. Goodly Pearls: choice gems of thought, carefully gathered from many thinkers. Spurgeon and Tupper seem to be the compiler's favourites. Pietas Privata: Prayers and Meditations, chiefly from the writings of Hannah More.

The Earnest Christian: Memoir, Letters, and Journal of Harriet Maria Jukes. Edited by Mrs. Gilbert. 3s. 6d. Seeley, Jackson & Halliday. We can recommend this book as a suitable prize or gift book. It is the story of a life given to God, and consecrated to his service. It will add greatly to the interest and usefulness of the book when it is known that the earnest prayers of a devoted mother have been answered for her children, one of whom is earnestly labouring in the church at home, while the other three sons are engaged in Mission work abroad.

Does God Answer Prayer? By Rev. McCheyne Edgar. Hodder & Stoughton. The child of God living in communion with the Father in heaven needs no arguments, scientific or philosophical, to prove that. He answers prayer. But it is refreshing to find, when sound reasoning is brought to bear upon spiritual truths, how completely it establishes and confirms them. Mr. Edgar abundantly proves that the principle of prayer is in accordance with highest wisdom, and that the idea of its prevalence with God is in strict harmony with all we know of Him in his nature, attributes, and works. To many minds the reading of this volume (which is another instalment of the theological library we have before commended) will be of great value, showing how solid is the ground upon which Christian faith reposes, and how weak and futile the objections raised by Agnostics and others to prayer really are. The arguments employed are at once sound, clear, and Scriptural.

Yet another Birthday Text-Book from the press of Messrs. W. P. Nimmo, Edinburgh. This one is entitled A Cup of Blessing (1s. 6d.); its raison d'être is that it gives for each day "a cheering and consoling text selected from Scripture and other sources," and a companion verse of poetry. The same house send out six small, but pregnant volumes, prettily got up, and fit for the vest pocket; they are well described by their respective titles: Light from the Sacred Page—a religious text-book in the very words of Scripture; Saintly Words—devout thoughts gathered from the writings of Augustine, A Kempis, and Jeremy Taylor; Poetry of the Christian Life—select poems from standard authors; Watchwords for Christian Living—choice thoughts culled from devotional and ethical writers, past and present; Counsel and Comfort for Daily Life—suggestive and stimulating sentences for every day in the year; Across the River—"Scriptural views of the heavenly home," from six well-known divines, all of whom, with one exception, have now themselves crossed over to the other side. this bijou series would form a pretty and helpful present.

NEW YEAR'S MESSAGES.

Messrs. Partridge & Co. have issued A Bright Henceforth; or, The Ebenezer Milestone. By Rev. Charles A. Fox. 2d. We have often spoken with high appreciation of Mr. Fox's tractates. They are full of sanctified and suggestive thought, containing the essence of volumes, and thoughts which may be amplified into numerous addresses. This remark applies to the present issue no less than to those which have preceded it.

Raising the Dust; or, The Searching Work of the Spirit. By Rev. E. W. Moore. 1d. The parables of Luke xv. are always fresh. The piece of silver lost, sought, and found, is here applied to the saint, and some essential truths are taught in a very striking way.

Where is the Guest Chamber? By Sophia Nugent. 1d. In the hands of this gifted writer each word of the verse whence the question is taken becomes significant, and leads to many other words of God. It is very searching, but very full of comfort to the willing and obedient soul.

Show your Colours. 1d. Come. 4d. per dozen. Loving Words, addressed to Young "All for Jesus" Disciples. 1d. All by Rev. J. T. Wrenford. The two former are new, of the third 87,000 have been printed. "Show your Colours" is full of anecdotes of those who confessed Christ, suffered and conquered. It will do good to those who have just found Christ. "Come" is for the unconverted. We commend them all.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Faithful Words. 1s. 6d. A. Holness. Contains true stories, brief but well-written biographies, with numerous illustrations beautifully engraved. The way of salvation is clearly set forth in a persuasive and pointed manner.

Sunshine. 1s. 6d. Edited by Dr. Whittemore. G. Stoneman, 67, Paternoster-row. This popular volume is full of well-told and instructive stories, beautiful pictures, good poems, and interesting puzzles. A little of the sunshine from this book would give much cheer to many a home this Christmastide.

Hand and Heart, edited by M. F. Sherlock (7, Paternoster-sq., E.C.), is a fireside volume. Though some of the stories are not worth much, there are excellent articles on Temperance and other social subjects, with illustrations that are well worth the price.

The Church Standand, 7s. 6d.; Home Words, 2s.; and Day of Days, 2s., edited by Rev. Charles Bullock, 7 Paternoster-square, E.C., are useful volumes for fireside reading. Many of the stories are well written, and there is much information and instruction on Temperance and other social subjects. Portraits of eminent ecclesiastical and political men adorn the pages, besides other striking illustrations. Church of England readers will find much news relating to church affairs.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—Thanksgiving for blessing vouchsafed to the fortnight's Mission just completed in the Gospel Hall, Bristol.

PRAYER.—For blessing on a week of special Gospel services in the Town hall, Coleford, Forest of Dean, commencing Dec. 3., by J. A. Vicary.—That a suitable Mission preacher be sent to Cannes.—For services at Workmen's Rest and Gospel Hall, Wood-green, that souls may be saved.—For the children at the "Birds' Nest," Dublin, that the efforts of priests to remove them may be frustrated.

STRANGERS' REST.—Gifts of tracts, books, and magazines, &c., in Foreign and English, for Sailors' bags, are earnestly needed.—Address: Hon. Sec., Mr. J. T. Isaac, 163, St. George-street, Ratcliff Highway, E.

PORTSMOUTH.—Messrs. Fullerton and Smith concluded a very successful month's Mission at this place. On November 29 several thousand persons attended the meeting, of just the class it was desired to reach, many of whom professed to find the Saviour. Men and women, who apparently attended no place of worship, were found at the after-meetings, and were led to Christ.

CHINA MISSIONS.—Rev. J. Hudson Taylor has held a series of meetings in Edinburgh on behalf of the work of the China Inland Mission. The Mission was started in 1865, and now consists of 112 missionaries scattered throughout the whole of the Chinese Empire. When Mr. Hudson Taylor returned to England he desired to obtain seventy new missionaries to extend the work of the Mission; thirty-five have already come forward, and he is sanguine of soon obtaining the remainder of the seventy. Mr. Hudson Taylor proceeds to Glasgow, Aberdeen, Dundee, &c. The office of the Mission is at 6, Pyrland-road, Mildmay, N.

Y.M.C.A., CAMDEN AND KENTISH TOWN.—"Times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord," is a very just description of a wide-spread experience in connection with a series of carefully prepared and well thought-out Biblical addresses, delivered on Thursday evenings here at the Iona Rooms, by Rev. James Stephens, of Highgate-road Church, upon "The Purpose of God in the Believer; the High Priesthood of Christ; the Holy Spirit and his work; and the Priesthood of Believers." The attendance of young men has been good, and the consciousness of the Holy Spirit applying the Word to many, fill us with hope and expectation that the closing months of their sojourn at the Iona Rooms, ere they enter upon an enlarged sphere of usefulness in their new premises, will be signally owned of God. T. S.

EAST GREENWICH.—Sir,—The whole of the Christian world is now somewhat alive to the condition of the poor in London. We, in East Greenwich, have for some years past been painfully reminded of the want and distress, as every Monday evening there are collected in the Maze Hill Congregational Church Schoolroom upwards of 350 very poor children. Besides talking to these little ones, the very best is done to clothe the almost naked, and, as often as possible, they are given a good meal. We are very much in want of cast-off clothes for these waifs, and the ladies of the congregation (and any others that may feel inclined to) who meet to alter and repair the garments, are waiting for work. Many of your readers will doubtless be glad to know where any kind of clothing will be thankfully received, and used in so satisfactory a manner. I shall be very pleased to acknowledge any parcel, small or large, addressed to me, at London-street, Greenwich.—Your obedient servant, William Vasey.

NOTICE.—THE ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children"

(Now Sheltering, Educating, and Training over 1,300 Poor Boys and Girls),

WILL THIS YEAR BE ALTERED IN CHARACTER;

Instead of a Sale at the West End in the Second Week in December, as before, all the Goods received will be made up into

£5 and £10 Boxes. These Boxes will each contain a very excellent selection of at least the value of £6 and £12 respectively, and will be sent on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque to any part of the country.

Ladies willing to order these Boxes will confer a great benefit on the "Homes"; for by this method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West End.

Many kind-hearted sympathizers have already expressed warm approval of this plan, and promised to purchase Boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold in their own houses, to which their personal friends can be invited during the present season.

If there be many articles left over unsold, they can be disposed of in the last week of January (D.V.), in the New Hall of the Edinboro' Castle, which is expected to be opened by that time.

*Dr. Barnardo earnestly invites all readers of "THE CHRISTIAN" who love poor children to co-operate with him in this new plan to benefit the funds of the "Homes," by which too all the wearying, disappointing, and expensive drawbacks of a public Bazaar may be avoided.*

The Boxes, carefully lined and packed, will be ready for transmission on the 10th Dec., and can be despatched to any railway station in the Kingdom. Applications (PREPAID) with full instructions as to conveyance, &c., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

The TRADE MANAGER,
18, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

To all who have already in any degree helped by contributions of Useful or Fancy Articles, Dr. Barnardo desires to offer the expression of his very grateful acknowledgments.

Mr. Moody and the Incurables.

ON Monday afternoon, through the good offices of Mr. Seaman, of West Hill, Wandsworth, the inmates of the Royal Hospital for Incurables, Putney Hill, were favoured with a visit from Mr. Moody. At three o'clock the fine hall of the Institution was filled with those sufferers, most of them either seated or reclining in portable chairs. The evangelist has seldom, we imagine, addressed such a large company of maimed, halt, lame, and otherwise afflicted men and women. His words of exhortation were uttered in the most sympathetic tones, and he was greatly touched at the sight; who, indeed, could help being moved, in the presence of so many graduates in the school of pain and sorrow? Some of them appeared as if their weary pilgrimage was nearly ended; on the ears of such the comforting words of the preacher must have fallen with peculiar consolation.

After the singing of the hymn, "It is well with my soul," prayer was offered by Mr. R. C. Morgan. The hymn, "Oh, word of words the sweetest," with its appropriate refrain—

"Weary, heavy laden, come, oh come to Me," was sung, and Mr. Moody read the 103rd Psalm. He then proceeded to give a little homily on verses 3 to 5, which tells, as he said, of five precious things. First, there is the forgiveness of sin, without which there can be no communion with God. That being secured, the soul is in a position to say, with the dying soldier on the field of battle, "Tell my wife that there is not a cloud between my soul and God." The Psalm goes on to speak of the healing of soul diseases, and the redemption of our life from destruction. Then our path is crowned with lovingkindness and tender mercies. "The very fact of you being in this noble institution," said Mr. Moody to his singular audience, "so well tended and cared for, is an evidence to you of the lovingkindness of the Lord." Some of them might think that they were deprived of the opportunity of serving God, but he thought it needed more grace patiently to suffer the will of God as they were doing, than to address crowds twice a day as it was his privilege to do. Like Paul, they might glory in their infirmities, so that the grace of God might the more abundantly rest upon them. Last of all the evangelist dwelt on the clause, "who satisfieth thy mouth with good things." But a little while and all their suffering would be past; then would come the crown. Several friends sang the hymn, "I shall be satisfied," and after a few brief petitions for God's blessing to rest on the hospital and its inmates, the interesting service was ended.

In an early issue we purpose giving some account of this admirable institution.

THE BISHOP OF TRURO ON PUBLIC MORALS.—

The Bishop of Truro, speaking at a diocesan conference, remarked that while the Church had done much to remove the stain of drunkenness from the page of England's history, a darker blot still remained; for beneath the fair surface of English society a deadly evil was slowly gathering force, which was destined, unless they bestirred themselves, to burst forth like some volcanic flame for the destruction of our fatherland. They must proclaim, with no faltering voice, their firm resolve no longer to ignore the fact that the body is the temple of God; no longer to acquiesce in the reckless, heartless degradation of women and children which had so long existed in our midst.—Sentinel.

PERISHING LONDON.

THE LONDON SAMARITAN SOCIETY

AND

HOMERTON MISSION.

Appeal to all who love the Lord Jesus Christ for means to continue the daily Free Dinners to Destitute Children, and Boots and Clothing and Free Breakfasts for the Outcast and Starving on the Lord's Day mornings.

The following extracts, taken from the many letters we receive almost daily this time of the year, will describe this section of our work, and the widespread necessity for it, better than any general statement we can make:—

One says—"We know that many frequently come to school without breakfast, and remain the whole day without food, except that which is given them by the teachers."

Another writes—"Our children come from the poorest homes, and the tales I sometimes hear make my heart ache."

A third writes—"During the cold weather boys and girls have asked me to allow them to remain in school during the dinner-hour by the fire. They would get no dinner if they went home, and preferred to stay in the warm."

Our loving Master said, "Give ye them to eat;" and I earnestly ask his people to enable us to do so. Donations will be thankfully received by Mr. HENRY HICKS BOARD, Secretary; or the Director,

JOHN JAMES JONES,

57 & 59, Ludgate Hill, LONDON, E.C.

THE WORLD MAGIC LANTERN.

To every purchaser before Christmas WILL BE GIVEN FORTY-EIGHT PICTURES for use with this lantern.

PRICE. 10/6

Size 11in. high by 12in. long.

THE WORLD MAGIC LANTERN is an entirely new shape and of the same principle as the magnificent invention of the powerful reflector for locomotive head lights, throwing strong rays of light ahead on the track. The whole power and diffused rays of light is combined, concentrated and focussed in our cone-shaped reflector in such a way as to immensely intensify the brilliant light, and transfer every ray to the main reflector. Thus a light strong and piercing as a LIME LIGHT or ELECTRIC ARC is produced, so that a small ordinary lamp by this reflector increases the light as much as ten times than by the old way. Thus our improved MAGIC LANTERN will form clear distinctly life-like pictures on a radius of 8ft, and yet we can furnish it complete with lamp, chimney, and box at the astonishing low price of 10s. 6d. It requires no special aptitude or teaching, any lady, gentleman, or youth can manage one of the lanterns, and by providing themselves with descriptions of almost any subject, can project the pictures on the wall and amuse or instruct their friends or family with the happiest results. It is the simplest thing in the world to work this MAGIC LANTERN, the only magic about it is in its effects, that transport the gazers into other lands and among other people. The most sad scenes can be instantly contrasted with the most diverting. A child on his Grandmama's knee is as much pleased as his Grandma, the most ignorant is as much interested as the most wise; it attracts the school-boy equally with his master; all kinds, classes, and degrees of folks are delighted by it. THE WORLD MAGIC LANTERN is the most perfect, distinct, simple in make, and altogether the very best magic lantern ever offered at the price. Remember, for 10s. 6d. we deliver one of these lanterns free at any address, and if ordered before Christmas, present each purchaser with forty-eight pictures for use with same. P.O.O. payable at Gray's Inn-road.

No. 1 set, containing 3 tricks, price 1s. 6d; No. 2 set, containing 5 tricks, 2s. 6d.; No. 3 set, containing 9 tricks, 4s. 6d.

EIGHTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN."
WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

BRONCHO-PHTHISIS.—CASE of Mrs. JAMES BROWN, of HIGH STREET, NEYLAND, PEMBROKESHIRE.

On the 12th of June last I received a letter from Mr. Brown, seeking my advice upon his wife's case.

For many months (he reported) she had had a tightness of the chest, followed by a troublesome dry cough, wheezing, greenish expectoration, heat in the palms of the hands and soles of the feet, and general prostration. Ordered the Balsam three times a day, hot vinegar and water sponging, and the use of a liniment.

In three weeks there was an improvement in all the symptoms. In another month her husband writes: "I am so pleased to inform you that my wife (Martha Brown) is very much better of her Bronchitis." Then he names certain other symptoms of functional derangement, for which special instructions were sent.

On October 4 I received a letter from Mr. Brown, in which he says, "I am happy to inform you that my wife is completely cured by your valuable medicine, after suffering for 18 months. I thank you heartily for your kindness. She is in better health than she has been for years.'

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

THE HYGIENIC VALUE OF MAGNETISM.

The application of a number of magnets, as a pleasant and effectual remedy, was practised as early as the fifth century, when Œtius declared that convulsions, or gout in the hands or feet, could be cured by their use. Most of the ancient fathers of medicine recognised the therapeutic value of the loadstone. Paracelsus, the great mystic and philosophic enthusiast, prescribed magnets in various cases. Pereira, of later date, but not less illustrious fame, ordered that magnets should be placed on affected parts of the body.

By what process a magnetic substance placed on the exterior succeeds in influencing the internal tissues, fluids, and organisms, has been fully demonstrated, together with its action on the arterial blood, which contains a great proportion of oxygen—one of the most highly magnetic bodies known. Thus, an efficient application invigorates the whole system, because there is no cell or tissue to which the blood does not penetrate. Hence, too, magnetism controls so great a variety of nervous diseases, because the nerve centres themselves are reached through the blood. Gout is a blood disease, and as such may manifest itself in any and every organ of the body, or involve a disturbance of the entire system, and gout is among the diseases most amenable to this method.

We maintain that our magnetic method of healing has so far advanced that the symptoms of disease can be controlled by the electric force evolved from the magnets, and that most chronic affections can be met by the adaptation of magnetic aura, or currents—which permeate the entire system, and is therefore constitutional.

"Some months since I adapted your treatment for Rheumatism, and I am thankful to say it has done me more good than anything I had previously tried; it has almost removed the ailment, and I am persuaded in a few more months a perseverance in the use of the remedy will result in cure. I cannot express the thankfulness I feel that I was led to make use of your remedy, for I had made up my mind that I was to be a cripple for life. You will remember that my chest also was weak, a chronic cough having troubled me for years. Of course the improvement is not quite so marked as in the other complaint, it being of much longer standing, but it is better, and I have faith that by wearing your appliances I shall lose it altogether in time."

From Mrs. WHITING, 17, Wide Bangate, Boston.
November 27, 1883.

"I had suffered for some years from debility, manifesting itself locally in great weakness in the knees, probably induced by excessive sick nursing, accompanied by severe pain up the leg from the sole of the foot to the hip. I am very pleased to be in a position to inform you that a few months of your treatment has had a very beneficial effect. I sleep much better, and wake more refreshed than formerly, and although I still have to be very careful in going up and down stairs, I can walk much more steadily on level ground. The vest is a great comfort, and I should not care to be without it."

Letters commendatory of Mr. Garratt's treatment by Magneto-Electricity have been received from hundreds of persons in all classes of society. A private list of 850 names as referees can be had on application. Consultation free, personally, or by letter. B. Corson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

RESCUE WORK AMONG DISCHARGED PRISONERS

IN CONNECTION WITH

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Testimony of Sir W. T. CHARLE, Q.C., Common Serjeant of the City of London :—

"I have found your Institution most useful; indeed it has now become a regular part of the machinery of the administration of justice."

Mr. HOWARD VINCENT, Director of the Criminal Investigation Department, Scotland Yard, in a Speech at the Annual Supper for the Criminal Classes, on December 4 last, said :—

"That he could truly say that no Society in London was doing more genuine good work than the ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION AMONG DISCHARGED PRISONERS. It was only right, however, that the public should know that the noble work could not be maintained without money, and that the Society was in urgent need of funds to carry on their Herculean task. They were gradually sweeping away the prejudice against Discharged Prisoners."

Funds are completely exhausted. Special help is therefore earnestly entreated, and may be sent to the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 5, Lombard-street, E.C.; or to

Yours sincerely, GEO. HATTON,

12, Ampton-place, Regent-square, C. Superintendent of St. Giles' Christian Mission.

OUR OWN GAZETTE, ILLUSTRATED, 16 PAGES, 1D.

This NEW PAPER, we feel assured, will soon find its home in very many family circles.

Its Articles will be varied, treating of all subjects of interest to Young Women in every position—Christian Work, Intellectual Culture, Cookery, Dress, Gardening, Sick Nursing, Recreation, &c., &c.

Sunday hours will be well spent over Bible Jottings, illustrated by a plan of "pen and ink Bible-marking," now so widely used by Mr. Moody and others.

A portion of the Paper will be devoted to Recreation Hours, and how most happily to occupy them.

We shall hope to travel with our more intellectual readers by easy stages through some of the pleasant highlands of Science and Art; and such Papers will be both helpful and interesting.

LONDON: S. W. RIDGE & Co.] JANUARY, 1884. [One Penny.

Space between more substantial Articles will be brightened with Illustrations, Poetry, Pithy Paragraphs, &c., &c.

Lovers of Nature will enjoy our "Bits on Botany," Geology, and other similar topics; whilst those who desire a less mental strain, will find their tastes met in one or two Serial Stories in each number, from the pen of well-known writers.

On our colours those four significant letters may be read—"Y.W.C.A." But we wish it to be distinctly understood, that our Paper is the property of ALL young women, whether connected with the "Young Women's Christian Association" or not. Each month we shall report progress of this important organisation, and furnish details of interest both to Secretaries and Members.

The Hon. Emily Kinnaird will supply the latest information for our London friends; and Miss L. M. Moor, of Clifton, for the Provinces.

AN EXAMPLE, AND AN INVITATION.

Our Lord was engaged in the glorious work of preaching and teaching, and there came unto Him a large company of "Outcasts," having with them those that were "lame, blind, dumb, maimed, and many others." Our Lord received them, and healed them, and blessed them, and the multitude "glorified the God of Israel."

Jesus said to his disciples, "I have compassion on the multitude.....I will not send them away fasting, lest they faint by the way" (Matt. xv. 32).

"Then Jesus took the seven loaves and the fishes, and gave thanks, and brake them, and gave to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude."

The sympathy and compassion of our Lord, and his care for the bodies of the poor, are worthy our imitation.

Every Sunday morning at the Seamen's Bethel, Old Gravel-lane, London Docks, a company of poor creatures, selected by the Missionaries of the Mariners' Friend Society, the Police, and Dock Officials, among the outcasts of our dense river-side population, are provided with a FREE BREAKFAST, after which the Gospel is spoken to them.

Like those of our disciples, our provisions are limited. They were privileged to give the Master, for the hungry people, "seven loaves." Will not some readers of THE CHRISTIAN help us to imitate our Lord in not sending them away fasting?

Donations may be sent to FRANCIS J. SHELTON, Hon. Sec., 19, Old Gravel-lane, E.; or JOSEPH MOORE, Treasurer, 9, Morgan-street, Bow, E.

LONDON ASSOCIATION IN AID OF THE MORAVIAN MISSIONS.

Patron—The Right Hon. THE EARL CAIRNS.

For 66 years this Association has been the instrument of making known some of the wants of the Moravian Missionaries, and soliciting the sympathy and support of Christians on behalf of the great work which God has entrusted to them.

We have now to present a very urgent appeal for two new and commodious churches in Paramaribo, South America.

The need of such is seen from the fact that out of a population of 23,000 in Paramaribo, 9647 are members of the Moravian Church.

There are no less than 6297 persons without a place in which to worship God.

The natives themselves are doing what they can, but it is very little, compared with what requires to be done.

Who will kindly help in this matter?

"The love of Christ constraineth us."

Contributions will be thankfully received for "Paramaribo Church Fund" by Messrs. HERRIES, FARQUHAR & Co., St. James'-street; the Secretary, Mr. G. E. ROBERTS, at the Office, 29, Ely-place, Holborn, E.C.; Messrs. SMITHS & Co., Lombard-street; Messrs. WILLIAMS, DEACON & Co., Birchin-lane; or THE CITY BANK, Holborn Branch.

CHRISTIANITY AND SOCIALISM.

NO one at all observant of the present aspect of affairs among the nations, can fail to mark the startling way in which Socialism has of late come to the front. That of which Plato discoursed from an idealistic standpoint in his "Republic," and which Sir Thomas More fancied in his well-known "Utopia," has become, in these later times, a practical development, and is now an organised force gathering strength and influence every day. Only, instead of being curbed by Platonic self-denial, or by the love of right which characterised the polished statesman of Henry the Eighth's time, modern Socialism mingles with its theories violence and intrigue, and disregard to moral science, to say nothing of its antagonism to theology of all kinds. To prove this we have only to trace it through the writings of Socialist authors, such as Robt. Owen, Louis Blanc, Augustus Comte, and others of still more recent date. Or we may see the exemplification of it by reference to the great Socialist Confederations which exist, and their general course of action.

One of the strangest features of the current mode of treating this subject is the effort made by some to link Socialism with Christianity, as though the two systems really had a communion of principle and interest. Canon Shuttleworth's recent statements at the rooms of the English Church Union, where the question is being discussed, serve to illustrate the phase of things to which we refer. That a prominent Churchman should be found side by side with so pronounced a Secularist as Dr. Aveling, and supported by him in his remarks, is in itself a sign of the times. The Canon asserted that "Christ might be said to be the first Socialist; wherever Christianity had penetrated there Socialism, sooner or later, had also appeared. They found Socialistic ideas in a marked degree all through the history of the Christian Church." Such concessions as these, at a time when society is imperilled by secret conspiracies, and the minds of thousands and tens of thousands aroused to eager desire for revolutionary action such as Socialism proper advocates and aims to produce, are of serious import. Of course, if true, they should not be withheld; but, if false, or based upon strained or misapplied religious truths, they require to be corrected, and their assumptions exposed.

This much may be freely asserted: Christ and Christianity are on the side of whatever is righteous and just, and uncompromisingly opposed to all oppression and injustice of every kind. No more revolutionary force was ever introduced into the world, so far as the resistance and overthrow of moral abuses are concerned, than the Gospel of Christ. Nothing is further from its spirit and aim than permitting one class of its adherents to tyrannise or lord it over another. It is always on the side of the poor when the question of their rights is involved, and indeed its sphere is defined as specially regarding the poor, and those known as the "common people," who, it is said, heard Christ gladly.

But these facts by no means imply or sanction in any way the statement that Christ was a Socialist. He was no more unjust to the rich than to the poor, and certainly made no compulsory laws for reducing all properties and possessions to one common level. His precepts inculcate abstinence from political revolution and state factions, rather than sanction connection with them. He taught the interdependence of one class upon another, and the duty of each and all to seek the others' good. Masters under his rule are to "give to their servants that which is just and equal." They are to "forbear threatening," and to deal with them on principles worthy of godly life and character. But equally, "Servants are to be obedient unto their masters," "counting them worthy of all honour."

The rights of capital equally with the rights of labour are respected in the teaching of the Word of God; duty and responsibility are shown to attach to both. It is not by a system of communistic distribution, or Socialist republicanism, that the Gospel aims to benefit men, but by bringing all to recognise that in the faithful personal discharge by each one of his duty to another, and by all of their duty towards God, lies the chief good to be obtained here, and the highest reward to be obtained hereafter. Weakness and ignorance, sensuality and vice, selfishness and greed, unjust power and servile meanness, yea, all that mars our moral being, and militates against our social welfare, Christianity repudiates and brands as evil. But it has nothing to do with setting man against man, or class against class. Christian socialism and political socialism by no means run in the same groove, nor do they mean the same thing.

MRS. HAMPSON'S evangelistic services in Sydney have attracted an amount of attention and interest not less vivid than was shown at Melbourne. At the Exhibition Building on her last night, she addressed a vast audience. Amongst those present were the Premier, Mr. Stuart, and Sir John Robertson. The deep feeling and earnestness she exhibits has made a marked impression among all classes.

ISLINGTON.—We commend to the sympathy and help of Christians in Barnsbury and Islington the arduous work of Rev. Charles Ough, minister of St. John the Evangelist Mission Church and district, Copenhagen-street, Islington. It is a very needy and neglected locality, and Mr. Ough and his devoted wife need to have their hands held up by other Christians as whole-hearted as themselves.

AN "ODD MINUTE" SOCIETY has been formed of those who undertake to devote fifteen minutes a day to making some article of clothing for the poor. It has been established a year and nine months, and during that period 1030 articles have been distributed. Many letters have been received testifying to the happiness it has been to fill up spare moments in thus working for the Master; especially has this been the case with invalids. Additional workers and subscribers are solicited by the Hon. Secretary, Miss Popplewell, 33, St. James's-street, S.W.

IS THE OLD FAITH DYING?

THIS question, says the editor of The Century Magazine, in a recent number, is much under discussion at the present time. Some are loudly asserting that it ought to be answered in the affirmative, but they deem it superfluous apparently to adduce any proof. On the other hand, statistics are quoted, and facts are forthcoming, which show that Christianity is gaining instead of losing ground. The writer in The Century well says: "Before any further arguments are constructed to show why Christianity is obsolescent, it would be necessary to bring forth some reasons for believing that such is the case. To prove mathematically that Christianity is true, or untrue, may be difficult; but there can be no serious difficulty in making it appear whether or not it is losing its hold upon the thought and life of the people. And it would be a much more scientific method of procedure if those who maintain the decadence of the faith would take a little trouble to acquaint themselves with the facts that bear upon this particular point."

These remarks are backed up by the following statements of fact that are worth tomes of argumentative disquisition as a reply to sceptics and objectors:—

"It is often said specificially that men of affairs, as a class, have lost their interest in the churches, and an attempt was lately made to test the truth of this assertion. In an eastern city, with a population of a little less than forty thousand, the president and cashier of one of the national banks were requested to furnish a list of the fifty strongest business firms in the city, with the name of the head of each firm. The gentlemen furnishing the list had no knowledge whatever of the use that was to be made of it. In clasifying fifty-four names thus given, it was found that there were seven whose relation to the churches was unknown to the gentleman who had obtained the list; six who were not identified with any of them; and forty-one who were all regular attendants upon the churches and generous supporters of their work—the great majority of them communicants. In a Western city of a little more than sixty thousand inhabitants, a similar list of fifty-two names was obtained in the same way; and the analysis showed three whose ecclesiastical standing was unknown, one Jew, six not connected with churches, and forty-two regular church-goers, of whom thirty-one were communicants.

"These lists were both made up by well-informed and sagacious business men; the cities represented by them are not conspicuously religious communities; and the composition of them gives small colour to the notion that the business men of our cities are estranged from the churches. It is astonishing that such a notion should ever have gained currency, in the face of the palpable fact that so much money is contributed every year for the support of the churches and the prosecution of their charitable and missionary enterprises.

"It is possible that a fair showing with respect to the business men of other cities might be less favourable than that here presented; but it is almost certain that a complete induction of facts would correct the impression that the churches have lost their hold upon this class of men."

MR. W. FORBES, now on a tour through the States, writes to us that he has conducted several Gospel Temperance meetings in Philadelphia.

A DIALOGUE

BETWEEN

Mr. MOODY and Mr. RAINSFORD,

At Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth.

AT three of the after-meetings in Down Lodge Hall, Mr. Moody varied the usual order of proceedings by asking Rev. Marcus Rainsford to answer certain questions on vital points of doctrine and experience. In this and next week's numbers we give a full report of two of these instructive and interesting dialogues.

Mr. MOODY—What is it to be a child of God? What is the first step?

Mr. RAINSFORD—Well, sir, I am a child of God when I become united to the Son of God. The Son of God prayed (John xvii. 20) that all who believed upon Him should be one with Him, as He was one with the Father. Believing on Jesus I receive Him, and become united to Him (John i. 12, 13); I become, as it were, a member of his Body. I am an heir of God, a joint heir with Christ (1 John v. 1, Galatians iii. 26).

Mr. M.—What is the best definition of faith?

Mr. R.—Trust in the Son of God, as the Saviour He has given to us. Simple trust, not only in a creed, but in a person. I trust my soul to Him. I trust the keeping of my soul to Him. God has promised that whosoever trusts Him, mercy shall compass him on every side.

Mr. M.—Does not the Scripture say that the devils believe?

Mr. R.—They believe the truth, don't they? They believe that Jesus was manifested to destroy them, and they "tremble." I wish we believed as truly and as fully that God sent his Son into the world to save us.

Mr. M.—What is it to trust?

Mr. R.—I take it to mean four things: (1) Believing on Christ, that is, taking Him at his word; (2) Hoping in Christ, that is, expecting help from Him, according to his Word; (3) Relying on Christ, that is, resting on Him for the times, and ways, and circumstances in which He may be pleased to fulfil his promises according to his Word; (4) Waiting on Christ, that is, continuing to do so, notwithstanding delay, darkness, barrenness, perplexing experiences, and the sentence of death in myself (2 Cor. i. 9). He may keep me waiting a while (I have kept Him a long time waiting), but He will not keep me waiting always. Believing in Him, hoping in Him, relying upon Him, and waiting for Him—I understand to be trusting in Him.

Mr. M.—Can all these friends here believe the promises?

Mr. R.—The promises are true, whether we believe them or not. We do not make them true by believing them. God could not charge me with being an unbeliever, or condemn me for unbelief, if the promises were not true for me. I could in that case turn round and say: "Great God, why did you expect me to believe a promise that was not true for me?" And yet the Scriptures set forth unbelief as the greatest sin I can continue to commit.

Mr. M.—How are we "cleansed by the blood"?

Mr. R.—"The blood is the life." The sentence upon sinners for their sin was, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." That we might not die, the Son of God died. The blood is the poured out life of the Son of God, given as the price, the atonement, the substitute for the forfeited life of the believer in Jesus Christ. Any poor sinner who receives Christ as God's gift is cleansed from all sin by his blood.

Mr. M.—Was the blood shed for us all?

Mr. R.—

"There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins;
And sinners plunged beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains.

The dying thief rejoiced to see
That fountain in his day,
And there may we, though vile as he,
Wash all our sins away."

Mr. M.—Some may say that is only a hymn, and that it is not Scripture. Did the Lord ever say it?

Mr. R.—He said, "I have given you the blood upon the altar to make atonement for your soul." That was said of the picture of the blood of Christ; and at the Last Supper our Lord said his blood was "the blood of the New Testament which is shed for you and for many, for the remission of sins" (Matt. xxvi. 28, Luke xxii. 20, and John vi. 37; see also Rom. iii. 25, and v. 9; Heb. ix. 12, and xiii. 12; and Rev. i. 5.)

Mr. M.—What is the gift of God?

Mr. R.—There are three great gifts that God has given to us—"his blessed Son" (John iii. 16); (2) The Holy Ghost, "the promise of the Father," that we might understand the unspeakable gift bestowed on us when He gave his Son; (3) He has given us his Holy Word. The Holy Ghost has inspired the writers of it that we may read and hear and know the love that God has to us, "in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." We could not have the Son for our Saviour unless God gave Him. We could not understand the gift of God unless the Holy Ghost had come to quicken us and teach us, and this He does through the Word.

Mr. M.—How much is there in Christ for us who believe?

Mr. R.—In Him dwelt "all the fulness of the Godhead bodily,"—fulness of life, of righteousness, of sanctification, of redemption, title to heaven and meetness for it; all that God wants from us, and all that we want from God, He gave in the person of Christ.

Mr. M.—How long does it take God to justify a sinner?

Mr. R.—How long? The moment we receive Him we receive authority to enroll ourselves among the children of God (John i. 12), and are then and there justified from all things (Acts xiii. 39). The sentence of complete justification does not take long to pronounce. Some persons profess to see a difficulty in the variety of ways in which a sinner is said to be justified before God: (1) Justified by God; (2) Justified by Christ; (3) Justified by his blood; (4) Justified by grace; (5) Justified by faith; (6) Justified by works. Justification has reference to a court of justice. Suppose a sinner standing at the bar of God, the bar of conscience, and the bar of his fellow-men, charged with a thousand crimes. (1) There is the Judge: that is God, who alone can condemn or justify, "It is God who justifieth" (Rom. viii. 33). That is justification by God. (2) There is the Advocate, who appears at court for the sinner; the counsellor, the intercessor: that is Christ. "Justified by Christ" (Galatians ii. 17, and 1 John ii. 1). (3) There is next to be considered the ground and reason on account of which the advocate pleads before the judge. That is the merit of his own precious blood. That is justification by his Blood (Rom. v. 9). (4) Next we must remember the law, which the judge is dispensing. The law of works? Nay, but the law of grace and faith. That is justification by his grace (Rom. iii. 24). (5) And now the judge himself pronounces the result. "Be it known unto you through this Man is proclaimed unto you the forgiveness of sins, and by Him all that believe are justified from all things." Now for the first time the sinner at the bar knows he is justified by faith (Rom. v. 1). (5) But now the justified man leaves the criminal's dock. He does not return to his prison or to his chains. He walks forth from the court-house a justified man, and all men, friends or foes, are made aware that he is free: "that is justification by works" (James ii. 24).

Mr. M.—A man says: "I have not found peace;" how would you deal with him?

Mr. R.—He is really looking for the wrong thing. I do not look for peace; I look for Christ, and I get peace with Him. Some people put peace in the place of Christ. Others put their repentance or prayers in the place of Christ. Anything put in the place of Christ, or between the sinner and Christ, is in the wrong place. When I get Christ, I possess in Him everything that belongs to Him, as my Saviour.

Mr. M.—Some think they cannot be Christians until they are sanctified.

Mr. R.—Christ is my Sanctification, as much as my Justification. I cannot be sanctified but by his blood (Heb. xiii. 12; see also Heb. ix. 13). There is a wonderful passage in Exodus xxviii. 36—38. The high priest there represented in picture the Lord Jesus Christ. There was to be placed on the forefront of the mitre of the high priest, when he stood before God, a plate of pure gold, and graven upon it as with a signet, the words: "Holiness to the Lord." My faith sees it on the forefront of the mitre on the brow of my High Priest in heaven. "And it shall be upon Aaron's forehead, that Aaron may bear the iniquity of the holy things which the children of Israel shall hallow in all their holy gifts; and it shall be always upon his forehead, that THEY may be accepted before the Lord." That was for Israel of old! That on the brow of Jesus Christ is for me. Yes, "This is for me, that I might be accepted before the Lord." As I believe this truth it purifies my heart, it operates on my affections and my desires, and I seek to walk with Him because He is my Sanctification before God, just as I trust in Him as my Justification, because He shed his blood for me.

Mr. M.—What is it to believe on his name?

Mr. R.—His name is his revealed self. We are informed what it is Exod. xxxiv. 5. Moses was in the mount with God, and He had showed him wonderful things of kindness and of love. And Moses said, "O God, show me thy glory." And He said, "I will make all my goodness pass before thee." So He put Moses in the cleft of the rock, and proclaimed the name of the Lord: "The Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity, transgression, and sin,"—there it is, root and branch,—"and that will by no means clear the guilty." That is his name, and his glory He will not give unto another; and to believe in the name of the Lord is just to shelter under his promises.

Mr. M.—What is it to receive the kingdom of God like a little child?

Mr. R.—Well, I do not believe in a little child being an innocent thing. I think it means that we are to receive it in all our need and helplessness. A little child is the most dependent thing on earth; all its resources are in its parents' love, all it can do is to cry, and its necessities explain the meaning to the mother's heart. If we interpret its language it means: "Mother, wash me, I cannot wash myself. Mother, clothe me, I am naked and cannot clothe myself. Mother, feed me, I cannot feed myself. Mother, carry me, I cannot walk." It is written, "A mother may forget her sucking child, yet will not I forget thee." This is to receive the Kingdom of God as a little child—is to come to Jesus in our helplessness and say: "Lord Jesus, wash me!" "Clothe me!" "Feed me!" "Carry me!" "Save me, Lord, or I perish."

Mr. M.—A good many say they are going to try. What would you say to such?

Mr. R.—God wants no man to try. Jesus has already tried. He has not only tried, but He has succeeded. It is finished. Believe in Him who has made an end of sin, making reconciliation for iniquity, making an end of transgression, and bringing in an everlasting righteousness.

Mr. M.—If people say they are going to try, what would you ask them to do?

Mr. R.—I would say, put trusting in the place of trying; believing in the place of doubting; and coming to Christ as they are, instead of waiting to be better. There is nothing now between God the Father and the poor sinner but the Lord Jesus Christ, and Christ has put away sin that I may be joined to the Lord. "And he that is joined to the Lord is one spirit" (1 Cor. vi. 17); "And where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty" (2 Cor. iii. 1.7)

WELCOME HOME, E.—Miss Child, 173, St. George's-street, E., writes that poor sailors are often found walking about outside her Home or sitting on the doorstep, unable to obtain admission because she has not funds to care for them. She also says that frequently she has to send word to an only child, or other dependent, of the death of a sailor relative from shipwreck, and pleads for such to be thought of by Christians who can help them.

In Memoriam.

THE LATE JOHN ELIOT HOWARD.

By Mrs. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

WE have latterly had to mourn the loss of an unusually large number of the friends of our Institutes and Missions, and among them of some who were also beloved personal friends of long standing. The great majority of the Church—those who are absent from the body, and present with the Lord—is daily growing greater, and each removal is hastening the glad and rapidly-nearing day when the completed "Bride of the Lamb" shall be presented faultless before the throne of his glory with exceeding joy, so that we sorrow over these removals only as those who are filled with hope of speedy and eternal re-union.

The friend whose name we have placed above is one whose memory we cherish with an almost filial affection as the one from whose lips we first heard, long years ago, the Gospel of salvation, and under whose ministry we received in early youth the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. Many hearts in many lands, who loved him for his works' sake, will be grieved to learn that JOHN ELIOT HOWARD, of Lord's Meade, Tottenham, has passed away from earth. His removal, which took place on Thursday, November 22, can hardly be considered premature, for he was seventy-six years of age, but it was both sudden and unexpected, for such was his bright activity of body and mind to the last, that he might have been taken for sixty—even less.

He preached as usual twice on the Sunday before his death; in the morning, with much solemnity and power, on the words, "For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us, that whether we wake or sleep we should live together with Him." His words deeply impressed his audience, though they little deemed they were hearing his last discourse. "Yes, that is the central point," he said, "Christ died for us, and we live through Him. What matters it, then, whether we wake or sleep? We live and shall live together with Him."

The following day he was out as usual, and went up to London. On the Tuesday he was taken ill; but no alarm was felt till Thursday morning, when, after a few hours' unconsciousness, about noon he quietly breathed his last.

For nearly fifty years he had been engaged in preaching Christ in Tottenham and elsewhere, and for the greater part of this time his pen as well as his voice had been employed in the service of his Lord.

He was born in 1807, and grew up in the society of "Friends," when that society was far less evangelical than it is now. His father, Luke Howard, F.R.S., was a scientific man, whose name is well known as the author of several works, one especially on "The Modifications of the Clouds." Very little Gospel light existed among Friends in the early part of this century; Scripture was never read in their assemblies, or expounded in their families or schools; and the doctrines of the fallen and ruined nature of man, and of the need, nature, and efficacy of the atonement of Christ were replaced by unsound teachings as to "inward light;" while the two simple ordinances of Christianity—baptism and the Lord's Supper—being neglected, the vital truths they symbolise and recall were naturally forgotten, or very indistinctly held.

John Howard's mind was a reflective and reasoning one, and his conscience was often exercised as to his own spiritual state. He sought light, but did not find it till he was nearly thirty years of age; then there fell into his hands a little work published by the Religious Tract Society, entitled "Jehovah Tsidkenu, the Watchword of the Reformers," and, like Luther, he became a new creature as he received the doctrine of justification by faith. He was baptized in 1856, and soon after resigned his membership in the Society of Friends, as did many others about the same period. He partook of the Lord's Supper for the first time the same year in the Baptist Chapel at Tottenham, and began at once to preach the Gospel, which he prized, and in which he rejoiced, as only those do who enter into its glorious liberty and light after long struggle with surrounding bondage and darkness.

Two or three years later he, with about a hundred others, formed a Christian church on a basis somewhat similar to that of the "Christian brethren" (as they called themselves, or "Plymouth brethren" as they were called by others), though he never quite fell in with all the views that characterised that body. For forty-six years he freely ministered the Word to this church, and preached the Gospel in their meeting-house, and one of his last acts was to present them with a new and more commodious place of assembly, the old one being converted into a Mission-hall. For some time he engaged actively in controversy with the Society of Friends, seeking earnestly to enlighten his former associates, and that with much success. Other controversies afterwards engaged his mind and pen, for he believed in earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints.

He published a series of lectures against Puseyism in 1845, feeling strongly that some of the vital truths of our faith were attacked by the Oxford Tractarian movement, which has since attained such mournfully large proportions. In his later years his controversies were against "the oppositions of science, falsely so called," and he was well qualified in many respects to defend the Word of God against attacks of this character.

In 1872 he joined the Victoria Institute, or Philosophical Society of Great Britain, a society formed in 1865 for the purpose of investigating, fully and impartially, the most important questions of philosophy and science bearing on the great truths revealed in Scripture, with a view of reconciling any apparent discrepancies between Christianity and science. Before the Society he read papers from time to time on a variety of scientific subjects, and in 1865 he published a volume of lectures on Scripture and Science, which has been much valued. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1874, in recognition of his scientific researches, and was also Fellow of many other British and foreign scientific associations. Shortly before his death he was presented with the Hanbury Medal, which is bestowed biennially by the Pharmaceutical Society on an individual who may be selected for original research and scientific attainments from any British, European, or American society. In acknowledging this medal, which came to him quite unsought, Mr. Howard spoke of the profound pleasure he had found in the study of the works of God, of his deep conviction of the harmony between revelation and science, and of his sense that the highest honour was to be a Christian.

While pursuing science with ardour and success, Mr. Howard's main and constant occupation was, however, the spread of the kingdom of God on earth. His warmest sympathies were with evangelists, missionaries, and Christian philanthropists. Dr. Gutzlaff, the well-known China missionary, was a constant correspondent, and in the Rev. Hudson Taylor and his great China Inland Mission he took the most unwearied interest; as also in our own Institute and Mission work. Many a young missionary has been cheered and encouraged by his loving sympathy and wise counsel. Mr. Howard was a man of unworldly character and habits. Though opulent he lived very simply, and used his wealth in his Master's service. He died in the same house to which, more than half a century ago, he brought his bride, for though Tottenham has vastly deteriorated since those days, and become one of the least attractive suburbs of London, he never would forsake the little flock which looked to him as pastor, teacher, and friend.

He was married in 1822 to Mara, the daughter of Mr. W. D. Crewdson, of Kendal, so that they had walked as heirs together of the grace of life for fifty-four years.

His warm family and social affections would have made conscious parting particularly painful to him, and it was graciously ordered that there should be no sense of coming separation—no parting words. As one of his own family expressed it, "his bright, keen spirit was permitted to go with his own quick step," out of the things that are seen and temporal, into those that are unseen and eternal. No period of inaction and decay intervened between his long life of active service and his entrance into rest; without a thought of leaving those he loved, he awoke in the presence of his Lord!

The Lord Mayor, Sir Edward Fry, and other well-known gentlemen, were among the thousands gathered at the funeral, which took place at Tottenham Cemetery last week, and very many felt what one expressed, "The best man in Tottenham is gone from among us." But Christian hope rose above sorrow, and songs of triumph over death ascended to heaven as the precious dust was committed to the tomb, "until He comes."

The Kingsland Missions.

THE annual meeting of these Missions was held on Monday, December 3, at the Stoke Newington Branch of the work, Walford-road, N. Mr. W. CHORLEY read some abstracts from the yearly Report, which show that amid discouragements there was much that gave cause for praise. Many souls had been added to the Lord during the year.

Addresses were given by brethren representing three other branches of the Mission, in five different poor localities of North and East London, in halls and cottages, and open-air meetings, which are prosecuted all the year round. Besides these there are Ragged Schools in two districts, and a Sailors' Rest, open daily, near the Millwall Docks; in addition to which there are all the more usual activities in full force, such as only loving hearts can devise, to meet in some measure the abounding "bitter cries" of London's poor.

The managers are desirous of better accommodation in three needy districts, but as yet have not the means. The Superintendent would be glad to forward the interesting Report to any friend applying to him at 79, Norfolk-road, Islington, N.

An Evening with the Blind.

IT was my privilege to be present at a tea-meeting at Upper Holloway Chapel given to the blind and their guides, to the number of 400. Never have I been brought in contact with humanity in a more needy form than these sightless friends presented. Their ages ranged from the child of nine years to the old man and woman of over eighty summers. There were those whose evident poverty and wretchedness made one's heart bleed; there were others who in the midst of suffering looked happy and spoke cheerfully.

I recognised two blind among those on the platform, Mr. Bright and Mr. Mead. Mr. F. A. Bevan was in the chair, supported by Rev. J. R. Wood and Mr. W. Green, of Highgate. The Chairman enforced upon them the duty of decision of character, and spoke in a telling way of the sympathy of Jesus. Mr. Bright added considerably to the pleasantness of the evening by giving various solos, notably, "Oh, where is my wandering boy to-night?" rendered with much pathos.

Mr. and Mrs. Bright have made this social gathering a branch of their still more important work, viz., the Home for Aged Christian Blind Women, of 90, Junction-road, Upper Holloway. To this Home I would call the attention of your readers. It has been steadily working its way, until to-day it shelters and cares for the needs of twenty-two of Christ's aged blind servants. Other applications are sent in of a pressing character, but unless funds are forthcoming these cannot be dealt with. AN OBSERVER.

CLOSING AT WANDSWORTH.

THE Wandsworth meetings have come and gone, and the High-street has returned, we presume, to its customary quietude. Down Lodge Hall, for two weeks the centre of so much attraction and the scene of so much blessing, is now being metamorphised into Lavender Hill Hall, Clapham, where, with the dawning of the new year, it will next do duty as a meeting-place for the crowds that throng to hear Mr. Moody's speech and Mr. Sankey's song.

The work in Wandsworth, though it would probably not come into comparison with Islington in manifest and ascertained results, has been fruitful in the best sense. No one who witnessed the remarkable response to Mr. Moody's call, at the closing meeting, for a muster of those present who had received definite blessing, can have any doubts on that score. Besides, the testimony thus expressed must have been very partial and incomplete; beyond doubt many have started on heir Zionward journey, or have received a fresh accession of spiritual life, who could not attend the farewell gathering. In this respect alone, the Evangelists and the workers who faithfully rallied round them day by day at Down Lodge Hall, have every reason to thank God for the issues of the fortnight's work.

But the indirect outcome of the Wandsworth meetings will be probably more extensive and far-reaching than their immediate results, encouraging as these may be. A holy fire has been kindled in the neighbourhood that will never die out, as we trust and believe. Wandsworth has been rather behindhand in the past in united aggressive work of an evangelistic kind. The near future will witness a change in that respect. Dr. Watney, the donor of the site of Down Lodge Hall, has nobly led the way in the new enterprise, which will give permanence to these special efforts. He has freely gifted to an evangelistic committee a ninety nine years' lease of so much of the site as will be needed for the erection of a permanent hall, in which to hold evangelistic services for the people, with buildings for a Y.M.C. Association, &c. He would also have arranged at his own cost for a temporary structure to accommodate a thousand persons, if that august body, the Board of Works, had not interposed its veto, for some more or less sufficient reason. Meanwhile, the meetings will be continued in the Town Hall, and will for the present be under the charge of Rev. Marcus Rainsford. The scheme for a permanent structure on Dr. Watney's ground involves an expenditure of some £6,000; of this over £2,000 was subscribed instanter by a few friends. At the closing meeting Mr. Moody appealed warmly to the Christians of the district to help as far as they could by their gifts and their prayers in bringing the project to a speedy and successful issue. Many of those, he said, who attended the meetings had expressed their joy at seeing the miserable walls of sectarian distinction crumbling down. Let them now keep in rank, standing shoulder to shoulder in the prosecution of this work, which would not in any way interfere with the regular work of the various churches, but would, on the contrary, help to strengthen all these existing organisations. He urged all the young converts to connect themselves, without delay, with some of the evangelical bodies in the district, where they would not only be nurtured in the spiritual life, but have the opportunity of engaging in active work for the Master.

The meetings of the closing day were full of the deepest interest. In his last afternoon Bible-lecture, Mr. Moody spoke earnest words to the young believers on the subject of "Overcoming." He warned them, with great plainness of speech, against the various worldly allurements that would cross their path, such as fashion, pleasure, business engrossments, &c. In the evening Mr. Sankey sang, "Beyond the smiling and the weeping," and the new favourite "When the mists have rolled away." After Mr. Moody's final discourse, in which Christ was exalted very high as the Alpha and the Omega of the Christian life, he had an interesting and helpful dialogue with Mr. Rainsford, to which reference is made on a previous page. The people seemed loath to quit the building, which had become hallowed to them by many precious memories and experiences; the evening of Wednesday, Dec. 5, was far spent before the last inquirer was dismissed, and Down Lodge Hall was emptied for the last time.

OPENING AT STEPNEY.

On the afternoon of the next day the Evangelists renewed their acquaintance with the whilom Priory Hall, to be known for the next fortnight as Stepney Green Hall. It stands in the very heart of a dense and mostly poor population. The fact of its being at some distance from any main thoroughfare may be somewhat against it; but this has been counteracted by a liberal distribution of posters over a considerable radius from the hall.

In other ways the East-end workers have been doing their best to let their neighbours know of the meetings. One evening early last week the writer accompanied a couple of workers from the "Ratcliff Strangers' Rest" through some of the lodging-houses in that delectable region, to give away tickets and invite the lodgers to the services. Without a single exception, we were very courteously and, in some cases, warmly received. Tickets were freely accepted, and promises readily given that the recipients would make use of them. We visited one leviathan "Chambers" in the Highway, where about 250 men are provided with a nightly shelter. In the common room of this establishment evangelistic services are held every Sunday evening by the workers from the Rest, whose efforts are much appreciated by these pariahs of society. On the evening of our visit this large room was crowded with men and youths of the costermonger or dock labourer class, most of whom showed the greatest eagerness to get tickets. In our ramble in and about the Highway we invaded some of the public-houses; even there we met with nothing but courtesy; many of the publicans' patrons were foreigners, scarce knowing anything of English, and with them we had little success. One could not but rejoice to see the continued success that is attending the work of the Strangers' Rest. Before starting on our tour of ticket distribution, the different departments of the work, Scandinavian, German, English, Bible-class, &c., were all in full swing, with a very good attendance of seafaring men in each. This Rest is truly a lighthouse set on a stormy and rock-bound coast; we hope there will be no lack of the wherewithal to keep its blessed light brightly burning.

At the opening afternoon service on Thursday, Stepney Hall was about three parts full. Mr. Sankey's cold was but partly dissipated, yet he was able to sound forth the grand notes of the sublime anthem, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." Mr. Moody's opening exhortation to the Christians was on "Prayer;" it was a most stimulating message, and, we trust, the key-note of the mission. The petitions of the assembly were led in turn by Mr. Kitto, Rector of Stepney, Mr. A. G. Brown, Dr. Barnardo, and Mr. Richardson, of St. Benet's. Many requests came from the body of the audience for the conversion of friends, and among a number who stood up to ask prayer for themselves was a middle-aged man, who said he had spent twenty-six years in prison, and was the greatest drunkard in London. In the evening the hall was crowded, a great proportion of the throng being to all appearance made up of the genuine working-man element. Mr. Moody's talk on Repentance was as effective as ever in gaining and holding the attention of the people; altogether a good start was made in the third section of the city.

On Saturday afternoon, Mr. Banaster, of the Children's Special Service Mission, conducted the Children's Service in Stepney Hall. It was well attended, and great interest was manifested from first to last. Some 2000 were present, and the quiet attention of the children gave cause for thankfulness, especially to those acquainted with East-end children. Mr. Banaster was assisted by Messrs. M'Clure and Winter, the latter singing a short solo to the little people with marked effect.

STEPNEY'S FIRST SUNDAY.

Three thousand "Christian workers" came out at eight o'clock on Sunday morning at Stepney Hall to hear Mr. Sankey's song and a rousing address on "Faith" from Mr. Moody. It was a good beginning to a good day.

The hall was crowded on Sunday forenoon, even before the time announced for the commencement of the meeting, the vast congregation principally consisting of men. The singing of "My Mother's Prayer" here, as at Wandsworth, brought tears to the eyes of men unused to weeping. Taking advantage of the thoughts of "mother" and "home" thus awakened, Mr. Moody gave one of his most earnest addresses, mainly embodying the thought that "God is Love." On his appealing to the anxious to rise and so show their desire for salvation, one after another stood up until a large number had thus signified desire to become Christians.

The Women's Meeting in the afternoon was of course more than crowded, a few of the male sex having gained late admission. Multitudes were turned away, and Stepney Church was also crowded with an overflow of some thousands. Nothing more beautiful or effective in its harmony has, perhaps, been heard at these London meetings than the singing by Mr. Sankey and a young lady of the hymn, "I shall be satisfied." Mr. Sankey afterwards proceeded to the overflow in the parish church.

Mr. Moody preached from the words, "There was no room for them in the inn." In the near approach of the Christmas season, the sermon was a singularly appropriate one. We have not heard Mr. Moody deliver it for more than eight years; we wish he would preach it oftener, for it is a very touching and heart-moving presentation of the love of Christ for a perishing world, and the rejection of the Saviour by the great bulk of that world that needs Him so sorely. The earnest utterances of the preacher fell on thousands of attentive ears, and had a very evident effect in softening hearts and preparing them for the reception of the Gospel invitation.

In the evening the hall was literally crammed. An overflow meeting of many hundreds was held at Beaumont-hall, under the charge of Rev. Mr. Ford, one of the curates of Stepney. Mr. Sankey was also there. Before leaving for the overflow meeting, Mr. Sankey sang "The Ninety and Nine." Mr. Moody spoke from Galatians vi. 7, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." He said he had been given to understand that there were some infidels present; he would tell them that the words he had read were true; and they could, if they chose, ascertain their truth by their own observations and by their own personal history. He then proceeded to enforce his text by copious references to the characters of the Scripture, and also by striking narratives of modern life. A large number of inquirers remained to the after-meeting, and were individually dealt with by Mr. Moody and many Christian helpers.

NOTES FROM NEW ZEALAND.

By Mr. GORDON FORLONG.

CHRISTIANS should remember these islands much in prayer. Englishmen and Scotchmen especially ought to do so, as the inhabitants can almost all point to their English or Scotch counties, and they remember the old homesteads in the old country well. Hundreds of wandering youths have landed here, untended and uncared for, "somebody's darling," perhaps spoilt in childhood, and wild in youth. Oh, how much prayer can do for such.

Not a few get THE CHRISTIAN in New Zealand. One copy often passes into various hands, and as some read this, they will in the far-off land remember mother's last words and tears, and father's last advice. Follow them daily with your prayers, father. You hardly know how much they require it. Young men who come out alone rarely connect themselves with any church. The colony is a place of unrest to the young; plenty of food, plenty of temporary work if they are willing to do anything, and plenty of rash, impetuous young men to urge the new comer to look out for the "best chance" and grand places, and leave religion to those just about to die. They are soon in the whirlpool of active employment, and the probability is that Sunday finds them hunting pigs in the woods, or playing cards if it is a wet Sunday, or shooting rabbits and hares.

FATHERS

who have a small income should bring their hives of working members out themselves—form homes here; even your £100 a year would be worth £200 a year if you kept clear of the towns and got a cottage with a little land; train your sons to the land. The country schools here educate your boys free, while they are under your own eye and influence, and the climate makes an aged parent able to do far more here than in England or Scotland. Thus your children also are saved from something far worse than poverty and want.

THE MAORIS

also should be remembered by British Christians in prayer. They are a fine race of natives, probably the very finest uncivilised tribe in the world. They are bold, frank and manly; deception and cunning are not their traits. A fine old chief said to me at a public meeting, "The first Pakehas (English) that came here were fine men; religion was everything with them, and we soon cast away all our gods, and saw that they were no gods, and the Pakehas we saw had the real God. But more Pakehas came and more Pakehas, and more and more, and they were worse and worse. It was all land then, land, land for nothing. Public-houses sprung up, and the Maoris were drawn there, and drink and sin came like a deluge upon us. Ah! the first Pakehas were not like that."

Christians, we owe many prayers and much to the Maoris; there are hundreds of happy homes that you Scotchmen and Englishmen have found among the rich lands of New Zealand; and God expects us to repay in spiritual labour the temporal blessings received. If God entrusts a land and natives to us, it is in trust that we may give them the Bible. Would God that our rulers in India knew this principle, this solemn truth.

MISSIONARIES.

I regret to say that even the few missionaries that are among the Maoris do not, as a rule, ever live among them. The early missionaries used to be the daily friends of the Maoris, and taught them arts and trades, and salted all their converse with the salt of grace. Now the missionary, as a rule, lives among the English, and goes only among the natives to preach, bury, or baptize the children. The Maoris are not pleasant to live among. Sleeping in a Pah is contrary to the flesh, and a heavy cross, and making friends among a people whose habits require great improvement, is not pleasant either; but if our blessed Lord had reasoned in this way he would never have visited this earth. Pray, Christians, that devoted married missionaries may settle among the Maoris. I say married men, because their influence would be a hundred times greater than the influence of mere young single men rushing about from Pah to Pah.

REVIVAL WORK

has now actually been seen in various parts of New Zealand, the great towns have moved not a little, and ministers of various denominations have struck fire in various places. Dear Lindsay Mackie, of Dunedin, has just gone home to the Lord. His hand always grasped an oar in any boat that was willing to move. Let his father and relatives in Montrose, Scotland, believe that he was a valuable labourer, and left blessed testimony behind. Rev. Mr. Niven, whose name was known in Glasgow once, is a good evangelist in Dunedin, ready to help all real work. In the north, in Auckland, Mr. Thomas Spurgeon is a light and a power, although young. I could, of course, mention many others—pray for them.

DEISTS

and Freethinkers were very bold once in these Islands, but they are not so fond of attacking the Bible now. They keep to general ridicule and contempt. Some years ago they thought they could grapple with Scripture difficulties, but after a few trials they discovered that they ought to keep clear of specific attacks, and only make wide general accusations against the Bible. In Dunedin we took the Queen's Theatre for nine months, and asked Deists to give their own Scripture difficulties, and we would be pleased to take them. For three or four months difficulties poured in, and as the late Attorney-General is their leader there, they probably gave their worst and hardest points. After four months they ceased to give points. Yet the theatre was crowded every Sunday in good weather, and we heard of good done, and saw personally many deistical inquirers.

We also ask your prayers—we have returned to our North Island home, where we have land and may rest, only preaching sometimes in the neighbouring churches. Mrs. Forlong has opened a Woman's Prayer Union, and the people in these parts are even more willing to hear the Word than they were, I think, four years ago. I am certain that this notice will induce hundreds that are dear to us in England and Scotland to pray for us, and for these far distant parts.

CHRISTIAN EMIGRANTS

might come to these lands and help the Lord's work, and do good to themselves also in a temporal point of view; many Christians living at home upon £200 a-year or £300, and in genteel poverty only, would be far better off here; and as regards health the change would be joyous. Even the sea voyage, although irksome to some, is hardly ever injurious, and the ships are now very comfortable. Let only the emigrant be prayerful and wise in selecting his shipquarters.

HOMES OF HOPE.—This society was established in 1860 for the reception of the less degraded class of penitent fallen young women, for whom little provision had been made. Young women are admitted on any day and coming from any quarter whatsoever, if there be room in the Homes. Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied. Every day most painful applications are made for admission, and the thought of refusing any young woman struggling to get out of her miserable life is very distressing, but especially in the case of those who have only made a first false slip, and for whom particularly this appeal is sent. It has scarcely ever happened in the experience of the committee that any of the mothers rescued have fallen a second time, and they are quite sure that if your readers could witness a little of the overwhelming anguish and distress of those who apply, it would give them pleasure in aiding us to restore them to positions of usefulness. The committee are urgently in need of help.—Your obedient servant,

W. F. HORNIBROOK,

Dinners for Destitute Children.

SIR,—Trusting to the kindness with which you have on former occasions supported the cause of the "Destitute Children's Dinners Society," we beg you again this year to allow us to appeal to the public generosity through your columns, for aid to enable us to carry on our work of keeping open some 50 dining-rooms, in various poor districts of the Metropolitan area. We are constantly solicited for more and more aid for this object, which we are compelled to refuse owing to the absolute exhaustion of the funds at our disposal, and yet the results of our seventeen years' work prove undeniably the necessity and value of the assistance given by our Society. This assistance is not entirely gratuitous; it has been and it is still combined with small payments from the children themselves, which have lately amounted to £400 in each year.

The sum required to keep our present dining-rooms open is about £300 a month, and we entreat the active sympathy and liberal gifts of the benevolent, as well as the co-operation of any gentleman who may have the will and time to visit the dining-rooms, and assist in the work of the committee. Subscriptions and donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurers, the Lord Kinnaird, 1, Pall Mall East, S.W., and Mr. William Fuller, 111, Piccadilly, W. Your obedient servants,

SHAFTESBURY, President.	G. BRADLEY, Dean of Westminster.

KINNAIRD.

A Few Words to Young Ladies.

DEAR FRIENDS,—Most of you have heard lately that there is a great deal of poverty, as well as wickedness, in London. Gentlemen are holding meetings, and visiting miserable houses and streets, to see what can be done. Ladies are going more and more to try and save the sinful and sorrowing. You would, I am sure, like to help, and so I ask if each girl who attends a London school will give clothing for one of the poor girls who are taken to a Refuge or a Home in London.

One lady has given up living in her comfortable home, and has settled down in a neighbourhood in which you would not like to stay for half an hour. She has done it that she may walk in the very steps of Jesus, who came to "seek and to save the lost."

It costs money for every part of her work, which increases each year. Last year over £109 was spent by her in getting outfits for girls to start in service, or to clothe them in the Homes. Now, will you not save her this part of her burden? or if you know any other such work, and like better to help it, do so.

I propose this as a "School Girls' Mission," and suggest that you ask your lady principal or head mistress to let you each bring a parcel back after the holidays, and pack and send the large collection of things in one box, addressed to Miss Steer, the "Bridge of Hope" Mission, 26 and 27, Princes'-square, St. George's-street, E. Some can make new clothes, some can send old ones, large or small; from bonnets to boots, all will be useful.

Need I say more to warm-hearted English girls to urge them to what I hope will grow to be a widespread "School Girls' Mission."—Yours sincerely,

A LADY, whose pupils are going to bring back parcels after Christmas.

SWANSEA.—A conference for the deepening of spiritual life in believers was held last week in Swansea, under the presidency of the Vicar, Rev. Dr. S. C. Morgan. Three meetings each day were held for three days in the Albert Hall, which was well filled. The chief speakers were Revs. Graves Walker, Stroud, and J. J. Luce, Gloucester. Mr. Walker's afternoon Bible-readings were specially helpful, and Mr. Luce's earnest address on the parable of the Ten Virgins. Many have been the testimonies to blessing received.

NOTES FROM THE UNITED STATES—4.

By Mr. GAWIN KIRKHAM.

BALTIMORE.

HOW difficult it is to realise the size of many of the American cities. Here is one with a population approaching 400,000, busy and restless as Tyre of old, for it is a great maritime centre. And how divided in creed and race. It is said that the Church of Rome loses tens of thousands of adherents in this new country, but judging by the number of Romish churches, there are still vast numbers who devoutly worship at her altars. In passing from my open-air meeting to address a gathering of workers at the Y.M.C.A., I stepped into one of these churches, and though large, it was crowded with women. They were listening to a fat priest who was energetically exhorting in German. The verger told me, in broken English, I could not stay, as it was "a Mission for the ladies."

PHILADELPHIA.

But if such cities as Baltimore appear large, what must we think of Philadelphia, the second city in the States, having a population in 1880 of 846,984. The first thing that strikes a stranger is the large amount of white marble employed in its construction. With an abundance of electric light on this white marble the effect, at some points, is singularly beautiful. On the night of my arrival, after addressing the young men in the Y.M.C.A. rooms (by far the most costly on the American continent), we tried the effect of this beautiful light on my "Coloured Teacher," while I expounded it, and the texts and hymns could be distinctly read. At first the police forbade us, but eventually allowed us to remain.

I was glad to be able to spend a Sunday (October 21) in this City of Brotherly Love. It will chiefly remain in my memory as associated with three missionary addresses by as many Bishops. These were Dr. Whittaker, of Nevada; Dr. Gallagher, of Louisiana; and Dr. Stevens, of Pennsylvania. The place was Holy Trinity Church, and the clear Gospel ring about the utterances of these good men was very refreshing. The day will also be associated with my first address to coloured people. After preaching in the first Presbyterian Church, I was hurried to Mary-street, where an open-air meeting was in progress; and while speaking from a door-step, found out how appreciative and demonstrative these people are. Another association, making "a threefold cord," is a visit to the famous Sunday-school of John Wanamaker at Bethany, where more than 2000 scholars are under a system of discipline and teaching unique in my experience.

On the following day I visited Girard College, the outcome of a bequest of ten million dollars by a French merchant, who by his will prohibited all ministers of religion from visiting the place; but as he wished the purest morality to be inculcated, the 1100 orphan boys cared for under its roof are taught from Holy Scripture, and have prayers in the chapel every day. In an interview with that veteran of the Christian Commission during the war, Mr. George H. Stuart, I was sorry to find him on a couch prostrated by asthma. I commend him to the prayers of the Lord's people.

NEW YORK.

Five days in New York are little better than an introduction; but I could not allot more to it. Its population in 1880 was 1,206,500, and that of Brooklyn 566,689. In reference to my own special work I was told that I could not preach in the streets without a permit. This was on Sunday, October 28. On applying to the head of the police, I was informed that such permits were only granted by the Mayor. Eventually, however, verbal permission was given, and I joined in meetings both on the steps of the City Hall and from a band-stand in Castle Gardens, memorable as the place where so many thousands of emigrants annually land. It was a touching sight to see many of these gather round, and as the old home and the new land were spoken of, and the title to the new land through the blood of the Lamb explained, tears were seen on the faces of these new comers to a strange land.

On Monday I applied to the Mayor for a permit, but was told by his deputy I must bring a letter from some one known to the Mayor. So on Tuesday I went again armed with one from the Secretary of the Y.M.C.A. Then I was told the Mayor was not in. Called again, and he was too busy, and yet again, and he was at lunch. As I left the city earlier than at first intended, I did not pursue the matter further, but the deputy emphasised the fact that I could take neither singers or music, and that if any disturbance was caused the police would not protect me, permit notwithstanding. I was also informed by one of the police that only about ten of these permits had been issued; so the poor street preacher finds there are worse places than old England for his vocation.

I was glad to make the acquaintance of good brother Lanphier, who began the Fulton-street Prayer-meeting twenty-six years ago, and has sustained it ever since. The day I took the meeting there must have been forty written petitions, or more, all fresh in that morning.

I visited Jerry McAulay's Cremorne Mission on Sunday night. It was crowded to its utmost capacity, and the testimonies of reclaimed drunkards were of a very touching description. But I felt that there lacked a distinct, pointed presentation of Gospel truth. Testimony is good, but sinners need the way of salvation explained to them. Jerry looks ill, and needs the prayers of the Lord's people.

Let me not forget to say how deeply I was impressed with the Sunday afternoon Bible-class at the Y.M.C.A. A finer set of men, or more interesting class, I have seldom seen.

ALBANY.

A visit to Albany, the capital of the State of New York, enabled me to preach in the open air, attend a "reception" of the Y.M.C.A., a Gospel Temperance meeting, and an "apron sale" in the rooms of the Calvary Baptist Church, all in one evening. But the first was interrupted by the police (permission being needed from the Mayor), and the second proved distasteful, as I failed to understand what song-singing and piano recitations had to do with a young men's Christian Association. At the Temperance meeting the Rev. C. C. Frost spoke. He used the red ribbon; but so far as my own observation goes, I have seen very little of either red or blue in my travels. The "apron sale" was a sale of aprons by the young people for a charitable purpose.

Mrs. Grattan Guinness at Blandford.

ON Sunday and Monday, December 2 and 3, Mrs. Guinness gave four addresses, to crowded audiences, in the Corn Exchange, Blandford. On Sunday evening the subject was on the Lord's Coming; for an hour and a half the closest attention was given while the grand and solemn theme was unfolded. On Monday afternoon the noble Earl of Shaftesbury presided over the meeting, and Mrs. Guinness gave a most able lecture on Central Africa, describing the work of Livingstone, Stanley's travels, and the establishment of the Congo Inland Mission. She closed by a powerful and thrilling appeal for labourers in this great harvest field.

Lord Shaftesbury spoke in the highest terms of the work of Mr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness, referred to the Training College as one of the most blessed institutions in the land; he wished that he were fifty years younger that he might personally enter upon missionary work.

In the evening the room was still more crowded and a similar lecture was delivered, if possible, even more impressive in its appeals than the afternoon one. One young lady who was present has accepted a missionary career, and will enter upon her studies in January next; we understand that others are much exercised upon the same point. Mrs. Guinness gave an address on "The Coming of the Lord," in the village schoolroom of Whiteinch on the Saturday night, to a large and interested audience.

Evangelizing in Cornwall.

THE sojourn of Mr. Spiers and myself here has been peculiarly interesting from two causes: one, a gracious providence of God, in relieving the serious distress of the fishing population, by a great catch of pilchards—all secured in about an hour—realising about £16,000, followed by bountiful catches of herrings, yielding several thousand pounds more. We felt it a great privilege to join in the thanksgiving for so gracious a response to many anxious pleadings for the "Harvest of the Sea."

We were told, on arriving, that the spiritual condition of the town was in a very low state. We, however, have had constant cause for gratitude and praise to the Lord for his blessed manifestations of saving grace amongst children and young people. We are deeply exercised that this outpouring of Divine grace may not be restrained, but flow forth amongst the elder people. Mr. Spiers closed on Sunday evening, and started for London last Tuesday. I feel guided to stay on, and trust to witness many more monuments of the Lord's saving power ere I leave. For this we shall be thankful for the earnest prayers of your readers.

ROBERT WESTALL.

Mr. Gawin Kirkham's Welcome Home.

AN enthusiastic meeting of over 300 open-air preachers and other friends was held at 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on Friday last, to welcome Mr. Gawin Kirkham on his return from a three months' tour in Canada and the United States. Mr. JOHN MACGREGOR, Hon. Sec. of the Open-air Mission, presided.

Mr. KIRKHAM recounted, in a very graphic way, the experiences which are appearing in these columns, with many other details, for which we regret our want of space.

The CHAIRMAN, at the close, said that Mr. Kirkham would be pleased to answer any questions. The following among others were asked:—

Did you hear or see anything of the "Bitter Cry" which we have heard so much of here?—No: only two persons asked alms of me during my visit. I had no time to visit the slums.

Is there a growing desire among ministers for open-air work?—I think not; it is chiefly done by the Y.M.C. Associations. Universalism is advancing everywhere.

Did you meet with much infidelity? Indirectly; Colonel Ingersoll's books are circulated on the railways.

What is your impression as to the fellowship of Christian workers?—Ministers get closer together than they do here.

The CHAIRMAN expressed the thanks of the gathering to Mr. Kirkham for the valuable information and illustrations he had given, which would supply facts for use in their open-air work.

THE QUARRYMEN AT BATH.—The extensive Bath stone quarries, worked by Messrs. Pictor and Sons, extend for four miles under ground, from Bath to Corsham, and afford constant occupation for a large body of men. Through the kindness of the managers, Miss Skinner, of Bath, gave a tea to about eighty of the men at Mr. Shell's wharf, on Monday week, and a very pleasant time was spent. After tea, Rev. W. Berry, in a few manly, earnest words, addressed the men. They were employed in cutting and planning out the material stones; he hoped the Lord would make them all polished stones in His temple above. Rev. J. Emra, formerly rector of Biddeston, also spoke. Miss Skinner was listened to with marked attention whilst she gave a brief account of her work. Mr. Skews addressed the meeting from Isaiah i. 18. Mr. Sims urged upon them the importance of at once engaging in some work for their Lord and Master.

THE REVIVAL IN IRELAND.

Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan in Wexford.

MANY of our readers will have seen in the daily papers accounts of the mob riots in this Irish city on Sunday week, in connection with the evangelistic services commenced that day by Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan. The incident is, no doubt, an unfortunate one, as contrasting strongly with the peaceable and orderly condition of things at all the places previously visited by these brethren. A correspondent in Wexford sends to us a report of the Mission, in which he says:—

"The visit of these evangelists may be said to mark a period in the history of Christianity at Wexford in more ways than one. In expectation of their coming, special requests for prayer had been sent to a large number of united prayer meetings throughout the country. At the opening meeting in the Theatre on Sunday afternoon, December 2, some inconvenience was caused by a noisy crowd of roughs outside the building, who attempted to insult the people coming from the meeting, and were not controlled by the police. Later in the day, in consequence of representations of the magistrates and police officers, the committee decided under protest to give up holding the Sunday evening meeting. Promises were made that order would be maintained on Monday and following days; the force at their command then being insufficient in their opinion. However, this step did not prevent a disorderly crowd of young people assembling in the neighbourhood of the theatre, who afterwards roamed through the town unchecked by the police; they broke the windows in the churches and the Young Men's Christian Association House. Notice had been given in the churches that, at the request of the magistrates, no meeting would be held in the theatre, and the rector, the Rev. J. R. Latham, in giving notice in the parish church, took the opportunity to throw the responsibility of such a measure on the authorities, adding that if such lawless conduct were permitted, it would soon be impossible to hold public worship unmolested in the town of Wexford.

"These disturbances continued more or less for some days, and many people were endangered on their way to and from the theatre; but it is earnestly hoped that no permanent ill-feeling may be left behind. Owing to the state of things outside, the usual inquiry meetings were dispensed with. However, quite a number at the close of each meeting responded to the invitation of Major Whittle to accept Christ. The beautifully touching words of Scripture, as sung by Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, were carried home by God's Spirit, through the singers, to many weary hearts. We have good reason to believe that numbers, through faith, have passed from death unto life.

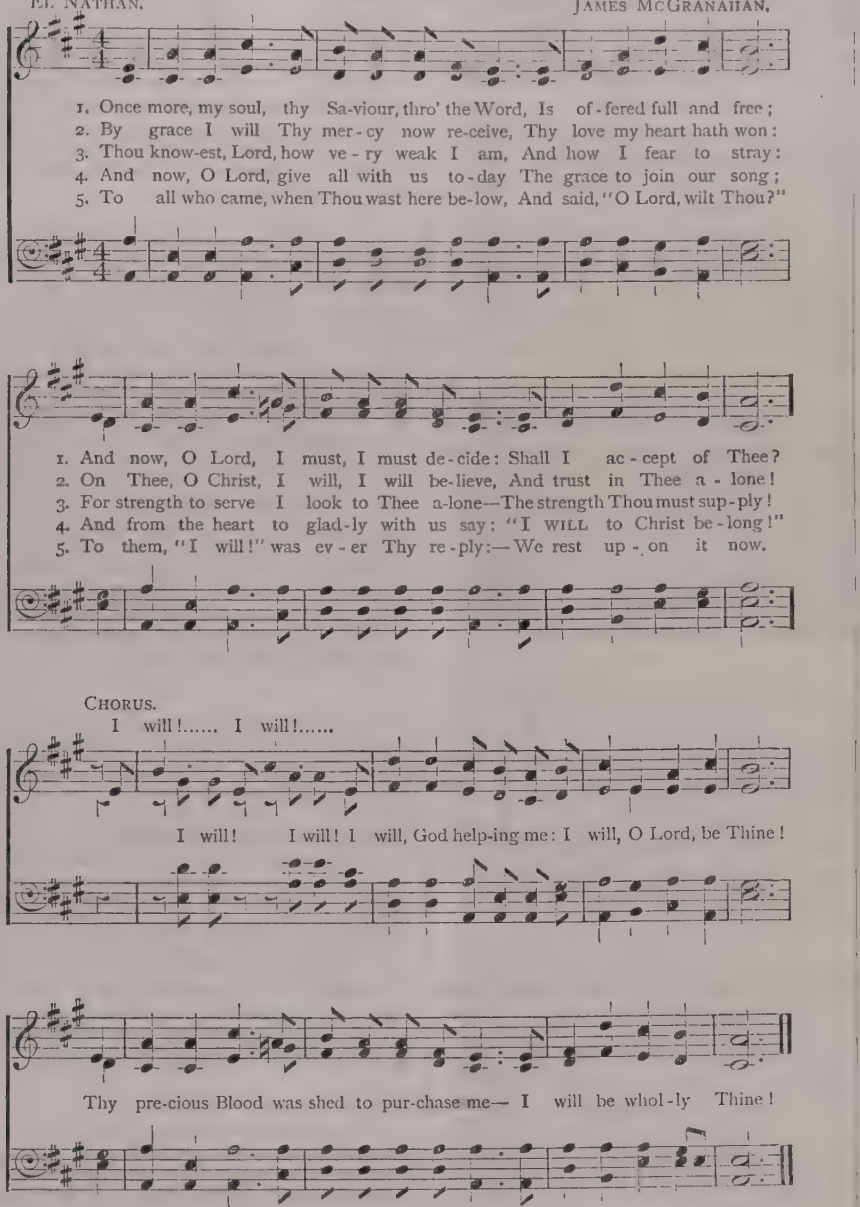
"An early morning prayer-meeting has been held in a room lent by a member of the committee, at which Major Whittle and Mr. McGranaham have taken part. These have been special seasons of grace and renewal of strength. Prayer has been largely answered, not only in the preservation of those attending the meetings from a spirit of resentment, but in the full outpouring of our loving Father's blessing upon the day's meetings. The words of Major Whittle on Sunday morning have been often remembered: 'The Lord is hovering over Wexford, and it is his desire to bless Wexford.'"

CORK.

A correspondent writing lately says: You will be glad to hear that the work in Cork has been greatly blessed; we are busy now gathering in the sheaves, which are neither few nor small. The work has been deep, though quiet, and I have no doubt will be lasting as eternity.

MALLOW.

Six meetings have been held in this town, two in Wesley Chapel and four in the ball-room, "Queen's Arms Hotel." The attendance on all occasions was very large. Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan sang several beautiful hymns, to the delight and profit of all. A large choir also rendered efficient service.



The powerful Gospel appeals of Major Whittle were responded to by large numbers, both of young and old, receiving "Christ Jesus the Lord," and testifying to his saving grace. In all the services, especially the two last, the Divine presence was most manifestly felt. Revs. M. Long (Methodist) Baird (Presbyterian), and other Christian friends, purpose continuing the special services.

"I Will!"

"I will trust, and not be afraid."—Isaiah xii. 2.

(Suggested by the responses of the young men of Limerick to Mr. Moody's question, "Will you trust Christ?" at the meetings in that city, October, 1883.)

EAST CENTRAL Y.M.C.A.—This branch never mustered so strong as on Thursday evening, Dec. 6, when they gathered en masse at St. Michael's Hall, at the kind invitation of Mr. Frank A. Bevan. After tea, the company adjourned to the saloon, and listened to earnest words spoken by the chairman, Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Mr. Leite Rozas, and Mr. W. J. Paton. At the close of his earnest exhortation, Mr. Paton asked all who were on the Lord's side to rise, when fully 100 young men stood up, doubtless a thrilling testimony to those present who had not yet taken their stand on the Lord's side. Mr. N. Hughman, the secretary, closed the proceedings with a few words and with prayer.

MR. SPURGEON IN FRANCE.—After several months of continuous labour, Mr. Spurgeon has once more gone to Mentone, to bask in the sunshine of the Riviera. Mr. Spurgeon did not leave a day too soon, for on Thursday week he was unable to conduct the usual preaching services, and on Sunday, Dec. 2, although he preached morning and evening, the effort was almost too much for his jaded condition. In the evening the monthly communion took place, when out of a membership of 5,300, the communicants present numbered between 3,000 and 4,000, entirely filling the area and a portion of the first gallery. Mr. Spurgeon suitably addressed his flock, it being the eve of his departure, and the Rev. James Spurgeon, in the closing prayer, commended the pastor to the keeping of Almighty God. Mr. Spurgeon left London on Monday morning, and arrived safely at Boulogne after a rather rough passage. Here he passed the night, departing the next morning for Paris, where he would stay a day or two, proceeding thence to Cannes, his destination being reached on Saturday. The preachers at the Tabernacle during Mr. Spurgeon's absence will be: December 16 and 23, Mr. Fullerton; 30th, Rev. J. Jackson Wray; January 6, morning, Rev. A. G. Brown; evening, Rev. J. A. Spurgeon; 13th, Rev. C. Spurgeon.—Christian World.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next week's issue will be an Illustrated Christmas Double Number (price 2d.) Besides many articles and sketches with appropriate engravings, it will contain a Christmas sermon by Mr. Moody, and a new Christmas hymn selected by Mr. Sankey.

"Squalid Liverpool" is a phrase that is becoming as familiar to the reading public in the north, as "Outcast London" is in the south. A contemporary says:—

"The Liverpool Daily Post has lately devoted considerable space to descriptions of the housing of the poor in that city. They show conclusively that Liverpool is not in advance of the capital in the matter of sanitary arrangements, and is unhappily able to furnish a parallel to some of the worst of the London fever dens and haunts of vice and crime."

The most recent tidings from Madagascar are not of a very hopeful kind. What our Gallican neighbours hope to achieve by the "barbarous stupidity" that leads them to repeat the bombardment of inoffending villages on the Malagasy coast it would be difficult to divine. They are pretty certain, at all events, to earn the hearty execration and alienate the friendship of all righteous and peace-loving nations; and this cannot tend to their advantage in the long run.

We continue to receive very pressing applications from Christian workers in various parts of London for help in distributing to the poor around them some substantial cheer at the approaching Christmastide. We have not space for the insertion of all these appeals, but we trust our readers will entrust us with a sum sufficiently large to divide among the applicants. There is no time to lose; we would therefore urge haste, as well as generous help.

A sentence was passed upon a criminal at the late Surrey Sessions which deserves special note. The crime was selling obscene literature. The perpetrator, a man of fifty-eight years of age, was sentenced to four years' hard labour, and the books in his possession ordered to be burnt. Magistrates who deal severely with this class of crime deserve the commendation of the public; it is an evil which cannot be too strongly deprecated, or the wretched villains who perpetrate it too hardly dealt with.

The purchase knowingly of such publications ought also to be punishable. In the case referred to above, it was stated that some of the prisoner's customers had been seen by the police, and were terrified at the idea of exposure. The demand for this kind of literature helps to create the supply, and those who are known to support it deserve to be exposed, and should share the just reward of evil-doers.

It is satisfactory to find that the Local Government Board is stirring up some of the parochial authorities of the metropolis as to their duties in reference to the housing of the poor, and the sanitary condition of their districts. Without reference to further legislation, much improvement might be made if existing powers were duly put in force. Ratepayers would do well to look into these matters more closely, and remind their local representatives of their responsibilities.

A fresh ecclesiastical union has been started in the English Church, under the auspices of the Bishop of Lichfield, to be known as the "New Pastoral Order of the Holy Ghost." Its object is stated to be the raising a higher standard of spiritual life and ministerial faithfulness amongst the clergy. There are nine rules for the guidance of members of the order. One is, to read over on the knees the vows and exhortation of the Ordinal on one day of every Ember week; another, to seek once in each year one or two days' seclusion from the world at some retreat, for the purpose of re-consecration and revival.

The object thus aimed at is of undoubted importance, and it is cause for devout thankfulness that, in any church, ministers should be led to make it one of special concern. A spiritual and earnest ministry is the great need of our times, and wherever such an one is found God will richly honour it. While the adoption of special means for revival, and the setting apart special seasons for conference and self-examination, have their uses, it is a blessed truth that none need depend upon them or wait for their appointment. Every week and every day of the year the unction of the Holy One is needed, and may be obtained by all who walk in fellowship with Christ. Times and seasons in no way rule his gracious operations. Everywhere and always the Divine Spirit of Holiness is ready to impart his energy and grace to the thirsty soul.

The Protestants of Great Britain and Ireland have long since granted to their Roman Catholic fellow subjects the most unfettered religious freedom. This boon has by no means been reciprocated by Romish authorities in lands where they have supreme control. Now, it would appear as if within our own borders peaceable Protestant evangelists are to be at the mercy of an unthinking and mischievous Irish mob. From information we have received, it seems clear that the rioting at Wexford last week would be repeated on a larger and more organised scale at Enniscorthy, Bandon, and other places, if Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan were to visit these towns as arranged.

These evangelists say nothing that could properly wound the sensibilities of the most bigoted Romanist; they simply declare the Gospel message without reference to sectarian distinction. That they should be brought into serious bodily peril is a circumstance most discreditable, not only to the instigators of the riots, but to the authorities who are responsible for the safety and comfort of all within these realms engaged in the exercise of their undoubted right.

Among recent deaths in the Mission field we regret to note that of Rev. William Martin, of the United Presbyterian Church, in Rajpootana, who has laboured there since 1860. His career was one of unremitting zeal and self-sacrifice, and furnishes an illustration of an oft-forgotten fact, that the missionary servants of Christ have been among the foremost benefactors of the world, from a material as well as spiritual point of view. Mr. Martin's body was borne to the grave by relays of orphans, whose lives he had saved in time of famine. The village of Ashapura, or Hopetown, was founded by him as an orphan settlement. His death is regarded as a grievous loss throughout a wide district.

Advertisers are particularly requested to notice, that in consequence of the Christmas holidays, it will be necessary for advertisements for the issue of December 27 to reach us not later than Thursday, December 20.

The following statistics, culled from an article in this month's Voice of Warning, furnish proof of the increase of Papal influence in our country, such as occasions cause for no little sadness and concern:—

"In 1851 there were 958 priests in Britain. In 1883 there are 2441, or an increase of 1483.

"In 1851 there were 683 Romish churches, chapels, and stations, exclusive of those attached to monasteries and convents. In 1883 there are 1183, an increase of 800.

"In 1851 there were 17 monasteries of men. In 1883 there are 174, an increase of 157.

"In 1851 there were 53 convents for women. In 1883 there are 368, an increase of 315.

"Besides these places, there are now 273 Schools and Colleges in Britain where Romanism is taught."

The apathy and unconcern with which such facts are regarded in our midst is one of the gravest features of the Christian life of the age. It may be charitable and tolerant to view these inroads of Romanism upon Protestant England with quiet consent, but that it is faithful to Christ, from whose honour the Church of Rome so fearfully derogates, we cannot allow.

The sacredness of human life, even under its worst and most execrable conditions, is a doctrine which it is of first importance to maintain; we are glad, therefore, of the emphasis with which the O'Donnell trial and its result has asserted it. Mr. Justice Denman spoke only as any righteous judge must when he said, in sentencing the prisoner, that to hold it justifiable to kill a man because he is wicked and execrable, is an abominable and dreadful doctrine; one not only contrary to the law, but in violation of every principle of right. It is painful to see how many seem prepared now-a-days to think and act otherwise.

The Spectator, in reviewing the Sunday Magazine volume for this year, says:—"We have a strong feeling that regular biblical education is terribly neglected, and particularly amongst the higher classes." That this is so there is but too much ground to believe, and the exclusion of the Bible from numbers of our day-schools of course helps the evil. Our Sunday-schools are a great counteractive in relation to the poorer classes, and to them we must look for increasing diligence in direct Bible teaching. As to the higher classes, it is to be feared that in a multitude of cases the Bible is almost unknown among the children, at any rate outside the church, in which they may occasionally hear it read.

The gay world with which the "upper ten" are so closely linked has no place for the Word of Truth which exposes its folly, and rebukes its ungodliness. It is no wonder, therefore, if biblical education finds small favour in its eyes, and if its votaries are careless not only of their own, but of their children's duty and need in relation to it. The Bible refuses to be a dead letter wherever its truths are asserted; to educate thoroughly in its doctrines is to awaken conscience, unveil error, and reprove all evil, hence the neglect with which it is treated by so many of its possessors. Little do they know how great is the loss and danger incurred by refusing to let it warn and guide their way. "Blessed are they that keep his testimonies."

Mr. George Müller has entered upon his evangelistic work in India amid most cheering signs of success. The Memorial Hall, Madras, was crowded at his first meeting on the 9th ult. Our readers, we are sure, will bear this venerable and devoted servant of the Lord in prayer before God, that his tour in India may be productive of great results.

The Evangelical Alliance has renewed its annual invitation to Christians all over the world to join in a week of united prayer at the commencement of the year. As the years advance, the need for prayer and supplication becomes increasingly urgent; the battle raging between light and darkness, truth and error, Christ and Belial, waxes more and more fierce and intense. We trust that, with a heartiness and unanimity never before attained, the Christian Church will rally to the call, and bow with "one accord" before the Throne of Grace.

The circular of invitation addressed by the Alliance to the churches this year derives special interest and solemnity from the fact that it was drafted by the late lamented Canon Battersby, of Keswick, and was almost his last act of service for the Master.

The fact that the new hangman was the centre of a crowd of admirers at a public-house in Liverpool the evening prior to the execution at Kirkdale Gaol last week, and that he exhibited the badges of his office to all comers, is one of the most demoralising and outrageous we have heard for a long time. It was with difficulty, it is said, the landlord could clear his house on the Sunday night of the crowds who came to see the executioner and his tackle. Surely the law has power to prevent so debasing and disgraceful an outrage on the dignity of its own penalties as well as on the common decency of public morals. Society has a right to demand that the repetition of such shameless proceedings shall be made impossible.

The Rev. Mr. Pigott, chaplain of the gaol, states that Binns was so evidently under the influence of liquor at the time of execution, that he felt compelled to administer rebuke to him on the scaffold. Pointing to the wretched culprit in his death struggle, he said, "My friend, let this be a warning to you never again to touch spirits in the morning."

In reference to a recent note on caring for outcast children, a correspondent, Mrs. Sullivan, Cromwell-road, St. Andrew's Park, Bristol, writes: "Many who, though lacking opportunity to carry this into effect, would willingly contribute if they might exercise the right of control over their protegés. Many needy Christians, too, might be benefitted by receiving charge of a few such children. I shall be glad to communicate with any who are desirous of carrying out this plan in Bristol."

We learn with sincere pleasure and thankfulness that Mr. J. Tritton, the well-known banker of Lombard-street and Treasurer of the Baptist Foreign Missionary Society, is recovering from the long and severe illness by which he has been prostrated. Many and fervent have been the prayers offered for the continued life of this devoted servant of Christ, and the answer so graciously vouchsafed will cause joy and gratitude to God in the hearts of many at home and abroad.

A National Association for promoting State-directed Emigration and Colonisation has just been formed. Lord Brabazon is its President, while among the Vice-Presidents are the Bishops of Bedford and Carlisle, the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, and other well-known names. The Lord Mayor has consented to become the Treasurer. The object aimed at is to bring the Home and Colonial Governments into communication on the best means for enabling our surplus and unemployed population to go out to the Colonies. The proposal is not to give money for this purpose, but to lend it, to be repaid in easy instalments by the emigrants. The scheme appears well worthy of support by the philanthropic and benevolent.

The basis of the Association, and the encouragement it has to expect success in its operation, is well shown by the following extract from its own statement:—

"A deputation from the Association recently waited, by appointment, on the Earl of Derby, Secretary of State for the Colonies. The substance of Lord Derby's reply to our deputation was: That Parliament might be willing to commit itself to an expenditure once for all, if it saw a prospect of the money coming back and being used over and over again for a like purpose: that the difficulty to be dealt with was growing, since the volume of our capital and business did not increase correspondingly with the population; that for this, emigration was one of the best and most effective remedies."

We have on recent occasions referred to the growing practice of Sabbath desecration. About two years ago cars were run for the first time in Glasgow, for the accommodation and at the request of some church-goers. Now, after a lapse of two years, instead of eighteen runs per day, 235 are made every Sunday, depriving 600 men of the privilege of worshipping God. This is an indication of how Christians, often misguided, advocate "reforms," which grow in a short space to uncontrollable magnitude. Professing Christians cannot overlook the fact that they are to blame for this new departure in Scotland.

The opening of a new Waldensian Church on the 25th of last month, at Rome, is an event we cannot pass over without sounding a note of gratitude and joy. That a Church once so bitterly persecuted for faithful testimony to Christ and his truth, should now be located in the heart of the city from whence emanated the edicts for its persecution, is a fact gloriously illustrative of the fidelity of God to those who are true in their adherence to his Word. The new building seats between three and four hundred persons, and is said to be an elegant structure. The pastor of the church is the Rev. M. Prochet, who is the president also of the Waldensian Evangelistic Committee.

The approach of Christmastide suggests many opportunities for Christian kindness and charity to be shown to the poor and needy. A correspondent suggests that the sending of Christmas and New Year cards to the sick and lonely, who are accustomed to look drearily day after day upon the same objects, would bring comfort to many sad hearts. Little deeds of kindness go far to refresh and strengthen weary souls, and to brighten otherwise dark and cheerless scenes. Some of our young readers would find their own happiness increased by caring for others in this and many other ways.

A Russian Countess, reading an article which recently appeared in our columns on "Cottage Hospitals," has written to the Rev. Robert Gordon, Rector of Hammerwich, to whom reference was made, asking for further information as to the construction of such buildings. We append a copy of the letter, and are glad to find the remarks of our friend the Rev. W. Guest, in the article spoken of, has brought forth fruit in the far-away district to which the Countess belongs:

"Dear Sir,—THE CHRISTIAN has brought an article on 'Cottage Hospitals,' adding, 'If any information were needed, it readily would be supplied by the Rev. Robert Gordon, the rector, Hammerwich, Lichfield;' so I kindly beg you, dear sir, to take the trouble of drawing for me, in a few strokes, the disposition of the rooms of your hospital; also indicating their measure according to the plan of the building. If it was possible to get the plan itself I should feel much obliged and thankful, as I much wish to construct a hospital for our poor Russian peasants, who are constantly applying for medicine at my door. Pray excuse my addressing myself to you, sir, and believe me, with Christian regards, yours very truly, "COUNTESS ——.

Mr. Varley in Reading.

THE Gospel services recently held here by Mr. Varley have been eminently successful. The Congress Hall, the new Town Hall, and the Abbey Hall, kindly lent by Messrs. Sutton for the afternoon Bible-readings, alike bore witness to the deep interest taken in these gatherings. There can be no doubt that many hundreds have been led to a deep and lasting interest in spiritual things.

A series of seven Bible-readings on the Epistle to the Hebrews proved of great value, drawing together each afternoon increasing audiences to the quiet study of God's Word. The Sunday services brought together crowded audiences, and the last Sunday evening witnessed between eighty and ninety giving testimony to increase of spiritual power received on their reception of Christ. Mr. Varley's address upon Zaccheus was felt to be of singular power in bringing men to decision.

The impetus given to the spiritual life of a large number of believers has not been the least remarkable part of this work, which has increased in interest and blessing from its commencement. Of large numbers in Reading, it may be said as of Samaria, "There was great joy in that city," consequent upon the preaching of the living and exalted Christ. A CORRESPONDENT.

Another friend writes: It has been the custom with me to look through THE CHRISTIAN to see if there were any special places or workers to be pleaded for at what I call my "Litany hour." I have not only prayed for but afterwards rejoiced when hearing of blessing given. I hope others may rejoice with us in Reading; since Lord Radstock's visit among us about fourteen years ago, we have had no such Mission as during the sixteen days that our friend Mr. Henry Varley has been here. I do not speak personally of the evening meetings or those on the Lord's days, though I have heard from good authority that great blessing has been vouchsafed in souls being brought in. As regards the Bible-readings in the afternoon, I can say they were truly in Resurrection power; many of us realised that we were not only dead with Christ but He was living in us, and that that was the power we were to walk in if we would glorify our God and Father.

I must add that Lord Radstock's visit led to much evangelistic work; I am not prepared to say he was the first, but since that time there has been each winter, first, in the theatre, and after that in the Abbey Hall (built by the firm of Sutton & Son, for such like work), meetings held by evangelists from the Evangelisation Society. These meetings, I know, have been, and still are, greatly blessed to many. All are advised to unite themselves to one or other of the many places of worship in the town, that they may be built up, as these meetings are intended for bringing in those who do not attend any place of worship. I trust this time of stirring up God's own people will lead to more work for his glory. AN OLD DISCIPLE.

For the Young.

A LETTER AND ITS RESULTS.

ONE Sunday evening I recognised two of my old Sunday scholars sitting in the chapel I usually attend. After the service was over, I remained behind to speak to them. A few words of inquiry elicited the fact that they were both converted, and members of a Christian church at N——. On putting the question, What was it that led you to decide for Christ? The elder girl replied, "I think it was those New Year's letters that you wrote to us. I could not get mine out of my mind, nor C. either; so one Sunday evening, when the minister gave an invitation to those who were anxious for pardon to go forward to be prayed for, C. and I went, and we both found Jesus that night."

"And you are still happy in his love?"

"Oh yes!" was the reply, given with a beaming countenance and earnestness of expression, which left little doubt as to the sincerity of the speaker. The following is a copy of the letter addressed to the eldest sister, and I send it for the perusal of your young readers, in the hope that some of them may decide for Jesus too.

January 2.

"My dear Annie,—Will you not give your heart to Jesus at this the commencement of another year? He is waiting to receive you, and His own word of promise is, 'I love them that love Me, and those that seek Me early shall find Me.' There is no such promise for the old or middle-aged, who have put off the day of salvation. On the contrary, God sends a very solemn message unto them (see Prov. i. 24—33). They shall seek, but shall not find. To you He says, 'Come now.' It will not be always so. When you get older the 'cares of the world' will press upon you, and help to bar up the entrance to the narrow way. It will not be so easy then to 'strive to enter in.'

"Every year that you spend in the service of Satan he will bind his chains faster about you, and make it more difficult for you to get through. If you wish to make a present to a very dear friend, you would not think of giving that friend something that was 'shabby and quite worn out;' you would like it to be something that was 'new and fresh and sweet.' So Jesus likes to have our hearts in the morning of our days, while we are young, and strong, and fresh for his service. Do not let anything persuade you to put it off another day; but go to Jesus now, and tell Him, on your knees, that you give your heart to Him, and ask Him for grace that you may 'serve Him acceptably with reverence and godly fear.'

"Dear Annie, do not wait, but go at once to Him, to be made right, and kept right; then every day in the New Year will be a happy day to you, for you will have his smile resting upon you, and perhaps hear Him say in the last great day, as his loving eye picks you out amidst the ransomed throng, 'She hath done what she could.'

"God does not expect from the young disciple the rich, ripe, mellow fruit that He does from the advanced Christian, but He does expect little acts of love and kindness, and a tender care for the souls of others, such as will always spring from a heart full of love to Him. When you get your heart filled with love, you will be ready to say:

"Too much to Thee I cannot give;
Too much I cannot do for Thee,
Let all thy love, and all thy grief,
Graven on my heart for ever be."

That it may be so prays your affectionate friend, Mary ——."

Each girl in the class received a different letter, and the two sisters referred to were not the only ones who gave their teacher reason to believe that they had passed from death unto life during the early months of the New Year.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Jersey.—Mr. Williams has been labouring in the Presbyterian Church at St. Helier's, with much success. Crowded congregations assembled to hear the Gospel preached, and many were led to the Saviour.

Richard Weaver in Glasgow.—During the past week this evangelist has been labouring in the Orphan Home Hall, James Morrison-street. The meetiugs have been well attended, and much good has been done.

Newport, I.W.—The Legh-Richmond Hall opened on November 2 last, is intended as an evangelistic centre, as well as affording accommodation for the Y.W.C.A. and Y.M.C.A., &c. Rev. H. G. Thwaites will be glad of the help of any friends interested in any of the branches of work carried on.

Stanway, Essex.—Adverting to a notice of meetings conducted by Mr. M. Boyd, which appeared in last week's issue, it will be encouraging to all who are interested, and also to those engaged in winning souls for Jesus, to know that at a three days' Mission, held in the parish school-room, under the personal superintendence of the rector, the most successful results have been obtained. Similar blessing is attending his meetings now being held in the Gospel Hall, Colchester.

Working Men's Mission, New Cut.—This Mission continues to enjoy a large success in winning souls for Christ from among the inhabitants of the New Cut. Numerous conversions are the fruits of almost every Gospel service. A few years back Thomas and James Young, with several helpers, rented a small back room; now they can look upon a comfortable little Mission hall seating over 400, and that crowded to overflowing at each Gospel service, with 180 members as an earnest band of helpers. Last winter they were enabled, through the liberality of Christian friends to give a series of free teas to coal porters and their wives, costermongers, and children, followed by Gospel addresses.

Barrow-in-Furness.—A Mission was held in St. Mark's parish, November 17 to 30. The Mission preacher was Rev. W. S. Standen, of London. Mrs. Legg, of Harrow, rendered invaluable assistance by holding meetings for women, girls, and children. In all the meetings the power of the Holy Ghost was manifested in a remarkable manner. Many persons accepted Christ as their Saviour while the services were being held. Others did so when spoken to in the after-meetings, and many of God's children were led to give themselves up entirely to the blessed Master. The thanksgiving service was one never to be forgotten, and three hundred and eighty-nine persons remained to partake of the Lord's Supper.

J. M. Laycock, Vicar.

Liverpool.—A correspondent writes:—"A most successful Children's Mission, conducted by Mr. George Banaster, of the Children's Special Service Mission, has just been concluded here. The services lasted from November 18 to 29 inclusive. It was very delightful to observe how the attention of the children grew deeper and more reverent as the days went on. From 600 to 800 crowded the school-room of St. Philemon's church every evening, till at last there was hardly room to be found for the numbers who flocked to hear 'The old, old story.' The great difficulty has been to deal with the numbers who remained for conversation, after every effort to eliminate all but the really earnest and anxious. We believe that many more, besides the large number who have been conversed with, will prove to have been savingly influenced by the services, and led to the Lord."

The Children's Song.

AN ACROSTIC HYMN.

(Eph. iv. 32.)

BE our hearts the homes of gladness,
Christ is in our midst to-day;
He, from self and sin and sadness,
Bids us come away.

"YE are bought"—the debt we owe Him
Who for men and children died,
Is ourselves. Oh may we know Him,
Living at his side!

KIND and gentle He would have us
In our words and deeds to be.
Jesus, Shepherd, keep us, save us,
Make us like to Thee!

ONE and all we need this Saviour—
Rich and poor are dead in sin:
He, to change our life's behaviour,
Whispers: "Let Me in!"

TO this friend, in love appealing,
What the answer we shall give?
"Come, Lord Jesus, with thy healing,
We would look and live!"

ANOTHER day its course is winging,
Have we spent its hours in vain?
Have we, some sweet message bringing,
Soothed another's pain?

TENDER HEARTED, Gracious, Holy,
He can make us by his grace;
Keeping us from sin and folly
Till we see his face.

FORGIVING, as we've been forgiven,
Useful, happy, bright and free;
Safe on earth and saved for heaven,
Perfect, Lord, in Thee.

Margaret B. Gerds.

Rev. W. Haslam at Bristol.

A SEASON of much refreshing has been experienced in connection with a ten days' Mission by Rev. W. Haslam, at St. Matthew's, Kingsdown, Bristol, Rev. W. B. Doherty, Vicar. God has not disappointed the hearts of his waiting people. The blessing has been manifold, bringing salvation to many unsaved ones, and refreshing and instruction of the greatest value to the Lord's people.

The day before the Mission closed a circular-note was placed in the pews, requesting any who had received definite blessing during the Mission to state briefly what it was, and to sign their name, with their address. These circular-notes, when returned, showed that a large number of Christians of various denominations had received rich and deep benefit. It is known also that many have been truly blest who have not written. It has been more than a parochial Mission; it has been a Mission for the whole neighbourhood.

Mrs. Haslam's meetings for women have been crowded, and there have been many testimonies to blessing received.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.—Hundreds of families who would never utter a cry that their children have only dry bread, and not enough of that, are known to us. Our three soup coppers are helping to feed such. We know widows of the "household of faith," thankful for half a cwt. of coals. Share, beloved believers, with us in this joy.

60, Commercial-street, E. Annie Macpherson.

BLACKDOWN HILLS MISSION.—For the last nine weeks I have been evangelising in the Eastern and Northern counties. The past year has been one of much blessing in various districts connected with this Mission. The poor have been suffering much from the constant wet weather; and now the cold has set in, thus intensifying the need. For many years past we have sought to help them with coals and a little meat for Christmas, which have always been a source of comfort to many suffering families. If any of our readers can send a little help for the poor of the Blackdown Hills Mission, I shall rejoice to be the channel through which their liberality may be distributed. Geo. Brealey.

THE CHILDREN'S BITTER CRY.

By T. J. BARNARDO, F.R.C.S.E.

OVER 4000 separate applications for relief on the part of poor children have been registered and dealt with by our Homes during the current year. Not a single day passes in which the most urgent and distressing cases are not admitted. The following is the briefest epitome of two of the most recent: they are but samples of many others.

Emily J. brought her three daughters, Emily, Louisa, and Mary Ann, to the door one night last week and begged an immediate shelter. They had all paced the streets for many weary days and nights. When they could pick up a few pence, they stayed at a lodging-house. The previous night they slept in a common kitchen in Bethnal-green. The eldest child was a tall, well-grown girl of twelve years; the youngest, a wee creature of but four. All were clad in loathsome rags, were covered with vermin, and were unapproachable on account of the unpleasant odour which exhaled from them. Half starved, and without a friend in the world, the wretched woman had not money for her own and her children's lodging on the night she applied. She would not go to the workhouse—"would die first"! The house where they sheltered when they had the money is well-known as a resort of prostitutes and thieves. Thank God! the gates of our Ilford Village were opened at once to receive all three children, separating them thereby for ever from their woeful past.

W. P. is a cripple, sent out by a mother who hawks oddments about the streets, to beg under the pretence of selling flowers in a West-end thoroughfare. Arrested for begging and brought before the Police-court, the magistrate ordered him to be sent to an industrial school. He was remanded while a school was being sought for, but as an absolute fact every certified school in the Metropolis refused him admission on the ground that he was a cripple! Remand after remand was obtained and public attention drawn to the case by paragraphs in the newspapers, yet no shelter could be found for him. To him the doors of our Stepney Home were at once thrown open, presenting thereby such a prospect in life as he could not otherwise have attained.

An old friend of our work recently bestowed upon us the freehold of a charming villa house, standing in an acre of land in a most healthy and salubrious spot, near the village of Hawkhurst, Kent. With unfeigned thankfulness to God the house was taken possession of, and fitted up as a Home for Babies. Our arrangements were nearly all made and we had the house half filled with "tinies," some of them rescued from the most abominable dens in East London, when suddenly our old foe scarlet fever, which had been raging in the district, was brought into the house through the carelessness of a workman, in whose family four children lay ill. Child after child took the disorder. So also did one of the assistants in charge. One dear little child died on Wednesday night last from another affection, and we are in much anxiety and solicitude that the lives of the others may be spared. May I ask earnest prayer from all the readers of these pages on behalf of the afflicted children and of my overworked and heavily-burdened helpers in charge?

The inclement weather which came so suddenly upon us last week rendered it necessary that we should at once open our free dinner-table to needy children in East London. My hope is to give at least one thousand dinners a week to little children who now attend our Free Day-school. They are not of the destitute or outcast class, but are the children of the industrious, labouring poor, many of whom have been suddenly thrown out of work by the frost, and are in sore distress. Of course the children suffer most. We can give 1000 dinners, and meet all incidental expenses of cooking, fire, &c., for £5.

Much help may be brought to our exhausted treasury if kind lady-friends throughout the country will respond to my request given in last week's CHRISTIAN to hold small bazaars or drawing-room sales in their own houses, the proceeds of which may afterwards be sent to me. Boxes containing £5 or £10 worth of goods sent in for our own bazaar will be at once despatched to any lady willing to help, who will send a Post Office order or cheque for the amount.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

BASUTOLAND.

DRUNKENNESS has much diminished in consequence of a law passed by the Chamber of the Orange Free State, by which no brandy shop is allowed within two leagues of the Lessonto frontier. There are only three such shops in three Boer villages on the frontier.—Journal des Missions de Paris.

THE SWISS TEMPERANCE SOCIETY

has just held its general assembly at Berne. This Society has existed only six years, but it already counts about 3,000 members, and has been the means of setting free a thousand slaves of drink in Switzerland alone.

SHOP GIRLS IN PARIS.

About a year ago Miss Atterbury, of New York, took the initiative in forming a Home for young girls employed in the large shops of Paris. She was helped by Mr. McAll, from whom the Committee hired a room over one of his own, where meetings were held on Sunday. Finding this room too small, others have been procured—8, Rue Jean Jaques Rousseau. The inauguration of this new Home took place November 14, when many members of different American, English, and French churches were present, as well as about fifty of the young girls for whose benefit the Home is established.

TONGUEURE, FRANCE.

Thursday, November 1, was a truly festive day for the members of the evangelical community in Tongueure. The difficulties which the small church had to encounter in her beginning during the Second Empire are sufficiently known. Happily the Lord held out his saving arm, and to-day the work is prospering. The Evangelical Society support there a schoolmaster, evangelist, and a female teacher. The boys' school is particularly prosperous. Although fees are required, several Catholic families send their children. As to the small chapel, our friends resolved to provide for themselves a new and needful place of worship, and on the 1st November we offered thanks with them that they had successfully achieved their enterprise. About 250 persons attended the dedication service. Pastor Mouron, Secretary of the Evangelical Society, spoke upon Matt. xii. 6. In the afternoon a meeting of the Union Fraternelle was held, and in the evening, before a large audience, including many Catholics, the speaker took for his subject, "What is Christianity?"

ABEL DESCHAMPS.

AMERICAN MARATHEE MISSION.

Nearly 1000 Christians, including some from other missions, gathered at Ahmednugger for the anniversary meeting. It is becoming common even for Hindoos to come to this gathering. The "Union," consisting wholly of native Christian pastors and delegates from the churches, first had a business meeting for two days. The religious meeting continued four full days. As outsiders come most readily to evening meetings, services for them were held on six evenings. One evening, there was an English lecture on Temperance; on the other evenings Marathee and Hindustanee addresses, with much singing. All the results no one knows, but four Hindoo men and one Brahmanee widow professed faith in Christ.—Indian Witness.

RIO GRANDE, BRAZIL.

Rev. E. Vanorden writes: Since the beginning of this year we have enjoyed a special blessing of the Lord. Our meetings are well attended, and new faces are seen at almost every meeting. The Gospel is also carried from house to house, and the Word explained to those who never heard it before. We hear of similar blessings in other parts of Brazil. The Jesuits are hard at work to secure a steady foothold among the German emigrants, and have sent from Germany their second band of eight men to found schools and colleges amongst them. Would to God that Protestants would show the same zeal in regard to work for Christ among this people.

GERMANY.

Among the works of the Home Mission, the colonies for vagabonds, which prove a great blessing, are making good progress. The one in the province of Schleswig-Holstein, at Ricklingen, was opened on October 10, and is already occupied by 110 poor men, who seek labour there. The Y.M.C. Associations, on the new principle established here by Mr. Schluembach, are also increasing. Two similar associations, based on uniting young men for Mission work, have been started in the suburbs of Berlin. The work conducted there proves very efficient to spread religious influence in that poor district of the city. The attempt was made on November 7 to interest the English and Americans in evangelistic work in Berlin, by inviting them to a tea-meeting at that house. Addresses were made in English. The appeal was very heartily responded to. About 150 persons, of whom only a very few were Germans, attended.—Evangelical Christendom.

Bedford Institute Home Mission.

THE annual meeting of this Association was held at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate, on the 7th inst., Mr. J. Gurney Barclay presiding. The association represents the Mission work supported by the Society of Friends in Spitalfields, Bethnal-green, Ratcliff, Deptford, Clerkenwell, and Bunhill-fields. The secretary's report stated that there was not only an increase in the number brought under Christian influence, but there was evidence in every district of much spiritual life and successful work.

The Chairman said all who were aware of the "horrible London" that surrounded them, ought to hail with gratitude any such efforts to combat the evils that existed. He desired to congratulate and encourage the workers. Mr. William Beck spoke of the continued growth that marked this Mission work, and urged its claim for support. Mr. J. B. Braithwaite, Jun., urged the advantages of adult schools for men, such as flourished in Birmingham, Hull, and other provincial towns. A school of this kind is now carried on successfully in the Bunhill-fields district. Mr. H. S. Newman (Leominster) told of a good work in Hereford, where a series of Gospel meetings had been held in a meeting-house. Many people have been converted as the result.

The "Bitter Cry of Outcast London" was the subject spoken to by Mr. John Hilton and Mr. J. F. Stewart. The former gave some illustrations of successful rescue work in Ratcliff, and urged that the first thing was to encourage and foster any desire after a better life, to assist the fallen in every way to a condition of self-respect and independence; at the same time, legislative measures were wanted for their protection. Mr. Stewart appealed for more helpers in the work.

CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE IN BELFAST.—The Christian Conference last week, says the Belfast Witness, can scarcely fail to do good. Similar meetings have been held for years in other places and have been followed by excellent results. The speakers were well chosen, the audiences were good, and a very happy spirit prevailed each day. We earnestly hope that the meetings will prove fruitful in good.

MAJOR TUCKER IN INDIA.

IN a letter dated Bombay, 24th October, Mr. Tucker, who superintends the Salvation Army operations in India, states that a large and suitable building has been secured for Headquarters and Training Home for male and female "officers." "The past year," he continues, "and especially the past few months, have been a time in which the faith, patience, and health of our officers have been severely tried. The unusual hardships to which they have been exposed have led to much sickness; besides this you can well understand how great have been the difficulties of mastering so many new languages to those who have but newly arrived from England. However, God has led us through it all and has given us the most wonderful encouragement. In Madras alone upwards of one thousand souls have sought salvation in the course of a few months, and we have now a grand work in progress. At least an equal number have professed to be saved at our other stations, and we have now a regular work going on in the following large towns: Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, Lahore, Poona, and Colombo (Ceylon), besides two village outposts.

"One of the most encouraging features of the work is its essentially native character. You would be surprised what a grip we have been able to get of the people of India in this short period. I have now travelled all over the country and visited the principal towns from Madras to the Himalayas. Everywhere the people are familiar with the 'Muktifauj,' and flock to listen to its teachings. Hindoos and Mohammedans have vied with one another in their personal hospitality and kind attentions towards us, and at Naini Tal, where the native population small and poor, they (although not Christians) cheerfully collected about £20 to help us in our work. In fact, the whole of the funds for the support of our work have been raised in India, and at the very least we must have received £200 from Hindoos and Mohammedans. It is impossible for one who has never been in India to understand the deep significance of this. Europeans also have afforded us the most generous assistance, so that we have received about £2500 in India, and have been enabled to erect and pay for sheds at Bombay, Calcutta, Poona, Madras, and Lahore, besides paying the other heavy expenses of travelling, maintenance, printing, &c.

"Our meetings are principally attended by natives, a considerable number of whom have sought salvation. Many of these have, however, been swept away by the persecutions of relatives at home, while many more are deterred from openly confessing Christ by fear of the same. However, it is delightful to see the breathless interest with which they listen, and there is no doubt that God has given us the key to their hearts.

"'You are like tigers!' said a Mohammedan, who had come twenty miles to see our meetings; 'even as the tiger tears open the heart of its prey, as soon as it has seized it, so are you tearing open my heart with your sweet songs!' 'I could not tell you,' said a poor woman, in giving an account of one of our meetings, 'all that they said; but, oh, I have got it all here!' (laying her hand upon her heart.) 'There is not a girl in our school but would like to join the Muktifauj this very day,' said a lady missionary, after one of our meetings. 'If he was to stop in our town one year,' said a Hindoo pandit,' 'the whole population would become Christians.' 'The Salvation Army is the talk of Cashmere,' says a Christian Fakir, who has just returned from a visit to that country. Such are just a few out of the many testimonies which have cheered us in our work, and have encouraged us to push forward with fresh zeal.

"Just now our opportunities and prospects are such as to make me tremble, partly for joy that the door is flung so wide before us, partly for fear lest we should be unequal to the grand occasion. But our God has supplied, and will continue to supply, all our need.

"Since sending two of our officers to a village in the Kangra Valley, we have accepted an urgent call to send others to a district called Kooloo, in the heart of the Himalayas, near the Chinese border. We have been offered what is equivalent to about £50 a-year towards the expenses of this expedition. Two other friends have offered to put us up sheds in the north of India at their own expense, and we have just received a free gift of presses and type, with some thousands of rupees. We are at the same time arranging to get a special grant of Bibles, Gospel portions, and tracts, in all languages, and to distribute them in vast quantities all over the country.

"We have now got thirty-three officers in India, of whom ten are purely natives. Two of these are converts from heathenism, six from nominal Christianity. The other two were already saved, but have been wonderfully stirred up since our coming. The rest of the officers are Europeans and Eurasians, nine having come out from England, and the rest having joined us in India. Thirteen out of the twenty-three are more or less acquainted with the languages of India. Among our officers we have now got those who can speak in Hindostanee, Tamil, Telugu, Singhalese, Marathi, Gujarati, Hindoo, Panjabi, Persian, Bengali, and Armenian. We have also a soldier whose mother-tongue is Arabic. This will give you some idea of the babel of tongues with which we have to grapple out here, and of the absolute necessity of having a Training Home for those Europeans who possess all the spiritual requisites for being good soldiers of Christ, but are ignorant of the languages; while it is equally important that the native officers, who are so well acquainted with the languages, should have something of European energy, method, and discipline, instilled into them. This our new Training Homes will enable us to do, and we confidently expect to be able to put a thousand trained workers into the field in the course of a year.

"Of course, all this means a greatly increased expenditure, but I feel now that there must be many in England who would be prepared to come to our help. Hitherto we have not appealed to them for help, and it is only a special occasion such as the present which would justify us in doing so now. I only wish that I could transport your readers to some of our Indian meetings that they might see for themselves what God is doing.—Yours very sincerely in the Lord, "F. Tucker.

"P.S.—You may probably have heard that I was converted at one of Mr. Moody's first meetings in the Agricultural Hall some eight and a half years ago. It has indeed rejoiced me to watch his wonderfully successful ministry."

WEEK OF UNITED PRAYER.—January 6—12, 1884. The daily topics for the approching week of prayer as arranged by the Evangelical Alliance are—Sunday, Jan. 6, Sermons; Monday, Praise and Thanksgiving; Tuesday, Confession of Sin and Prayer for Cleansing and Renewal; Wednesday, Prayer for Families and Instructors of Youth; Thursday, Prayer for the Church of Christ; Friday, Intercession for the Nations; Saturday, Prayer for Missions at Home and Abroad, that the blessing of God may abundantly rest upon the Conference of Christians of various nations (postponed from last year) to be held in September next in Stockholm.

YOUTHS IN WESTMINSTER.—The tenth anniversary of Mrs. Barker-Harrison's Institute for Youths, in connection with her work in Old Pye-street, Westminster, was held last week, and was a most interesting occasion. The scholars in the various classes are encouraged by the gift of prizes to the most successful students. These were given away by Sir Robert Carden, who takes a very warm interest in the Pye-street Mission, and himself contributes to the prize-list. This effort by Mrs. Barker-Harrison and her helpers on behalf of the lads of the neighbourhood is carried on very quietly, but it is none the less deserving of the warmest support.

Joy in the City.

"Then Philip went down to the city, and preached Christ unto them, and there was great joy in that city."—Acts viii. 5, 8.

THERE was joy in that city," for Jesus had come, [dumb;
And praises burst forth from the lips of the
The feet of the lame man leaped up as the hart,
And scales which had clouded the blind fell apart.

For the servant stood up in his Master's great name,
The captives' glad time of release to proclaim,
Then demons came out of the prisoners of sin,
And straightway the Lord of the temple stepped in.

Again there is joy in the city, behold!
How multitudes throng as the seekers for gold,
They listen intent while God's servants proclaim,
Release from the trammels of sin and of shame.

There is peace in yon home, wont to echo with strife,
The drunkard is thirsting for water of life,
And the liar and swearer in penitent shame
Are vowing allegiance to Jesus' pure name.

Here, the woman of fashion has quitted its crowd,
And there, the deceiver has flung off his shroud,
While the thief and the cheat, like Zaccheus of old,
Are weepingly giving their gains back fourfold.

The hard hearts are broken, the proud ones bent low,
And weary ones freed from their burden of woe,
For the Lord of the vineyard walks through it to-day,
And blesses the needy who kneel in his way.

There is joy in the city, the blind and the lame
Are finding their healing through faith in His name,
In the health of His presence, all sickness and sin
Are quenched by the light of His entering in.

There is joy in the city, and many a one
Is beginning to join in the anthem's glad tone.
Are you learning the chorus, or will you be dumb,
When the heavens shall re-open and Jesus shall come?

Clara A. Tuckett.

Christian Workers in Manchester.

THE Conference of Christian Workers, on Monday week, held at the new hall in connection with the Children's Refuges, Strangeways, Manchester, was a great success. The well-known hymn, "Hark! 'tis the Watchman's Cry," was the key-note of the gathering. The various qualifications for Christian work were looked at from many points of view in short, earnest addresses. The need of earnest labour in the great vineyard was ever and anon brought to the front. The testimony of several, expressed in earnest tones, of the deep and almost unutterable joy of copying the Master's life, as summed up in that short, yet pregnant saying, "He went about doing good," was impressively felt. So were the appeals to Christians to share in this joy of self-sacrifice for the sake of those who sit in darkness and the shadow of death.

Many will long remember the devotional meeting which came in the middle of the conference. Earnest prayer was made that there might be the manifest working of God's Spirit through those assembled. Telling illustrations were given of sympathy and tact shown in different branches of Christian work. "They loves a fellow there," was the cogent reason one lad gave for going two miles and passing twelve other schools to reach a certain Sunday-school. "My teacher knows a lot"—"But my teacher loves a lot," were the testimony of two scholars. One teacher, it is needless to say, had better results than the other.

This third annual conference of Christian workers in Manchester and neighbourhood will be potent in stimulating many to renewed labours of love in this great city, which, like all other great centres of population, has its terribly "bitter cry." The need of more helpers in the work is brought out by such gatherings. The Conference was representative of all denominations.

A THIEVES' SUPPER.

THE seventh annual meeting of thieves at Mr. George Hatton's Mission Chapel was held in Little Wild-street, Drury-lane, on the 3rd inst., at which over 200 men sat down to a well-provided supper. This number consisted of two classes—those who had been in prison and were now reformed, and in many cases truly converted to God, holding good situations, and those whose desire it was to give up the wretched life they had been living. Among them were mere youths, and also prematurely grey-haired men. Not a few betrayed, by their peculiar fashion of hair-cutting, that they had only recently emerged from prison; the appearance of many, both in dress and physique, contrasted strangely with the cheerful decorations of the chapel.

But they seemed pleased to be there; they knew the Superintendent and Secretary of the Mission were real friends; this they made evident by loud and frequent demonstrations.

Mr. George Hatton gave a brief résumé of the work, specially dwelling on that of the past year. He said that the number of men discharged during the year ending November 30 last, from Coldbath Fields Prison, was 6216; from Holloway, 5695; and from Wandsworth, since October 16, when the work commenced at the gates of the prison, 915. Of these men 7864 had received breakfast, and 2525 had signed the pledge. During the year they had dealt with 1410 cases, as follows: Sent to sea, 82; situations obtained for 206; fares paid home for 50; emigration cases, 67; assisted with tools, clothes, &c., 1005; total, 1410.

Mr. Wheatley followed by reading several letters from discharged convicts at home and abroad, all of which testified their gratitude for the kindness shown them on leaving prison, which enabled them to re-start in life. Some of them said they had been brought to the Lord Jesus in the Brook-street Home; several sent contributions to the Mission as an expression of their thankfulness.

Mr. Baron Pollock, who presided, in the course of an impressive address, said that he had come there not so much to say smooth or pleasant things as to set forth the truth, without which there was no foundation for human happiness. He counselled those who had done wrong and were heartily ashamed of it, to seek the forgiveness of God, which was accorded to such as had a broken and a contrite heart; having done that, let them set their own shoulders to the wheel to retrieve the past. Let them seek God, and then do their duty as if all depended on themselves. Having pointed out that they were not the only people who had temptations to meet, the learned judge gave them two words to meditate upon—Hope and Courage. The first was an undying principle in every man, no matter how low he had fallen, and the second was necessary to enable him to do right.

Mr. Howard Vincent said he had just come from a committee, and had brought the congratulations of the Lord Mayor, the Sheriffs, and the City Police Committee, also a contribution from the well-known barrister, Mr. Poland. He wished to state that the heads of Government departments were thankful for the work of this society, and urged its hearty support, especially at the present juncture.

Mr. Alderman Savory said he and many others felt the deepest sympathy with those who were unfortunately led into crime; there was a growing feeling in this respect everywhere. He once went into the country and called at a cottage for water; a little girl showed him the way to the well; he drank and was refreshed. He wished to be like that little girl, and show them the way to the Lord Jesus Christ, in whom they would find a well of salvation. His own invitation was, "Come unto Me;" his promise, "Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out;" and "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

Captain Harvey, of Wormwood Scrubbs Prison, spoke of the immense advantage of such an agency as Mr. Hatton's, and gave several cases in his own experience of the exceeding usefulness of the Mission, urging those present to take care that their future conduct gives evidence to the good the work had accomplished. Let each one also become a recruiting agent in helping others out of the mire.

We are glad to know that Mr. Hatton's Mission is now recognised by the Government as a Prisons Aid Society, and he is thus able to receive gratuities on behalf of the men, and to help them to spend it in the most profitable way. We most heartily join with the speakers of the evening in pleading for immediate and continued sympathy with a work that accomplishes so vast an amount of good.

A little booklet by Pearl Fisher, entitled "Glow and Gloom," gives a very interesting account of the general working of the Mission, introducing several criminals, whose stories of their wrong-doing are samples of thousands of others. It may be had from Mr. Hatton, 12, Ampton-place, Regent-square, W.C.

MISSIONS TO BASUTOLAND AND THE ZAMBEZI.

WE learn by a letter to Mrs. Malan from M. Coillard, that clouds of trouble are still hanging over Basutoland. Writing from Leribe, he says:—

"Now that the Cape Colony have definitely abandoned Basutoland, the dealings of the Imperial Government will be eagerly watched by friends and foes. All the native tribes of South Africa are more or less conscious that the fate of the Basutos is necessarily theirs too. To all parties here it is a time of anxious expectation; a renewal of hostilities seems unavoidable, and vigorous preparations are made for it on all sides. Lately, accompanied by one of our evangelists, Matthias Tsuene, I pitched my tent at Hotse Heights, where Jonathan, one of the rival chiefs, resides with 4000 to 5000 followers, and spent a fortnight with them. Most of the members of the church and the children of the school live there. Our time was fully occupied with visiting and receiving visits, attending to the sick, and holding meetings. Our short evangelistic services, morning and evening—in the open air, of course—were well attended. On Sundays they were crowded. We daily had also singing or Bible-meetings with the Christians. We were favoured all the time with lovely spring weather. One beautiful evening I spread a screen in the open air and exhibited the magic lantern, a gift of Mrs. Leech, of Perth, and of my brother-in-law, Mr. Mackintosh. Before we were ready there was around us an immense gathering. The magistrate and his family, the traders and other white men living in the camp were present. The rapture of our native audience was beyond control as the shadows of some well-known animals, on moving slides, passed upon the screen. But I trust also that the Bible scenes may have left more serious impressions. It was a great event, and for a long time to come it will be the talk of many a fireside. I wish some friend would send us second-hand slides to increase our little stock. It is a wonderful means of instructing the people.

"For a long time I have been requested to put up a building in the 'camp' for a day-school and occasional meetings. I shrank from this undertaking, principally for the want of means; but when I saw that mass of population, and the swarms of children, I could not hesitate any longer; I have determined to strain every nerve to have the school built before we leave. At a general meeting called for the purpose, the chief and his principal men spoke well; they thanked me, and promised to help a little.

"My young brother Jean Mairet and myself made a tour through Basutoland some time ago. The journey on horseback lasted six weeks. We have been able to visit all the churches, and to spend two or even three days with each missionary family. Our object was to rouse the interest of the Basuto Christians for the Zambezi Mission. Our experiences of Europe repeated themselves over again here, with all their alternations of encouragements and discouragements. Wars have quenched their enthusiasm, sucked out the spiritual life of the churches, and paralysed their action. Some meetings, however, comforted our hearts greatly. They showed that a spark could still be glimmering under the heaps of ruins and the cold ashes of political factions. A few Christians have offered themselves for the work, and out of them we shall choose one or two, according to the means we can dispose of. One of the evangelists at Lelika's is also ready to go with us; the two others, on account of ill-health and other reasons, will come back to Basutoland. We are getting the drivers for our wagons, and before long the personnel of the expedition will be completed.

"It will be a relief to many of our friends, I daresay, to know that my dear wife is, with my niece, to accompany us. This decision, which has been forced upon us by our delays and other circumstances, is no doubt an answer to many prayers. Our farewell-meeting with the delegates of the churches is fixed for the 25th November, and our final departure for the 5th December, if it pleases the Lord. Can we ask our friends in England and elsewhere to remember us very specially at that time before the Throne of Grace?

"Many have been our difficulties in connection with the Zambezi work. But the Lord has been our stay. No doubt sore trials are in store for us, and many think it is madness on our part to go to the Zambezi. The Committee of our Society seriously studied the question of the Zambezi Mission; they solemnly decided its foundation, and entrusted me this undertaking. But hitherto they have never been able to give us more than a financial-less patronage. Whether they will be able to do more remains yet to be seen. We have paused and prayed, but the road seems quite clear; our conviction as to the will of God has never faltered. We firmly believe that the King who sends us to war shall not let us go at our own charges."

The Bible Society of Scotland.

THE monthly meeting of the Western Directors of this Society was held in Glasgow on Monday, the 3rd inst. The Committee was largely occupied with applications from China and Japan, in both of which countries there appears to be a growing activity in connection with Bible Society work. Rev. J. Hudson Taylor expressed his acknowledgments for the benefits the China Inland Mission had received from the representatives of the Bible Society in China. It was agreed to place at Mr. Taylor's disposal supplies of Scriptures for sale.

The Committee agreed to encourage the Presbyterian Church in Canada in their efforts to circulate the Scriptures among the French Roman Catholics. They were gratified to learn that Her Majesty's Government have proposed to the Government of Corea such arrangements as will facilitate missionary work in that country. Four hundred volumes of Moon's Scriptures in raised type were voted at half cost, to enable one or two friends of the blind to present a copy to every poor blind reader in the West of Scotland.

224, West George-street, Glasgow.

THE BOSTON (U.S.) Y.M.C.A. has gone into new and spacious quarters. The building, which appears from the published accounts, to be a completely appointed one, was dedicated by a largely attended service on November 15.

Notices of Books, &c.

We are glad to know that Mr. R. Bilke's little monthly magazine, Words of Life and Love (½d.), enjoys an increasing circulation. The articles are pointed and practical, and the serial is well suited for general distribution.

The Baptist Almanack for 1884 (2d.) contains a mass of information on denominational matters, besides other notes for general use. We see our friend Mr. Archibald Brown's portrait is inserted this year.

Full Salvation. By Phœbe Palmer. 2s. 6d. F. E. Longley. A volume of illustrations of the economy of salvation, the doctrine and duties of full consecration being clearly set forth. Much that is helpful to earnest and devoted Christian life is found in its pages.

Dr. Adam Clarke's Commentary has now reached Part 32 (1s., Ward, Lock, & Co.), leaving seven more to complete the volume. This part treats on the first Epistle to the Corinthians, and is, like the rest, a useful help to the better understanding of the Divine Word.

Daisies from the Psalms. J. E. Hawkins. One of the very daintiest of dainty text-books. The passages chosen for a month's morning and evening meditation are indeed "words in season." The artistic border groupings of daisies, varied on every page, are done with the most exquisite taste and skill.

The December issue of The Quiver (6d. Cassell & Co.) has a varied store of good reading, with plenty of high-class pictures. A lifelike portrait of Lord Shaftesbury makes an excellent frontispiece; the short sketch, by Dr. Samuel Kinns, of the noble Earl at his country home, will be perused with pleasure by his lordship's many admirers.

Book-Keeping Simplified in accordance with the Bankruptcy Act of 1883. By Henry Feast. Feast & Hole. 6d. The new Act comes into full operation on January 1, 1884. Those who desire to comply with its requirements will find useful information and plain directions in this little manual.

The articles by Mr. G. Soltau, entitled "The Enquiry Room," which recently appeared in this paper, have just been reproduced in book form, the published price being 4d. The little manual will be found very useful by those who, in the Enquiry Room or elsewhere, have to deal with anxious souls.

Our Darlings. Edited by Dr. Barnardo. 3s. J. F. Shaw & Co. This a splendid volume profusely and beautifully illustrated. The stories and articles are short and cheerfully written, at once giving pleasure and imparting instruction. The whole get up is excellent, and we are sure it will give delight to all the "darlings" who may be fortunate enough to get a copy.

Christian Discipline of the Society of Friends. Harris & Co., Bishopsgate-street. This new edition of an old work is revised and completed up to the date of the last yearly meeting, and embodies the Christian doctrine, practice, and Church government of the Friends as a religious society. Others than members of that estimable branch of the Church of Christ may read its pages with advantage.

Light from an Old Lamp. By J. Jackson Wray. Nisbet. The author calls the discourses contained in this volume "Homespun Homilies," and their homeliness is their charm. They attract and instruct the reader without wearying or perplexing him. The Gospel light emitted from them is clear, strong, and full, sufficient to make the pathway of any inquiring mind bright and easy to trace. The old lamp flashes forth not a little new light, and the best of it is that the flame is fed by the genuine oil of the Divine Spirit.

How is the Divinity of Jesus Depicted? By the Rev. Thos. Whitelaw, D.D. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Dr. Liddon's well-known work on the Divinity of Christ has long held a position of unrivalled character among books on this vital question. Without in any way superseding that work, Dr. Whitelaw has produced another well worthy of standing beside it, and indeed it is in some points to be regarded as surpassing it. The thoroughness of its Biblical quotation and exegesis is a remarkable feature in its composition; rarely have we seen a book so saturated with proof texts and direct Scripture illustration. It is a most important contribution to the theological study of our age, and one that we hail with thankfulness.

Love Enthroned. By Daniel Steele, D.D. R. D. Dickinson. The doctrine of Christian perfection is treated in this book from the standpoint of the theory known as the Higher Christian Life. The author presents it with a praiseworthy degree of clearness and appeal to Scripture teaching, and we imagine no one can read his treatise without deriving spiritual profit. We say this without indorsing all his conclusions, either as to perfection or how it may be reached.

The Public Ministry, and Pastoral Methods of our Lord. By W. G. Blaikie, D.D. Nisbet & Co. We have read this volume with peculiar pleasure and profit. To ministers and students it must prove a rich blessing, communicating a tone and practical impulse of a most elevating and stimulating kind. It should be in the hands of all thoughtful students of the life of our Lord, whether ministerial or not. One of its chapters appeared in our columns a few weeks ago.

Wild Hyacinths. 5s. By Lady Hope. J. F. Shaw & Co. On the thread of a somewhat slight love story, Lady Hope has strung a very diversified series of thoughts, facts, and experiences, scenes of which are laid first in England, then on the shores of the Mediterranean, then again at home. The Christian family, the mothers' meeting, the gambling saloons of Monte Carlo, the haunts of fast and fashionable life, all contribute to the interest, pleasant or painful, of one of the most useful books of its kind.

Thoughts in the Valleys. By Captain Dawson. J. F. Shaw & Co. A volume of twenty chapters on the Valleys of the Bible. Beginning with "the God of the Valleys," the author draws practical and spiritual lessons from Achor, the Valley of Guilt and Grace, to the Valley of Vision, the Valley of Revelation and Responsibility. These brief papers, comforting, admonitory, encouraging to any reader, will afford suggestion for many a valuable address to those who are called to teach others the way of life.

Christmas and New Year Cards. We have just received a specimen parcel of Christmas and New Year cards, published by J. E. Hawkins, of Baker-street, W., and Paternoster-square, E.C. For beauty of design, and perfectness of execution, they cannot be surpassed. Those by Miss St. B. Holland, and A. S., of the Deaconess House, Mildmay-park, are specially noteworthy, as are larger ones, entitled "Still Waters." Our readers will find ample variety and certain satisfaction by reference to these choice productions. They are cheap and good.

The Gospel in Hosea. By J. Denham Smith. J. E. Hawkins. Mr. Smith's works are too well known for him to need commendation from us as an author of books on sacred themes. Right heartily do we welcome this latest production from his pen. The Minor Prophets are not studied as they ought to be, nor are works helpful to a right understanding of them by any means plentiful. The Gospel lessons drawn from Hosea in this volume are not forced or strained, but such as naturally suggest themselves to the spiritual mind. We commend the book to our readers as one of rich unction and real value as a help to profitable Bible study.

Life Echoes. By Frances Ridley Havergal. With twelve illustrations by the Baroness Helga Von Cramm. Nisbet & Co. There will be few, if any, more elegant or more welcome Christian Christmas gift books this season than the handsome volume before us. There are Birthday Echoes, Christmas Echoes, New Year Echoes, Easter Echoes, Children's Echoes, Miscellaneous Echoes, besides enigmas and charades, hymns, and In Memorian poems. Those who are familiar with the writings of Miss Havergal (and who is not?) will need very little recommendation of this beautiful book, in which, truly, she "being dead, yet speaketh." We purpose giving an extract in our Christmas number next week.

The Way to God. By D. L. Moody. Paper covers, 1s.; limp cloth, 1s. 6d.; Morgan & Scott. Mr. D. L. Moody has put together some of his addresses in a connected order, and has issued the volume under this title. The book is intended as a guide to those who desire to know "The Way"; it is less formal and precise than works of this class usually are, but the unstudied utterances of the honoured evangelist will probably exercise a greater influence than a more elaborate treatise on conversion. Commencing with the "Love of God," the succeeding chapters are "Christ All and in All," "The Gateway into the Kingdom," "The Two Classes," "Words of Counsel," "A Divine Saviour," "Repentance and Restitution," "Assurance of Salvation," concluding with an appeal to Backsliders.

Evolution Explained and Compared with the Bible. By W. Woods Smyth. Elliot Stock. The author believes that the weight of evidence is on the side of evolution, and ergo special creation is untenable. He has made the best use possible of a theory which, in spite of all he says to the contrary, remains at present hypothetical and, as far as we can see, contrary to the Word of God.

The Parables of Our Lord. By Marcus Dods, D.D. Macniven & Wallace. This most recent issue of the Household Library of Exposition is, from a literary standpoint, worthy of high praise. It contains many fresh and striking thoughts, but its principles of interpretation are not sound from a dispensational point of view. The leaven is represented as a symbol of truth and grace, and broader lines generally are laid down than we should adopt. Nevertheless, there is much to quicken and arouse the mind and heart to purer, nobler life. Read as a stimulus to thought, the book may be of good service.

The Atonement: A Clerical Symposium. Nisbet & Co. Reprinted from the Homiletic Magazine. Views of the subject as diverse as those of the Unitarian and the thoroughly evangelical believer are here discussed. The value of such a presentation of truth and error is very questionable; doubt and difficulty are more likely to be the result than faith and scriptural conviction. There are in all fourteen different discussions of the nature and extent of the atoning work of Christ; to each one the influence of a great name and great ability is lent. The cause of theological argument may be promoted, but not that of spiritual truth and life.

Miracles of Mercy. By Emily P. Leakey, Author of "Clear Shining Light." J. F. Shaw & Son. 3s. 6d. It is a capital idea to produce the report of a beneficent institution as a book for the drawing-room table. The true life stories of these "Miracles of Mercy" are far more touching than most of the fictions now streaming from the press. Between the lines we also read the life-story of the writer and her fellow-workers, and discern how sympathy, common sense, Christian sisterliness, and spiritual wisdom, are freely given to those by whom it is so much needed. This is an educational book of the highest type. It is the narrative of a Home at Exeter, the brief sketches of whose inmates—some of ungovernable temper, some of fierce and vicious disposition, some weak and unwary, some sinned against far more than sinning, all amenable to general rules, but each treated according to individual character—are a study which cannot fail to benefit all who read them. Those of our readers who remember the poems "By the Author of God's Tenth," will value this record from her sister's pen, and will appreciate the affectionate remembrance in which the departed one is held by her who survives and so devotedly carries on her work. "Sit Still," and a New Song (1d.), by the same author, is a word for all through the year.

KIRKBY STEPHEN.—A very encouraging and helpful ten days' Gospel Temperance Mission has just been closed here, Captain Gibson, Mr. H. Pemey, and others taking part at the Sunday services. On the closing night numbers of testimonials were given and pledges taken. The meetings have greatly strengthened Gospel Temperance principles and united Christians together.

HOME FOR NEGLECTED GIRLS, CHATHAM.—This Home is under the care of Mrs. H. W. Willis, who receives little girls to train as domestic servants. No voting is necessary for eligibility, and fourteen pounds will support one girl for one year. At a recent meeting Mr. F. R. Glover and Colonel Grove Price warmly commended the work of Mrs. Willis as worthy of support. Clothing, books, as well as funds, are much needed, and may be sent to the Home, Barnham-road, Chatham, Kent.

THE HIGHLAND ORPHANAGE.—This institution, one of the youngest but one of the best in the Highland capital, makes satisfactory progress. The third annual report informs us that ten fatherless and mitherless bairns are being housed, clad, fed, and trained within its walls. The first cottage was recently opened by Mrs. Mackintosh of Mackintosh, in the presence of a large company of interested friends from the town of Inverness and the neighbourhood. A good beginning has thus been made in a much-needed work; we trust that by the blessing of God and the hearty co-operation of Scottish men and women all the wide world over, it will grow and develop until the necessities of the case are fully met. We commend it to the generous sympathies of all lovers of the orphan children. Mr. George Walker, Ness Bank, Inverness, N.B., is the hon. sec.

"MIND YOU DON'T."

"WHY DON'T YOU?"

Dear Friends,—

Towards the end of this summer my health, which had been gradually failing for some time, suddenly broke down altogether, and I was ordered away for complete rest. After nearly two months' absence I prepared to return to my work. Kind, wise friends, from all parts sent me letters of counsel and caution. "Mind you don't attempt too much." "Mind you don't wear yourself out." "Mind you don't neglect your health." "Mind you don't go without your dinner." "Mind you don't increase your responsibilities," &c. &c. I felt the force of all this good advice, and firmly resolved to be more judicious, and to live more methodically in the future.

I got home on a Saturday, and was pleased to find how well things had gone in my absence. Everything seemed to augur well for my amended course of life, although now and then the first night I was back it cost me a struggle to repress my rising enthusiasm.

The next morning (Sunday) I was walking with my friend who had kindly been locum tenens while I was away and three or four of our elder Christian lads along the Thames Embankment. Leaning over the stone parapet, we had been watching the dull, muddy river ebbing out, and I had been contrasting it with some of the clear mountain streams I had lately seen away in Wales. Presently we noticed a group of four or five gutter-boys who had gone down some slimy landing stairs and were scooping up the filthy water in their hands, trying to wash their faces with it and to wipe them dry with their ragged, greasy caps, and using the fingers combwise to tidy their wild, matted hair.

I stopped to speak a few kind words to them. They were having a "sluice to revive us up a bit," one told me. Their general appearance betokened they had been sleeping out all night, and we soon learnt they had not had any breakfast. I tried to cheer them up with a little praise for their attempts to be clean and tidy under great difficulties; and, mindful of my wise resolves, prudently walked on. We had only gone a few yards when I heard a shrill voice calling after us—"Look here, guvnor, stop a bit." Turning round I saw the eldest of these street-waifs (about ten years old he seemed) pointing to our lads, in their neat Sunday uniform. "I say, guvnor!" he cried, "why don't you make some more of us like them chaps along with you?"

Let me confess, the street mannikin's shrewd challenge has been ringing in my ears ever since. That reproachful, indignant, despairing inquiry haunts me now. That weird voice crying out of the slough of despond for a helping hand in life, I shall never forget. The "Mind you don'ts" of my counselling friends convinced my head, but the "Why don't you?" of the gutter-boy reached my heart.

Again winter, with all its attendant miseries for our friendless and shelterless, ragged and ill-fed street-wanderers, is upon us.

For my part, dear friends, I am more determined than ever, while life and strength last, to do all that in me lies to "make some more of us like them chaps along with you." Will you not help me?

For some months we have been living from hand to mouth. Our Southwark boys (140) need new, warm clothes for the winter. Our little boys at Greenwich (80) are in sore want of a fresh supply of bedding, blankets, &c. In our Ramsgate branch (10) we have room for 50 more orphan boys if we only had the means to increase our family there. We require about £600 to settle up our quarterly accounts falling due, and close this year free of debt.

Will you give my three families of "Nobody's Boys" a warm place in your hearts this Christmastide? Would not an "In Memoriam" donation fitly honour the memory of some dear one who is sadly missed from your circle? Would not a "Thank-offering" collection well express gratitude for preserving mercies through another year?

With sincere thanks for all your kind sympathy and help in the past ten years,

I remain, dear Friends,

Yours faithfully,

J. W. O'Regan

POOR OF STRATFORD.—Mr. JOHN STABB, 29, Darville-road, Stoke Newington, N., appeals for help to give coals, bread, and dinners to the aged poor and infirm of Stratford, a work he has carried on for some years.

BARTON HILL, BRISTOL.—About £200 is still required for the purchase of the Mission houses, and for the additions and alterations which were necessary. Contributions will be thankfully received by A. W., Cruikshank, Grange, Stoke Bishop, Bristol.

BRITTANY.—Pastor G. LECOAT, Crémel par Plestin, Cotes-du-Nord, France, writes: "We have, with the help of Christian friends, built a small Bethesda. The building is finished, but we want now the furniture. We have three people in our house, waiting for it to be ready."

HOME FOR WORN-OUT, AGED, AND DESTITUTE GOVERNESSES, NEEDLEWOMEN, AND SERVANTS, 25, Chatham-place, Paragon-road, Hackney, E.—Miss COALES would be glad of help for her aged family at this season. She has herself been laid aside by illness for several weeks, and it will greatly relieve her anxiety to know that all the claims up to the close of the year can be met.

SOCIETY FOR THE RELIEF OF DISTRESSED WIDOWS (32, Sackville-street, W).—This Society has now been in existence sixty years, and it would be scarcely possible to estimate the benefits it has conferred in granting relief to some thousands of poor destitute widows. Funds are much needed, and earnestly requested, to enable the Committee to sustain the important work entrusted to their supervision. Reports, &c., will be gladly sent by Mr. SAMUEL RAYSON, Secretary.

STRANGERS' REST, ROUEN.—Mr. W. GILCHRIST, who is labouring among the seamen in this French port, has been presented by a friend with a lantern and some slides for use at his meetings. He greatly desires to have some additional slides on Bible subjects; perhaps some of our readers may be able to supply this need. He would also be glad of Christmas letters, books, and means for a New Year's free tea. Mr. Gilchrist's address is 8, rue Grand Pont, Rouen, France. Parcels for him, if sent to the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff-highway, E., will be forwarded.

PROTESTANT UNION IN ITALY.—SIR,—At a meeting recently held in Rome on this subject, and after the fullest consideration, the brethren did not feel that they had authority to call the Congress suggested for that purpose. They decided, however, in the meantime to begin united efforts in regard to colleges and schools on the basis of confederation.

PERISHING LONDON.

THE LONDON SAMARITAN SOCIETY

AND

HOMERTON MISSION.

Appeal to all who love the Lord Jesus Christ for means to continue the daily Free Dinners to Destitute Children, and Boots and Clothing and Free Breakfasts for the Outcast and Starving on the Lord's Day mornings.

The following extracts, taken from the many letters we receive almost daily this time of the year, will describe this section of our work, and the widespread necessity for it, better than any general statement we can make:—

One says—"We know that many frequently come to school without breakfast, and remain the whole day without food, except that which is given them by the teachers."

Another writes—"Our children come from the poorest homes, and the tales I sometimes hear make my heart ache."

A third writes—"During the cold weather boys and girls have asked me to allow them to remain in school during the dinner-hour by the fire. They would get no dinner if they went home, and preferred to stay in the warm."

Our loving Master said, "Give ye them to eat;" and I earnestly ask his people to enable us to do so. Donations will be thankfully received by Mr. HENRY HICKS BOARD, Secretary; or the Director,

JOHN JAMES JONES,

57 & 59, Ludgate Hill, LONDON, E.C.

Donations for the LONDON SAMARITAN SOCIETY are also received by the Bankers, Messrs. Fuller, Banbury, Nix & Mathieson, 77, Lombard Street, E.C.; and by the Auditors, Messrs. Josiah Beddow & Son, Chartered Accountants, 2, Gresham Buildings, Basinghall Street, London, E.C.

THE HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS,

FARNINGHAM AND SWANLEY.

20 YEARS AGO — CHRISTMAS, 1883.

The first Meeting of the Committee was held, to establish the Home for Little Boys. Since that time more than 1,000 Homeless Little Ones have been sheltered within the Cottage Homes at Farningham, many of them all through their infancy and early childhood, till they were old enough to go out into the world to work for their own livelihood.

To-day, more than 300 Homeless Little Ones are in the Cottage Homes at Farningham, and nearly 100 Orphans in the new Orphan Homes at Swanley.

But, the Committee are without Funds to maintain them! Worse than that, they are in debt to the extent of £3,500.

Unless this debt can be removed at once, the Committee fear they must close some of their Homes.

Will the Readers of "The Christian" prevent this?

By an easy and united effort this can be done, and before Christmas.

A Gift of £1 from each would do it. But many could afford more, and by so doing would send us on our way rejoicing.

So we ask in faith for a Christmas Gift, in the name of our Homeless and Orphan Little Ones.

NO RESPONSE having been made to the advertisements in THE CHRISTIAN of Nov. 1 and 8, Mr. W. J. ORSMAN begs to inform the Lord's Stewards that he now makes to enable him to carry on the Old-established COSTERMONGERS' GOLDEN LANE and HOXTON MISSION in the new Costers' Hall, 234—242, Hoxton-street, N., FREE of DEBT.

Contributions will be thankfully received at the office of this paper, and by Mr. W. J. ORSMAN, Hon. Superintendent and Evangelist, Milton House, Shacklewell-green, Hackney, E.

A CRY FOR HELP FROM THE WEST.

Most earnestly do I appeal for further help for the LATYMER ROAD MISSION.

I acknowledge with grateful thanks the following sums in reply to my appeal for £1400:—J. W. A., £4; G. M. C., £1; Miss H., £5; J. C. W., £2 2s.; per J. C. W., £1; A. P., £5 5s.; also parcel from W. E. S.

The New Hall and Class Rooms will be ready by the New Year. Will some friend undertake to furnish these rooms?

The Latymer Road Mission is situated in one of the most wretched parts of London, although in the parish of Kensington. In many cases families are housed like cattle, and conditions exist which are utterly opposed to Religion and Morality.

Our funds during the past five months have been so low that we have been unable by means of advertisement to make our wants known. PRAY HELP THE COMMITTEE.

Cheques and Post Office Orders may be sent to MORGAN & SCOTT, Office of The Christian; to Dr. J. H. GLADSTONE, F.R.S., 17, Pembridge-square, W.; EDWARD BLAIR, Esq., Fretherne House, 29, York-place, Portman-square; or to Your obedient servant,

Visitors always welcome. AULAY MACAULAY, Hon. Sec., Latymer Road Mission, Blechynden-st., Notting-hill.

General Superintendent—Rev. W. HAY AITKEN.

OBJECT—Providing Experienced Mission Preachers. Upwards of 700 Missions have been conducted by the Agents of this Society since its formation, 198 of which were held last year.

Owing to increased expenditure, funds are urgently needed to meet the Christmas payments; and it is hoped that, amongst the deserving objects which appeal to the benevolent at this season of the year, the claims of this Society will not be forgotten.

Remittances will be thankfully acknowledged by the Rev. S. W. DARWIN FOX, Secretary, 21, John Street, Adelphi, W.C.

Dr. Baxter, in writing of this treatment, states: "Cases have come under my immediate notice which have been given up as incurable by eminent medical authorities, and which were cured by adopting Dr. Alabone's treatment."

Dr. Parker writes: "The fact is open to the observation of the world that a patient given up as incurable is now well, and the wonder of all who knew her in her abandoned condition."

THE AGENCY OF THE SOCIETY FOR

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS

To the Roman Catholics comprises—

27 Ordained Clergymen; 167 Trained Teachers and Scripture Readers: 50 Irish Text Teachers.

READER, WHAT HAVE YOU DONE TO SEND THE WORD OF GOD TO IRELAND?

There are greater openings, greater access, but less Funds than for several years. The position of affairs is most serious. Interesting and successful work must be abandoned unless more liberal Contributions are received before the close of this year.

Contributions should be forwarded to WILLIAM PASLEY, Esq., Lay Secretary, 11, Buckingham-st., Strand, London, W.C.

HORACE W. TOWNSEND, Clerical Secretary.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.

Patron—THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.

This Society is employing a large number of godly and earnest men as Scripture Readers, who labour among the poor, under the superintendence of the parochial Clergy, and carry from house to house the Word of God.

The Committee earnestly appeal for £1500 in Donations and New Annual Subscriptions before March 31, to reinstate the small Reserve Fund without which this most necessary, religious, and social work among the masses must be seriously curtailed.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"Treats some of the more striking episodes in Bunyan's Allegory in good and scholarly Spenserian metre," &c.—Graphic.

"The volume merits attentive perusal, and that and careful comparison will show that in pouring from an older to a modern vessel the essence is retained. The work is a fine specimen of typography by Mr. Bellows, of Gloucester, and is most handsomely got up in antique print and style," &c.

Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Chronicle.

"Even those who are most familiar with the Pilgrim's Progress, and who are most critical in their examination of such a work as that before us, will give Mr. Rutter's volume a warm welcome.

"Its pages have a sustained elevation throughout, and the various scenes have a distinct literary merit apart from the interest of the subject," &c.—Western Daily Press.

"'The Land of Beulah,' and 'The Description of the Celestial City,' are both very grand, and worthy of special notice," &c.—British Friend.

THE EMPIRE LAMP

(RIPPINGILLE'S PATENT)
IS THE
MOST BRILLIANT AND ECONOMICAL DOMESTIC LIGHT EXTANT.

It equals Gas for simplicity, but surpasses it for illuminating power.

It burns without a chimney, a pine-shaped globe only being required, which has never been known to break from the heat of the flame. It will give more light than any other lamp with a wick of equal size. The combustion is so perfect that it deodorises the oil and burns absolutely without smell, giving an intense pure white and beautiful light. It is unrivalled for simplicity in lighting, cleaning, and trimming, and is, in fact, the perfection of artificial light.

Suitable for Cottage or Mansion, Churches, Chapels, &c.

Illustrated Catalogue, with full particulars, and giving valuable hints on domestic lighting and the management of lamps, free on application.

NOTICE.—THE ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children"

(Now Sheltering, Educating, and Training over 1,300 Poor Boys and Girls),

WILL THIS YEAR BE ALTERED IN CHARACTER;

Instead of a Sale at the West End in the Second Week in December, as before, all the Goods received will be made up into

£5 and £10 Boxes. These Boxes will each contain a very excellent selection of at least the value of £6 and £12 respectively, and will be sent on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque to any part of the country.

Ladies willing to order these Boxes will confer a great benefit on the "Homes"; for by this method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West End.

Many kind-hearted sympathizers have already expressed warm approval of this plan, and promised to purchase Boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold in their own houses, to which their personal friends can be invited during the present season.

If there be many articles left over unsold, they can be disposed of in the last week of January (D.V.), in the New Hall of the Edinboro' Castle, which is expected to be opened by that time.

Dr. Barnardo earnestly invites all readers of "THE CHRISTIAN" who love poor children to co-operate with him in this new plan to benefit the funds of the "Homes," by which too all the wearying, disappointing, and expensive drawbacks of a public Bazaar may be avoided.

The Boxes, carefully lined and packed, will be ready for transmission on the 10th Dec., and can be despatched to any railway station in the Kingdom. Applications (PREPAID) with full instructions as to conveyance, &c., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

The TRADE MANAGER,
18, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

To all who have already in any degree helped by contributions of Useful or Fancy Articles, Dr. Barnardo desires to offer the expression of his very grateful acknowledgments.

18 & 20, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY, LONDON, E.

"The Christian" will be sent by the Publishers post-free to any address in the United Kingdom, for 12 months, for 6s. 10d., including Double Numbers.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

Contributions solicited in view of the close of the year.

I am profoundly grateful for the Contributions recently sent in to defray the remaining expenses arising out of this year's work of the Homes of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution.

The usual course has been adopted this year of admitting all suitable cases to the Homes and Open-All-Night Refuge, notwithstanding the fluctuations of income!

A large amount in donations is still required before the 31st instant.

No less than 5,000 meals have to be provided every week during the year!

Since January, there have been more than One Thousand Three Hundred Applications for admission to the Homes.

The Reader is asked to contribute to the Christmas Collection.

Contributions may be sent to MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.; or to 200, Euston Road, London, N.W. EDWARD THOMAS, Secretary.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT. LAST NIGHTS OF THE YEAR.

The Committee have completed their arrangements for Mission Work in the Metropolis during the last days and nights of the present year. Meetings will be held in all the chief districts of London. The fac-similed letters written to immoral men and outcast women will be distributed in every locality where such are to be found.

895 MEETINGS have been held in London, garrison towns, seaports, and large manufacturing districts, with an aggregate attendance of 55,000 outcast women, many of whom have not only been rescued from open sin, but led to true repentance.

Readers of THE CHRISTIAN are asked to CONTRIBUTE special donations for the Mission for the last LAST NIGHTS OF THE YEAR, also for the general work of the Society in London and the Provinces during 1884.

Christian Friends desirous of co-operating by contributing towards the expenses of a Meeting (or helping by prayer), are invited to communicate with Mr. J. H. L. CHRISTIEN, Organising Secretary, at the Office. Donations may be sent to MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., or to

AN EXAMPLE, AND AN INVITATION.

Our Lord was engaged in the glorious work of preaching and teaching, and there came unto Him a large com pany of "Outcasts," having with them those that were "lame, blind, dumb, maimed, and many others." Our Lord received them, and healed them, and blessed them, and the multitude "glorified the God of Israel."

Jesus said to his disciples, "I have compassion on the multitude .....I will not send them away fasting, lest they faint by the way" (Matt. xv. 32).

"Then Jesus took the seven loaves and the fishes, and gave thanks, and brake them, and gave to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude."

The sympathy and compassion of our Lord, and his care for the bodies of the poor, are worthy our imitation.

Every Sunday morning at the Seamen's Bethel, Old Gravel-lane, London Docks, a company of poor creatures, selected by the Missionaries of the Mariners' Friend Society, the Police, and Dock Officials, among the outcasts of our dense river-side population, are provided with a FREE BREAKFAST, after which the Gospel is spoken to them.

Like those of our disciples, our provisions are limited. They were privileged to give the Master, for the hungry people, "seven loaves." Will not some readers of THE CHRISTIAN help us to imitate our Lord in not sending them away fasting?

Donations may be sent to FRANCIS J. SHELTON, Hon. Sec., 19, Old Gravel-lane, E.; or JOSEPH MOORE, Treasurer, 9, Morgan-street, Bow, E.

LONDON ASSOCIATION IN AID OF THE MORAVIAN MISSIONS.

Patron—The Right Hon. THE EARL CAIRNS.

For 66 years this Association has been the instrument of making known some of the wants of the Moravian Missionaries, and soliciting the sympathy and support of Christians on behalf of the great work which God has entrusted to them.

We have now to present a very urgent appeal for two new and commodious churches in Paramaribo, South America.

The need of such is seen from the fact that out of a population of 33,000 in Paramaribo, 9647 are members of the Meravian Church.

There are no less than 6297 persons without a place in which to worship God.

The natives themselves are doing what they can, but it is very little, compared with what requires to be done.

Who will kindly help in this matter?

"The love of Christ constraineth us."

Contributions will be thankfully received for "Paramaribo Church Fund" by Messrs. HERRIES, FARQUHAR & Co., St. James'-street; the Secretary, Mr. G. E. ROBERTS, at the Office, 29, Ely-place, Holborn, E.C.; Messrs. SMITHS & Co., Lombard-street; Messrs. WILLIAMS, DEACON & Co., Birchin-lane; or THE CITY BANK, Holborn Branch.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"Treats some of the more striking episodes in Bunyan's Allegory in good and scholarly Spenserian metre," &c.—Graphic.

"The volume merits attentive perusal, and that and careful comparison will show that in pouring from an older to a modern vessel the essence is retained. The work is a fine specimen of typography by Mr. Bellows, of Gloucester, and is most handsomely got up in antique print and style," &c.

Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Chronicle.

"Even those who are most familiar with the Pilgrim's Progress, and who are most critical in their examination of such a work as that before us, will give Mr. Rutter's volume a warm welcome.

"Its pages have a sustained elevation throughout, and the various scenes have a distinct literary merit apart from the interest of the subject," &c.—Western Daily Press.

"'The Land of Beulah,' and 'The Description of the Celestial City,' are both very grand, and worthy of special notice," &c.—British Friend.

The Christian.

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP.

"I BELIEVE in the Communion of Saints," is part of a creed which is repeated by hundreds of thousands in the Christian Church every Lord's Day. There are many more who though they do not formulate it as part of a creed, nevertheless endorse the principle and value it highly. Yet the duty and privilege of Christian fellowship seems to be but slightly regarded, if practical development of its idea is to be the test. In many churches no opportunity is afforded for the members meeting together for spiritual intercourse, brotherly interchange of thought and feeling, or mutual exhortation and encouragement. A business meeting once a month, and a formal observance of the Lord's Supper, in which no voice is heard but that of the minister, comprise all the opportunities provided for meeting as believers separated from the outer world; anything like fellowship leading to personal acquaintance, heart to heart influence, and practical communion is therefore unknown. To a great extent this accounts for the coldness and lethargy which are prevailing features of the Church life of to-day.

The ministry, the ordinances of the sanctuary, the various organisations of the Church have their place, and serve highly important ends; not one word would we say depreciatory of either of them, but they cannot supply the lack of Christian brotherhood, or do the work which the free communion of saints one with another is intended to effect. In every Christian community there should be provision made for the regular and frequent assembly of believers as such, for mutual spiritual edification, the gifts of each one being recognised, and the grace bestowed on all freely testified of. It certainly was so in the days of the Apostles, and nothing but the unscriptural notion that the clergy alone are competent to minister in sacred things, mingled with a decline in true spirituality, has prevented the continuance in all branches of the Church of a practice which is a valuable and essential adjunct to other means of grace appointed for the building up of saints. The true reading of Eph. iv. 12, as given in the Revised Version, throws much light on this point. The gifts bestowed by our Lord upon the Church are said to continue to the end of the age, "for the perfecting of the saints unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ."

But there is a narrower, though not less important, aspect of the subject. Apart from church corporate action in this direction, much may be done by social effort on the part of disciples of Christ. We hear much of musical parties, card parties, and other similar assemblies convened by the children of this world at their homes. Why should not Christians open their houses oftener for prayer and praise parties, Bible study circles, and other friendly gatherings for the definite object of promoting spiritual life? Let earnest believers invite to social entertainments those of their acquaintance who may be less earnest than themselves, and devote the evening to cheerful and devout exercises calculated to draw out the heart toward Christ and things Divine. Let the poor of the flock be sometimes gathered thus for the Master's sake, and in His name, by their richer neighbours and friends, that the true brotherhood of all who are the Lord's may be recognised and sanctified to mutual blessing. Let Christians of various sections of the Church thus socially meet in their own districts to talk and pray together over the truths of God's Word, so that the points of unity may be strengthened, and those of diversity seen, it may be, in clearer light. By such means much might be done to bring the people of God closer together, and to develop latent resources of spiritual power, now hidden under the gloom of reserve, or frozen up by the coldness of heart which results from isolation.

It is written of the saints in an ancient and degenerate age: "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard, and a book of remembrance was written before Him for them that feared the Lord, and thought upon his name." Those who lay themselves out for real definite practical work in the direction of bringing into nearer fellowship and closer communion, scattered and dissevered members of the body of Christ, will find rich reward, not only in the boon it will prove to those thus drawn together, but in the blessing brought to their own souls.

We shall be glad if these words should induce more thought upon the subject in the minds of our readers, and lead to the more frequent meeting of "friends in Christ" for Christian counsel and prayerful union during the long winter evenings we are entered on. Many of the Lord's loved ones walk alone; they long for association with others who share their faith, and cherish kindred aspirations. To such, a friendly hand, a kindly invitation from some warm-hearted servant of the Lord, would be as an angel from heaven, cheering the heart and stimulating the whole being. The benign and blessed influence of Christian fellowship upon the soul cannot well be overstated; the Psalmist truly says, "It is like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard, that went down to the skirts of his garments; as the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion."

LEARNING-BY-HEART UNION.—The members are requested to notify any change of address to Mrs. May, care of E. Benthall, Esq., 30, Tregunter-road, South Kensington, S.W.

LEBANON SCHOOLS.—The work carried on in Lebanon by the Lebanon Schools Committee consists of two training schools at Shweir, one for boys and the other for girls. There are also fourteen boys' schools and four girls' schools in various villages in the district of Lebanon, containing in all about 800 scholars. In October last there were 48 applications for admission, which had to be refused, from want of room. Mr. Robert Young, 15, North Bank-street, Edinburgh, will be glad to give information.

SCIENCE AND SCRIPTURE.

DURING the past few weeks some important meetings, presided over by Bishop Claughton, the Chaplain-General of the Forces, have been held, at which a Mission in Defence of the Scientific and Historic Accuracy of the Bible, was organised, having for its object the adoption of some efficient means to cope with the scepticism of the day.

The patrons are the Bishops of London, Winchester, Bath and Wells, Lichfield, and Worcester, and the committee is composed of a number of noblemen and gentlemen, amongst whom are the Earls of Shaftesbury and Chichester, Mr. R. N. Fowler, M.P., Lord Mayor of London, the Deans of Canterbury, Norwich, Ripon, and Lichfield, and other eminent divines. The House of Commons is represented by Sir Arthur Otway, Bart., Sir Thomas Chambers, Sir Hardinge Giffard, Sir Wm. McArthur, and Mr. Torrens; the scientific world by Mr. H. W. Bristow, F.R.S., Senior Director of Geological Survey, and Mr. Edwin Dunkin, F.R.S., Chief Assistant of the Royal Observatory.

This committee has appointed Dr. Samuel Kinns, F.R.A.S., Author of "Moses and ecology," whose earnestness and scientific attainments are so well known, to conduct the Mission by visiting the chief towns of England, Wales, and Scotland, delivering in each place drawing-room and public lectures upon the Scientific and Historical Accuracy of the Bible, illustrated with models, diagrams, and geological specimens.

The opening lecture of the Mission will be given by Dr. Kinns in the Library of Canterbury Cathedral, on Jan. 3rd, when the Dean will preside; his second lecture will be at Exeter Hall, on Jan. 8, at 8 o'clock, at which Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., will take the chair; the third and fourth at Wells, on the 30th and 31st Jan., the Bishop of Bath and Wells presiding. Other lectures have been arranged to take place at Ripon, Lichfield, and Norwich, under the auspices of the Deans of the Cathedrals of those cities.

If the secretaries of provincial institutions will place themselves in communication with Dr. Jabez Hogg, 1, Bedford-square, W.C., he will endeavour to arrange the dates with Dr. Kinn for visiting them. The treasurer, Sir Thos. Chambers, M.P., 63, Gloucester-place, Portman-square, W., will be pleased to receive contributions to the fund for the support of the Mission.

We understand that, in consequence of the earnest request of his friends throughout the country, Dr. Kinns will not retire from his school, as he had intended to do, which will be conducted by Mr. Christopher W. Shepherd, B.A., and by the same staff of masters as hitherto.

GOVERNESSES AND THEIR HOLIDAYS.—Mrs. E. Waters, Roseland Villa, Box, Wiltshire, has a home for governesses who are obliged to take holidays, and have no homes to go to. The entrance-fee is 10s., and 2s. per week subscription. One pound per week is given them for nine weeks every year, divided into terms.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.—A meeting of the friends of this society was held in Belfast last week. Among the speakers was Rev. J. Ormiston, of Bristol, who said: "The more he saw of the work of the society, and the longer he lived, he became more convinced that it was one of the most useful and most valuable agencies of the kind that were in existence." Many local friends took part, and expressed a deep interest in the work over which Captain Kearney White so worthily presides.

Notes and Comments.

WE have received several communications respecting our note on the action of the Bishop of Lichfield, and the Vicar of Christchurch, Burton-on-Trent, in dismissing the curate on account of his Temperance principles and testimony. One writer explains that "The title of Vicar of Burton is claimed and publicly accorded to the vicar of St. Modwen's, whereas the deplorable incidents you comment upon have occurred amongst the officials and in the parish of Christ Church. As the request of the Bishop was followed by a memorial signed by four-fifths of the pewholders, it is only just that the memorialists should come in for their share of the sweeping invective you have so lavishly bestowed upon their respected and esteemed pastor, and I, with others who signed the petition, shall be glad to receive our respective portions."

We are very glad to make the correction referred to as to the Vicar, and regret the mistake. With regard to the rest, we must refer to the pamphlets which have been published on the subject, and which may be obtained of Mr. Nixon, 52, High-street, Burton-on-Trent.

Mme. Marzials, writing to us from Barnave, par Luc-en-Diois, Drome, France, says that the extreme age and feeble health of her husband make her feel the need of a practical helper in the work of the Mission. She will gladly furnish particulars to any lady disposed to make her residence there. One with children, who are learning French, would find many advantages.

The Herald of Peace says:—

"In England and Wales 4500 people own 17,500,000 acres of land; in Scotland, 1700 own 17,000,000; in Ireland, 1942 own 12,000,000—that is, 8142 individuals hold as theirs, within these three countries, 46,500,000 acres of land. To give a clearer idea of this stupendous monopoly of the earth's surface, the estates of these 8142 landlords amount to over 9,000,000 more acres than the entire area or extent of England and Wales put together, or to 6,000,000 over double the size of Ireland, or 8,000,000 over twice the extent of Scotland. Assuming that this land brings in 15s. an acre per annum, which is an under estimate, this small group of persons receives in round figures an income of £35,000,000 a year."

While this state of things continues, there can but be discontent and destitution among large numbers of the community. Between this frightful monopoly and communism there is ample room for improvement, without at all treading on the ground of the latter. The law of entail has much to do with it. The land question is one of the practical points which are forcing themselves to the front, and which will have to be dealt with in some form ere long.

Bishop Ryle's address to the Diocesan Conference, at Liverpool, last month, very gravely depicts the perils to be dreaded from the disunion which prevails in the English Church through Ritualism. He said: "It is my firm conviction that we are in great danger, and that unless a God of mercy interposes in some marvellous way, our dear old Church cannot live much longer, and must go to pieces and perish." If it is any comfort to the Bishop, he may be reminded that his own is not the only church that is suffering from internal divisions and erroneous teaching. The greatest comfort of all is, however, that whatever becomes of Church forms and parties, the true Church and the truth of God will still abide immovable and secure.

The reports received during the year concerning the observance of the Week of Prayer in foreign lands, are well adapted to induce ready compliance with the renewed invitation of the Evangelical Alliance. At the commencement of the present year daily meetings were held in Jerusalem and various parts of Turkey; in Persia among more than forty congregations of the Nestorians; in Japan the meetings were specially successful, leading to a remarkable revival of religion which affected many districts; so also throughout the islands of the South Pacific—even in the coral islets lying 700 or 800 miles north-west of Raratonga, the programme issued by the Council was translated into the native tongue, and widely observed. There is far more than sentiment in the idea of power and blessedness as inseparable from such a world-wide unity of spirit and purpose in prayer.

If the masses of our poor and needy fellow-countrymen could only be brought to see the folly and extravagance of our national drink bill, and of their share in its enormity, we should have hope of soon beholding great changes in their social condition. That bill amounts annually to £126,000,000, or more than £3 per head for every man, woman, and child, in the three kingdoms. Were the portion of this immense sum which passes from the hands of the poor into those of the traffickers in strong drink to be spent in clothes, food, and home comforts, instead of the cry of distress which now fills the air, we should see signs on every hand of prosperity and contentment. Gin-palaces flourish, and distillers, brewers, and publicans thrive at the expense and to the ruin of hundreds of thousands of the cottage homes of England. It must not be forgotten, however, that they are driven or tempted to drink by the action in various ways of those above them.

A third general Missionary Conference has been held in Philadelphia, for the purpose of receiving and diffusing information upon the work of Christ in heathen lands, and of awakening deeper interest and zeal in its prosecution. The meetings were convened by the General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, and appear to have been of a very successful character. The plans and operations of the Mission Board were freely discussed, and valuable suggestions made for extending and consolidating the work done. It is both cheering and stimulating to learn with what vigour the Churches on the other side the Atlantic appear to desire and labour for the evangelisation of the world. The great want there as here, as was said at the Conference, is the interest of the heart of all believers in the work of saving souls.

Among the facts brought forward at the Conference were these:—In 1833, just fifty years ago, there were only nineteen organisations at work in the heathen world from all Protestant churches, now there are one hundred, while the Bible in portions, or as a whole, has been translated into 122 languages outside Christendom, and is being distributed every year by millions in all parts of the heathen world. On the other side it was shown that the population of the globe is now estimated at 1,400,000,000, of whom 850 millions must be classed as idolaters, and 170 millions as Mahometans and Jews. Thus there still remains, spite of all the progress made, an enormous mass of ignorance and degradation, in the midst of which those serving the Master are indeed but few. The call to ourselves is all the more imperative and urgent.

At the noon prayer meeting, Aldersgate-street, on Monday and Tuesday last, Dr. Baedeker gave interesting details of his evangelistic work in the South of Russia; Mr. Reginald Radcliffe was also present on Tuesday. We hope to give in our next issue some report of the addresses of these brethren.

Mr. N. R. Hughman, of Exeter Hall, is now actively engaged as Secretary of the East Central Branch of the Y.M.C.A., which under his care is already showing signs of development. Several additional meetings have been inaugurated, and there is every prospect of this branch becoming an important centre of Christian influence, situated as it is in the very heart of the City. Unlike other Associations, its work is chiefly carried on during the day and between the hours of twelve and seven, after which but few young men remain in the City.

In addition to his secretarial duties, Mr. Hughman is endeavouring to enlist the sympathy of new friends on behalf of the general work of the Y.M.C.A. in Central London, inviting them to become annual subscribers. When we consider the good work that is being carried on by the Y.M.C.A.'s in our midst, we feel that it should be liberally sustained. We trust there will be a hearty response from friends in town and country, so that the sum needed (£3000) may be speedily contributed, and that the Association may close its financial year free of debt. Mr. Hughman's City address is 61, Gracechurch-street, E.C.; he will send particulars on application, and will call on friends in town desiring personal interviews. The Treasurer is Mr. George Williams, St. Paul's Churchyard, E.C.

When this number enters the homes of our readers, Christmas will be shedding its brightness over many happy families once more gathered together. The boys and girls will be rejoicing in holiday freedom, and re-unions, long looked forward to, will have begun to gladden many hearts. That true joy and Divine blessing may crown and sanctify all such gatherings is our ardent desire and sincere prayer. Not a few will have their joy sobered and checked by the presence of trouble; some, maybe, will have a season of gloom and sorrow; others will be solitary, and muse on days and scenes far different, but now passed by. We would remind all such that there is One who can compensate for every loss, and cheer in every time of sadness. May He who came of old in the flesh, come to them in the spirit, and cause their hearts to sing for joy!

"Only they would that we should remember the poor." The present season calls upon all to whom ability is given to bear in mind this Apostolic injunction, and to be prepared to say with Paul, "the same which I also was forward to do." First should we think of those who are of the household of faith, remembering that the Master may be served and visited in the persons of his people; for does He not teach us to see Himself in them? "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me." And beyond them, "as we have opportunity let us do good unto all men." We shall thus prove ourselves true representatives of Him "who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." We shall find it true that—

"The quality of mercy is not strained—
. . . . It is twice blessed—
It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes."

A correspondent writes us in reference to the need for care and discrimination in giving Christmas-boxes to boys and others, who during Christmas week are, by the tyranny of custom, almost compelled to spend them in drink. He suggests that if such douceurs were given after Christmas is over, they would be more likely to be stored in the Savings Bank or applied to useful purposes. A little foresight and prudent planning in such matters on the part of employers, and all who are called on to give these gratuities, would frequently save the recipients from evils and temptations to which they are exposed. True charity and real benevolence will concern itself with more than mere money considerations.

Another correspondent sends us the following practical suggestions as to ways of helping the poor and needy, whose cry comes into our ears. They are worthy of special note:—

1. Increasing donations or subscriptions to well-known Christian works of aid pleading for support.

2. By personal example, stirring up others to supply cast-off clothing, &c., for the shivering and the naked.

3. Reasoning on righteousness and justice with those in responsible positions, who are often hard because ignorant of facts.

4. Being willing to give a helping hand to every wise way of doing good, instead of decrying all but pet plans with party spirit.

The first part of the Biblical Thesaurus, to which we referred some months ago as about to be published by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton, is to be issued early in January. The value of this work to Bible students will be incalculable; a literal translation of every word in the original text of the Old Testament will be given, together with explanatory notes by the Rev. Dr. Hellmuth, whose general learning and life-long acquaintance with Hebrew literature makes him competent in an unrivalled degree for the task he has undertaken. The study of Hebrew is by no means general even among ministers, but with such a book in their hands as that to which we call attention, no one will need to remain in ignorance of the language, idioms, and phraseology of the Book which comes to us as the veritable voice of God.

Dr. Hellmuth was until recently Bishop of Huron. Dean Baldwin has just been appointed as his successor, and we have read with much interest an account sent us by a correspondent from Montreal of a meeting held there in his honour. All sections of the Protestant Church seem to have been represented, and a remarkable spirit of unity and true Christian brotherhood displayed. The testimonies borne to the new Bishop's long-tried devotion to the cause of Christ, and hearty co-operation with all evangelical workers in every section of the Church, were numerous and fervent. We cull from his own address on the occasion the following characteristic extract:—

"Christian unity had really existed since the life of Christ; it was theirs to bring it out in daily life. He was most true to the Church of England when trying to show his heartfelt sympathy and oneness with other Christians. All children of God must be brothers. Uniformity seemed impossible, and unanimity was also impossible as long as they had not perfect light; but it was sacrilege to deny the unity of the body of Christ. Like the planets, circling round the sun, the nearer Christians came to Christ, the nearer they would be to each other; they would forget the points of separation and press forward to the manhood of Christ."

The state of the destitute poor in our land is rendered much worse than it would otherwise be by the early and improvident marriages which are frequently contracted. The magistrate at the Southwark Police-court spoke none too strongly when he recently censured a woman who appeared before him for having approved of the marriage of her daughter, only seventeen years of age, to a youth of eighteen. He said:—

"They were hardly in a position even to support themselves, and he did not wonder at the cry of 'overcrowding among the poor' when such early marriages took place with the consent of the parents. Sickness overtook these young people, and, on the husband losing his work, they went for shelter to live with either of their parents. He strongly condemned these early marriages."

We trust that Mr. E. W. Thomas will be encouraged at the close of another year's work on behalf of the Friendless and Fallen, and that his appeal for help will be so responded to that the work of 1884 may be entered upon without any outstanding pecuniary liabilities. He keeps an ever-open door for the return of the penitent and the wanderer. But when the fact is considered that during many months of the year the income for the support of the Homes falls far short of the expenses, it is only a prudent course to ask for special help at the close of each year. Since 1851, Mr. Thomas has persevered with this Mission, by which many thousands have been brought under the sound of the Gospel, and amongst them very many precious souls won as trophies for the Redeemer.

We have received from Benares a memoir of that earnest and apostolic-spirited Missionary, the Rev. W. Ziemann, founder of the Ghazipur Mission. Born in a German village in 1809, he was early brought under the influence of some of the Moravian Brethren, and subsequently, in 1840, was led to full decision for Christ and consecration to Mission work. From that time until his death, in 1881, his labours were indeed abundant and divinely blessed. No toil was too severe, no act of self-denial too great, for his ready performance. His first convert in India was a leper, whom he baptized in 1858, but by 1861 his flock had increased to 60, and up to the date of his death he had baptized 936. He was for nearly twenty years supported by Sir Donald McLeod, and numbered among his friends and helpers men of every shade of religion.

The fruits of Pastor Ziemann's labours are to be seen in the German Missions founded by him in Ghazipur, Buxar, and Arrah. These are now under the care of the Rev. H. Lorbeer, who is a worthy successor of the lamented founder. The work is self-supporting, and comprises an extensive orphanage, schools, poor relief fund, and general Christian endeavour. The Lucknow Express had an article not long ago commending this part of the Lord's vineyard to widespread sympathy and support. Speaking of Ziemann the writer said: "A day after last Christmas, at Ghazipur, the King called into his chamber a grand old missionary, one of the last links of that brotherhood of pioneers who were sent out without purse or scrip by Pastor Gossner, of Berlin, more than thirty years ago. He was unique, belonging to a type of men which dates back to the days of Xavier and Schwartz. After these great men he was longo sed proximus intervallo, the missionary of the times." That such men may still be raised up should be our earnest prayer.

Through an unfortunate misunderstanding on the part of one of our staff, a mistake occurs in a portion of our present issue, in the illustrated notice of the Thames Church Mission. The second engraving represents "A Chichester Boy," and not, as stated in some of the copies, "A Worcester Boy."

Long ere "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London" was heard or even thought much about, Mr. Archibald Brown, of the Burdett-road Tabernacle, with his helpers, was busily engaged meeting the deep necessities of the case, so far as the men and means at his disposal would allow. In a recent letter to us he says:—

"The condition of things is sad beyond description, and, should the winter prove severe, I fear the results. You will be glad to hear that I have added another to my staff. There are now six devoted workers attacking different localities room by room. In one district in Shadwell 340 rooms contained 260 different families, consisting of 1244 souls!"

Principal Cairns, of Edinburgh, laid the foundation-stone the other day of a granite obelisk, to be erected as a monument to the memory of the great leaders of the famous Scotch Secession. The site is at Gairney Bridge, a little hamlet on the banks of the Gairney, one of the tributaries of Loch Leven, in Kinross-shire. It was there, just 150 years ago, on December 5, 1733, that Ebenezer Erskine, William Wilson, Alexander Moncrieff, and James Fisher, all names of deep interest in Scottish Church history, met for communion with God, and for deliberation on plans for future action. The United Presbyterian Church commenced then its career, and the work accomplished in connection with it renders such a memorial as is being reared a point of interest to far more than those who are members of its community.

A very interesting pamphlet has just been published by Hatchards', entitled KAISERWERTH. It is a translation from the German of a Report of the Deaconess Institution of Rhenish Westphalia, its origin and fields of labour, written by Julius Disselhoff, the present director. Founded by Dr. Fliedner, in 1836, the work has developed into an immense organisation, having 53 central institutions, 4800 deaconesses, and 1500 stations. Kaiserwerth alone has 636 deaconesses, employed at more than 180 stations in all parts of the globe. More than 50,000 patients are nursed by the Sisters annually, their works of mercy extending to all without distinction. Only unmarried women, or widows without children, over eighteen and under forty years, are eligible for this work, and all are required to be earnest Christians of Protestant faith.

It is impossible for us to do more than direct attention to this intensely interesting record of Christian labour; our readers will do well to obtain it for themselves, its cost is only eighteenpence. The report concludes by saying: "One great want remains; we want more Deaconesses. Far more than money, far more than material help, we want the personal devotion of lives to the service and calling in which so much good may be done. Many fields remain unoccupied because Kaiserwerth has no one to send, and many earnest appeals for help are obliged to be refused." Those who desire to see how, without giving the slightest sanction to the mischievous and unscriptural system of monasticism and conventual practices, woman may be officially employed in works of usefulness suited to her sex, cannot do better than read this wonderful statement of facts.

The Orkney Islanders are in advance of many in reference to a humane and refined consideration for the young. The combined School Boards of Kirkwall and St. Ola have just passed a resolution prohibiting the corporal punishment of girls, and stating that for a master to inflict such in the presence of boys is coarse and degrading. This is said to be the first instance in which corporal punishment has been abolished in Board Schools in Scotland. The question of discipline is one of the most difficult to deal with practically; in some cases it is necessary to resort to stern measures, and to spare the rod might be to spoil the child; but in all cases punishment requires care, and in the case of girls, the Orkney authorities are right in preventing its taking the form of the rod, certainly so at the hands of a master.

The numerous friends of Dr. Donald Fraser, Marylebone Presbyterian Church, will regret to hear that the state of his health has compelled him to take a lengthened respite from active work. He proceeded last week to the Mediterranean, where he will rest for the next few months, in order to regain his bodily and mental vigour. Experience seems to show that the pastorate of a large City congregation and the conduct of a weekly journal, are too much for any one man. We should imagine that the efficient and continuous discharge of the duties of either post would be enough.

Few more remarkable discourses of an ethical character have been preached or published in recent times, than that of Mr. Stopford Brooke's, delivered in Bloomsbury on Sunday week, and given at length in The Daily News of the following day. Mr. Brooke's subject was "The Outcast Poor," and his text, 1 Cor. xii. 26, "Whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it." The sermon was an eloquent plea, backed up by the most startling facts, for more righteous legislation and more equitable dealing with respect to the payment and the housing of the poorest classes in our great city.

Scarcely less remarkable for its vigour and outspokenness was the sermon preached the same day at Cambridge University by Rev. J. Foxley, of Market Weighton, Yorkshire, on the deleterious influences of political faction. As long as our Government is representative and not despotic in its constitution, we do not see how party politics can be avoided; but every fair-minded person ought to join the preacher in his condemnation of the excessive political partisanship that finds so much favour in the England of to-day. It is by no means confined to politicians of any one colour, and it was not without reason that Mr. Foxley longed for the return of the golden age of Roman history, of which the poet sings:—

"Then none were for a party, but all were for the State;
Then the great man helped the poor, and the poor man loved the great;
Then lands were fairly portioned, then spoils were [fairly sold,
And Romans were like brothers, in the brave days of old."

THE STEPNEY MEETINGS.

THE hall at Stepney stands on a waste piece of ground, known in past days, we believe, as "Pedlar's Orchard." It needs a considerable stretch of imagination to conceive of its ever having been such a pleasant and goodly place as a country or suburban orchard. No doubt the neighbourhood is still superior in many respects to other parts of the metropolis that have lately been figuring in the accounts of "outcast" and "horrible" London; to those who enjoy the comforts and amenities of well-ordered domestic life, the difference will seem only one of degree. The little personal knowledge we have gained of the conditions of life to be found among the dwellers around Pedlar's Orchard does not make us long to know more. Poverty, overcrowding, disease, drunkenness—all that makes up a London slum—are not far to seek. However much we may deplore the unspeakable ignorance, degradation, and misery to be found in such places, we can scarcely wonder at them, keeping in view the depressing and almost hopeless conditions of daily life that prevail. If the Gospel can reach and deliver and elevate those who live amid such surroundings, it is indeed what it professes to be—the very power of God unto salvation.

Everybody seems to agree that the audiences at Stepney Green Hall, especially in the evenings, have been "of the right sort." That is to say, they are those who, judging from outward appearance, do not usually cross the thresholds of our churches and chapels. The plan adopted at Wandsworth of reserving front seats for working men has been considerably developed at Stepney. On most evenings during the past week there has been a solid square of nearly a thousand such men and youths seated right in front of the evangelists. The women have attended in considerable numbers at the afternoon Bible-lectures. East-enders, however, have not much leisure during the working hours of the day, and the afternoon meetings have not been so large as in Islington, probably not quite so large as those at Wandsworth. Everything has been done to make the services known to the people. The band of workers connected with Stepney Church (Mr. Kitto's), we believe, have alone visited over 20,000 houses in the parish. Others have no doubt been equally assiduous in this branch of the work.

AN OVERFLOW IN STEPNEY CHURCH.

Notwithstanding its enlarged capacity, Stepney Hall is quite inadequate to the demand for seats in the evening. The overflows are drafted off to Stepney Church. One evening we proceeded thither, and found the spacious church well filled with a motley but most attentive congregation. Before leaving the hall, we heard Mr. Moody announce that he would speak specially to infidels on Monday evening. A worker, he said, had told him that almost every one he spoke with professed to hold sceptical opinions. He would address himself chiefly to such persons on the evening he had named. Before going to the overflow, Mr. Sankey had rendered very impressively that plain and powerful song-sermon:

"I verily, verily say unto you,
Ye must be born again."

When we reached Stepney Church, Mr. Sankey was about to sing another song (No. 41), one of the oldest, but one of the most pathetic and beautiful in the whole collection. It is a great favourite with the renowned singer, and justly so; no song in the book better brings out the rich qualities of his voice, or tells in choicer language of the fathomless forgiving love and tenderness of the Saviour. What words could more finely describe the attitude of a lowly penitent than these:—

"Unheeding the splendour that blazed on the board,
She silently knelt at the feet of the Lord."

Or this most exquisite verse, unsurpassed for pathos and poetic beauty:—

"She heard but the Saviour; she spoke but with sighs;
She dared not look up to the heaven of his eyes;
And the hot tears gushed forth at each heave of her breast
As her lips to his sandals were throbbingly pressed."

How could human thought more fittingly frame, or human speech more simply tell out, the effects of redeeming love on the pardoned penitent than in the last verse:—

"In the sky after tempest as shineth the bow,
In the glance of the sunbeam as melteth the snow,
He looked on the lost one: her sins were forgiven,
And Mary went forth in the beauty of heaven."

This recitative song, as it is floated on the ears of a hushed and reverent congregation, through the singer's sympathetic and soothing strains, is one of the most moving and thrilling Gospel sermons that can be conceived.

The preacher in the church this evening was Rev. E. A. Stuart, of Holloway. His discourse was a carefully-prepared and impressive one. Founding his remarks on the story of the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem under Nehemiah, Mr. Stuart first addressed some very useful exhortations to young converts not to be daunted by any obstacles they may encounter. Let them follow Nehemiah's example in watchfulness and prayer. Then, referring to the trumpeter mentioned in the narrative, he proceeded to speak of three trumpets he desired to sound; the brazen trumpet of warning (Ezek. xxxiii.), the silver trumpet of the Gospel (Lev. xxv. 9), and the golden trumpet which tells of the coming King, and the coming glory (1 Cor. xv. 52). In speaking of the brazen trumpet, which sounds forth the command: "Show my people their sins," Mr. Stuart related the following incident: "The other day I was preaching in my own church upon this subject. I said that if a man wanted to have peace with God, he must be prepared to put away his sin. After the sermon a wealthy gentleman, a member of my own congregation, came up to me and said, 'You have broken me down to-day. For the last two or three months I have not been able to sleep. You know I have retired from business, but the fact of the matter is, I have been gambling on the Stock Exchange, though people did not know it. Whenever the funds go down I begin to tremble. Although I believe I gave my heart to God some years ago, I have been trying to serve two masters—gambling for money, and at the same time pretending to serve God. Now I have made up my mind that I must destroy this sin. It will cost me £4000, but I am determined to make a clean sweep of it altogether.' The gentleman added, 'I think peace of mind is cheap at £4000;' and I think so too."

Quite a large company stayed for the after-meeting, and to those friends Mr. Sankey spoke, not, of course, from the pulpit, but standing on a dais behind his musical instrument. It was an unadorned, perhaps disconnected, but very hearty and touching talk on the sufficiency of Jesus Christ to meet all the needs of the human soul. As the evangelist reproduced some chapters of his own spiritual experience and showed that it was not believing about Jesus, but a practical and definite commitment of the soul to Him that brings peace and light, the people looked and listened with wonderful eagerness and interest. Many stayed to be conversed with. In this part of the work we could not help feeling how much more suitable for an after-meeting was the Church, with its high pews shutting off inquirer and helper from others, than the Hall, where all are huddled up together to their mutual disadvantage. Notwithstanding the drawback to which we have referred, the after-meetings at Stepney Hall have been times of great spiritual blessing and decision.

A CHIME OF GOSPEL BELLS.

On the evening succeeding the one we spent at the Church the great Hall was crammed in every corner. Before the sermon Mr. Sankey and Mr. Soltau sang the new hymn, "He is abundantly able to save." This hymn has been a striking success, partly because of the beautiful and expressive simplicity of the words, and partly by reason of the effective phrasing and construction of the chorus. Mr. Moody's sermon was a chime of Gospel bells, as he himself called it, each bell sounding out the word "Come!"—Come and hear, come and see, come and drink, come and dine, come and rest, come and reason, come to the marriage feast, come up higher, &c. The last bell of all was that all-embracing invitation with which the Scripture record closes, "Let him that is athirst come, and whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." To illustrate the freeness of salvation, Mr. Moody seized a Bible that happened to be lying on the top of the American organ by his side, and forthwith addressed himself to a young man in the front row: "Young man, will you receive this book as a gift?" Like many to whom the Saviour is offered, the young man hesitated, being apparently staggered at the simplicity of the process, and doubting the sincerity of the donor. "Don't you believe that I mean what I say?" Well, yes, of course he did. "Then will you take the book as a gift?" This time the young fellow rose, and held out his hand; but even yet he did not appear fully to grasp the situation. He held the volume loosely in his hand as if ready to return it, and expecting that he would have to do so. "No! no!" said Mr. Moody, "keep it; it is yours. You see," continued Mr. Moody, raising his voice, "the first thing this man had to do was to believe that I was willing to give him the book. Then he reached out his hand and took it; that is faith." The incident, useful in itself, was rather spoiled by the sequel. After Mr. Moody had closed the first meeting, and asked that all who had the least desire to become Christians should step at once into the inquiry-room, he came down from the platform, as his custom is, to add the friendly pressure of a personal invitation. To his surprise, he found the Bible he had just given away lying on one of the chairs in the front row, but the receiver of it had disappeared!

At the after-meeting in the inquiry-room, Mr. Moody repeated the Wandsworth experiment by putting Mr. Henry Varley in the witness-box and eliciting explanations of true repentance, faith, and such like points. Mr. Varley's remarks seemed to meet with much acceptance, and when Mr. Moody called for open confession of Christ, responses flowed in from every side.

The Stepney meetings continue up to and including Sunday next. Then comes an interval of little more than a week, during which the Evangelists will take a well-earned and much-needed rest. On January 2, the Clapham meetings will commence. No Watch Service will be conducted by the Evangelists, as at first announced.

THE CHILDREN'S SERVICE

On Saturday numbered about 2000, and the young people were fairly attentive from first to last. Mr. E. J. Kennedy conducted the meeting throughout; his firm but loving manner soon interested the children. Mr. T. B. Bishop, Mr. Josiah Spiers, and other members of the Mission were also present.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MEETING.

A Gospel Temperance Meeting was held on Saturday evening, at which over 2000 persons were present. A large number of these, however, were evidently total abstainers. The meeting was intensely enthusiastic throughout. The chair was taken by Mr. Donald Matheson. The first speaker was Mr. F. N. Charrington, who struck several heavy blows at the drink traffic by giving examples of its ravages. He encouraged those who were enslaved to trust in Christ for deliverance, and for daily keeping. Rev. F. C. Lillingston followed with a description of the bondage of those who indulge in strong drink, and the benefits accruing to those who abstain.

Dr. Barnardo had a word for the bairns. He pleaded with parents to give up the cup for the sake of the children, if not for their own sake. Giving a leaf or two out of the book of his experience in recent midnight haunts among East-end lodging-houses as to the terrible slaughter of the drink demon, he earnestly pressed upon the audience the advantages, moral, religious, and physiological, of having nothing whatever to do with it.

NOTES AND INCIDENTS.

MR. MOODY GRIEVED.

At one of the last meetings in the Wandsworth Hall, when addressing some exhortations to believers, Mr. Moody spoke of the unwillingness of many professed Christians to engage actively in the blessed work of leading others to the Saviour.

Last night, he said, my heart was grieved, as I found in the after-meeting ten or twelve sitting in one row anxious to be saved, and no one to speak to them. There were hundreds of professing Christians all around, yet they could not tell the one next to them the way of life. If we have known Christ for twenty years and cannot introduce Him to a seeking soul, there must be something wrong. I will tell you why there are so many professed Christians who are unwilling to work for their Master. It is not a very popular thing to say, but I believe it is because they have not got victory in their own lives. Therefore they are powerless in testifying of Christ to others.

FOLLOWING UP AT WANDSWORTH.

A very interesting united praise-meeting was held at the Memorial Hall, Wandsworth, on Monday week, over which Dr. Watney presided. Though the night was a very stormy one, there was a good attendance, and much thanksgiving was made for the great things that had been experienced in connection with the meeting in Down Lodge Hall. On the previous evening Mr. Rainsford preached to a crowded congregation in the Town Hall; many were turned away for want of room. In addition to this Sunday evening service, a weekly Bible lecture will be given on Thursday evenings in the Memorial Hall. Through the devoted efforts of Miss Rainsford and Miss Seaman, the district visitors in the neighbourhood are being organised for the establishment of cottage meetings. Steps are also being taken to secure a systematic visitation of the young converts who furnished their addresses. We hear that in some of the places of worship in Wandsworth, additions have already been made to the church-roll.

A PLEASING INCIDENT.

The following extracts from the letter of a young lady in a business house in the metropolis to a friend in the provinces, will be read with the deepest interest:—

"Of course you have heard about Messrs. Moody and Sankey being in London. Our employer took a great interest in them, and allowed any of us who liked to go to the meeting early, so as to get a good seat. A good many of us went, and he went himself nearly every night. We scarcely know how to thank God enough for sending his servants to London. There were several in our house who, I believe, fully made up their mind to serve Jesus, and one or two stood up at the meetings to say, "I will trust, and not be afraid." We thought we would like to give our employer a little present. I enclose a copy of the letter we sent to him, and the one he sent us in reply. We have now a nice prayer-meeting for about twenty minutes before going into the shop. It was our employer's wish we should have it. Of course, no one is compelled to come, but we have a crowded room every morning, and I trust much good will be the result. We are going to have a Bible-class held in the house every Thursday. Remember us in your prayers, that we may be strong in this good cause."

The following are the letters referred to: "We, the undersigned, wish to express our thanks and hearty appreciation of your kindness in affording us so many opportunities of attending the meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. At the same time we beg your acceptance of the accompanying volumes as a mark of our respect and esteem, and as a souvenir of the great work that has been done.—Yours respectfully,

THE YOUNG LADIES OF YOUR ESTABLISHMENT.'

"Dear Young Ladies,—I am unable to express on paper my feelings when I read your letter, opened the parcel, and saw the contents. I am sure if ever I made up my mind to lead a new life I did then, and with God's help I mean to try. Those two books I value more than anything I have ever had, and hope there will never come a time in my life when I shall be ashamed of them or their contents. I trust that the Mission has made an impression on all of you that will never leave you, and that God's blessing will rest on you all."

MR. MOODY AND THE CLAPHAM WORKERS.

On Monday afternoon Mr. Moody met, at Clapham, a large number of ministers, workers, and members of the choir. The evident warm interest in the work, and readiness to engage in it, shown by all these friends augurs well for a most successful Mission among the dwellers in Clapham and Battersea.

Dwellers in the High Alps.

SIR,—I have received a letter from the wife of Peter Nicot, of the Hautes Alpes, of which I venture to submit the substance to your readers. The villages of Brunissard and St. Veran belong to the highest group of permanently inhabited hamlets in Europe. About two years ago, both villages were in great measure consumed by fire. I had the happiness of transmitting a small sum of money, the gift of a few generous friends, for behoof of Brunissard, the larger village and the one more recently burnt, which naturally attracted the larger share of sympathy. Madame Nicot pleads for the struggling Protestants of the Raux de St. Veran. She says:—

"They are engaged in rebuilding their houses, and as they must be built this time of stone, the outlay is considerable. They have been living as best they could in the houses of relations and friends, two families sometimes occupying one stable in the neigbouring hamlet. As the good season lasts for only four months the mountaineers have encountered great difficulties from the necessity of tilling their fields and rebuilding their houses at the same time. That they may take Jesus Christ for their friend in all their trials is our fondest wish. We cannot enough thank you and other kind friends for the help you have given to our Alpines of Brunissard, and should much like if some aid could be obtained for those of the Raux de St. Veran. My husband has just returned from Queyras, after distributing the last of the funds entrusted to him, and still there is urgent need of assistance. Our poor Alpines, being alone in the solitary mountains, the sympathy and affection of their fellow Christians is very precious to them."

I have more than once visited these children of the martyrs, in their far-off retreats, and can bear testimony to the warm gratitude they manifest for sympathy shown them, as well as to the eager attention with which they listen to the Gospel message. Winter has long ere this wrapped them in its snowy mantle. Perhaps some of your readers who greet the Christmas season, around warm hearths in ample dwellings, would like to remember the wants of the simple Protestants of St. Veran, poorly sheltered from the Arctic severity of their winter, in their half-built houses, or crowded together in the stables of their friends.—Yours truly,

Fairfield, Liverpool. (Rev.) R. H. LUNDIE.

RAGGED CHURCH AND CHAPEL UNION.—In connection with this society, the Gospel is preached at nearly 100 stations in poor and crowded districts on the evening of each Lord's day, and generally once during the week. Contributions may be forwarded to the secretary, Mr. William A. Blake, 4, Trafalgar-square, Charing Cross, W.C.

Suppression of Vice in London.

In June last a meeting was held at the London residence of the Marquis of Ailsa, under the presidency of Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, M.A., "to consider means for delivering our streets from open immorality, and closing houses of ill-fame." That meeting resulted in the formation of the "Central Vigilance Committee for repressing immorality," which is now a Committee of gentlemen of position and influence, including several magistrates and barristers well versed in law upon the subject. The Committee receives substantial support from the Earl of Shaftesbury, Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., and other public men of the like character.

Last Friday afternoon a deputation attended the Committee meeting of the Central Vigilance Committee, at 3*l*, Charing Cross, to present a memorial from various editors of the religious press on the subject of the suppression of disorderly houses in the metropolis, with special reference to the moral responsibility of owners of such property. The deputation having been introduced by Mr. David McLaren, Mr. Alfred S. Dyer read the memorial, which stated, inter alia, that many disorderly houses are situated upon property more or less under the control of large corporations, civil and ecclesiastical, and individuals, as ground landlords; that the law for the suppression of such houses as it now stands is difficult of execution. The memorialists, therefore, prayed the Committee to co-operate in addressing the great ground landlords of the metropolis, both corporate and individual, in favour of taking steps within their powers, to abate the evils complained of, or to provide for the future abatement of such evils.

The memorial was signed by the Editors of The Record, The Christian, The Christian Commonwealth, Word and Work, The Fireside News, The Christian Million, The Baptist, The Christian Leader, The Family Churchman, and The Sentinel. In supporting its prayer, Mr. Dyer said it was frequently found that houses of ill-fame are owned by persons of the highest conventional respectability, and in some instances, by persons holding official positions in Christian Churches. The revival of feeling which is now taking place throughout the kingdom on the subject of public morality, indicates that public opinion will justly apportion responsibility, and will regard owners of property, who, for increased profit or other considerations, knowingly allow it to be used for corrupt purposes, as accomplices with their tenants in the pollution of society. In some cases where large estates are managed by agents who look solely to the pecuniary return, it is probable that the landlords are ignorant of the misuse of their property, and would respond in a friendly spirit to representations on the subject. Mr. Dyer concluded by handing to the Committee, for private use, a list of landlords upon whose property he has been informed that houses of ill-fame exist.

Rev. W. T. Moore (Editor of The Christian Commonwealth) said the breaking-up of these dens must be a very great advantage to the public generally, no matter what may be the result to the women themselves. The public interest is endangered by the presence of these scandalous establishments, and it is the duty of law to protect the public as far as possible against this pestilence. These women are engaged in a sinful occupation, and it can be no wrong to either them, or anyone else, to break up their establishments. While we would be glad to do anything for these women that possibly can be done to redeem them and lift them into self-help again, we fail to see that the opportunity for doing so could in any way be increased by keeping them where they now are.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, M.A., as chairman, heartily thanked the deputation, on behalf of the Committee, for the confidence the memorialists manifested in them. He assured the deputation that the Committee were earnestly desirous of taking action in the matter as they might be guided of God; indeed, he would pledge them to do so. With regard to the women, it was one of the principles of the Committee that while every effort should be made to suppress vice, a helping hand should at the same time be held out for the rescue of its female victims.

Any who take a practical interest in this social reform, for which the need is so palpable, will find much valuable information as to "the Glasgow system" of repressing vice in a pamphlet issued by Messrs. Hatchards, 187, Piccadilly, W. (4s. per 100).

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. J. M. Scroggie is this month labouring at Galashiels, N.B., under the auspices of the Home Mission. The meetings have been fairly well attended. On the Sabbath evenings the audience numbers over 1300.

South London.—At a recent social meeting in connection with the Townley-street Mission, Walworth, encouraging testimony was furnished by several friends as to the good work superintended by Mr. Tomkins, the district city missionary.

Mr. Wm. Nobbs, of Gloucester, writes to us that his wife, for whom prayer was asked in our pages, is much better, and able to attend the meetings. He hopes shortly, therefore, to engage in evangelistic work again in the towns and villages of Herefordshire and Gloucestershire.

Mr. R. Montgomery, evangelist, has concluded a Mission of ten days at the Chapel at Wales Quarry, near Stroud, Gloucestershire. It was a great pleasure to see the large proportion of youths and young men at the services. A great many Christians have testified to help received; backsliders have been restored, and several have been led to receive Christ.

Leith.—Mr. R. Hill has just closed a very successful series of evangelistic meetings in St. Andrew's Hall. The hall was crowded on the Sabbath evenings, and during the week there was a very good attendance. The Christians have received much blessing, and many of the unsaved, who remained for prayer and conversation, have made a profession of their faith in Christ. Mr. Hill left this place for Prestwich, Ayrshire.

Annan, N.B.—A successful twelve days' Mission has been completed in the Independent Chapel at this place, which has been conducted by Rev. Hopper Joplin, of Jarrow-on-Tyne, and Mr. Joseph Harker, of Amble. The addresses, which were given every afternoon and evening by Mr. Joplin, were powerful and impressive; whilst the singing of Mr. Harker found its way to many hearts. A number professed to find the Saviour.

Cirencester.—A very interesting meeting of navvies employed on the Swindon and Cheltenham Extension Railway now in construction, was held here on Tuesday evening last. Miss S. Bowly, of this town, kindly gave a tea to 180 of the navvies employed on the works, and a happy evening was spent in singing songs and solos. Great attention was given to addresses delivered to the men by the Archdeacon of Cirencester, Miss Bowly, and Mr. John M. Mac Auliffe.

Regent's Park College.—The work of the "Preaching Station Society" for the past year has been marked by hardly won but decided success. Never, perhaps, in the history of the Society have the signs of vigorous activity been so many or so real. This very success, however, prompts us to seek further assistance. It is our main aim to take charge of weak churches, with the view of placing them in a position to have a settled minister. We emphasise this part of our work rather than Missions, which, however, we also undertake. We feel that for the latter there are already many organisations, and that our plan of work, so far as circumstances will permit, is specially adapted for the former. All communications should be addressed to Walter Friend, Hon. Sec.

Harrogate, Yorks.—A fortnight's Mission has been held in St. Mary's parish, Low Harrogate, by Mr. Spencer Walton. The Bible readings from day to day were most helpful. The Mission services increased in interest each evening, and were abundantly blessed. Many remained for the after-meetings, who, under deep conviction of sin, professed to give their hearts to the Saviour. There is reason to believe that it has been a real genuine work of God. At the praise-meeting, with which the Mission closed, about one hundred rose up to testify that they had received a blessing.

Davis-square Mission, Inverness, N.B.—Gospel work has been carried on in this district with more or less success for the last quarter of a century. Within the last two years many tokens of the Lord's blessing have been received. The place of meeting, an old dwelling-house, has been found far too small, and otherwise quite unsuitable. We need help to build a Mission-hall. The people are of the poorest class, and non-churchgoers. The Mission work is conducted by working men and women belonging to the different churches in town. Detailed statements will be sent on application.

Mission Appeals.

Girls' School, Beyrout.—For some time past Miss Taylor, of the Moslem Girls' School here, has had heavy trials from lack of funds to support the twenty-five inmates and thirty day scholars who attend. She will be thankful if friends will kindly send in their contributions soon, which may be forwarded to Mr. W. Ferguson, 41, Manor-place, Edinburgh.

Young Girls in the Borough.—Mrs. E. Sowerbutts, 34, Warner-street, New Kent-road, S.E., is doing a good work amongst the young girls of Kent-street, Borough. From fifty to seventy attend the evening classes, the greater part of them being of the poorest in the neighbourhood. She would be glad of help in the shape of old clothing, books for prizes, funds for free tea, &c.

Mr. and Mrs. George Pearse's Mission.—They will be thankful to receive assistance towards their own personal work in Algeria. Letters addressed L'Agha, Algiers, will always reach them.

Victoria Hospital, Netley.—Will some of your readers, especially during the winter season, kindly entrust to my care any clothing which they may be able to spare from their own abundant stores for the benefit of the wives and children of invalid soldiers at this hospital? The Netley Charitable Fund does what it can to relieve distress, and to supplement the Government allowance of food and fuel, but clothing is sorely needed. I venture also to ask for books, periodicals, and illustrated papers (of any date) to cheer the lonely hours, and to hasten the recovery of the thousands of invalids who every year pass through this hospital.—G. N. Godwin, Chaplain.

Homes for the Aged Poor.—Miss Harrison writes: "We have 105 old people in the seven Homes now opened; their incomes being very small, it is impossible for them to have sufficient firing during the winter without help. Many are eighty years of age. Much help given in former years has been lost by the death of the giver." Subscriptions will be gladly received by the Hon. Sec., Miss S. A. Harrison, 5, Grand Acre-terrace, Anerley, S.E.

Field-lane Refuges and Ragged Schools.—During the past year we have been enabled to give 14,629 nights' lodgings to the deserving homeless poor, to train for domestic service 113 friendless or poor girls, to industrially train 100 boys, to give 26,000 breakfasts to the outcast at the Ragged Church, to provide a dinner for 750 of the destitute, and 480 poor families on Christmas Day, making a total of over 2000 persons weekly. In order to continue these efforts, at least £3000 must be raised by March 31. The Treasurer is Wilfrid A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.—Peregrine Platt, Secretary.

Soldiers' Home, Dover.—Funds are greatly needed to meet the expenses of this institution. The work in the past has been graciously owned of God. Miss F. E. Wright is the lady superintendent.

Southsea Mission, Portsmouth.—Mr. B. Dinnick, Ebenezer Cottage, Inglis-road, Havelock-park, Southsea, urgently appeals for help in fitting up one of the Mission-rooms as a coffee-room; the need of this, he says, is much felt in the neighbourhood.

Lowestoft.—Mrs. Bradley, of London, has delivered four Temperance addresses here. The attendances were not large, but the meetings were of excellent character.

THE THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

AFLOAT AND ASHORE.

FROM Putney to the Nore Lightship is a long stretch—nearly fifty miles—of the busiest river in the world. Independently of the main stream, there is a vast catalogue of creeks and canals, of wharves, and docks, and quays, connected with our river traffic, where seafaring men abound. Wherever these men, within the limits already mentioned, are to be found, on shipboard or on shore, the agents of the Thames Church Mission are supposed to follow them with the good news of salvation.

But the Thames is by no means all the ground sought to be covered by this most valuable Society, in regard to whose far-reaching work the venerable Earl of Shaftesbury, at its last annual meeting, spoke in such glowing terms. These are some of his lordship's words: "For moral purposes, for patriotic purposes, for social purposes, for religious purposes, there was never devised a better agency than the Thames Church Mission, and it ought not to want the means necessary to extend its operations."

It is not many months since we gave in THE CHRISTIAN some account of what we saw and heard of the Society's operations in the North Sea amongst the "Short Blue Fleet." Great efforts are being made to reach all the other fishing fleets. These Mission vessels are now afloat, doing, we understand, a glorious work. A fourth will be ready for sea early in the Spring. Still, there are needed at least four "more to follow." Since our return from the North Sea we have had the opportunity of witnessing something of this Society's work nearer home, amongst the navvies at Tilbury, as well as on the river.

THE NAVVIES AT TILBURY.

As many readers of THE CHRISTIAN are no doubt aware, a considerable tract of marsh land on the north side of the Thames is at the present moment being converted into a huge dock. This operation has, as a matter of course, concentrated in the neighbourhood of Tilbury a large staff of navvies (about 2000), many of them with families. To some extent, the difficulty of housing this new colony has been met by the contractors having built a number of huts on the works. Easily accessible to these, the Thames Church Mission has erected an iron building capable of holding some 500 or 600. This building serves as day and Sunday-school for the children, as shelter for the men during their dinner hour, as reading-room, as local post-office and savings bank, and on certain week evenings, as well as on Sundays for evangelistic services. The missionary in charge of the work here, Mr. George Simons, is a man who has received excellent training for it amongst the lodging-houses of Spitalfields, and is in every way a happy choice. He met us at the railway station, and accompanied us to the rude shelters for the men, situated in different parts of the works, known as

THE MUD HUTS.

In them, at the time of our visit, the men had just gathered for "dinner" and rest. It was an opportunity not to be lost. We visited as many of the primitive buildings as time would allow for, in each case distributing small books, delivering a brief Gospel message, and concluding with a short prayer. About a dozen men were in each hut. The seed thus scattered has already borne good fruit. One man we know of received blessing during a former visit, and has since been the means of leading several others to Christ. We found fruit also during our afternoon visit to some members of whilst the missionary was distributing their weekly allowance of 12s. One poor fellow, who had been laid aside for some weeks, completely broke down, his wife joining him, the moment a few pointed questions were asked him about his soul. He and his wife had been reading one of the small books given by the missionary, and it had made a deep impression upon them. After prayer, and the Gospel message delivered very simply, we had the joy of seeing both confess Christ. On another visit we found a Christian mother but recently bereaved of three dear little ones at one swoop, able to say, in the quiet assurance that all was for the best, "Thy will be done."

In the evening the Mission Hall was packed by navvies, their wives, and children. As in the North Sea, so also here, there is no doctor on the spot. The missionary has ready at hand a stock of lint bandages and simple remedies, which are not infrequently applied for, accidents being in no way uncommon amongst so many men. In many ways, therefore, this Mission is an incalculable boon to the navvies at Tilbury.

A "WORCESTER" BOY.

ON THE RIVER.

Ready to the minute appointed next morning, we found the little Swan, steam-launch of the Mission, waiting us at Gravesend, with the senior chaplain, Rev. Mr. Gadesden, on board ready for a cruise. Out in mid-stream lay one of the fine Orient liners, the Iberia, of about 5000 tons, taking in cargo and emigrant passengers for the Antipodes. Away we steamed towards her. The active chaplain was at once welcomed on board, and permission was given to visit any part of the vessel with his good books, and hold a service wherever, amid the bustle, circumstances permitted. Gratefully on all hands were the tracts and books received by the crew and passengers, "The Gospel Compass" being an especial favourite with the sailors.

Our first service was held in the engineers' quarters, the sailors listening attentively through a skeleton partition dividing them. Later in the day, as the passengers were beginning to settle down, we had another service, in the married quarters; and, later still, a concluding service, in the quarters of the single men. In each case the simple Gospel was declared and listened to attentively. At the close of each service numerous bundles of tracts, the gift of the Religious Tract Society, were freely distributed and most thankfully received. Quite a scramble was made after Messrs. Moody and Sankey's hymn-books, that they might have "something to sing" as well as "something to read" on the voyage. In this way many Christians will, no doubt, be brought into contact with each other, and have their faith strengthened during the forty days' voyage.

We spoke to several on board who were not ashamed to confess Christ. The tracts and books received were promised to be passed round, so that all might read them. We could not help being deeply moved as the chaplain announced, at the close of each service, "Now, if there are any of you who have not got a Bible, I am authorised by the British and Foreign Bible Society to present you with a New Testament." "It is the wish of this Society," continued he, "that no person should be allowed to leave the shores of England without a copy of the Word of God." This is a noble sentiment, and many were glad to accept the generous offer. Thus the Thames Church Mission, independently of its own work, becomes an important distributing medium of these two great societies. This kind of work is carried on all over the river, but space forbids further details now.

During the afternoon we steamed up the river, to hold a service among the lads on board the calling on our way upon some vessels in the stream. The importance of sound religious teaching to these lads on the Worcester, who are destined to become officers on other ships, it is impossible to estimate. Already several have gone from here bearing the precious seed and the influence of Christian example into other circles. God bless the efforts of the Thames Church Mission to reach them, and may many of them be able to sing, as we heard not a few voices on board the Iberia sing—

"Happy day, happy day,
When Jesus washed my sins away!"

This is a Mission doing a great and good work, and well deserves the prayers, the encouragement, and the means necessary to help on and extend its operations. The offices of the Society are at 31, New Bridge-street, Ludgate Circus, E.C., where all information may be obtained from Mr. E. J. Mather, Secretary. W. C. M.

REVIVALS.—Men say, "I don't believe in revivals; they are only temporary." If I thought that was true, I would say "Amen." My prayer has been for years that God will let me die when the spirit of revival dies out in my heart; I don't want to live any longer if I can't be used to some purpose.—D. L. Moody.

A Christmas Sermon.

By Mr. D. L. MOODY.

"There was no room for them in the inn."
—Luke ii. 7.

FOR four thousand years the Jews had been looking for Christ, and now he had come. And the first thing we read of Him is that there is no room for Him in the inn at Bethlehem.

The sinner's heart is very much like that little inn at Bethlehem; it has no room for Christ. If a prince comes to this country from some foreign land, there is sure to be room for him, and the best you have is not good enough to bestow upon him. Yet here is the Prince of Heaven, the Prince of Peace, come to earth, and there is no room for Him in the inn at Bethlehem!

Think what He came for; He came to seek and to save that which was lost—to redeem a lost world. He might have come with all the pomp and grandeur of heaven; He might have had a million of angels in his train. But He left behind Him all the glory He had with his Father, and stooped from the throne and went clear down into the manger, that He might get his arm under the vilest sinner and lift him up to the heights of glory.

Some one has said that the Jews did not know He was the Messiah, or they would have given Him a glorious reception. Would they? Why, we read that when the wise men came with the glad tidings that He was the King of the Jews, "Herod and all Jerusalem was troubled." There was no one in Jerusalem that wanted Him any more than in Bethlehem. Herod hunted for his life as if He were some terrible murderer, so that his parents were obliged to flee into a foreign land.

Has the world grown any better during these eighteen hundred years? Is Christ wanted to-day? If He should come again, would He be welcome? Would the nations of the earth receive Him with delight and gladness? What nation would make room for Him to-day? If it were put to the public vote, what nation would vote to have Him come back to be their King? Talk about England and America being Christian nations: do you think either of them would invite Him to come? Has England got room for Him? Eighteen hundred years have rolled by since He went away, and more has been written about Him and said about Him than any other man, or thousand men, or million men, and yet there is no nation under heaven that wants Him. When He was down here there was not a village in any part of the country that wanted Him. He went to Nazareth, where He was brought up; He went into the synagogue and began to tell out the glad tidings. They took Him to the brow of the hill, and would have cast Him into hell if they could. They put Him out of the town. And there is not a town or village under the sun to-day but would do the same. People say the world is growing so much better; but, as I have said, there is not a nation anywhere to-day that wants Him. Does Germany, or France, or England, or America?

Not only that; there is something a good deal worse than that. There is hardly a church in Christendom that wants Him. Go to any of the churches next Sunday, and ask if they would vote to have Him back. Why, my friends, the Church has not got room for Him. She is not praying and longing for his return. Go down to the Exchange and ask if they have got room for Him. Why, a good deal of the business would have to be done on different principles. Men would say, "We cannot make quite so much money, and we don't want Him." If it should be put to the vote in Parliament, would they have Him back? Is there room for Him among our statesmen, and noblemen, and those who are making our laws? Would they invite Him back? Why, there would be a great commotion among the nations of the earth if He were to come. The fact is, there is no room for Him in the world yet. Our homes, our churches, the nations of the earth, are like that little inn at Bethlehem. There is room for everything else; but in the Church and the world to-day is "no room for Him." It is one thing to talk about Christ and salvation, but when we come to talk about the return of a personal Christ, is there a Church that is crying for Him?

It is time for every true child of God to wake out of his sleep, to trim his lamp, and make ready for the return of the Lord Jesus Christ. If the nations of the world, if the churches, are not longing for his return, let us as individuals make room for Him. Look at the hundreds of thousands hastening down to death and ruin! Let us invite our rejected King back again to this world. Do not let us be like the men of Decapolis, who, when Christ snapped the fetters from the poor demoniac, came to Him, and with one accord constrained Him to depart out of their coasts. There was no room for Him in Decapolis.

There is a passage in the 7th chapter of John, last verse, that is very touching. It has often brought the tears to my eyes—"And every man went unto his own house." Then we read in the opening words of the 8th chapter (the two chapters should not be divided; they are really one)—"Jesus went into the Mount of Olives." There was no room for Him in Jerusalem that night; no one wanted Him. He had no house of his own to which He could go. "The foxes have holes, the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." Oh, friends, think of the Prince of Glory coming down into this world and having no place to lay his head; no one to receive Him. He had to go into the Mount of Olives and spend the night there alone. I have often thought that I would like to have had a house in Jerusalem that night, and to have invited Him there. But if I had, I suppose my door would have been locked against Him like the rest. There is one thing we can all do—our hearts can receive Him, and that will please Him best of all.

What a blessing Martha got by receiving Him into her house. There was one home at Bethany always open to Him. He was a welcome guest there, and he often went when He was tired and weary. They had room for Him there, and He will always go where there is room for Him. The moment you make room for Him in your hearts He will come in. Was it not the best thing Martha and Mary could have done to make room for Him? One day sickness came to that dwelling, and Lazarus lay on his dying bed. They had physicians, I suppose, from Jerusalem, and the moment they pronounced him to be in danger they sent a message and told Jesus that he was sick. The messenger goes and tells Jesus about it, but before he gets there Lazarus is dead. There is sorrow that night in Bethany. I can see those two broken-hearted sisters weeping over the body. They laid him away in the little graveyard at Bethany, and they came back to their dark and desolate home. Many of you know how dark a home seems when some loved one is gone. Some friends came to comfort them; but what poor comforters they were, compared to Him who was absent. The messenger came back and told them what Jesus had said, and at last He comes Himself. Out goes Martha to meet Him, and she says, "If Thou hadst been here my brother had not died." He calls for Mary, and away goes Martha and tells her, "The Master is come and calleth for thee." Is there a Mary here to-night whom the Master is calling? Up rises Mary to meet Him, and she, too, says, like Martha, "If Thou hadst been here my brother had not died." On that occasion were uttered some of the sublimest words that ever fell from the lips of the Son of God—"I am the Resurrection and the Life: he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die."

I can see these two sisters, one on each side of Him. They tell Him all about their brother's sickness and his last messages, and the Son of God begins to weep. If there is a broken heart here to-day, Jesus is in full sympathy with you. You can have no friend like the Son of God. He has got power to help you. They go to the grave, and Jesus bids them take away the stone. Martha's faith begins to stagger. Some one has said it was a blessed privilege to roll away the stone. It is a blessed privilege to do anything the Master tells us to do. With a word the Son of God calls him up—"Lazarus come forth." The moment Lazarus heard his voice he knew it, and forth he came out of the sepulchre. Look at him as he goes back to the house, arm-in-arm with the Son of God. How astonished the people must have been; they must have gone mad almost with excitement. Look into that little home: there is Jesus at the table, and Lazarus; Martha still serves, and Mary looks on in wonder.

Sinner, was it not the best thing Martha could have done to make room for Christ? You do not know how near death is. The best thing you can do is to receive the Resurrection and the Life into your home and your heart. If the nations, if the professing Church, won't have Him, let us welcome Him into our hearts. Say this minute, "Welcome, thrice welcome, Son of God, into this heart of mine." He will come. What does he say? Hark! "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and will open the door, I will come in to him and sup with him, and he with Me." Does your heart throb? Do you hear the still small voice whispering to you to let Him in? That is Jesus; He wants to come into your heart to-night.

Sinner, receive Him. Then let death come; you can shout over death and the grave and hell. He holds the keys of death, and it has no power over you. May God help you to make room for Christ. You make room for Him here, and He will make room for you up yonder. He will come back by-and-bye, and receive his own out of this dark world into that home He has gone to prepare. "As many as received Him to them gave He power to become the sons of God."

Did you ever have a period in your life when you felt as if no one wanted you? I had that experience for about two days, and it nearly broke my heart. I wanted to die. It was a terrible thought that no one wanted me. I was a stranger in a strange city looking for work. I went from place to place, and got only a gruff answer—"No, sir;" "No, sir." No one wanted me. It seems as if the Son of God must have had something of that feeling down here; no one wanted Him. The world did not want Him; it took Him and put Him to death. If He should come into this audience, and go from seat to seat, would you say "No, Jesus, I do not want you; go thy way this time;" or would you open your heart and let Him in? In one place it speaks of his locks being wet with the dews of the night. Oh, may God help every unsaved soul here to receive the Son of God. He has gone up on high to make room there for us. We are told in one place that He looked towards heaven and sighed. He saw sickness and disease and death all around Him, and no one wanted Him, so He looked towards home. I can imagine He was home-sick. There He was loved by all. Oh, sinner, won't you have this rejected King? Won't you do as Martha and Mary did—receive Him into your heart and home this very hour?

A BIT OF PAPER.

OPPOSITE me in the car sat a man whose face interested me greatly. It was handsome, without that extreme perfection of feature which so often indicates lack of character. I read noble traits there, but intuitively I felt that they had been dwarfed by evil influences. His brow was large and intellectual, his mouth firm and beautiful, save for a cynical expression which I thought habitual rather than natural. What had first attracted my attention, however, was an eager unrest in his fine brown eyes. I mentally said, He has drained the world's cup to the dregs, and concludes there is not any good thing left, while involuntarily the good in his nature is seeking and still hoping for something real and true.

My thoughts were interrupted by his saying eagerly: "For God's sake, madam, if you have any pity—" I turned in the direction of his glance, and found a woman at my side in a convulsion. My heart was at once aroused to fullest sympathy. I supported the poor sufferer as best I could while the gentleman stopped the car and himself assisted in carrying her to an adjacent drug store, in the ante-room of which was fortunately a comfortable lounge. In our efforts to resuscitate her I unfastened her dress. As I did so a well-worn purse fell out. I immediately searched its contents for some clue to her identity, but in vain. There were a few silver pieces, and a slip of paper, on which was written in a cramped hand these words: "The Blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." The poor woman, conscious, though unable to speak, smiled as her eyes fell upon the paper, and reached out her trembling hand to receive it.

When she was at last able to give us her address, we hired a cab and took her home. On our way thither she gave us a sketch of her history. It was the old story of poverty, distress, and widowhood. Her heart had been full of rebellion for the heavy sorrows laid upon her until one day she had strayed into "a Moody Meeting," where she heard the words which had carried such a blessing to her soul. "I would not remain long," she recounted. "I had dropped in partly to rest, partly from curiosity; but as I left the building Mr. Moody uttered that sentence. It clung to me all the way home, and I did not rest until I had written it on that bit of paper. I read it over and over again until I knew it was true—true that I was a sinner, and true that Jesus could wash me clean, even me. I had no one to teach me what to do, only the Spirit led me. Since then my life has not seemed so hard. I am a seamstress; had been down town to take home my work and receive the miserable pittance for my labour. Years ago I was subjected to these bad spells. I suppose my sewing late at night has brought them back. It will go hard with my little ones when I can no longer work, but if the Lord Jesus is able to cleanse my sin, He is able to care for them. That little slip of paper is my best treasure."

"I will give you gold for it," said the strange gentleman, drawing a piece of money from his pocket. For a moment a vision of the comforts it would buy must have flashed through her mind, but remarking his sceptical look, her faith stood the test. "You would tempt me, sir. No, I will not sell God's best blessing to me."

"Do not refuse him," I said; "it may do for him what it has done for you."

In an instant her features lighted up. "Oh, take it, sir," she urged, "without the gold. God's grace is 'without money, without price,' and may he bless it for your happiness and good." He took it from her hand and dropped it carelessly into his vest pocket. All through he had shown the forethought and tenderness of a woman, but now his face settled back to the old expression.

We found the home of our charge to be poor and bare enough, though neat in the extreme. After a few kind words the gentleman left us, and after his departure we found on the table a twenty-dollar gold piece.

I afterwards secured plain sewing for the woman from private individuals, which paid her better with just half the toil. Her health improved, and in time she was enabled to move to a better locality. I interested friends in her behalf and fitted her children out for school. So her prospects brightened.

Two years had passed, and one morning, as I was walking down Broadway, I saw a gentleman descending the steps of the Astor House and watching me intently. He hesitated a moment, then hastened towards me with outstretched hand. Somewhat embarrassed, I said, "Your face, sir, is familiar, but I cannot name you."

"Did we not together act the part of 'good Samaritans' towards a poor creature in distress?" Then of course I knew him and said so. "You will please pardon my taking advantage of that chance meeting to address you now, but I am interested to know the fate of the person we befriended. I left town that night for my home in the Far West, and this is my first return to New York. I consider my meeting with you to-day a most happy coincidence."

I told him of course all the above facts regarding the woman, and he seemed much gratified.

"Will you see her again?" he asked. I replied in the affirmative.

"Then give her this, please," he added, taking from his memoranda the memorable slip of paper, "and tell her it proved a blessing as she prayed it might. I, too, know and feel that the 'blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin.'"

Having sons of my own, my motherly heart became more than ever interested in the young man, and I invited him to my house, where he gave me a glimpse of his past life, and a full description of his conversion.

Reared in wealth, he had become a devotee of the world, until, satiated with its pleasures and its sins, he grew tired of life itself. He became sceptical as to the existence of any real good, and yet his heart continually longed for something, he knew not what.

The woman's simple story of her faith, told when his heart was softened by the suffering he had seen, greatly impressed him. The paper she gave him seemed, he explained, like a "live thing in his pocket." The words haunted him day and night until he was thoroughly convicted and converted.

I thought it a beautiful illustration of God's providence, and it strengthens my belief that there is no such thing as chance, but that

New Departure in Emigration Work.

By Mr. Wm. Quarrier, Glasgow.

WHEN we started for Canada this year our intention was to visit the North-West territory, of which we had heard so much, to see what prospects there might be of openings for the advancement in life of our elder lads who are ready to take up lands for themselves; and also that we might be able from personal knowledge to answer the many inquiries which are addressed to us from time to time. Circumstances prevented us from accomplishing our proposed visit this year, but we hope at a future date to overtake it. From meeting in Canada with a number of lads who went out in former years, and with others who have come home to visit us, and returned again to their adopted country, it has been impressed upon our minds that in our relationship as guardians we ought to be in a position to give the deserving among them who have grown to manhood or womanhood some help in starting them in educational, agricultural, or commercial pursuits. The Government of Canada has intimated that about £120 would be sufficient to enable a young man to settle down on 160 acres of free grant land in Manitoba, and provide him with a house, stock, and implements to begin with. Many of our lads are qualified to manage farms of their own, but want of capital, and the high rate of interest charged on the other side, is an insuperable barrier to most of them.

We propose, therefore, to lend to such as prove themselves deserving, and have abilities for the work, the necessary capital, without interest, say £120, on security, to be paid back in yearly instalments, not less than the amount of interest would be. We estimate that the capital would thus be paid back in from five to ten years, and we would have it again in our possession to help others. A friend who has liberally contributed towards the emigration work in the past has agreed to give the amount necessary to start one, and we trust others will follow his example by giving the whole amount, or part of it, that we may be in possession of means to still further help the hundreds who are now rising up to fill useful places in the land of the West. We think the Government would give us a section of land, so that the lads might settle down under favourable circumstances, and become a blessing to one another and to the country. The project, we believe, would be a stimulus to many of the lads who are content to remain as they are because of the hindrances in their way through want of capital. We throw out the suggestion, and leave the Lord to decide the matter by the amount of money He shall send for the purpose.

For the Young.

A HAPPY CHRISTMAS.

HAPPY, happy Christmas
Be yours to-day!
Oh, not the failing measure
Of fleeting earthly pleasure;
But Christmas joy, abiding.
While years are swiftly gliding,
Be yours, I pray,
Through Him who gave us Christmas Day!

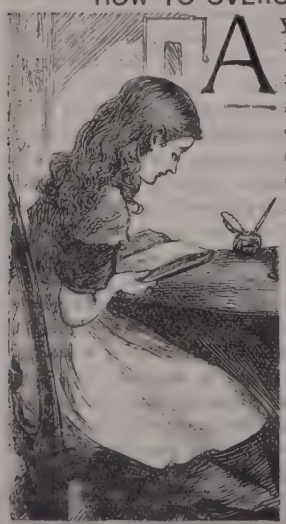
THE HEART CHANGED.

A LITTLE fellow in India once explained the change he had experienced thus:—"Once," said he, "my heart was as hard as a stone; now it is as tender as my eye."

Jesus is my Leader,
Jesus is my King;
Jesus makes me happy,
And of Him I'll sing.

"SO PLEASED TO MIND."



"I OFTEN wish that I could mind God as my dog minds me," said a little boy, looking thoughtfully on his shaggy friend; "he always looks so pleased to mind, and I don't."

THE TIME TO SERVE GOD.

WE visited a woman of ninety, as she lay on her last bed of sickness. She had been hoping in Christ for half a century. In the course of conversation she said: "Tell all the children that an old woman, who is just on the borders of the grave, is very much grieved that she did not begin to love the Saviour when she was a child. Tell them, 'Youth is the time to serve the Lord.'"

HOW TO OVERCOME.

A YOUNG girl said the other day to a friend, "Since I gave my heart to Jesus my lessons seem easier, and everything at home moves more smoothly." Yes, everything is different when Jesus is in the heart. Rough places are made smooth, crooked places straight, and hard things become easy because we have such a wondrous helper.

Lo! He stands and calls to thee:
"What wilt thou then have of Me?"
Rise, and tell Him all thy need;
Rise,—He calleth thee indeed.

HARRY'S LANTERN.

SOME time ago, one Christmas Eve, Harry was sent on an errand. After giving him his message, his mother said, "Be sure you take the lantern with you, Harry." "What do I want with the lantern?" asked the boy; "I know the way fast enough." But very soon Harry found he was mistaken. First he stumbled into a hole, then he fell into a ditch, returning home covered with mud and bruises. The lantern would have saved him from all this. How foolish he was not to have taken it! But what shall be said of those who refuse to take God's Word as the lamp unto their feet, and the light to their path? Are they not still more foolish?

RUTH'S HAPPY CHRISTMAS.

RUTH was an orphan. When her father died the pretty cottage had to be left, and Ruth and her mother were obliged to go to work. Ruth had given her heart to Jesus, and her happiness could be seen in her bright beaming face.

Polly Smith was glad to know Ruth Hampson, for Ruth had led her to the Saviour. A few days before Christmas, as Polly was singing to the baby that beautiful hymn,

"Just as I am, without one plea,"

the heart of her father was touched, and that very day he believed in Jesus, and was saved.

Mr. Smith had been out of work for some weeks, so that the little family could not look forward to a very bright Christmas-time. But it had struck Mrs. Hampson and Ruth that the hamper of good things that had been sent might be shared with the Smiths; so an invitation was given. How delighted were they when they entered the room on Christmas Day, and were welcomed by Ruth and her mother! What joy seemed to dwell in that humble home! Over the fire-place were the words, "Peace on earth," and several paper flowers and bits of holly decorated the few pictures on the wall.

A very happy day was spent by the little company, especially by Ruth and her mother, for the Lord Jesus Himself said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Abridged from "Ruth's Christmas."

O BIRD, warbling your passionate trill,
Bearing your burden to forest and rill;
Speed away! on your swift, rapturous wing,
Take to dear hearts the message you bring:
"Some duty God giveth,
To great and to small,
And none of us liveth
For self, but for all." H. M. W.

"I'VE FOUND CHRIST!"

A YOUNG convert in Ireland, whose countenance told of the happiness of his soul, was asked by a bystander, "What is it that makes you so happy?" He replied, "I've found Christ; He has saved me; and if that is not enough to make a person happy, I do not know what is."

"GOOD BYE, JESUS HAS COME."

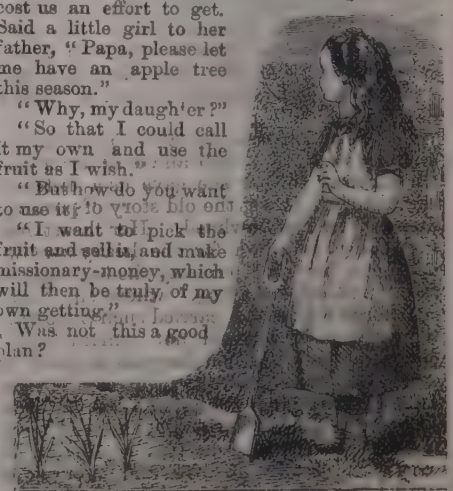
A MOTHER had a little boy who was dying; he looked out of the window, and said he saw dark mountains over there, and asked his mother if she wouldn't take him in her arms and carry him over the mountains. Then Eddie said, "Don't you hear the angels, mother? O take me!" She told him that Jesus would take him, and the little fellow prayed, and then opened his eyes, and said, "Good bye, mother; Jesus has come."

"I KNOW GOD HEARS ME."

A LITTLE girl being asked, "Why do you pray to God?" replied, "Because I know He hears me, and I love to pray to Him." "But how do you know He hears you?" Putting her little hand to her heart, she said, "I know He does, for there is something here that tells me so."

A GOOD PLAN.

WE feel far happier when we give to the Lord something of our own—something that has cost us an effort to get. Said a little girl to her father, "Papa, please let me have an apple tree this season."



"Why, my daughter?"

"So that I could call it my own and use the fruit as I wish."

"But how do you want to use it?"

"I want to pick the fruit and sell it, and make missionary-money, which will then be truly of my own getting."

Was not this a good plan?

The Story of a Robin.

IN the lonely days of autumn
When the nights were growing chill,
When the blast across the moorland
Round the house came moaning shrill,

Paler grew our infant Mabel,
And the sunshine of her eyes
Faded, as the golden twilight
In the days of summer dies.

Well we knew the hour was coming
When our sunbeam would depart,
And we sought to still the sighing
Of each other's heavy heart.

At the brook beyond the garden,
Where our dear one used to play,
Loudly rushed the swollen current
On the sad November day.

O! how lifeless looked the tree tops
Through the dewy window pane,
And the birdies in the branches
For their playmate called in vain.

Everywhere there seemed a whisper
Through the stillness and decay—
Mabel to the land of shadows
Soon, O soon, must haste away.

Came at last the dark December,
Then within the tiny bed,
Resting patient on the pillow,
Lay our darling's aching head.

To her room a robin redbreast
Through the window-lattice flew,
Close beside the bed he settled,
And the omen well we knew.

For a weird unwelcome echo
In each bosom strangely stirred,
As we caught the tender grief-note
Of the plaintive little bird.

There he rested, tame and fearless,
Never leaving till the day
When our Mabel's happy spirit
Burst its bond of earthly clay.

When it soared on angel's pinions
To another home on high,
Where the flow'rets never wither,
And no teardrops dim the eye.

Fled he then; but in the spring-time,
When had passed our night of pain,
And the earth broke forth in singing
For her brightness come again,

Lo! he lighted on the threshold,
As if downward from above
Had he come to bear a message
From the land of light and love.

What it was we never doubted;
O! the rest that Jesus gives—
In the fair unclouded Eden
Mabel with the Master lives.

Sympathy.

BY CATHERINE SHAW.

"I'M so hungry, little Miss; can't you give us a piece of bread?"

"I hasn't dot any bread," answered little Alice, in her white dress and crimson hat and sash, edging back against the seat of her father's elm tree; for she felt a little bit frightened of the ragged boy in his torn grey clothes and tattered shirt, who looked so utterly forlorn and miserable.

"Not a bit at 'ome?" asked the boy, persistently.

"Oh yes, lots!" said Alice, looking round nervously.

"And you can't spare me a bit?" asked the boy, reproachfully.

"Haven't you got no mo'ver? She would give you p'enty."

"I haven't got no mother. There now."

Alice's eyes began to grow dim in pity. After all, if this ragged boy had no mother, how could he have anything nice; for did not her mother do all for her?

"I'll wun in and ask my mo'ver," she said then, "'cause she says we ought to love poor children: only I forgot." Then, stopping short, and raising her eyes beseechingly to his face, she gently added—

"But mo'ver says Jesus never forgets."

The Angels' Song.

LIST to the Angels' song!
Borne on the wings of thought, to us, along
The vistas of the year;
We catch the chorus still,
"Peace unto men, goodwill,
And to our God, glory through highest spheres;
Good tidings"—so they sing—
"Of joy, great joy, we bring,
For unto you a child is born this day,
A Son, a Saviour, who shall take away
His people's sins, and reign in righteousness."
Jesus, the name by which He comes to bless,
Jesus, the name which we with joy confess,
While angels tell,
He comes with us to dwell,
As Christ the Lord; Jesus Emmanuel!

Postal Evangelisation.

M. DARDIER, of Geneva, has issued an interesting report of the work of disseminating scriptural truth in France by means of the post, in which he has been engaged for the past twelve years. Selecting his tract or book according to the rank and education of the person who was to receive it, he sent it forth prayerfully, accompanied generally by an autograph or printed letter.

After the circulation of various tracts in this manner by M. Dardier, an invalid Christian lady became interested in his work, and, at her own expense, printed an edition of 4000 copies of the Count de Gasparin's book, "Le Bonheur." Madame de Gasparin also presented 2000 copies of her husband's work, "La Famille," as well as some of his other books. These were sent to judges, préfets, and other public functionaries. Many encouraging letters were received in reply, some of them asking M. Dardier to forward to the writer a copy of the New Testament.

Perhaps the most important work done by this agency has been the sending of 40,405 New Testaments to the teachers of the young in sixty-six different departments of France. The wish of M. Dardier's heart is now to be able to send others into the twenty remaining departments. The British and Foreign Bible Society having made a grant of 500 Italian Testaments, some of these were sent to teachers in the island of Corsica.

No paid agents being employed, all the money spent is expended in books and cost of postage: when the coffers are empty the work stops. M. Dardier urges the formation of associations of three or four Christians in various places to undertake to send books to different classes of people in the French towns near which they reside

CHRISTMAS POEMS.

THE ROAD TO HEAVEN.

By Mr. G. R. SIMS.

HOW is the boy this morning? Why do you shake your head?
Ah! I can see what's happened—there's a screen drawn round the bed.
So poor little Mike is sleeping the last long sleep of all;
I'm sorry—but who could wonder, after that dreadful fall?

Let me look at him, Doctor,—poor little London waif!
His frail barque's out of the tempest, and lies in God's harbour safe;
It's better he died in the ward here, better a thousand times,
Than have wandered back to the alley, with its squalor and nameless crimes.

Too young for the slum to sully, he's gone to the wonderland
To look on the thousand marvels that he scarce could understand.
Poor little baby outcast, poor little waif of sin!
He has gone, and the pitying angels have carried the cripple in.

Didn't you know his story?—Ah, you weren't here, I believe,
When they brought the poor little fellow to the hospital, Christmas Eve.
It was I who came here with him, it was I who saw him go
Over the bridge that evening, into the Thames below.

'Twas a raw cold air that evening—a biting Christmassy frost—
I was looking about for a collie—a favourite dog I'd lost.
Some ragged boys, so they told me, had been seen with one that night
In one of the bridge recesses, so I hunted left and right.

You know the stone recesses—with the long, broad bench of stone,
To many a weary outcast as welcome as monarch's throne;
On the fiercest night you may see them, as crouched in the dark they lie,
Like the hunted vermin, striving to hide from the hounds in cry.

The seats that night were empty, for the morrow was Christmas Day,
And even the outcast loafers seemed to have slunk away;
They had found a warmer shelter—some casual ward, maybe—
They'd manage a morning's labour for the sake of the meat and tea.

I fancied the seats were empty, but, as I passed along,
Out of the darkness floated the words of a Christmas song,
Sung in a childish treble—'twas a boy's voice, hoarse with cold,
Quavering out the anthem, of angels and harps of gold.

I stood where the shadows hid me, and peered about until
I could see two ragged urchins, blue with the icy chill,
Cuddling close together, crouched on a big stone seat—
Two little homeless arabs, waifs of the London street.

One was singing the carol, when the other, with big round eyes—
It was Mike—looked up in wonder, and said, "Jack, when we dies
Is that the place as we goes to—that place where ye're dressed in white?
And 'as golden 'arps to play on, and it's warm, and jolly, and bright?

"Is that what they mean by 'eaven, as the mission coves talks about,
Where the children's always happy, and nobody kicks 'em out?"
Jack nodded his head assenting, and then I listened and heard
The talk of the little arabs—listened to every word.

Jack was a Sunday scholar, so I gathered from what he said,
But he sang in the road for a living—his father and mother were dead;
And he had a drunken granny, who turned him into the street—
She drank what he earned, and often he hadn't a crust to eat.

He told little Mike of heaven, in his rough, untutored way,
He made it a land of glory, where the children sing all day;
And Mike, he shivered and listened, and told his tale to his friend,
How he was starved and beaten—'twas a tale one's heart to rend.

He'd a drunken father and mother, who sent him out to beg,
Though he'd just got over a fever, and was lame with a withered leg;
He told how he daren't crawl homeward, because he had begged in vain,
And his parents' brutal fury haunted his baby brain.

"I wish I could go to 'eaven," he cried, as he shook with fright;
"If I thought as they'd only take me, why I'd go this very night.
Which is the way to 'eaven? How d'ye get there, Jack?"
Jack climbed on the bridge's coping, and looked at the water black.

"That there's one road to 'eaven," he said, as he pointed down
To where the cold Thames water surged muddy and thick and brown.
"If we was to fall in there, Mike, we'd be dead; and right through there Is the place where it's always sunshine, and the angels has crowns to wear."

Mike rose and looked at the water, he peered in the big broad stream,
Perhaps with a childish notion he might catch the golden gleam
Of the far-off land of glory. He leaned right over and cried,
"If them are the gates of 'eaven, how I'd like to be inside!"

He stood but a moment looking—how it happened I cannot tell—
When he seemed to lose his balance, gave a short, shrill cry, and fell—
Fell over the narrow coping, and I heard his poor head strike
With a thud on the parapet under, then splash in the Thames went Mike.

* * * * *

We brought him here that evening. For help I had managed to shout—
A boat put off from the landing, and they dragged his body out;
His forehead was cut and bleeding, but a vestige of life we found;
When they brought him here he was senseless, but slowly the child came round.

I came here on Christmas morning—the ward was all bright and gay
With mistletoe, green, and holly, in honour of Christmas Day;
And the patients had clean white garments, and a few in the room out there
Had joined in a Christmas service—they were singing a Christmas air.

They were singing a Christmas carol when Mike from his stupor woke,
And dim on his wandering senses the strange surroundings broke.
Half dreamily he remembered the tale he had heard from Jack—
The song, and the white-robed angels, the warm bright heaven came back.

"I'm in heaven," he whispered faintly. "Yes, Jack must have told me true!"
And as he looked about him, came the kind old surgeon through.
Mike gazed at his face a moment, put his hand to his fevered head,
Then to the kind old doctor, "Please, are you God?" he said.

Poor little Mike! 'twas heaven, this hospital ward to him—
A heaven of warmth and comfort, till the flickering lamp grew dim:
And he lay like a tired baby in a dreamless, gentle rest,
And now he is safe for ever where such as he are best.

This is the day of scoffers, but who shall say that night,
When Mike asked the road to heaven, that Jack didn't tell him right?
'Twas the children's Jesus pointed the way to the kingdom come
For the poor little tired arab, the waif of a London slum.

AN ADVENT HYMN.

AROUSE, arouse, ye careless ones,
Nor slumber at your posts;
With mighty strides your Leader comes,
He is the Lord of Hosts!

Is this a time to sit at ease,
And fold your listless hands,
When Omega will soon be here,
To make his just demands?

E'en now amid the rebel camps,
He walks in humblest guise;
His glory veiled, though heavenly grace
Beams from his loving eyes.

No rest is his, for all the night
He toils the lost to find;
The sick to heal, the weak to help,
The broken heart to bind.

See where his blood-stained flag of truce
Waves o'er the souls of men;
Rush in, rush in, bring out the dead,
They all shall live again!

Lo, groups of little children dear
Around his banner crowd;
Poor tender lambs! affrighted all,
They weep and cry aloud.

They sob for parents, sisters, friends,
They mingle groans with tears;
Go, show them Jesus—tell them He
Can take away their fears.

What? do ye say the night is dark,
Too dark to see a face;
Shame on ye, shame! where are your lamps,
And where the oil of grace?

Behold the lovely Orient,
Aglow with golden light;
And soon the Sun of Righteousness
Shall chase away the night.

Arouse, arouse, the morning breaks,
The dawn is ushered in;
You slumber long—the day's at hand—
For Jesus fight and win!

EVANGELA.

THE MIDNIGHT WORKER.*

By Mrs. SEWELL.

THE long winter's night was stealing away,
The millions of London slept;
But many a window was glimmering still
Where's Poverty's vigil was kept.

One storm-battered house by the dark river's side Showed ever a flickering flame;
And hour after hour, through the silent night,
That light flickered on the same.

Who's burning that light? for the midnight hand
The clock is now striking one;
A button-hole maker sits there at her work,
A widow she is, and alone.

The swift-flying needle has dropped from her hand,
She steals to her children's bed;
She kisses them softly, and tenderly strokes
Each dear little slumberer's head.

"Oh, babies! my babies!" she wearily sighed,
"I wish I could lie down and sleep;
But sleep may not rest on my eyelids to-night—
I must work, but I may not weep.

"Your father lies deep in his snow-covered bed,
And I'm almost glad he is there!
Did I say I was glad? Oh, no! Robin, no!
But I promised you not to despair!

"I'll sit down and think—It is now long ago
Since I had the time for thought—
I'll sit and think over a minute or two
The changes that death has brought.

"But first let me think: he departed in peace,
He hoped all his sins were forgiven;
He trusted in God, and he's gone to his rest—
To his rest with the blessed in Heaven.

"I'll thank God for that! though I'm left here alone,
Though the babies are both so small;
I'm father and mother, and woman and man,
With one pair of hands for all.

"Poor Robin said, 'Maggie, 'tis best not to think;
By thinking—you're like to go mad;
Take things as they come, and do for the best,
And never look out for the bad.'

"But oh! I must think—I've the money to earn,
And there's to make both ends meet;
The rent must be paid, and light must be had,
And we must have something to eat.

"How can it be done? I have button-hole work,
And cannot get other to do;
Five pennies, and thirty-six holes to make,
With that I shall never pull through.

"I'll work all the day, and most part of the night,
Nor trouble to think it is late;
But I'm not the woman that once I was,
Though now I'm but twenty-eight.

"And should I be ill! Oh! I daren't think of that,
So many poor women go mad;
My dear Robin said it was dangerous sport,
To look out for anything bad.

"But suppose I were ill, and the rent was unpaid?
There's no choice for me but one:
The workhouse for them, and the madhouse for me,
Good heavens! Could nothing be done?

"'Tis said God is good—Ah! I wish I knew how Poor folks could get under his care,
They say—if we pray—we shall never know want!
Oh! I wish I could pray that prayer.

"I can't see it through, and my thoughts run wrong;
I cannot tell wrong from right;
I doubt I am wicked—I hope I am not—
But I'm often bewildered quite.

How can I be good here, with nothing but work?
Working on—slaving on day and night;
With nothing to hope for, with nothing to look for,
But morning without any light.

"And then the poor children, in this naked room,
They are clinging about me all day;
They make me so nervous—and then I am cross,
And drive them both out of the way.

"Do none of the ladies who live at their ease,
With store of good clothing to wear,
Who sit without work by their beautiful fires,
And plenty of coals to spare:

"Do none of them know—day following day,
To toil under deepening gloom? night,
Do they know what it is, in the dead of the night,
Half frantic to pace the room?

"No—none of them ever were driven so far
As the famishing gasp for life;
Beneath the hard hand of oppression to writhe,
To struggle and fail in the strife.

"And then follow on to the uttermost end,
A dreary and tearless despair,
With blackness and barrenness closing you in,
And emptiness everywhere.

"But foolish I am to be going on so—
I'm meaning to work like a slave:
I mean to do all that a woman can do.
Poor Robin! he said I was brave.

"I can't see it through—but my thinking won't do;
I'll work, and I'll do for the best;
And I'll trust in God, as my poor Robin did—
I'll trust Him and leave all the rest."

The grey chilly morn looked into the room,
Through the curtainless window pane,
The swift flying needle and resolute hand,
Were fighting the battle again.

THE CHRISTMAS GUEST.

"Immanuel, God with us."—MATT. i. 23.

O THOU great Friend of sinners, Prince of Peace!
Come, be our Friend, and bid all tumult cease.
Enter our home at this blest Christmastide,
And be our Guest; come and with us abide.

We make Thee room, we open wide the door,
Come in, O Lord, and thence go out no more.
We would for Thee a sacred feast prepare.
Come! sup with us, O Christ, on heaven's own fare.

To such a King, we fain would give our best,
Honoured to be the hosts of such a guest.
Enter our home at this blest Christmastide,
Come, Saviour King, and with us now abide.

Enter, O Christ, and let nought greet Thine ear,
But such as it is fitting Thou shouldst hear.
Let thy keen searching eyes no actions see
But such as are well pleasing unto Thee.

Take thou the vacant chair, and let us see
That no incourtesy is marked by Thee.
Serving each other may we gain Thy smile,
Remembering Thee, but not with selfish guile.

So may we act thy presence to retain,
And so may we thy lasting favour gain.
Enter our home at this blest Christmastide;
Enter, O Christ, and with us now abide.

But there are homes, which long have closed the door
Against Thee; wilt thou visit them once more?
Knock loudly and more loud, perchance even yet
Their past unkindness they may sore regret.

Unkind they have been to thy tender love,
Which brought Thee from thy dwelling above,
And made Thee ask in their poor hearts a home.
Oh, show them, Saviour, wherefore Thou didst come.

They ope their doors to others; but when Thou
Dost knock thereat, they will not even allow
Their ears to hear, but shut them closer still,
And care not that the night is damp and chill.

Thou couldst the door break open, but I know
Thou surely never yet hast entered so.
Oh make them open, so wilt thou go in,
And they at last true Christmas joys begin.

Thy hands are laden with a plenteous store
Of Christmas blessings, but Thou hast still more,
And he who lets Thee in doth let in heaven,
For all good gifts with Thine own self are given.

Oh open many eyes this Christmastide,
Then shall the fast-closed doors fly open wide,
Then shall homes welcome Thee to be their guest
Thus will the Christmas be most truly blest.

FAIRELIE THORNTON.

Soldiers in Italy.

AS there were to be no Grand Manœuvres in Central Italy this year, Signor Capellini went in July to visit the Camps of Instruction in the South, where there were some regiments that were to come to Rome in September; he thus prepared the way for his winter's work. He was able to distribute many books and tracts, and had good reason to hope that his work would not be in vain. He subsequently visited the regiments quartered at Ricti and Spoleto, where he gave Bibles to those who had not yet received them.

The 11th of November being the fête of San Martino, is a military holiday. A special meeting was attended by a large number of soldiers, presided over by Rev. Mr. Gray, after whose opening words, Signor Capellini gave an address on "Luther." The following evening a meeting of a social character was held in the house of Signor Capellini. Many non-commissioned officers were present.

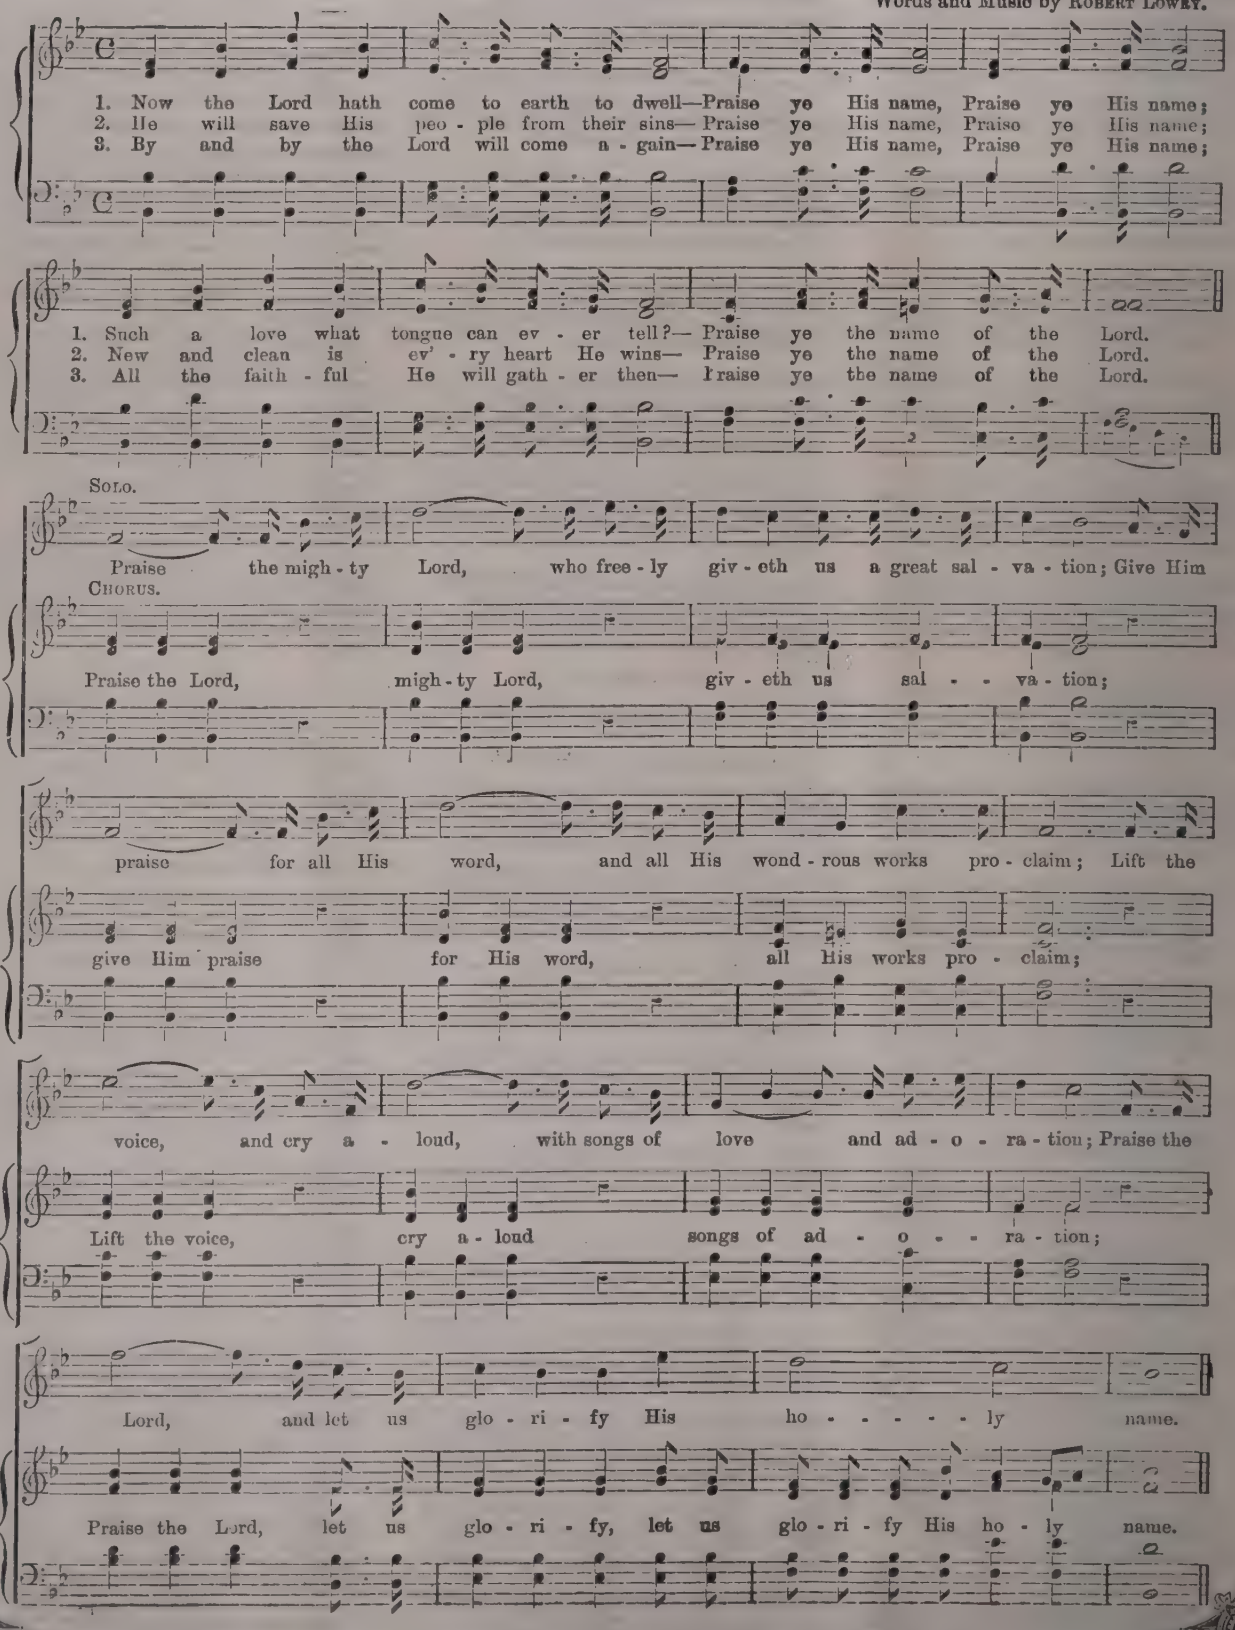
It is earnestly hoped that Christian visitors to Rome will go to see Signor Capellini, and make themselves personally acquainted with his work. His address is 14, Via Pozzo della Carnacchia, Rome. Reports can be had from Mrs. L. W. Fairley, 33, Holland-park, Nottinghill, W.

Pastor Jacob in Oroomiah.

I THINK the readers of THE CHRISTIAN will be interested in the following incidents which I have extracted from my father's last monthly report:—

"On a Saturday night, when I was sitting in my room, unexpectedly there came in three Mohammedans, young men. It seemed to me very much like the story of Nicodemus in the night. I inquired if they wished any things, Their reply was, 'Just to see you we come, and to hear God's Word from you, and pray with us, too.' I entered on religious subjects with them for a considerable time. They seemed to listen very eagerly to the Word of God. In closing in prayer they took off their hats, and in strains of joy repeated 'Amen,' and parted in expressions of gratitude to me. We have seen many similar cases with these poor anxious Mohammedan souls searching favourable opportunities to inquire for the way of salvation, but who dare not to do so for want of religious freedom.

"The other day I went to Shikeslano's house (which means the holiest of Mohammedans), when I found a very good opportunity to speak, while many were present. I tried to introduce the Gospel message, dwelling on the good results which issue from Christian governments, especially referring to Great Britain, and then marking the Turkish and Persian Empires, how wretched and corrupted are their countries and laws. This chief man acknowledged the good traits and admirable things which belong to Christians, and declared: 'Certainly they are much better than we are.' He could not deny what he learned of them.



"We have sixteen new converts from the Mohammedans. It is quite a little church. They seem to be very good in their behaviour and also try to convert some of their friends and neighbours to Christianity."

Christmas Hymn.

"PRAISE YE HIS NAME."

Words and Music by ROBERT LOWRY.

THE CITY OF REFUGE.

THE illustration represents the escape to the City of Refuge of the "manslayer" from his pursuer, as described in Deuteronomy xix. It is engraved, by permission, from a photograph of a panel by Mr. George Tinworth, the well-known "painter in terra-cotta." The photograph is one of many others published by Messrs. Doulton, of the Lambeth Pottery Works, in a very elegant volume, containing "A Critical Essay on the Life and Works of George Tinworth," by Edmund W. Gosse, with a descriptive catalogue annexed; illustrated by 30 plates. In his "Critical Essay" Mr. Gosse thus describes the panel we have engraved:—

"In his story of 'The City of Refuge,' Mr. Tinworth has given full indulgence to his love of parables. We see a section of the wall of the City. The door of mercy stands ajar, and has only just admitted the Shedder of Blood. The Avenger has almost caught him, and at the moment of his escape the enemy hurls the hatchet of Justice after him. It would strike and slay him, but a saintly form within closes the door, and Justice is foiled by Mercy. The Shedder of Blood falls swooning on the threshhold of the House of Forgiveness. With all this direct didactic purpose the realistic illustration is not neglected. Not only are the principal figures modelled with great alertness, but a crowd of bystanders outside the city watch the proceedings with intense interest. It is very rarely, even in the days of the Florentines, that a Scripture story has been seen so visibly, and rendered so vivaciously in art as this."

The following extracts from a sermon by Mr. Moody on this subject will form a striking appendix to the graphic representation of the artist.

EXTRACT FROM SERMON.

By Mr. D. L. MOODY.

While the children of Israel were on their wilderness way from the land of slavery to the land of Promise, Moses went to Pisgah and died, and Joshua led the people into Canaan. Joshua then received a command from God that he should erect six cities, three on each side of the Jordan, which were to be Cities of Refuge. These places were to be put sufficiently far apart to cover the whole land, so that any man, no matter where he might be when he should have occasion to seek a refuge, could easily gain access to one of them. The gates of these cities were to be open day and night, and the chief men of each city—the magistrates—were to keep the ways to these places free from all obstacles and stumbling-blocks, so that no one should be hindered in getting within the portals. Not only were the roads to be kept smooth and in good repair, but all the bridges leading over streams and rivers were to be kept up and in good condition; and, in order that the fugitive should be kept from straying, sign-posts were also to be placed at intervals along the road, to show him that he was on the right way. To provide for the contingency of the refugee being unable to read, there was a red finger put on the posts, which pointed the way. Thus a man, even if he could read, was not compelled to stop and lose time; he saw the sign and sped on. The cities were also placed on hills where everyone could see them. These cities were erected for this very purpose.

It was considered a great dishonour among the Israelites if, when a man was killed, his nearest relation did not at once arm himself, seek out the slayer, and kill him. Thus, if a man had accidentally killed anyone, he had no hope of saving his own life from the avenging hand of the brother or other relative, but by getting within the walls of the nearest city of refuge; the law declared that the moment he escaped thus far the relation of the slain man could not touch him.

Suppose I had killed a man unwittingly; he and I had been out chopping in the woods, and my axe had slipped out of my hand and had crushed in the skull of my companion. To get to one of these cities would be my only hope of escaping with my life. I should have had no time to loiter, no time to hesitate or argue, no time to consider. I should have to start at once. The brother of my companion who had been killed, though purely through accident, might be near, and be so incensed, or perhaps have some old score to pay off, that I should have no chance to stay and plead with him. He may have made up his mind to kill me, and there would be nothing left for me to do but fly.

I know the young man's hot temper, and I see him on my track. Therefore, I spring out of the bush into the road, and it now becomes a life and death struggle. I see the city of refuge before me. Along the road I speed to the full extent of my strength, down the hill I go as fast as I can; up the ravine I make my way. Men see me coming; they do not check me, or throw any obstacles in my path; they get out of my way, and as I pass they wish me "God speed," and warn me that the avenger is not far behind.

Now I am in full view of the city; the gates are wide open; I know I shall not have to stop and knock when I get up to them. When I get closer, I see the citizens are on the walls. The information has reached them that a poor refugee is coming. Some of them have had to flee themselves, and they sympathise with me. Thus they await me; but they see I am hard pressed. I am almost on the point of giving out; but I say to myself, "Courage! another effort and I shall reach the gates and be safe." Oh, if I can only reach the city If I stop, or loiter, or linger, I am lost. The avenger will soon be on me—I can almost hear him breathing behind me. I know his sword is ready to hew me down. I get nearer to the walls now; I can see the people plainly; they beckon me on with their hands. I strain every nerve. "Hurry, hurry, he is almost upon you—oh, he will be killed!" I bring every muscle into play. The people crowd around the gate to receive me. "Now, now," they cry. I make one more bound: I pass them; I am safe!

Sinner, God has a city of refuge for you. He shows you by every unmistakable sign where it is; and He gives you warning, that if you do not reach its friendly shelter you must die. Come, then! If you neglect the opportunity, how do you expect to save your life? Death is already on your track; how can you loiter when it is bearing down upon you? A little while, and you will be lost; but if you accept the salvation offered to you in Christ you will be safe. You can then say in triumph, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ!"

MR. DENHAM SMITH AT CLAPTON.

FRIDAY LECTURES TO CHRISTIANS.

DEAR SIR,—During the month of November Mr. J. Denham Smith was with us at Clapton Hall. I cannot tell how much we have been refreshed and benefited by his ministry—whether at the "Lord's Supper" (over 600 in fellowship), preaching to enormous and attentive congregations on the Lord's days, or lecturing on the Fridays, to large audiences. The burden of his heart seemed to be to stir up Christians, and to awaken them to a sense of their present obligations, and to the glorious future which awaits them as children of God and joint heirs with Christ.

Although I have been a Christian many years, whilst listening I felt ashamed that my Christian life had been so commonplace; and devoutly wished that I could live it over again, in order to be more consistent, and to be alive to our "calling and destiny." I was much struck by the remarkable earnestness of Mr. Smith's manner, and by the strength of his voice, together with the vigour, amplitude, and richness of language he employed. I have no doubt the secret of it was, he was conscious that the close of his ministry might not be far off. It seemed as if the glories of heaven were actually revealed to him; this made him treat of scriptural subjects as solemn and veritable realities, and not to be toned down or trifled with to suit the exigencies of the times. Throughout the month he urged us to make and to give time to reading and searching our Bibles; to make what we read our very own; to have more secret communion with God in prayer; to be Christians in the assembly; to have a family altar; to be more guarded in our words, ways, and tempers.

The Friday evening lectures were, two on "Christians indwelt by The Holy Ghost," and three on the "Calling and Destiny of the Child of God." Not only were Christians instructed and enlightened, but no opportunity was lost of speaking solemnly to the unconverted. I will endeavour to give as briefly as I can

THE LEADING POINTS OF THE LECTURES.

First he showed why it was expedient for the Lord to go away (John xvi. 7); and that the Comforter ("another comforter"), the promise of whom was given John xiv. 16, could not come until sin had been put away, and the temple (the body) purged. Whether Christians knew it or not, it was a fact that each believer was indwelt by the Holy Ghost. This was something beyond the mere knowledge of Salvation, although many were not living in the enjoyment of it. He would that each child of God realised its deep importance, so that the spirit, soul, and body might be consecrated to the Lord; then we should each be as another Enoch or Elijah on the earth. As there were Nazarites among the children of Israel, so there would be now, did Christians but know they were indwelt by the Holy Ghost; and also, by the adorable first and second persons of the Trinity (John xiv. 23,) "If a man love Me, we will come unto him, and make our abode with him".

Several ministries of the Spirit were referred to. He was to illuminate the child of God. The sun in the firmament illuminated God's works. The Spirit was to be as the sun. The deep things of God He would reveal—"Eye hath not seen, &c., but God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit." He was to furnish his temple (1 Cor. iii. 10). We shall have peace, joy, hope within, even if a word is not spoken by us. He is to lead us on and on. There will be no finality in heaven. Eliezer led Rebecca 300 miles. She was not willing to stop by the way, not satisfied until she had been brought to Isaac, and the converse by the way was of the riches of Isaac.

The Holy Ghost seals us. He is on us as a mark. Like goods sent from India to London, we are marked. We could know that we were indwelt by this blessed Spirit, which was the promise of the Father, by having a new nature given to us, and a new will. Partakers of the Divine Nature. This by means of the Word an incorruptible seed in us. A dove has no will to eat carrion; a raven, no will to eat the clean food of the dove; put the nature of the dove into the raven, and it will eat the food of the dove. For what did the Spirit come? He came down (Rom. v. 5) to fill the mind with the love which God had towards us. "God commended his love," &c., but the Holy Ghost sheds it abroad in our hearts. Gal. iv. 5 shows we are redeemed, bought. Nothing of mine is my own. Until the Holy Ghost came we could not call God Father; 6th verse, He came that we might have this privilege.

The moon, he was informed, if two miles from the earth would not shine; but she is 200,000 miles away, in the flood of the sun's light. Let us be so far away from the earth and earthly things, as to be buried in the glorious light of heaven.

The Holy Ghost is in us as an earnest or deposit of our inheritance (Eph. i. 13, 14). Christ came down to purchase everything; remember that the same Spirit which raised up Christ will raise us up. Let the riches of the divine Isaac, and the place He has gone to prepare for us in his Father's House, be our theme whilst sojourners here.

In the lecture on "The Calling and Destiny of a Child of God," he showed it was nothing less than our being conformed to the image of God's Son. Our resurrection from among the dead, and the judgment-seat (or tribunal, the more correct rendering) of Christ, were seen in the great line of the destiny. He wondered how anyone could live unless a child of God; and why Christians, knowing their calling and destiny, did not live more according to what God had revealed in his Word. He wished us to contemplate the Lord Jesus Christ, not as He was here, but as He is now and will be. For we are to be like that—predestined or set apart to be conformed to the image of his Son. In the beginning God said, "Let us make man in our likeness;" then caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam. In Adam we have the image of the One who died for us. When Adam woke he saw one by his side, a reflection of himself, the perfection of loveliness and beauty, one who was to share with him all that he had, not to be his servant. Ere a line of Scripture was written, we get in Eve an inkling of what God is going to do with respect to the Church: she was the image of the Adam (Rom. viii. 29). The redeemed are to be the admiration of Christ. Christ is to be marvelled at in us, He is to be admired in us; not in the angels, but we who were poor lost sinners; all will see in the Church not only the riches of his grace, but the manifold wisdom of God. When we think of Christ suffering on the cross on which he died, and that we are to share his throne, he was surprised we thought so little of it. When we think what we are yet to be, what manner of persons ought we now to be?

In the lecture on "The Resurrection from among the Dead," Mr. Smith said Scripture unfolded to us in the "deep sleep" of Adam, and in the quickening and raising up of Eve, that there was a resurrection. As Eve had the same life as Adam, the Church will have the same life as Christ. Several scriptures were quoted showing that a general resurrection was believed in, but that comparatively few Christians of the present day understood or believed in two resurrections—the one separated from the other by at least an interval of a thousand years. Two texts which appear to favour the idea of a general resurrection, are Dan. xii. 2, and John v. 28, 29. Rev. xx. 4, 5, however, clearly showed that between the two events and classes of persons alluded to in Daniel and John, though separated only by a comma, there was a great distance of time, of at least one thousand years. Revelation puts it clearly before our minds, "the rest of the dead," &c. Who were the subjects of the first resurrection? (John vi. 54.) Only the children of God will be then raised. If not so, how can we explain the meaning of the Saviour's words, repeated four times, "I will raise him up at the last day." To Martha and Mary He said, "I am the Resurrection and the Life," &c. The martyred dead and all departed saints will have part in the first resurrection of 1 Thess. iv. 13, 18. But the rest of the dead, &c. (Rev. xx. 5), who are they? The lost ones! The wicked dead. Think of those whose bodies have been in the grave all these ages past—Mosaic, prophetic, and our age—and who will be through the millennial age. Cain, and all like him, will have no heaven, but will be where, after the Judgment, the smoke of their torment will rise up for ever and ever. Mr. Smith closed this lecture with a most solemn appeal to the unconverted to look at the open arms of Jesus, who is saying to them, "Come unto Me," and "I will in no wise cast you out."

The closing lecture was on "The Judgment-seat of Christ." Following the resurrection of believers, there will be the Judgment-seat, or tribunal, of Christ. Death will bring us into contact with the living God. As there is not to be one general resurrection, so it is plain in Scripture that there will not be one general judgment; but that there will be special judgments. Rev. xx. 11, 12, seem to favour a general judgment, but it is a special one, a judgment out of "books." Christians will not be there, except to be with the judge, for all our sins have been blotted out. But instead of being judged, the saints are to judge the world, the nations, even angels (John v. 24). There would be at least a thousand years between the two judgments. 2 Cor. v. 10 should be rendered "tribunal;" where all the risen saints will appear. All will be "made manifest" there. My whole life from beginning to end, my indebtedness to his grace—even sins I did not see—shall be manifested to Him, and to myself; all accounts, as it were, will be settled, cleared, and gone for ever. He believed that his whole course would be seen, from his mother's knee to the grave. But we shall leave that tribunal clear; after that Christ will introduce us to the Father's house, and we shall reign over the earth with Him, and sit on his throne.

And what if we have to judge our own kin, if unsaved! Think of that, fathers; you will have to acquiesce in the "Depart ye cursed," &c. Seek every effort to save souls within your reach. Oh, wonder of wonders! when the righteous judgment of God fell on Christ, and He died impaled on a common tree, and uttered that bitter cry when forsaken by God. That is the ground upon which I can look calmly upon these coming events. "He that heareth my word, and believeth on Him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into judgment." There is the rock. There is the Gospel. It is now or never; to be saved or be lost; heaven or hell. Don't think of being lost, but now is the accepted time for being saved.

J. C. A.

P.S.—At a meeting for fellowship, Mr. John Morley gave to each one a copy of Mr. Denham Smith's new work, just published, "The Gospel in Hosea." A munificent gift, when it is considered that the hall was well filled.

WHAT IS JUSTIFICATION BY FAITH?

By Dr. ADOLPH SAPHIR.*

IT was not by reading the Bible with his own reason and understanding that Luther educed a system of theology which brought peace to his mind. Luther did not argue in this way—"The Bible is God's word, and therefore whatever is in the Bible I must believe: and Jesus is in the Bible, therefore I must believe in Jesus." That was not the method in which he arrived at peace; Jesus Christ Himself dealt with Luther's soul even as Jesus Christ dealt with the disciples on their way to Emmaus, opening as it were the doors of Scripture from within. It was Jesus manifesting Himself in the Scriptures that delivered Luther from bondage. This was the deliverance. With the true instinct of a convinced soul, he saw there is no forgiveness of sin which can be depended upon for time and eternity as real and divine, unless it is based upon righteousness. The Apostle Paul in like manner interprets the words of David, "Blessed is the man whose sin is forgiven." Pardon is based on righteousness. Righteousness without works.

It is only on the ground of righteousness that sin can be forgiven. When he read "the righteousness of God," he had always understood it to mean that we should have a righteousness to present before God, and that when we presented that righteousness before God, then there would be given to us the pardon of our sins. But when he studied the Epistle to the Romans, a new light dawned on him. The wisdom of God does not mean my wisdom concerning God, but God's wisdom which he communicates to me, making me wise. The strength of God does not mean my strength by which I serve God but it means God's strength which he puts into my soul. The righteousness of God does not mean the righteousness which I bring to God, but it means God's righteousness which He sends down from heaven—which He bestows upon me as a gift, with which He clothes me as a garment. It is a rock higher than I to which I am brought, that I may put my trembling feet upon it and be saved. It is the righteousness of God in Jesus Christ; the love of God, the source; the death of Christ on the cross, the channel; everlasting life, the blessed result.

"Oh, when I saw this," he said, "all Scripture was opened to me—nay, Paradise itself, and the heart of God. I ran through the whole Bible, and found that from beginning to end this was the love of God manifested to sinners." And thus he preached that glorious doctrine, or rather fact, of justification by faith.

What is justification? When a man is justified he is not made just, but simply declared to be just—looked upon as just—treated as just. To declare righteous—not to make righteous—that is the meaning of justify. Who justifies? God justifies. Whom does God justify? The ungodly. How can God justify the ungodly? Because they have an advocate. What manner of advocate is He who will defend ungodly people? It is a righteous one indeed—Jesus Christ the righteous. How can He plead for ungodly people? Because He was the propitiation for our sins. To what extent does God declare them righteous and godly? He absolves them from all their sins, but He receives their persons. Themselves He accounts just. It is the whole God who gives Himself unto the poor ungodly one; and it is the whole ungodly one, body, soul, and spirit, past, present, and future, in time and eternity, notwithstanding all his sins, whom this living God embraces as his own.

Can we know that we are justified? Know it? Assuredly we must know it. Did God send Christ to die on the cross, and leave us afterwards in uncertainty? The Holy Ghost, who convinces us of our sins, and shows us Jesus as our Advocate, works in us a perfect, sure, and joyous confidence, so that, being justified now by God, we have peace with Him.

And how does all this become ours? Simply by faith. Nothing but faith can receive this salvation of God. There is no room for anything else. It is all excluded. As boasting is excluded, so everything of ours is excluded. What then is Faith? Faith is not a work, Faith is not a merit, Faith is not a Grace, Faith is not a condition to be fulfilled. Faith is nothing else but the receiving of the Lord Jesus Christ. What is the organ that receives the Lord Jesus Christ? Light is received by the eye, sound is received by the ear; Jesus Christ is received by the heart, and when the heart receives Jesus the function of the heart is faith. And once the heart believes, it goes on always believing. It is an ever present tense, "he that believeth hath eternal life."

But how does the heart receive Jesus? Jesus is the Son of God; Jesus is pure and without sin; Jesus fulfilled all commandments; Jesus has all power in heaven and on earth; Jesus will come again to judge the quick and the dead. And yet this is not the Jesus whom the heart receives. The only Jesus received by the heart is Jesus dying on the cross for sinners. Only such a one as He, the Son of God, the blessed and Holy one, who obeyed all the commandments, and who glorified the Father on earth, and who is equal to the Father—only He could die for us on the cross; but even He could never have saved us except by his death on the cross. Therefore this is faith—to receive Jesus as He died for sinners. This the reformers preached, as the apostles preached—Christ the Saviour of sinners; Christ Jesus and Him crucified.

To understand what faith really is, it is helpful to remember that the emphasis lies so entirely on Christ, that we can dispense with the term "faith and believing," to avoid the danger of its character being misunderstood. Call it hearing the voice of Christ; looking unto Him who was lifted up; coming unto Him with our burden: it is the same thing. Christ, and Christ in his death; Christ only, and Christ freely offered, received by the sinner.

Cardinal Bellarmine truly defined the difference between the Roman view of faith and that of the Reformers, when he said, according to the one, faith was the act of the understanding, according to the other, the act of the will. It is the act of the will, of the heart, out of which are the issues of life, and therefore of the whole man; such a solemn, deep, and eternal transaction, that the soul can say, "My beloved is mine and I am his." "Faith is a living, joyous confidence in God's grace; so certain that I could die for it a thousand times."

Chamberí Mission, Madrid.

FROM a circular just issued by Mr. A. R Fenn, who is labouring in Spain, we make the following extracts. He says: "Since June, 1882, we have been graciously visited by the Holy Spirit's power. More than a hundred persons have been awakened, some of them saved; but a large proportion gave way before the opposition of facing neighbours and public opinion. A goodly number have been added to us; in all thirty-seven, men being the greater half. The Spaniards themselves, with only a little help from us, have taken a cottage in a most wretched, Godless place, and have gone regularly on Sundays and Wednesdays to teach poor children to read, and then hold a meeting for adults.

"Another evidence of life is their comtinuing faithfully to contribute towards the expenses of meetings and the relief of the sick; they also distribute tracts and Gospels, the latter being the gift of Mrs. Robertson, of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures.

"The schools, now five in number, have prospered. I have always to report them as fuller than ever. We now have 420 children under Bible instruction. From the beginning about 3000 have been taught more or less the Word of God and Gospel hymns. Miss Greser is doing valuable service in visiting and in the schools. A splendid field is open before us, prepared and sown, but where are the reapers? Messrs. Muller and Wright sustain the schools, but all else we look to God to supply by the willing gifts of his people."

Experiments on Hospital Patients.

THE Zoophilist, 1, Victoria-street, Westminster, S.W., contains full particulars of an important correspondence, and articles in the Standard, and also in the medical papers, on the subject of the recent experiments on hospital patients. The following statements will show the character of the revelations referred to:—

Two London doctors, both licensed vivisectors, have been, by their own confession, trying experiments with poisonous drugs on hospital out-patients. These experiments the Medical Times and Gazette (November 10) describes as "useless and cruel." It is for the public to pass final judgment on these experiments, and to decide whether the practice of vivisection be not now clearly proved to engender a reckless and pitiless spirit, which, instead of substituting animals for men, as has been pretended, soon learns to supplement the useless and cruel sacrifice of animals by still more useless and cruel experimentation on human beings. The articles on the subject in the British Medical Journal and the Medical Press and Circular are calculated to cause serious alarm as revelations of medical sentiment.

Amongst other correspondence is a letter to be specially commended to the attention of the friends of Temperance, proving, as it does, that the same "scientific research" which disregards the sufferings of animals, does not hesitate to incur the heinous guilt of converting a child of ten years old into a drunkard.

One marvellous result of the controversy on this subject is, that a London doctor of considerable repute and standing has been prompted by the excitement of the moment, to make The Standard, and through it, the British public, the confidante of the genuine sentiments of a "scientific" medical man, regarding the "vile bodies" of the unfortunate patients who seek relief in the public hospitals. No words of ours could add force to Dr. de Watterville's own contemptuous treatment of the rights of these men and women, whose crime it is to be unable to pay their doctors out of their own pockets.

A GOOD WORK IN SPAIN.

VISITORS travelling in Spain cannot fail to be struck with the glorious fact that that country is now open to the Gospel. Early in July last a young man from Escala called on us at the Mission-house in Figueras, and said that the people of his town would be very glad if we would visit them. Accordingly my husband and his brother set off in a small coach, and in a few hours reached Escala, which has a population of 3000, situated on the shores of the Mediterranean. They received a hearty welcome from the people, and lost no time in calling on the Alcalde (Mayor) to obtain permission to hold a meeting. Not only was this granted, but the Mayor very kindly proposed that his trumpeter should go round the town, and give out the following notice:—"By order of the Seno Alcalde of this town, I announce that there will be preaching of the Gospel in the theatre at eight o'clock to-night, GRATIS!" (See illustration.) At six o'clock our little party went to see that the building was in order, and to their surprise and pleasure found the place packed full, and so the service began at once, and the people listened eagerly for the first time to the "good news" of a free salvation.

On leaving, each person received a Gospel. One man to whom a copy was offered, said, "Thank you, but I have one. Do you not remember that on the day of the Fiesta of the Holy Cross at Figueras, you stood on one side of the road, and another gentleman on the other, giving little books to everyone who passed? You gave me one, and I should like to have the big Book." A New Testament was given to him and joyfully accepted. Only a fortnight ago a petition came to us from that interesting little town for us to preach the Gospel again there, and to open a Protestant school. We will gladly respond to the former part of this request, but lack of means makes it impossible to grant the latter.

We are most anxious, on our return to Figueras shortly, to start a Medical Mission, not only for the benefit of that town, but also for the sixty-three adjoining places, making a population of 78,000. The following incident will serve as an illustration of the need. A member of our congregation was taken ill. He firmly refused to see the priest, entreating his sister to send for the Protestant pastor, on which his mother was so angry that she actually turned him and the bed he was lying on into the basement below, which opens on to the street, saying, "Now leave my house, and never call me mother again." We had the poor man removed to a neighbour's house, where he was sheltered till his recovery. If only we had had a hospital, what a boon it would have been to that poor convert! How peaceful would have been the death-bed of my servant Antonia could she have been cared for by us, instead of in her last moments being harassed by fanatical relatives, rigid nuns, and the constant visits of the priest. There is a Roman Catholic hospital, but patients entering it are called upon to confess before seeing the doctor. In case of refusal, not having the cedula (paper of recommendation) from the resident priest, the poor patient is looked upon as unworthy of care or attention, and is consequently neglected, sometimes left to die.

THE MAYOR'S TRUMPETER ANNOUNCES THE GOSPEL MEETING.

Some provision ought surely to be made for the converts, so that when weakened by sickness they should not be exposed to the temptation to waver or deny their faith in order to obtain needed nursing and medical care. Are there not many Christians who, in their hours of sickness, have enjoyed every alleviation that money and loving care could procure? Will not they sympathise and help suffering ones in Spain? Besides being a provision for the converts, a Medical Mission would be a grand means of winning souls for Christ, who, when on earth, both healed and preached. It is only sixty-five years since the Inquisition was suppressed in Spain, and so recently as in May last five cartloads of human bones were removed from the inquisitorial dungeons of the Augustine monastery, not far from our Mission-house in Figueras. Does not the blood of the "Noble Army" of Spanish martyrs cry aloud to us to diffuse all over their land the glorious light of the Gospel, which the Church of Rome well-nigh extinguished for centuries?

Very little has yet been done for poor dark Spain. There has only been religious liberty for fourteen years, and in many parts the Gospel has never been preached. But now that the door is wide open, will not Christians aid us to enter in and win Spain for Christ? It cost the martyrs their life-blood, it costs the Lord's people self-denial in giving of their substance, and us our time, strength, and willing labour.

ENGLAND IN THE OLDEN TIME.

By EMILY SARAH HOLT.

In her latest book, Wearyholme (5s., J. F. Shaw & Co.), Miss Holt gives a vivid glimpse of the social and religious condition of the English people in the troublous times of the Restoration—what she calls "the showiest, giddiest, saddest period of English history." The following extracts will be read with interest, and, also, we trust, with a prayerful desire that God would deliver us from a return to any such "good old days" as are here described. The book is marked by all that literary grace and human interest that characterise Miss Holt's historical narratives. It is, perhaps, the most fascinating and profitable of all the stories that have come from her facile pen. The illustration refers to a very important incident in the tale: for a more specific explanation we must refer the reader to the book itself:—

"The Convention Parliament assembled, and General Monke, who only two months before had spoken against any recall of 'Charles Stuart,' openly admitted a messenger from that very person. A week afterwards a letter from 'Charles Stuart' was read in Parliament, wherein he offered, as the terms of his restoration, an act of oblivion to all except such as Parliament should be pleased to name for exception; and he promised to confirm the sales of Crown and Church property. The House thereupon voted a supply of £50,000 for the present necessity of 'Charles Stuart,' and after that vote, never called him so again. There were bonfires and rejoicings all over London that May-day evening, and one week later His Most Gracious Majesty King Charles the Second was solemnly proclaimed in Westminster Hall. Fortune's wheel had turned.

"Perhaps people generally are too apt to suppose that all the religiously-disposed persons in England constituted the 'country party,' and all the worldly and irreligious were to be found among the Cavaliers. This is far from being the case. Cromwell's Ironsides, as a rule, were men upon whom piety had a strong hold; but in many cases it was piety of a very strange and fanatical cast. It was the natural reaction from the hard and fast lines drawn by Laud and his followers. There can scarcely be a more remarkable testimony to the wisdom and moderation of the English Reformers than the small amount of eccentricity and fanaticism into which the freed Church ran under their direction. But moderate counsels were not in the ascendant now. Men vied with each other as to how far they could go in opposite directions. The mischief done by the Laudian leaven will, perhaps, never be worked out of the Church of England, not only as concerns the direction he took, but also the revulsion and reaction which ensued upon it.

"The Roundheads, as well as the Cavaliers, were far from being, all of them, God-fearing men. There was a large proportion of those men who go with the stream, and who will pray or swear, according to the custom of those around them. These were made manifest when the testing-day of the Restoration came. Some went off into the opposite camp without delay. Some stayed awhile, and suffered themselves to be gradually drawn over, as the old bonds grew weaker, and the new attractions became more enticing. Is it any wonder if the few who stood firm felt it needful to take a very firm stand indeed, and to yield no inch of ground to the enemy?

"But yet another and a more insidious foe had been at work. Jesuits had crept into the Parliamentary army, had donned the uniform of the Ironsides, and fought side by side with them. Both classes were fighting for liberty; but the one desired liberty to work for God, and the other wanted liberty to work for Satan. Before men raise the fascinating cry of 'Progress,' it is as well that they should ask themselves whither they are about to progress. 'The syren song of Liberty' was sung first of all by the serpent in the garden of Eden.

"The march of events now became exciting. King Charles entered London, with much pomp and show of rejoicing, on what we still term Royal Oak Day. A general amnesty was issued to all except the actual murderers of his father; the standing army was reduced to 4000 foot and 1000 horse, and the Civil List fixed at £1,200,000. Ten of the regicides were executed, and the populace, who had applauded them for twenty years, went to see the hanging as they would have gone to a play. The theatres, closed during the whole time of the Commonwealth, were re-opened at once, by a small company of gentlemen in the royal household, which explains why some companies of actors still describe themselves as 'Her Majesty's Servants.' Now gentlemen glistened in gold and silver, flowered materials, and costly lace; the ladies broke out into patches of court plaster on their faces, false hair, and gleaming jewels. This was a change indeed from the grave long coat, plain linen collars and bands, sober dark gowns, and severe general simplicity of the Puritan dress. It was evident that neither simplicity nor seriousness was to be the characteristic of the new order of affairs.

"In vain the disciples of George Fox attired themselves in leather, and denounced woe upon that wicked generation. In vain the Fifth Monarchy men planted beans upon St. George's Hills by way of taking seisin of the inheritance of the saints, and proclaimed that the coming of Christ was even at the doors, and that the set time was come for the virgin of Israel to set her face towards the Promised Land.* The march of events was too strong for either. The butterflies who had been revelling in the flower-garden of France for that period, met in the air, and the few protesting bees were lost in the cloud raised between them. They were swept off the scene,

> 'And all the pent-up stream of life
> Rushed downwards in a cataract.'

The King opened his hand, and showered honours, rewards, and fortune on—his enemies. The majority of his friends were forgotten. If they did not admire the arrangement, it did not concern him.

"The kind of morality which was henceforth to reign at Court was very quickly apparent. The men who had been used to the sober and decent, if somewhat severe, regulations of the previous age, withdrew from Court disgusted. There was one who could not withdraw, and whose heart was right with the Lord his God, in whose casue he had suffered little less than martyrdom.

"But God gave him not over to the will of his great enemy. He stooped and took Henry, Duke of Gloucester, away from that gaudy, glittering, vile, abominable Court to the land which is very far off; to the city whereinto shall enter nothing that defileth. It was 'far better.' Six weeks later the Dowager Queen landed in England—the mother who had sent that cruel message to Gloucester, that unless he consented to renounce Protestantism she would never see his face again.*

"God took her at her word. He kept his child safe, but even in his coffin she never saw his face again. The death of his eldest sister followed soon. The Queen, terrified for the safety of her youngest, fairest, and it would seem dearest child, hurried away in a genuine panic from the presence of the dreadful disease of which both her children had died. Small-pox was always peculiarly fatal to the House of Stuart.

* "Those persons are greatly mistaken who suppose 'Anglo-Israelism' to be a production of the nineteenth century. It was one of the principal tenets of the Fifth Monarchy Men."

"Christmas was now come, and King Charles was firmly established, with one item excepted. England was ready heartily to welcome back her Sovereign, but, as she plainly showed, she was not quite so ready to pay taxes for keeping him there. Perhaps the lavish way in which King Charles flung about the gold which she had poured at his feet had something to do with her disinclination to pour a further quantity. It was not flung to the impoverished Royalists who had melted down their plate for his father, that would have been excusable, but it was shared between pages of the back-stairs, yeomen of the robes, avenors, and huntsmen; thrown to vocalists and musicians, squandered upon spendthrift peers, and showered into the greedy extended hands of even less respectable persons. For eighteen years England had witnessed nothing of that sort; and when such a state of things arose among the quiet, high-toned, God-fearing men who for eleven years had been ranked among the foremost men in the land, is it any marvel if some of them protested loudly, but in vain, and others shook the dust from off their feet, and left the backsliders to their fate? It is so hard to row against the stream, and so much easier to moor your boat to the bank, and let the stream glide past you."

GOSPEL PROGRESS IN SICILY.

SIG. VARNIER reports that "persons of every class listen to the truth with great pleasure, and never fail to express the desire that the Gospel may speedily supersede the heathenish superstition of the Romish Church. In the villages people often say, 'Oh, that we had priests like you to teach us!' And in places where not long ago a Protestant minister would have been shunned as a very devil, he is now received with more deference and respect than the priests themselves. Twenty years since scarcely a person in the whole island possessed a Bible; now many, not only possess, but also read the blessed Book. The other day, as I was speaking to a number of working men at G——, one of them said that he had bought the Bible some time before for a few pence, and had found that it contained the most beautiful things; 'I read it in all my spare moments, and each time I did so I feel my heart drawn to God.'

"In Messina itself, progress is visible. The paper, La Parola Cattolica, established eighteen years ago for the purpose of assailing the Protestants, and patronised by Pius IX., in a special Brief, has ceased to appear through want of readers. Earnest Romanists, who at first thought it their duty to oppose us, are now approaching us with friendly feelings. About a fortnight since I was asked to visit a household noted for its attachment to the superstitions of the Church of Rome. At first I thought there must be some mistake, but to my surprise I was most kindly received by the lady of the house, who said that her son had heard me speak at the house of a friend, and on returning home had told her things which had filled her with surprise, as she had always been taught that the Protestants are blasphemers of God. I spoke to them for two hours, and prayed with them, and on leaving was requested to visit them again as soon as possible. Some time since some sailors from different ports came to our meeting, and were much impressed with what they heard. Since then they are continually bringing with them fresh friends, and so the tidings of the Gospel spread from place to place."

Signor Varnier relates further that a gentleman in a Government position is most zealous in the propagation of the truth. Not long since, his superior in the town where he happened to be expressed his surprise at finding him reading the Bible, a book which, he said, ought to be burned, as the Church had forbidden it to be read. A few days after, however, he asked for the loan of it. Soon a change was observable in his language and conduct; meeting his friend, he said, "You are right in saying that the Bible is the holiest of books. I find in it the depths of Divine wisdom. Until I read it I knew not what it is to be a Christian. I am now trying, by God's help, to be a follower of the Lord Jesus."

Signor Scuderi, colleague of Signor Varnier, reports that he has been heartily welcomed in the town where he has gone to live for a time. The station-master is helping him to get hold of the railway men. The Vicar, who was greatly opposed to this work at first, is now most friendly, saying that "the efforts the Romish Church is making are the last struggles of a drowning man." At M—— Signor Scuderi found himself surrounded by numbers of the people, eager to hear him speak. Questions were asked; on their being answered, "Sir, what you say is the truth," was the general rejoinder. Many have ceased going to mass, and are satisfied with prayer at home. The Mayor, with his three visitors, came to see Signor Scuderi. Hearing that the priest was ill, Scuderi went to see him, and was very kindly received. He expressed his regret at being in the position of a priest, but added, "What can I do at my age?" Scuderi urged him to do all he could to direct souls to the Good Shepherd. Whilst they were talking, a woman came, asking him to go and confess a sick relative, but he said, "There is no need for me to go; let her confess her sins to God, and trust in Him." The only person that shunned Signor Scuderi was the curate; but at length they met and conversed for a long time. He is a priest, and intended to remain such as long as he can. "But," said he, "the Romish Church has run its course, and is now on the way to perdition."

So the old superstitions are giving way, and the truth is spreading. Will our friends earnestly implore the blessing of God on these two brethren, whose itinerant labours are so welcomed in their own island of Sicily? ELISHA AND HAZAEL.

A BIBLE STUDY ON 2 KINGS viii. 11, 12.

THE visit of Hazael to Elisha is full of suggestiveness as to how the sight of sin should affect those who are the servants of God. We are told that when the prophet saw the perfidious servant who was to be the murderer of his master, and usurper of his throne, "he settled his countenance stedfastly, until he was ashamed, and the man of God wept."

Tears are by some considered a sign of weakness; they may be so sometimes, but more often they indicate true graciousness and nobility of nature. They did so in the case of David, who "beheld the trangressors, and was grieved" (Ps. cxix. 136, 158). Jeremiah, too, who mourned the degeneracy of his nation (Jer. ix. 1; xiii. 17; Lam. i. 16). Nehemiah also, chap. i. 4. Paul, in New Testament times, weeping over the "enemies of the cross of Christ" (Phil. iii. 18); or, again, in Acts xx. 19, 31. Our Divine Lord wept over the guilty city, (Luke xix. 41), and thereby set us all an example of tender-heartedness in view of sin and its consequences. A reference to Ezek. ix. 4 will show how the Lord approves this spirit of godly sorrow and concern on the part of his people.

WHY DID ELISHA WEEP?—Hazael asked the question. Notice closely Elisha's reply, v. 12. Three things account for the prophet's tears.

(a) Sin: "The evil thou wilt do." Sin is evil; the direct negation of all good is in every departure from God's way and Word. Sin is exceeding sinful (Rom. vii. 13), and the mere sight of it may well fill us with sadness. It should be a cause of loathing to us in itself and so a heart-melting power (Ps. xxxviii.). The sight of physical evil saddens, much more should moral.

(b) The Sinner: three times Elisha individualises the traitor. "Thou." His treachery, hardness of heart, influence for evil and deep depravity. His exposure to the wrath of God and sure doom as a worker of iniquity. We need to think more of the sinner as the slave of sin, the servant of the wicked one, the perishing and lost soul. We may condemn the sin, but let us feel compassion and grief in reference to the sinner (Hos. xi. 7, 8; Rom. v. 8).

(c) The Fruits of Sin. The evil done to the children of Israel. Social evils. National evils. Physical suffering occasioned by, judgment necessitated by. All the sorrows of the world spring from. The child of God cannot survey all these things and not be grieved (Job xxx. 25; Micah i. 8, 9; Joel ii. 17; John xi. 33; Rom. ix. 2.).

WHAT DID ELISHA'S GRIEF INDICATE CONCERNING HIMSELF?—It surely betokened that he was a man of God. See in it (a) The Godwardness of his mind. He saw Hazael's sin in God's light. Godliness places us as it were by the side of God, and makes us look at sin as from his standpoint. See this strikingly exemplified in the case of Moses (Exod. xxxii.). We are apt to think much of the human side of evil, not enough of how it grieves the Spirit of God, and dishonours and insults him (Is. i. 2—4; xliii. 21—24; Rom. iii. 10, 11, 18).

(b) The holiness of his character. He shrank from the vileness and sin he beheld. It filled him with horror (Ps. lv. 4—11; cxix. 53). Some who profess godliness look on sin with indifference, are even partakers of other men's sins. But it proves them unsanctified (Ps. l. 18; 1 Tim. v. 22; 2 John 10; Rev. xviii. 4). Not in the spirit of pharisaism are we to shrink from evil, but as Elisha did in grief at its enormity and bitterness.

(c) The earnestness of his spirit. He could not see sin and feel no concern, or withhold his testimony. Many seem to reiterate Cain's inquiry, "Am I my brother's keeper?" and so ignore responsibility. We have a duty to perform (Is. lviii. 1; 1 Tim. v. 20; 2 Tim. iv. 2; Prov. xxviii. 23).

Men of God will take things to heart, make evils which exist a real concern to themselves (Ezra ix. 1—5). The day of atonement called on every soul to be afflicted for sin before God (Lev. xxiii. 29).

(d) The compassion of his heart. He wept, showing that grief, not anger, sorrow, not passion, moved his soul. Pity, deep yearning pity filled his heart. Sternly he rebukes the sin, tenderly he surveys the sinner and the suffering his sin occasions. God is full of compassion (2 Kings xiii. 23; Ps. lxxviii., 38, 39; lxxxvi. 5, 15). Jesus too (Matt. ix. 36, xiv. 14; Mark i. 41, vi. 34; Luke vii. 13; Heb. v. 2). We are to be so (Zech. vii. 9; Luke x. 33, 37; Jude 22.

The sins of our own times and the moral condition of multitudes call for our concern; let us learn to look upon them with chastened souls, softened hearts, and Christ-like spirit (2 Cor. v. 18—21). W. F. G.

The Lake.

IN the sweetest of vales, 'mid the bracken and heather,
Lies a beautiful lake, oh, so tranquil and still;
Far away from earth's voices, its rushing and turmoil,
It unconsciously there doth its mission fulfil.

For it ever reflects, o'er its surface unruffled,
On its bosom so pure, in its depths so profound,
All the wonderful love of the tender Creator,
Who with glorious beauty its shores doth surround.

There are mountains encircling it, grand, and majestic,
Keeping guard o'er the treasure that lies at their feet;
There are rocks in their ruggedness, awful and solemn,
Whilst around it its fair strand ferns and undergrowth meet

There are flowerets just kissing its azure-tinged surface,
Water-lilies enthroned there, right royally free;
And the lake smileth ever, reflecting this beauty,
Singing sweetly God's love-song to you and to me.

Then methinks that to us it suggesteth these questions:
Are we each so at rest in the hand of our God
As to tell of his peace unto all who behold us,
And to gently re-echo his glory abroad?

Can we lie there so still, that the image of Jesus,
In our looks, in our words, in our ways, may be seen?
Do we mirror forth clearly his exquisite beauty?
Will the earth be the fairer for what we have been?

CHARLOTTE MURRAY.

MISSIONARY EXPERIENCES IN KABYLIA.

DEAR SIR,—While Morocco and its needs are now occupying the thoughts of the Kabylia Mission, we are still pushing on in Algeria amongst our old friends there. On Oct. 6, Mr. and Mrs. Lamb landed with me in Algiers. Aided by our two sisters, who went out first in the spring, we commenced to purchase furniture, &c., for our new Mission-house at Djemaâ Saridj, which has been built this summer, partly through the liberality of your readers. The journey proved anything but a romance, but in due time Mr. Lamb and his party reached Djemaâ. He found that the rain had made the surroundings of the house a bog, and that the second part of the house was not quite finished. Altogether things did not look very cheering. One thing, however, must be said on the other side. When they reached Meckla, quite a company of Kabyles had come to meet them, and presented them with a bunch of flowers as a token of welcome.

Two days later I started from Algiers, and came to cheer them in their difficulties, although I should have been glad of a little good cheer myself. Great difficulty was experienced in connection with the transport of the luggage, and two boxes are missing altogether; probably they have gone to Egypt, and I hope they may arrive at their destination by next spring. When I left, the place was certainly getting more comfortable, but there still remain other things to be done which must wait until means are forthcoming. We feel sure that our friends will not allow those far away, with so many difficulties, to lack necessaries if they know it.

On October 30 Dr. Witton arrived at the Mission station, and we proceeded at once to see the authorities as to his being allowed to give medicines to the poor suffering Kabyles and Colonists. The administrator received us, but evidently was not kindly disposed towards us, having in some way become possessed with the idea that we had a political motive. We spent more than an hour with him explaining our object and answering his questions, and assured him that our aim was not political, but to bring the Kabyles to understand the Gospel, and, at the same time, do them all the good in other ways that we could; he seemed still convinced that even though the missionaries might not be aware of it, they were really the agents of the British Government. Having found the necessary routine that had to be gone through by the Doctor, we left him, glad that, although he might not be favourable toward us, we had been able to explain our work to him, and that he had no power to interfere with us as long as we were obedient to French law.

The next day the doctor began to administer medicines to the poor around us, and he soon had many grateful patients. He is only at present out on a temporary stay, but we should like to have a permanent Medical Mission there, as it is very much needed, and would greatly help on the other work.

On the 3rd of November I left them learning the language, and endeavouring to make known among those around them the way of life. The door is open wide for further work among the people, who are always ready to hear what we have to say about Christ Jesus; some of them now know the Gospel in their heads if not in their hearts. When I arrived, our old friend Mr. Pearse was labouring at Fort National, but afterwards he returned to Algiers, on translation and other business. The Bible Society are now printing 500 copies of Matthew's Gospel in Kabyle.

On a future occasion I shall be glad to tell what I saw in travelling West from Algiers to Oran, and thence through dark Spain.

EDWARD H. GLENNY,
Hon. Sec. of Kabyle Mission.

"I HAVE GIVEN THEM THY WORD."

THUS spake our Saviour in his memorable prayer to the Father recorded in John xvii. Is it not a fitting thing that his Church should take up the utterance, and make it practically true in their dealings with the millions of heathen, civilised and uncivilised? Every disciple of Christ may not feel led to give themselves to the work of proclaiming the good news of salvation in distant lands; all or nearly all can help to scatter the good seed of the life-giving word. If they are so minded let them cheer the heart of Mrs. Robertson, 1, Oakhill-park, Hampstead, N.W., by enabling her to extend the work she carries on in such unflagging zeal through the "Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures." The following extracts from letters by two workers, whom she has enabled to follow in the line of the Saviour's prayer, will be read with pleasure:—

FINLAND.

Mr. F. W. Lonnbeck, of Ekenas, Finland, writes:—"Your letter, enclosing cheque for £5, has given me great joy. Permit me to express my own and my brother believers' warmest thanks for your practical sympathy with us for the free distribution of the Scriptures. You are quite right in your surmise as to the conditions of many of the people in Finland, and as to the opportunities of giving away the Word of God. Such opportunities do indeed abound, and I am now looking forward with much prayerful expectation to every suitable opening for distributing the grant so providentially come to us among the poor, to whom such a gift almost invariably is most welcome and precious.

"To invest it with greater interest I will have some labels printed, to be pasted inside the cover, giving a brief account of where the Bible or the Testament comes from, an invitation to communicate with me as to results of reading; and, lastly, a few hints how to read it, with some texts of promise and encouragement. I will take care always to write name of recipient and date in the volume before giving away. I believe by these means more blessing will follow than if the book were given away without an attempt to show that there are hearts around them, hearts of flesh and blood, that God has filled with thoughts of love and kindness, caring for their souls We have, ourselves, made some humble efforts in this direction among our own countrymen, though, for want of funds and labourers to go out with the message, our field of operation has been very limited; now and then accounts reach us of the deep spiritual thirst and famine there is in other parts of Finland."

JAFFA, SYRIA.

Mr. John Pendridge, writing to Mrs. Robertson from this place, says: "Your highly-esteemed gift of five pounds for the free distribution of the Scriptures among the Jews and Moslems of Jaffa, has been, by the help of God, faithfully used. I neither experienced persecution nor opposition from the Turkish authorities, nor any man; everywhere the Bibles were received with glad and grateful hearts by a class of men who appeared anxious to obtain them. In consequence of my inability to obtain Hebrew Bibles from Jerusalem, one pound's worth of Arabic Bibles were freely distributed among the Greeks, Latins, and Mahomedans first. Now I have the happiness to report to you that I have distributed, without money and without price, four pounds' worth of Hebrew Bibles and Testaments among the Jews also. I began the distribution among the Jews privately at first. As soon as it became known that I had received Hebrew Bibles and Testaments from Constantinople, my house was literally besieged with Jews; nothing could exceed the eagerness with which they seized the Word of God from my hands. I seemed among them like a man holding out reprieves to condemned criminals; as soon as anyone received a Bible, the sight of it seemed to quicken the desire of the rest to obtain it; nor could I find it in my heart to say 'No,' to their cry of 'Give, give,' till the stock in the box had become exhausted.

"I have been much in prayer for divine direction in the distribution of your gift, and I have no doubt that on the whole only those persons have received the Bibles who are most likely to read them, and who will ultimately appreciate their inestimable worth. Only yesterday I noticed in the principal street of the city an Arab shopkeeper reading the Bible aloud to another; on approaching to salute him I saw he held in his hand the very Bible I had given him some few days before. Nor is this an exceptional instance of an open answer to prayer; others also I have seen sitting outside their shops, and some inside their shops reading to themselves alone the wonderful words of God. Indeed, since the distribution of the Scriptures commenced in Jaffa a new state of things has been introduced into the city: the Bible has begun to take the place of the Koran, misgivings in Mahomedanism have gained ground, the Moslems who were accustomed to call Christians dogs now respect us for what they see, and the light of truth has begun to dawn. An intelligent Mahomedan, to whom I gave a Bible some weeks ago, has confessed with his mouth that he believes Jesus Christ to be the Saviour of the world, and an aged Mahomedan, to whom I also gave a Bible, is now not ashamed to say that he loves Jesus."

Irish Church Missions.

"DURING a recent visit to Dublin," says a correspondent, "I had the pleasure of seeing between 400 and 500 adult scholars, grouped in classes, in the Irish Mission church. They evidently took a very deep interest in the lesson. By and by, when, according to the usual custom, an address was given upon the subject at the close of afternoon school, the adults were quite as ready with their answers to questions as the younger persons present. It was truly affecting to hear some, who at one time were Roman Catholics, and whose hair was now silvered with age, quoting texts, which evidently were favourites with them, from the feeling with which they were repeated."

Rev. Horace W. Townsend recently gave a touching illustration of the manner in which the texts of Holy Scripture become as "nails fastened in a sure place." "A clergyman," he said, "was driving through the streets of Dublin on a jaunting car, and, as his habit was, began to speak to the driver about the way of salvation. To his surprise, he found him well acquainted with numerous texts of Scripture, and able also to repeat several of the hymns in Messrs. Moody and Sankey's well-known book. On asking him, 'What school did you attend?' the reply was, 'Niver a day was I in the inside of a school, sir; but some of my children went to the Irish Church Missions' School; and every night when they came home they used to repeat a text to me until I knew it. And to this day I niver get a letter from my son, who is a soldier in India, without his asking me if I have come to love the Lord Jesus Christ as my Saviour.' Finding him thus acquainted with the words of Scripture the clergyman asked him whether he knew where a well-known verse that he had readily quoted was to be found? and he immediately said, 'John iii. 16, sir.' He also added, 'The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin' (1 John i. 7)."

At the close of the Lord's day it was very encouraging to hear from workers who had been engaged in four other schools for adults in different parts of Dublin, interesting details of the day's services; and it was a privilege to join with them in prayer for the Lord's blessing to rest on their labours.

THE LONDON SAMARITAN SOCIETY.

THE department of this Society's labours which brings the most genuine satisfaction is the feeding and clothing of children. The law which compels these little creatures to go to school does not take account of their bodily necessities, and vast numbers of them stand shivering in their places at nine o'clock in the morning without having tasted a mouthful; were it not for the "Samaritans," they would starve all day. Indeed, they are in a worse case than ever, because their families miss their contributions to the weekly earnings, and many of the poor of London live by home industries in which children can give valuable aid. The Society supplies teachers in elementary schools with tickets which they distribute to the children, who carry them to the nearest eating-house, coffee tavern, or soup kitchen, where they are exchanged for substantial nourishment. How gladly this help is received may be imagined when the teachers say "many have nothing to eat but what the tickets give them," and many others "have nothing but dry bread all the week."

The work of clothing the naked goes on every Saturday evening throughout the winter. Our artist, at the invitation of Mr. J. J. Jones, the director, went to 98, High-street, Homerton, and was deeply impressed with the poverty of the people gathered together, and their thankfulness for the boots and garments given to them. From the worst hovels of Shoreditch, Bethnal-green, Hackney, Homerton, and Whitechapel they came, and with the pathetic patience of the very poor, sat and stood quietly awaiting their turn for attention. How gladly the mothers tried the frocks and petticoats offered them on their children! Here a lad was made radiantly happy by the exchange of a jacket which some schoolboy had left off, for his old tattered one. There a woman measured a pair of trousers against the puny stature of her son, sighing to find that they were vastly too big for him. The demand for boots and shoes was very brisk, and when almost all were disposed of and the majority of the applicants had gone, in came a poor boy, wet and footsore, to see if there might perchance be a pair left for him. He sat down on a bench, all that remained were brought, and he tried them on one after another. Some were too small, others too large; but anything was preferable to bare feet, and he ultimately was grateful for a pair that might have suited his father. It was curious to see the small girls and boys comparing notes as they held out their frocks and jackets for one another's inspection, and pleasant to think how little it takes to make a child happy.

The tales told of want of work, of low wages, of high rents, few conveniences and many mouths to feed, were heart-rending, and there can be no better way of disposing of the cast-off clothes that are sure to accumulate in a family, or any money that can be spared for the relief of wretchedness, than by sending either or both to Mr. John James Jones, at the offices of the Society, 57 and 59, Ludgate-hill, London, E.C.

SPANISH NOTES.

DEAR SIR,—This letter is a continuation of the account of my recent journey in Spain, the first part of which appeared in The Christian some weeks ago. From Valencia we went to Andalusia and Granada. At the latter place there is the exquisite Moorish palace of the Alhambra, one of the most remarkable buildings in Spain. Granada is said to take its name from the Pomagranate, which in the Spanish is Granada; its lovely Vega is thickly studded with these delicious fruit trees.

When Wellington succeeded in expelling Napoleon's troops from Spain, the Spanish Government presented him with a splendid property in the neighbourhood of Granada, called "Soto de Roma," which is still administered by the family. He, finding that the hills adjoining the Alhambra were plentifully supplied with water, had some thousands of elm trees brought from England and carefully planted all over the Alhambra grounds. They are now in their prime, and are the admiration of all travellers. During many months of the year they are filled with innumerable nightingales.

But there is something at Granada for the Christian that far surpasses Granada, its lovely Alhambra and superb Vega. Here it was that noble-hearted Matamoros passed his weary imprisonment because of his deep love to the Lord Jesus, setting us an example of deep devotion to that sacred cause that well merits our consideration. I learned from the lips of his fellow-prisoner Sen. Alhama some curious details, which have not hitherto been made public. The Secretary of the Tribunal, who was their very decided enemy, soon after their release died suddenly. His house was sold, and purchased by the friends of Alhama, who now lives and preaches in it. It is also well known that the abandoned and idolatrous Queen of Spain, Isabella, lost her crown and throne through her determined opposition to these defenders of the Faith.

During my stay in Granada I had occasion to see what eagerness there was to receive books and tracts, but this I noticed everywhere. I thank God for the numerous self-denying workers He has sent to labour in Spain.

I was sorry to hear from a devoted labourer in Madrid that many are in financial difficulties from the small supply forwarded them. There are many in our country who love Spain and the work there, but are not aware how to help. To all such I would say that any sums sent to me shall be carefully disbursed.

I have just published a penny edition of the Life of Matamoros (Partridge & Co.), so that his interesting history may be better known, and the cause of the Gospel in Spain advanced.

THE MISSION OF THE AMERICAN BOARD.

The work of the American Board has thus far been limited to the northern part of the Peninsula. Our stations and out-stations are: Santander, San Sebastian, Pamplona, Logrono, Pradejon, Tauste, Zaragoza, Tarragona, Reus, and Pont de Armentera. The work in Bilbao, with a flourishing Mission in the region of the extensive iron mines situated between Bilbao and the sea, carried on by the efficient pastor of the Bilbao church, is sustained by the Evangelical Continental Society of London, of which the Rev. R. S. Ashton is secretary, and is under the superintendence of the writer. Besides these stations, at all of which there is organised work, there are some six or seven other places where individual Christians, or groups of Christians, are more or less regularly visited by the missionary, or by the Spanish pastor or evangelist nearest to them, and who are centres of evangelical light in their respective neighbourhoods.

Within a few weeks I have visited the most of our stations; in the larger part of them I am personally acquainted with the most of those connected with the churches and congregations. Many of them have been called to suffer the severest tests of their Christian faith—in social ostracism, family persecution, loss of work, and the ruin of profitable business, and in bodily harm and false imprisonment. In bonds, and suffering for their faith, their brethren in happier circumstances should ever bear them tenderly on their hearts, and remember them in their prayers. William H. Gulick.

Y.M.C.A. WORK.

EXETER HALL.

A SERIES of very interesting Bible studies have lately been given at Exeter Hall at the daily prayer-meeting, by Mr. Henry Thorne, on the following subjects: "Searching the Scriptures;" "Fellowship with God;" "The Stones of the Temple;" "The Offerings for the Tabernacle;" "Thoughts on Thoughts."

BOOKBINDERS' EMPLOYÉS.

Some gentlemen connected with the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, desirous of bringing the large number of young women employed by the London bookbinders under the influence of religious and Temperance teaching, held a meeting at Messrs. Simpson and Renshaw's, 12, Paternoster-square, on Friday evening, Dec. 7. The firm provided tea for more than 200 of their female employés, who were afterwards addressed by Mr. Hodder (Hodder and Stoughton), Mrs. Hind Smith, Mr. Smith (Smith Bros., bookbinders), Mr. Simpson (Simpson and Renshaw), Mr. S. Ireland (Cambridge University Press Warehouse), and Mr. Orchard (Y.M.C.A.). Some ladies connected with Mrs. Fisher's Mission sang during the evening, and over fifty young people signed the pledge and took the blue ribbon. It is hoped that meetings of a similar character may be held in other large bookbinding houses, as opportunity may be afforded.

THE PRIORY, ISLINGTON.

Our friend Mr. Atkinson, of the Y.M.C.A., Priory Hall, wrote to us last week: "We hope next Thursday to welcome a large number of new members. Last Wednesday I was up till nearly midnight in prayer and conversation with the anxious and the new converts. The young life is very refreshing to see."

FINSBURY PARK.

The Lord has signally prospered this Branch in its spiritual work during the past year. The Sunday Bible-class has greatly increased in attendance and deepened in interest, as also the Bible-class on Friday evenings, which is often full to overflowing. The prayer-meetings also are most encouraging. The members are full of zeal in their aggressive work. They maintain an open-air service on Sunday evenings all the year round, besides conducting the services in the Mission Hall, adjoining the Great Northern Railway, every Sunday night. They have been greatly encouraged by many testimonies of blessing received. In the after-meetings many have decided to accept the Saviour. Visiting and tract distributing have also been carried on with great earnestness, and all this notwithstanding the illness of the esteemed and zealous young secretary, who was laid aside for many weeks during the summer by serious illness. Owing to this and other causes, the funds of the association are lacking to the extent of £35. That sum is much needed before the close of the present quarter. Mr Robert Porter, 18, Beaulieu Villas, Finsbury Park, N., is Treasurer.

ROBERT BUEN.

SOUTHPORT.

A conference on the work of this Association was held in the Cambridge Hall, on December 6, the room being crowded to its utmost capacity. Dr. Wood, J.P., gave an interesting account of the progress of the Association, now thirty-one years old. He congratulated the Association on having secured the services of Mr. Thomas W. Gladstone, whose time would be wholly spent in the work, as Secretary, and trusted that a great advance might be made. Other friends addressed the meeting.

BLAIRGOWRIE, N.B.

On the invitation of the Y.M.C.A., Mr. Geo. Hefford, of the Evangelisation Society, conducted a twenty-two days' Mission here. The attendance was not so good as anticipated, but much blessing has accompanied the faithful preaching of the Word. Christians have been helped, strengthened and encouraged, while several have professed to seeking and finding Christ as a Saviour.

Soldiers and Seamen.

FOR years past we have given to any new regiment coming to Gosport a welcome tea. Over 200 men of the 37th recently accepted an invitation to tea, after which a large number gathered together in our Seamen's Bethel for Gospel addresses. Several have been induced to attend the Bible-classes in our Institute at Stoke-road, where a week's special Gospel services are being held. We have also commenced our weekly teas for the fishermen on board the Annie, in order to get the men away from haunts of vice and their dark damp forecastles, and that they may hear of Jesus, the only way to the Father.

Our vessel for work on the coast of France will sail in February or the beginning of March for Dunkirk. In the meantime we shall be busy in our work at home among the fishermen. Comforters, cuffs, &c., will be most acceptable, also book bags, 8 inches by 7, with Bibles, Testaments, and Gospel books, and tracts for our troopships and for our navy seamen. Towards the new vessel required for our coast in lieu of the Annie, only £200 more is needed. This vessel —the Harbinger—we hope to have ready by January or February next. HENRY COOK.

Seamen's Mission, Beach, Gosport, Hants.

[Besides the vessel, funds must of course be needed for the general work; and as a work among sailors is more than a local work, we feel that this Mission has more than a local claim on Christian sympathy.—ED.]

Spitalfields Gospel Mission.

MY DEAR BROTHER,—Cheered and gladdened by so many mercies, may I be permitted to sound some notes of praise?

I praise the Lord that the sins, sorrows, and the woeful wretchedness of masses of our fellow-creatures in the hidden parts of London have been brought so prominently forward. I have laboured, longed, and prayed many years for this. I do thank God that such a blaze of light is being thrown upon the hideous reality of how masses exist and die. Some I find are inclined to think the pictures given are overdrawn. Allow me, as one who has spent just twenty-five years in labour amongst the slums, to say that things are even far, far worse than represented. In fact, a full tale could not be printed. I do pray that this wide-spread interest may not die out.

I praise the Lord most heartily for the cheering news I have respecting the Spitalfields Gospel Mission. I expected, when I had to withdraw, from ill-health and consequent inability to go on, that the spiritual stability of the work would be tested. I rejoice, and am indeed glad, to hear of the steadfastness in the Lord Jesus Christ of those won to Him from sad careers of sin. I am thankful it is now proved that their faith does not staud in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God. To Him indeed be the glory. The dear brethren in charge have been cheered by blessing following blessing.

I do most earnestly commend my very dear brother, the Superintendent (Mr. James Sharpless, 14, Sidney-square, E.), and his devoted helpers to the prayers of your readers, and to their practical sympathy, that the work at this present juncture may suffer no lack.

I praise the Lord that I am much better in health since moving here. The clear, pure air has proved so refreshing to mind and to body. I praise the Lord for the prayers and all the loving sympathy of valued friends, who in much tender solicitude have ministered to our necessities.

Grace and peace be with you.—Yours faithfully, WILLIAM JOSEPH LEWIS.

Swanmore-road, Ryde, Isle of Wight.

[We trust that our dear brother Lewis's need will be ministered to in his new sphere, where he has a chapel free alike from rent on the one hand and stipend on the other. We also hope that the work which he built up during a quarter of a century in Spitalfield will be generously sustained now that he its founder, is removed, and that the work is committed to those who for years have been his faithful helpers.—ED.]

Miss Robinson and her Work.

DEAR SIR,—I should be glad to let the readers of THE CHRISTIAN know that the work at our Portsmouth Soldiers' Institute, Portsea Sailors' Welcome, Nobbs' Lane Coffee Tavern and Mission-room, and our Eastney Mission-room, is all progressing most happily. God seems to prosper us more and more. Although continuing unable to move about, I am glad to be able to direct my dear helpers, and to enjoy being in the midst of a blessed work. Eight ladies are now associated with me here, besides our Mission workers, and many occasional helpers. Thirty-two meetings and classes are held every week, the average weekly attendance being 7200. At our soup-kitchen 220 gallons of good and cheap soup, besides bread, is sold weekly to the poor; the quantity will be increased as winter advances.

Christmas-gifts are now being prepared. I shall be very thankful for special donations just now. Will our friends bear in mind that since 1880 I have been a prisoner, and cannot go personally to ask help as formerly. I am needing money to pay for the enlargement of our hall; it would not hold the numbers who throng to our Sunday-night special services, but has now been altered to seat 1050.

In January we expect Richard Weaver for a fortnight's Mission in our hall; pray for a blessing on his visit. Any who can visit Portsmouth at any time to see or take part in the work will find comfortable accommodation at a moderate charge in our adjoining private hotel. The climate resembles that of the Isle of Wight. Could not some Christian workers try change of scene and milder air at home instead of rushing abroad at the approach of winter?—Yours sincerely and obliged, SARAH ROBINSON.

Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth, Dec. 14.

Grave Moral Questions.

A DRAWING-ROOM meeting for ladies only was held at 17A, Old Cavendish-street, W., the rooms of the Young Women's Christian Association, on the afternoon of Tuesday, December 11, on "Certain Grave Moral Questions about to be discussed in Parliament." Lady Reed presided.

Miss MASON, of Kilburn, said they were leagued together for the abolition of laws which protect vice; they were, therefore, working in harmony with the will of God. They must have more dealings with God about it, though not less outward action.

Mrs. JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER gave a brief outline of the present position of the question. The obnoxious laws were suspended, but still on the statute books; in the subjected districts many were working to get them re-enacted. At present the workers in this cause have to face silence; silence from the Government as to their intentions; and silence on the part of the London Press, who have noticed none of the large meetings recently held in various parts of the country. But God can scatter silence as well as open opposition. It was impressed upon her mind that while we often say, "How long, O Lord?" thinking that God is keeping us waiting, it was often the case that we are keeping Him waiting. During these fifteen years of work God has been educating us. He wants instruments after his own heart. We must be purified ourselves and fully consecrated to his will. It was proposed, added Mrs. Butler, to have an all-day meeting for prayer at Exeter Hall, early in February next, to wait upon God for guidance. Several other ladies spoke. The meeting was well attended and full of interest.

On Thursday, Dec. 13, at a meeting of the Mutual Improvement Society of St. Simon's, Leeds, out of forty present thirty-nine, including the vicar, agreed to sign Major Poole's Purity Crusade pledge card. A parochial society was formed, and a committee chosen, with the vicar as president.

At Work in Nova Scotia.

DEAR SIR,—Christian friends in England will be interested to hear of God's work in Truro, one of the leading towns of this province. We commenced special meetings for prayer on Monday, November 5, and carried them on for a week, all denominations uniting. We then organised special Gospel meetings in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, under the management of the Committee of the Association. We had deeply-interesting and impressive meetings for more than a week, and on Sunday afternoons we still have the large hall packed full. We also have Gospel meetings there every Thursday evening.

All the ministers of the town have most heartily co-operated in this good work, and blessing has come down upon all the churches. Being in the country I open my house every Sunday evening for Gospel meetings; even in winter we have our rooms filled with our neighbours from all parts around.

This is a thoroughly English part of Canada. I trust that this letter may lead English Christians to pray for the Lord's work out here, and for an ingathering of precious souls to our blessed Saviour —Yours faithfully,

ARTHUR F. GURNEY.

Foreign Prisons.

BY MR. CHARLES COOK.

IN one respect British prisons stand out conspicuously from those of most Continental countries—namely, in supplying every prisoner with a copy of the Scriptures. After having visited every English convict prison, and seen nearly every prisoner, I am able to say that that precious volume has, in not a few instances, been the means of the conversion of the poor criminal. In his lonely hours sometimes, out of pure ennui, he has taken up the Word to read, and found life for his soul.

When we turn to Foreign prisons—in many countries, at least—we find that they have not got the Word of God. Close by our own shores are thousands of men thus immured, having no portion of the Word of God to read, and to whom no one has attempted to carry it. The Governments will not provide the Scriptures. France is too indifferent and too sceptical; Belgium is too bigoted; Italy too Papal, to do it. I have visited prisons in each of these countries, and have given away books and tracts. I remember, specially, the prison on the Campagna at Rome, how eagerly the poor prisoners, who were chained to their beds, took the illustrated book offered them, with the consent of the governor. A long letter has lately appeared in The Times on "The horrors of a Russian prison.' If the statements are true, they call aloud for speedy redress. The letter, which is said to have been written throughout with the prisoner's blood, states: "Worse than all, there are no books. The prisoners are driven mad by their solitude; even the Bible is denied them."

For Russia—at least at present—I can only pray; but I desire to lay upon the hearts of your readers a contemplated visit to the prisons of several countries, where the prisoners are without any portion of the Word of God. God willing, I intend to visit the prisons of Italy, Egypt, and Turkey, carrying with me a Gospel portion of the Psalms, and putting these portions into the hands of the convicts themselves. May I ask all who read these lines to pray and help me in this effort to carry the Word of Life to souls who sit in darkness. A personal friend, unsolicited, has given me £10 towards the sum required. A small bank-note has also come from abroad, which I here desire to acknowledge with thanks, from "A Reader of THE CHRISTIAN."

During my absence from London, of seven or eight weeks, Mr. Gawin Kirkham and other friends will conduct the services at the Metropolitan and Hyde-park Halls.

Soup Dinners at Sermon-lane.

DURING the annual Cattle Show at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, there were hundreds of boardmen employed walking the streets with different kinds of advertisements; these men are glad to earn even a shilling a-day at this season of the year, when times are so hard. On Tuesday and Thursday last week Mr. George Fuller, of Sermon-lane Mission, Islington, was enabled through the liberality of friends to give about eight hundred of the men a pint of pea-soup and a half or three-quarters of a pound of bread each for their dinner.

It was a sight not easily to be forgotten. Here were men some of whom had the appearance and manners of persons who had been in good circumstances; others were servants, mechanics, and labourers out of employment; the majority looked more or less respectable, and seemed very thankful for the kindness shown them. Not only was it a work of mercy in giving them a little needful food, but the opportunity was seized for preaching the Gospel. This was done by Mr. and Mrs. Haig Miller and others, during the few minutes allowed for dinner, every quarter of an hour bringing in a fresh audience of about two hundred.

Mr. Fuller gives free Sunday morning breakfasts and frequent soup dinners to the poorest and the unemployed of the neighbourhood, among whom he labours with much success. His address is 54, Liverpool-road, Islington, N.

Richard Weaver In Glasgow.

AFTER a year's absence this honoured evangelist returned to Glasgow on December 1 to conduct four weeks' Gospel services in connection with the Orphan Home Mission. He was welcomed back at a social gathering of the workers, and a very pleasant and profitable time was spent.

On Lord's Day, December 2, he spoke in the National Hall, at 11 a.m., to a large audience composed almost entirely of men, and in the same place at 7 p.m., he addressed a crowded meeting of from 3000 to 4000 people. At both gatherings he was encouraged by meeting with converts of previous years, who are still "adorning the doctrine." At the evening one the power of God was manifestly realised. At the close, when an invitation was given to those who wished to decide, such numbers immediately rose and came to the front that even the workers were astonished. Many, we trust, were brought from darkness to light, and found peace in believing.

Nightly during the week Richard has been telling out the old, old story to large gatherings in the Orphan Home Hall, "with signs following." Many have been convicted and dealt with in the inquiry-room. One respectable-looking man, who thought himself too bad to be saved, got down on his knees and refused to rise until the Lord saved him; and, praise the Lord! it was not long before he got up rejoicing in the knowledge of his sins forgiven, and praising God because He had taken him "as he was." Others who have been drunkards and living in sin have also been brought in, and already the change is seen in their faces.

On the Sabbath, December 12, meetings were again held in the National Hall, at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. The evening meeting was crowded, and the workers had cause to believe that not a few were brought to decision while Richard was speaking. During last week there has been signal blessing, and many anxious ones have been dealt with. In one of the inquiry-meetings a lady friend remarked it was like the time in '59, when the mighty power of God was manifested in the conversion of hundreds through the instrumentality our brother. Prayer is asked for the meetings still to be held, and especially for the closing ones on Lord's day, 23rd inst.

Mr. Weaver had previously a most blessed time at Leek and at Leicester. The Spirit of God worked mightily among the people and many professed to find peace in believing.

American Notes.

A NEW Training College in New York city has been started by Pastor Simpson, 8th Avenue, for lay workers, after the style of the Free College, which Dr. Talmage conducted for six years. Great interest is shown by students.

Rev. Jacob Freshman is doing a great work among the 80,000 Jews in New York, and is seeking funds. His address is 25, 7th Avenue.

Dr. E. P. Thwing, of Brooklyn, gave an address at the sixty-eighth anniversary of the L. I. Bible Society on "The Bible in Foreign Lands." He is still personally aiding workers in Sweden and in Spain.

One half the amount needed for their new building is secured by the Brooklyn Y.M.C.A. The Boston Association, the first in the States, has just dedicated one costing £40,000.

Work Among Young Women.

LONDON CENTRAL Y.W.C.A.

ON Tuesday, 11th inst., a drawing-room meeting was held at 4, Hampstead-hill Gardens, N.W., Mr. J. E. Mathieson in the chair. Addresses were given by the Chairman, Rev. E. A. Stuart, Hon. Emily Kinnaird, and Miss Malden. References were made to the great need for such work, the encouraging results of its operations, and the desirability of its extension in connection with those engaged in shops, workrooms, factories, &c. Mr. Geo. Hughes, Secretary Y.W.C.A., 17, Old Cavendish-street, W., will gladly welcome all the help that friends may be disposed to send.

Help is also greatly needed in carrying out the scheme for extending the benefits of these institutions to other parts of the Metropolis. Communications as to this department should be sent to the Organising Secretary, same address as above.

Railway Men at Wandsworth.

A VERY enjoyable meeting of the South London Branch of the Railway Mission took place at the L. and S.W.R. Hall, Brunswick House, Wandsworth-road, S.W., on Tuesday, December 11. The occasion was the annual meeting and distribution of prizes. Mr. H. Eliot Walton gave a very cheering statement of the work amongst the railway boys, and of the evangelistic efforts which are put forth almost nightly all the year round.

Mrs. Gates, of Brighton, distributed the prizes, accompanying every gift with a word of encouragement. The prizes were given for regular attendance at Bible-classes, educational-classes, &c. The interest was heightened when four young men stepped to the front, the first bearing a box in his hands; this contained a handsome inkstand and candlesticks to match, presented to Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard by the young men in token of his practical interest in the work, and of his earnest desire for the eternal welfare of the young men. Mr. Sheppard thanked the young men sincerely for their graceful act, and alluded to the fact that railway directors and shareholders were beginning to pay much more attention to the work of the Railway Mission.

Mrs. Gates, whose work amongst the railway men of Brighton has been so much blessed, spoke in a tender, womanful way to the large audience of husbands and wives before her, and it is to be hoped that her winning counsel to avoid a public-house "merry Christmas" will be as lasting as it was for the time effective. Revs. Dr. Davies and G. Forrester, Mr. George Clarke, and the Hon. Arthur Kinnaird also spoke. If but a little of the good, earnest advice which fell from the lips of the different speakers is acted upon, many will look back to that pleasant evening and rejoice. During the evening about 100 children brightened the occasion with their sweet song.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

THE BERLIN TOWN MISSION

is continuing its labours among the fallen, and those in danger of falling, with much enthusiasm and prudence. The "Blatter aus der Stadtmission" gives some very encouraging results of work by the missionaries.

SPAIN.

An earnestly-worded memorial was sent by Mr. J. C. Pundsack, of Madrid, to the Crown Prince Frederick William of Prussia during his recent stay in Valencia, giving an account of the burning of the Gospels at Barcelona on July 25 last. Mr. R. Pundsack expressed a hope that His Imperial Highness would succeed in furthering the introduction of true religious liberty into Spain, in place of the existing limited tolerance.

BASUTOLAND.

M. Mabille, one of the oldest of the French missionaries, writes to a friend in England that the people earnestly wish to come under the Imperial Government. He says that the interregnum is producing a state of things like that described in the Book of Judges, where everyone was doing his own will and going his own way. "Still," he remarks, "we can travel unmolested through the country."

BERLIN.

The English and Americans resident in Berlin, says a correspondent, were lately invited to an English tea-meeting, when addresses were given on behalf of evangelisation work in Berlin by Count A. Bernstorff, Professor Stackenberg, and others. The meeting took place in the New Union House, "Verein-haus," north of Berlin, which was bought last year for religious purposes. It has been before a dancing saloon of very low reputation, called "Prince Blucher." In a recent letter to the same correspondent Count Bernstorff says: "I do not hesitate to say that vital religion is making progress in Germany. The tendency among Christians to work for the Master has made much progress during the last few years, and where the Gospel is faithfully preached it finds willing hearers. For our large city the means of evangelisation are increasing, but yet insufficient."

SUNDAY SCHOOLS IN ST. PETERSBURG.

The Sountagschulfreund has a very interesting account of the founding of the first Sunday-school in St. Petersburg. A lady who had been a teacher in a Sunday-school at Stuttgart, and who went to live at St. Petersburg, told the German pastor there of "the beautiful work," and begged him to begin the same in St. Petersburg. The work was strange to the Pastor, and he already preached three times on the Sunday. But still the lady persisted, and brought to him all sorts of papers, showing the benefits of Sunday-schools. On Jan. 15, 1878, the first Sunday-school in St. Petersburg was begun with forty-three children. Now there are Sunday-schools connected with all the large churches, wherein about 1500 children receive Christian teaching.

GUATEMALA, C.A.

This Republic, while virtually open to the Gospel for over ten years, has not been occupied until within the last few months. I was sent here by the Presbyterian Foreign Board, New York, to open an English service, and, after that was established, the way was opened for the holding of services in Spanish. Both services are attended by very much larger congregations than was anticipated. We have been greatly encouraged by the attitude of the President, General Barriss, and his Cabinet, towards us. The people purchase Bibles readily; tracts are being circulated with good results. We can use large quantities of good books and tracts, and we would be very glad to receive for distribution any Gospel literature, in Spanish, the readers of THE CHRISTIAN may send us.

Presbyterian Mission, JNO. C. HILL.
Guatemala, Central America.

CHICAGO

has a novelty in the shape of a Gospel ship, called Glad Tidings, in command of Capt. Bundy, accompanied by his wife, son, and two daughters. It makes trips to all out of the way places on the Northern lakes, where religious services are conducted by the family. The vessel has recently visited some Canadian ports.

GHAZIPUR AND BUXAR MISSION.

In his recent report Mr. H. Lorbeer writes: "Our Sunday services are well attended, and our Anglo-Vernacular School continues to prosper. Preaching to the heathen has been carried on without intermission. During the year we have baptized 24, making in all, since the beginning of the Mission, 972."

M. ARMAND DE LISLE

has been holding meetings in a chapel on the borders of the St. Ouen Cemetery, Paris, for many months, and there has been much blessing. Some come in and stay only five, ten, or fifteen minutes; such are always met at the door as they depart, and friendly voices endeavour to fix one or two impressions of what has been heard. Thus they are induced to come again and again. Good use, too, is made of the "Home Preacher" tracts. These are distributed with discrimination. The sorrowful, the desperate, are watched, and a suitable leaflet is slipped into their hands, which has often been read at night, and which has led to true consolation.

A SERMON WITHOUT WORDS.

"Have you ever heard the Gospel before?" said a missionary to a respectable Chinee, whom he had not before seen in the Hall. "No," replied the Chinee, "but I have seen it. I know a man who was the terror of the neighbourhood. He was as dangerous as a wild beast, especially when he had taken opium; and now, since 'the religion of Jesus has conquered him,' as he says, he is quite changed. He has given up opium; he is gentle, full of benevolence to all the world, and is never in a passion. So, for a long time I have said to myself, 'That religion must be a good one!'"

JEWS IN JERUSALEM.

A letter recently received from the Rev. H. Friedländer, tells of his restoration to health after an attack of fever, and of his being able to continue his interesting labours among the persecuted Jews from Russia. A good number of these have been placed now at Artouf, the colony recently purchased by the London Jewish Refugees Society, but there still remains a great number of sufferers to be provided for. We are at the commencement of winter, and some friends have already sent out boxes of clothes, new and old, for men, women, and children; flannel blankets and calico are also welcome. Parcels should be forwarded to the address of M. Bradley, London Jews' Society, 16, Lincoln's-inn-fields, W.C., accompanied by a statement of the contents of each box for declaration at the Custom House, in which case they are delivered by the London Jewish Society free of charge at Jerusalem. W. GREENE.

EDUCATION IN JAMAICA.

A school is about to be established in Jamaica for the daughters of natives, who have no means of education beyond that of the Government schools. The prejudice is still so strong that the entrance into a private school of a daughter of coloured parents, though able to pay, would be followed by the withdrawal of all the white children. Fathers are increasingly anxious for some better education for their daughters. The state of morals is deplorably bad throughout the Island. The cause that perpetuates such a state of things is the ignorance, and consequent degradation of the women. Suitable premises have been taken on the north side of the Island, near to Stewart Town. A Christian lady accustomed to teaching, endowed with a missionary spirit, would here find a sphere of important work. The school is wholly unsectarian, and a small committee of ladies of different denominations will assist by suggestion or counsel.—Yours faithfully, E. RYLAND TEESTRAIL.

AGEN, FRANCE.

In and around this bigoted town a good work is in progress under the direction of Mons. Halbout, a Christian brother who has abandoned a lucrative calling to devote himself to the evangelisation of his country. With much self-denying labour Mons. H. succeeds in selling large numbers of Scriptures at the fairs in the towns and villages around Agen, and on some occasions he has sold 500 copies in one day. He has also opened rooms in Agen and two or three other towns, where simple evangelistic services are held. In this work also he has met with much blessing, numbers being found ready to hear the word of life. But rooms cannot be hired, and journeys cannot be made, without money, and, as Mons. H. is not the agent of any society, he looks to Christian friends to help him in this department of his work. He is also exceedingly anxious to secure the services of a devoted Christian man at Agen as evangelist, but in order to do this also funds are needed. The Evangelical Continental Society has offered some slight help, but more is needed. Mons. H.'s address is 4, R. Fonde Raché, Agen (Lot-et-Garonne). R. S. A.

SHOULD A CHRISTIAN SELL STRONG DRINK?

STATED briefly, this was the question debated before an audience that crowded the Lower Exeter Hall last Friday evening. Stated exactly, the question ran thus: "Is the sale of intoxicating liquors, as beverages, consistent with Christian principles?" The opposing champions were Dr. Dawson Burns, well known as one of the editors of the "Temperance Commentary," and Mr. C. R. Haig, wine and spirit merchant.

The debate, as Mr. Haig explained, arose out of the famous letters of Canon Wilberforce, published in The Times, in which the Canon charged the Ecclesiastical Commissioners with deriving revenue from the rents of public-houses. Mr. Haig replied to the Canon through the same medium, asserting the lawfulness of the publican's trade, and challenging him "or anybody else" to a public discussion on the question. In recapitulating these facts, Mr. Haig somewhat sarcastically admitted his rashness in thus throwing down the gauntlet to all and sundry. Most impartial spectators of the encounter on Friday evening will, we think, have come to the same conclusion. The arena of public debate is not generally speaking, a very satisfactory place for the calm consideration and solution of serious moral questions. Passion and partisanship are apt to get the upper hand of cool judgment and fair argument.

It was not so, however, on Friday night. There was little to object to in the manner of the discussion. The audience, especially the teetotal portion, sometimes showed undue warmth of feeling, but, on the whole, a respectful hearing was given to both sides. This resulted in a great measure from the really admirable way in which Rev. J. Wilkinson discharged the duties of the chair. He held the balance firmly and fairly, showing, however, a laudable indulgence towards his personal friend Mr. Haig, in order, as he said, to counterbalance the blue ribbon which he conspicuously wore. Mr. Haig opened the debate with a half-hour speech; Dr. Burns followed in like manner; then each speaker had, alternately and in succession, twenty and ten minutes in which to develop their opposing arguments.

Mr. Haig's contention, in brief, was this: The Jews, a chosen people, were expressly permitted by the Mosaic law to drink wine and strong drink. If the use of these things were essentially wrong, would not God have explicitly prohibited their use? Moreover, Jesus Christ the Son of God, Redeemer of the world, and the Exemplar of Christians, in all lands and in all time, "came eating and drinking" (to quote His own words), so that He was accused of being a gluttonous man and a wine-bibber. It must therefore be presumed that He drank that which would intoxicate "if taken to excess." Until that is disproved, Christians surely may lawfully drink, and therefore lawfully sell, intoxicants.

Before combatting these arguments Dr. Burns defined the terms of the question for discussion, which, he observed, Mr. Haig had avoided doing. Intoxicants, the doctor asserted, were really and literally considered "poisons." He cited a long array of medical and other authorities in proof of this. Alcohol was demonstrably proved to be "a narcotic acrid poison;" moreover, it had the fatal quality absent from other poisons, of creating a taste for itself. Its common use, continued the Doctor, was opposed to the "Christian principle" of "economy," because in its manufacture so much good food was worse than wasted; to the principle of "equity," because no proper equivalent was given for the money spent in its purchase; and to the principle of "purity" in mind and body, because strong drink was admittedly the greatest cause of all the physical, mental, and moral evils that exist in the present day. Coming to Mr. Haig's assertions, Dr. Burns said that many things were permitted to the Jews "because of the hardness of their hearts," and as a matter of fact there was more Old Testament authority for polygamy, divorce, and slavery than for the use of strong drink. True, the Jews were a chosen nation, but there were those chosen out of them for special purposes, such as the Nazarites, who were specially commanded to abstain from that which would defile or weaken them. As to the example of Jesus Christ, it was for Mr. Haig to prove that our Lord did drink wine that would intoxicate. There was a wine mentioned in Scripture that did not intoxicate. Solomon discriminated between the two when he said: "Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his colour in the cup, when it moveth itself aright, at the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." Would Mr. Haig contend that the holy and immaculate Son of God drank or manufactured the wine of which these scathing words were spoken? In the course of the debate Mr. Haig referred to the bearing of the drink question on "the present distress," and asserted that the bad housing of the poor drove them to the public-house for warmth and comfort.

Dr. Burns, in reply to this, said he should like to know how many now in destitute circumstances had once lived in more comfortable homes, but had fallen, through the drink, and how many were ever raised out of their degradation without first giving up the drink. The drink traffic is flatly opposed to the lofty principle of Christian benevolence, which not only avoids all causes of stumbling and offence in others, and seeks the removal of these causes, but is an active agent in promoting the good and happiness of mankind. In an earnest and eloquent peroration, Dr. Burns said: "The drink system is condemned by reason of the wealth it wastes, the hearts it breaks, the homes it desolates, and the souls it destroys. It is condemned by the testimony of history, by the verdict of science, by the judgment of experience, and by the very spirit of religion. I do not judge any man, but I beseech you to judge yourselves, and to ask, as Christans, whether you are justified in being in any way connected with such a system; whether it would not be far better to withdraw your influence and support from its perpetuation, much less its extension. If you do I am sure you will have the approval of a good conscience and show yourselves to be the faithful soldiers of Jesus Christ."

A full report of the discussion will doubtless be published soon; its wide circulation cannot fail very materially to serve the cause of pure and undefiled religion.

HEBREW ALMANAC.—Mr. D. C. Joseph, 394, Hackney-road, London, E., has published his annual Hebrew almanac. The selection of texts and the general appearance are good. It is an admirable method of bringing the Gospel to the Jews. Mr. Joseph will be glad to receive contributions towards a free distribution, and to send copies to others who will distribute them at home or abroad, on receipt of the postage, ½d.

Notices of Books, &c.

HER LIFE WORK is a very touching Temperance story, by MARY HOWARD, with song illustrations in the sol-fa notation (3d.) National Temperance Depôt.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. have issued at 2s. 6d. a handsome quarto catalogue containing about a hundred illustrations, for the purpose of facilitating the choice of books for Christmas and New Year presents.

SPIRITUAL CHRISTIANITY; OR, AM I SAVED? is a twopenny pamphlet (Partridge & Co.), by Captain MOORE. It treats of the difference between nominal and real Christianity, as well as pointing out the way of salvation.

HER GENTLE DEEDS, by SARAH TYTLER (6d.), the Christmas number of The Sunday Magazine, and WINGED WITH LIGHT (6d.), the Christmas issue of The Quiver, both contain excellent reading for the leisure hours of the holiday time.

THE LITTLE GLEANER. Annual Vol. Houlston & Sons. A storehouse of good articles, illustrations, Bible enigmas, and other interesting items for the young. The annual volume of THE SOWER, with its large type and well-selected papers, will meet with acceptance from more matured readers.

An attractive and varied selection of CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR CARDS comes to us from Philipp Brothers, 4, Silk-street, E.C. We observe that this firm, like many others, have drawn largely on the poems of the late Miss Havergal for their mottoes. The designs are tasteful, and the colourings rich.

THE GOLDEN GRAIN ALMANACK AND DIARY FOR 1884 (J. E. Hawkins) is a well-got-up and useful pocket companion, containing choice extracts, a daily text, and other information, besides plenty of room for engagements, &c. The interleaved GOLDEN GRAIN ALMANACK may be had in paper covers, and also strongly bound.

TALKINGS IN THE TWILIGHT. By J. J. J. A. Holness. An entertaining book for young people. The only source of true strength, and the way to escape the snares which surround the young, are well explained. HENRIK'S FOREST HOME, by the author of "Ben and Kit," &c. (same Publisher), is a true story, calculated to inspire boys to a life of self-sacrifice and noble deeds.

THE ETERNAL LIFE-BLOOD OF DIVINE SONSHIP. By S. BORTON BROWN, B.A. Partridge & Co. Metaphysical, mystical, and mistaken, are terms applicable to this treatise, which appears to bring theory to bear upon Scripture, rather than Scripture to establish theory. No ordinary reader of the Bible would come to such conclusions as the author has arrived at. They are new, but not New Testament.

EVERY-DAY LIFE: HOMELY TALKS ON HOMBLY SUBJECTS. Various authors. THE PLANK FAMILY. By M. A. PAULL. 2s. HAPPY CHILDHOOD. 2s. These three volumes, published by Mr. F. E. Longley, are prettily illustrated, handsomely bound, and well suited to amuse and profit young readers. "The Plank Family" is specially good. "Happy Childhood" is suitable for the very juvenile portion of the community.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. have added several new issues to their constantly-growing library of serial literature. DAIRY FARMING (1s.), by J. P. SHELDON, assisted by leading authorities in various countries, promises to be a very serviceable work to all engaged in the honourable and indispensable occupation to which it refers. Another work that will give much food for interesting study and research is CASSELL'S NATURAL HISTORY (7d.) With the first part is presented a large plate, entitled, "In the Jungle." The work is conceived in a spirit of reverence, and many lovers of nature will be helped by it to magnify the goodness and power of the great Creator.

PLAIN WORDS TO YOUNG MEN. By ALFRED S. DYER. 1d. Dyer Brothers. In these plain and faithful words on "an avoided subject" Mr. Dyer has nobly discharged an unwelcome but imperative task. How far the responsibility for existing evils can be thrown back on the culpable neglect of parents and public teachers in failing to warn the rising generation we know not. This, at least, is certain: every young man who reads the solemn and startling, but in no sense exaggerated utterances of Mr. Dyer contained in this pamphlet, will be without the excuse of ignorance if he falls a prey to the incitements of passion, or yields to any temptation that may cross his path. Would that every youth, not only in this, but in every land, would prayerfully read and resolutely follow these admonitions by a faithful friend and counsellor.

SUCCESSFUL PRAYER, by Rev. J. L. NIGHTINGALE (2d.), gives useful hints and cautions respecting prayer.

ON THE WATCH TOWER, by F. M. (Marshall Brothers, 4d.), is a little booklet intended to arouse believers to greater diligence in searching the Scriptures on prophetic subjects.

WORK TO-DAY (Caswell, Birmingham), and HEARERS ONLY (Partridge & Co., 1d. each), by Mr. C. FORD, are messages for the new year. They are both written in a pointed and affectionate manner, and are very suitable for distribution.

NUMBER FOUR; CHIPPINGS; NOT ALONE IN THE WORLD. By Mrs. G. S. REANEY. 1s. each. Hodder & Stoughton. Three small volumes from Mrs. Reaney's prolific pen, illustrative of the good done in Gospel Temperance and other work. The narratives are full of wit and wisdom.

THREE LETTERS, one of them from the late Dr. Schofield, of China, is a penny tract by Miss ANNIE R. BUTLER, the friend of the Children's Medical Missionary Society. The other two are from America and London. The booklet may be had of W. Mack, Paternoster-square.

BETWEEN TIMES. By Lady HOPE. J. F. Shaw & Co. A spiritual little book of thirty-one short chapters—one for every day in the month—intended to be read between-times. The texts selected, and the practical comments upon them, are helpful in the highest degree to a true consecration to the Lord.

THE LIFE OF DAVID. By Rev. P. THOMPSON, M.A. 8d. Maeniven & Wallace. That this little manual, from a hand now closed in death, has already reached its tenth thousand, is proof of its acceptance and worth. The life and history of David are condensed into a small compass, in a very able and interesting way.

SUNRISE ON THE SOUL. By Rev. J. OGMORE DAVIES. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. The sermons or lectures contained in this volume are intended to guide and help the perplexed, and were prepared with a view to strengthen the faith of young disciples. They are full of strong and vigorous thought. Jesus Christ is their theme all through; the author's aim is to draw the mind of the reader away from mere side issues, and to fasten it on the Master himself.

LIGHT FROM THE OLD LAMP. By J. JACKSON WRAY. 5s. Nisbet & Co. A capital book for a New Year's present. There are freshness, vigour, and stimulation in all the thirty chapters. The deep underlying truths of Scripture are brought out in language free from all pedantry, and with a great charm of rhetorical plainness. The language indeed is so natural and simple that a long word cannot often be found. The lessons of the Bible are applied to the particular needs of diverse persons, and every reader will find something to direct, animate, and delight.

CONTRARY WINDS, AND OTHER SERMONS. By W. M. TAYLOR, D.D. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. A storehouse of illustration as well as a treasury of exposition. The sermons are full of freshness, and though not evangelistic are evangelical. The author was induced to publish them by the many testimonies he had received to their usefulness as preached; there can be no doubt they will prove of eminent service to many more in the wider audience secured by means of the Press. There are twenty-four discourses on varied subjects, all of deep importance and sacred interest.

WHEN YE PRAY; OR, LESSONS ON PRAYER. By C. H. WALTER, M.A. John F. Shaw & Co. A manual on prayer, prettily got up, and likely to be very useful. It might be thought that there was no further room for even a brief exposition on our Lord's pattern prayer. But Christ's words are inexhaustible, and real aids to the maintenance of a devout life are beyond all praise. The author, who is a professor at St. John's Hall, Highbury, has given us a treatise which, while it does not unduly aim at this, is truly original, and is both scholarly and evangelical.

HINTS IN SICKNESS: Where to Go, and What to Do. By HENRY C. BURDETT. Kegan Paul, Trench & Co. There are few things of which even educated people are more ignorant than of what course to take and what remedies to employ in cases of sickness and accident, before medical advice or surgical aid can be procured. A simple manual containing such information is therefore a necessity in every house. Such a book is that before us. It contains hints and instructions on almost every ordinary ill that flesh is heir to. Alcohol is a medicine, but stimulants are recommended with more frequency than we should suppose necessary or desirable.

THE HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS,

FARNINGHAM AND SWANLEY.

20 YEARS AGO CHRISTMAS, 1883.

The first Meeting of the Committee was held, to establish the Home for Little Boys. Since that time more than 1,000 Homeless Little Ones have been sheltered within the Cottage Homes at Farningham, many of them all through their infancy and early childhood, till they were old enough to go out into the world to work for their own livelihood.

To-day, more than 300 Homeless Little Ones are in the Cottage Homes at Farningham, and nearly 100 Orphans in the new Orphan Homes at Swanley.

But, the Committee are without Funds to maintain them! Worse than that, they are in debt to the extent of £3,500.

Unless this debt can be removed at once, the Committee fear they must close some of their Homes.

Will the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN" prevent this?

By an easy and united effort this can be done, and before Christmas.

A Gift of £1 from each would do it. But many could afford more, and by so doing would send us on our way rejoicing.

So we ask in faith for a Christmas Gift, in the name of our Homeless and Orphan Little Ones.

To the Readers of "The Christian."

DEAR FRIENDS,—

I desire to tell you, with most hearty thanksgiving and praise, that the sum of £5,000 has been subscribed by the Lord's people, and given into my hands to buy the freehold of large premises on the Clapham Road, known as the Marble Rink.

There are buildings on the ground adaptable to the departments of the work of the Nine Elms Association, that are not connected with the Prison Mission, which therefore will now occupy the whole of Nine Elms House and premises.

One of the buildings can form a Conference Hall to seat 2,000 persons. "Those who fear the Lord, and speak often one to another of the things of His Kingdom," will rejoice at the provision of increased accommodation for meetings of Christians in this district.

The Missionary Institute, and other branches of our work, can likewise be accommodated with suitable buildings, whenever the money required for them is given by the same loving Master, who has provided so graciously for our necessities.

Donations to this Building Fund may be sent to me, either at Nine Elms House, or 143, Clapham Road. Cheques crossed to "Messrs. BARCLAY & BEVAN," for "Clapham Account." Post Office Orders and coin will be gratefully received in registered envelopes, with donor's name and full address, not for publication, but acknowledgment.

He who has bid us lengthen our cords, and strengthen our stakes, and has set a large door open before us, will accept gifts to this work as service rendered unto Him; and so I ask you to assist me in this business, in which I have need of your help.

Your Servant in the Gospel,

SUSANNA MEREDITH.

THE FLOWER SHOW OF FAIRLEY COURT. By Rev. J. M. RUSSELL. 1s. 6d. Jarrold & Sons. Fairley Court was once a dirty, drunken slum, but through the gentle and persistent efforts of Mr. Jasper, it became a scene of comfort and delight. It is a story of true interest, and a proof of what can be done by those who are in dead earnest.

FULL SALVATION, as seen in "Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress." By Rev. W. HASLAM. 3s. 6d. Morgan & Scott. The Rev. W. Haslam is just publishing a small volume of this title. In a series of chapters he comments upon and explains "Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress." The book commends and illustrates what is now spoken of as the Higher Life.

SHORT CHAPTERS ON BUDDHISM, PAST AND PRESENT. By Bishop TITCOMB, late of Rangoon. 3s. Religious Tract Society. Buddhism, as the religion of four hundred millions of human beings, is a subject of profound interest. We have here a short text-book of the highest value. Its excellence does not consist mainly in its admirable historical summary, but its revelations of the present influence of the system. Some have put it on a level with the Gospel, and not a few write about it as the finest form of heathenism. Dr. Titcomb most admirably contrasts Buddhism and Christianity, and shows that as the easiest of religions, it becomes a gigantic system of fraud and corruption. The work is very timely, and we are glad to see that the Religious Tract Society intend to follow it by other books on the religions of the East.

STUDIES ON THE BOOK OF JONAH. By R. A. REDFORD, M.A., LL.B. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. Criticisms on the Old Testament Scriptures have been carried to an excessive and irreverent degree. The conception that the Bible contained indefensible stories has not been the one formed by careful scholarship. It was time that another and better judgment should be exercised on Old Testament history. Professor Redford in this volume has brought learning and a spirit of calm inquiry to bear upon a record which has been a battle ground for sceptics, and one of deepest significance in relation to the words and work of the Saviour. His defence of the authenticity, historical value, and supernatural facts of the Book of Jonah, is exhaustive and very convincing. There is, however, no avoidance of difficulties, and a fine tone of candour towards critics of another school. The work must be held to be indispensable to all students of the Minor Prophets.

MESSRS. NISBET & CO.

SIR VALENTINE'S VICTORY, and other Stories. By EMMA MARSHALL. 3s. 6d. The first story is that of a young man, who, through losing his arm in the battle-field, learned to conquer himself. The others are also good. The influence of this admirably-written book cannot fail to give boys an earnest desire to be noble and brave.

GLIMPSES THROUH THE VEIL; or, Some Natural Analogies and Bible Types. By Rev. JAMES WAREING BARDSLEY, M.A. 5s. A valuable and suggestive treasury of good things that reveals the wondrous and beautiful adaptability of the inspired Record to every phase of the soul's need. These are indeed glimpses through the veil, and we behold in them the sublime beauty of the great "All and in All." The chapters upon "Solomon's Garden," "Fading Leaves," and "Grafting," are exceptionally good; they are full of plain, practical truths in graceful dress. The book shows painstaking and cultivated research, and keen spiritual discernment. It will serve as a goodly storehouse alike for student and teacher.

OBSCURE AND MINOR SCRIPTURE CHARACTERS, by Rev. FREDERICK HASTINGS (5s.), deals with the lesser, but none the less profitable, lights and shadows of the Bible. Pointed, earnest, and true, and full of instructive contrasts, these chapters contain some most important lessons. For teachers, for the young setting out in life, and for all thoughtful readers of the Word of God, these cameo-pictures will be invaluable. The author is no novice—he understands men and things, and has the power of laying his thoughts before his readers in striking imagery.

THE SAVIOUR'S CALL, by Rev. FREDERICK WHITFIELD (1s.6d.), is heart-searching and quickening in its tone. From the first to the last step, in loving, yet uncompromising, reality, the life of sanctification and consecration is set before the reader. None having read it can mistake the "Saviour's Call," nor fail to realise the imperative necessity of responding to it. The little book is a mine of truth, and we echo the author's prayer that it may be abundantly used to the glory of God.

Letters to the Editor.

"A FAMILY QUESTION."

SIR,—It would not be expedient, nor probably possible, for parents to compel their children, when grown up, to attend the same place of worship as themselves. But should not the compulsion be with the children? viz., the compulsion of love and duty not to give pain to Christian parents, or cause a breach in the family, by separation, to please themselves? It is to be feared that this is too little thought of in these days, which have been called the days of "obedient parents," rather than obedient children. Unconverted children in Christian families are often more dutiful than the converted, forgetful that to the latter the command especially applies, "Honour thy father and mother," which is the first commandment with promise.

A PARENT.

CHILDREN OF THE UPPER CLASSES.

SIR,—In a few days our households will be alive with schoolboys and schoolgirls; the light of holiday will be on their faces, and many homely chats will they delight in. Would it be possible for any of your readers to arrange for some drawing-room Bible-meetings on their behalf during the holidays? I have no doubt that many of our sons and daughters would enjoy them; their religious privileges while at school are so few. To make them a success, such gatherings must be bright and joyful, and the arrangements equal in every respect to the class for whom they are intended. No parents should be invited. I shall be so pleased to learn that this suggestion has stirred some Christian parents to commence these meetings, as I feel assured that a rich Divine blessing would attend them.—Yours very truly, JOHN SHRIMPTON.

"JESUS ONLY."

SIR,—Is it not time that a note of warning should be sounded against the common use of this motto? Scripture text it is not in the sense in which it is used. Scripture truth it is not; for, although it is, indeed, true that the name of Jesus is "sweet in a believer's ear," and is the dearest name on earth, yet the familiarity of its use, without the titles of Lord or Christ, in general conversation, and from many a pulpit, on many a platform, and in many a choir, with an utter absence of reverence, so common now-a-days, is not only not sweet in a believer's ear, but jars upon his conscience as a slight to his beloved Lord, and assuredly brings degradation of soul upon those who so use it. Moreover, even when the motto is used with reverence, as we are thankful to know is often the case, the humanity of Jesus, his tenderness and sympathy, are nearly the only themes dwelt upon, and the Father's love, and the Holy Spirit's fulness, and the power of the risen Christ to overcome sin in the believer, are scarcely alluded to at all. What is the consequence? The truth of "Christ in us," and "we in Him," is not grasped or sought for, and his glory is not reflected in the life; so a reaction sets in, as is always the case when one side of truth only is presented. Unitarianism and an aiming after moral excellence apart from Christ are making rapid strides in Christian England.

Should not the Apostles' use of the name arrest our attention? On the day of Pentecost we find Peter striking at the outset the key-note to its proper use, now that the Lord Jesus Christ had then finished his work of atonement, resurrection, and ascension, and had sent down his Holy Spirit to carry on the work of grace. "God," he says, "hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ" (Acts ii. 36). And from thenceforth the prevailing use of the title or name by the Apostles was Lord, or Lord Jesus, or Jesus Christ, or Christ.

Subject to possible errors in searching this out, it would appear that in the Book of the Acts, after Peter's declaration, and in the Epistles, the Apostles made use of the name "Jesus" by itself 37 times; "Lord Jesus," 35 times; "Lord," 232 times; "Jesus Christ," and "Christ Jesus," 241 times; and "Christ" 244 times. Surely the reasons for this are not far to seek, and whilst we are permitted to use the blessed name of Jesus in our hymns and prayers and conversations, certainly we are taught that the titles of Lord or Christ should oftener be connected with it, or even used alone.

Croydon, HENRY JOHNSON.

MR. ELIOT HOWARD AND THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

SIR,—In the obituary notice of the late esteemed John Eliot Howard, which appeared in your last impression, there are some portions which I have read with great regret. I think they are calculated to convey an unfaithful impression of the general state of the Society of Friends twenty-seven years ago, and to lead your readers to suppose that it was more destitute of Gospel light than was actually the case. I am sorry that Mrs. Guinness did not make herself better acquainted with the facts of the case from sources of information other than she appears to have possessed.

There is no need to enter into the state of any of the churches at the commencement of this century, when evangelical truth was confessedly to a large extent obscured; nor will I dwell upon the distinctive view of the Society of Friends that water baptism was no institution of Christ, and that it was no new institution but the passover only, that our Lord bade his disciples observe in remembrance of Him. There is abundant documentary evidence, however, to show that at the time Mr. Howard left that body, the vital truths symbolised by these observances, and indeed by the whole Jewish Ritual, the need of an atonement and the new birth, were, whatever local unsoundness existed, generally held and faithfully proclaimed.

In confirmation of this, it is only necessary to say that whilst a member of the Society of Friends, Mr. Howard was the contemporary of the late Joseph John Gurney, whose evangelical writings are so well known, of Stephen Grellett, and Elizabeth Fry. The Meeting to which Mr. Howard belonged was regarded at that time as a golden candlestick for evangelical truth, possessing a living and powerful ministry in the late William Forster, father of the Right Hon. W. E. Forster, and in the late John Hodgkin, father-in-law of Sir Edward Fry, and one of the most able ministers of the New Covenant the Society of Friends ever produced.

I will not add more; it is with the greatest reluctance that I write at all, for I knew and highly esteemed Mr. Howard, and some members of his family, whom I would not grieve, are personal friends of mine.—Yours respectfully,

Friar's Watch, Higham Hill, SYDNEY COOPER.

Ragged Schools in London.

THESE ameliorating agencies are more extensive than is generally known. Under the auspices of the Ragged School Union, there are 170 buildings, variously denominated Missions, ragged schools, institutes, clubs, &c., in which are conducted Sunday, day, and week-night schools and services, with divers other social, educational, and religious operations for young and old, and all exercising a daily or weekly influence for good upon not less than 100,000 persons.

This varied instrumentality, with its glorious band of over 3000 workers, has been weighed in the balance, and not found wanting, as is proved by the thousands who have been thus rescued. The good work continues, but what is wanted at the present time is increased monetary support for the efficient working of this diverse spiritual machinery, to enable the Missions to be, by God's help, of even more service in the future than in the past. These operations are conducted in localities from which no funds can be obtained. From without, therefore, must come the "sinews of war."

Just now new efforts are being organised; several schools need rebuilding, some require enlarging, or repairing, and many more want a renovating hand to make them cheerful and attractive. The Parent Committee are thus beset by applications for special help which they cannot adequately meet, the income not being sufficient for the regular grants upon which so many branches of work depend. This will be obvious when it is stated that to partially meet the urgent claims the sum of £1923 13s. 2d. has been voted directly to the schools by the committee since April last, the receipts in donations and subscriptions in the interval having been only £1202 16s. 9d., including some special gifts resulting from the Conference on Ragged Schools. A report will be gladly sent, if desired, and contributions thankfully received by—Yours faithfully, JOHN KIRK.

OUR OUTCAST POOR.

How to solve the Problem.

By T. J. BARNARDO, F.R.C.S.E.

IN considering the question, "How the Poor Live?" brought so much to the front of late, and in dealing with the innumerable problems which branch out of it, it would be sheer folly to forget that large numbers of the really "outcast poor" are of a class whose characters, habits, and manner of life are such that no reform which begins and ends merely with good sanitation, excellent dwellings, perfect drainage, and other matters of a like kind, will suffice to meet their case. Concurrent with legislative measures, which doubtless should include reconstruction of the houses in which they live, must be those which shall be chiefly designed to reform the habits of the people. All the misery, squalid wretchedness, indecency, and vice of London is not found in the horrible rookeries which have been so recently described. Much exists in better parts, and proves the truth of what I would insist upon—that whereas one aspect of reform, let it be reached how it may, is imperatively necessary, yet, however speedily and effectually accomplished, it will of itself prove inoperative if others are not put in action concurrently with it. The immorality, evil habits of life, as well as latent tendencies to vice, crime, and intemperance, &c., must each one be battled with, and meet its cure in some special remedy; but all these agencies operating together must converge in order to accomplish the great end desired.

It is because I feel this very deeply that I am troubled lest the tendency of public opinion, which has been so strongly excited by recent revelations as to the condition of the "abject" poor in "horrible" London, shall be directed to one or two necessary changes only, and there rest satisfied after the nine-days' wonder has subsided.

To benefit, for example, the next generation, we must effect with the children of this such changes as no mere reconstruction of their habitations will bring about of itself. Take the following case, selected from recent admissions to our "Homes," in illustration of my meaning:—

It is that of a boy, named E. D., a child of ten years who was brought by his mother. They both got their living, and have done so for years, by begging and selling lights. They have no regular dwelling-place, and frequent common lodging-houses. For years past the mother has been known as a professional beggar in the vicinity of Aldgate. Their appearance on the day of application was forlorn in the extreme, the boy stunted in growth, pale of face, and attenuated, clad only in filth and rags. The woman, who did not want to part with her child, was evidently driven by the forces of cold and hunger to apply for her boy's admission. What, I ask, save admission to a Home involving removal from the streets and the evil example of his mother's life, &c., could save such a boy from being by-and-by a confirmed vagrant or thief!

Then take the case of poor wee Emily! Two months is not a long time to have spent in this busy world, but little Emily, not yet three months old, has already experienced much of its hardness and misery. Born in the workhouse infirmary, to which the mother had gone from a common lodging-house, and which she left a fortnight after the birth of her child, the little mite whose acquaintance with suffering has so early begun, shared the bed at a common lodging-house in Seven Dials, when her mother was fortunate enough to have money to pay for one. The rest of the time was spent in the open air on her mother's arm, while the latter sold lights in the street. The mother possessed no clothing worthy of the name, a very few miserable rags constituting her whole stock of wearing apparel. Of the baby's clothing I need not attempt to give a description, and yet, wonderful to relate, neither the hot weather nor the cold and damp had affected the wee child's health. Apparently it was hardy, and would live. But how, and where? A lady, who interested herself in this poor woman, undertook to get her decently clad; and received into a house, from whence she might eventually enter the humblest class of service, but the child could not go with her. It was clear, therefore, that unless that child found a separate home, both mother and babe must continue upon the streets, and in a common lodging-house. But, as will be seen by those who carefully peruse the Christmas number of my magazine (like the other, Night and Day, published by Shaw & Co.), a new house has recently been given to me at Hawkhurst, Kent, for the very purpose of receiving destitute infants saved from the perils and dangers which in so large a number of cases cut short child-life in its earliest stages. Little Emily, who has been accepted for our Receiving House, will, I hope, shortly fill a cot in that new Home in Kent, which the neighbours have already styled "THE BABIES' CASTLE." Surely here is a case which may well be described as "saved from the streets," and for whose relief and salvation now and in the future no other remedy existed. Only by removing the baby could we hope to save the mother, and by and by, with God's blessing, make the child something other than her mother had been.

Now, I would earnestly ask, do people such as E. D.'s mother, or Emily's, care very much where or how they sleep? What do they mind as to who their companions may be, when, foot-sore, wet, and bedraggled with mire, they lie down at night upon the floor? They have no thought but that the more there are in the room the warmer it will be. Not unfrequently such people sleep in the very rags which constitute their only day clothing, and rise up in the morning without a thought of ablution or toilet of any kind. Mere reformation, therefore, of their dwellings would manifestly not suffice. Pull down the rookeries where they find shelter at night, by all means, if they are a danger to the community; but, if you do no more, they will yet discover some other place in which to hide their wretched heads, and where they will continue to diffuse influences similar to those which reigned in their former habitation. Moreover, their unfortunate children, brought up in these places, will grow up to become over again what their parents were, transmitting from generation to generation, by the operation of an immutable law, the plagues with which society is for her sins so terribly afflicted to-day. One thing certainly ought to be done, and I feel sure that the law will some day have to do this—take from all people of this class their children. I would allow no one who has not a fixed abode to retain possession of a child.

It may seem harsh to write thus. It reads terribly so. And doubtless it will inflict suffering upon a few; but think of the advantages to the community, to the children themselves, and to the next generation if some such measure became law—the obliteration in the course of one generation of the whole family of beggars, mendicants, tramps, and their like; the salvation of myriads of children, body and mind, soul and spirit; the prevention of untold crime; the alleviation of unspeakable misery which is all the more intense and terrible now because the keenness of it is chiefly endured by little children!

The terrible system, too, adopted by many parishes in London with regard to the treatment of the industrious poor who apply for temporary relief is also surely to be credited with much of the suffering and misery that prevails. Numbers of cases come under my notice, where decent women struggle on for years to maintain a humble home over their heads, and, however dire may be their distress, are denied aid in any shape except in a form that means hopeless ruin for life if accepted! These women, mostly widows, whilst almost at starvation point themselves, are keeping, with tender care, their little ones around them, watching over them, guarding them from evil, feeding them, paying rent, and meeting all other outgoings out of the incredibly small sum of 5s. or 6s. per week, which is earned by toil, with the needle or over the wash-tub, begun early in the morning and ceasing only late at night.

How is it done? may be asked, Indeed I cannot say. I have no satisfactory reply to give. Long as I have been working among the poor of East London, I cannot for the life of me tell how they do it; or how body and soul are kept together; how the rent is paid and how the children clothed even in rags, upon the incredibly small and hardly earned sum which constitutes their sole income. And yet it is done, and these good creatures who do it will never utter a lament or complaint; will struggle on bravely, almost heroically, until, struck down themselves by illness, or want of food, or exhaustion, or all combined, they succumb at length; and even then the cry that goes up like a wail to Heaven from many a half-broken heart is, "My children, my children! Who will save them from the streets or from the workhouse?" Here is a case in point: "W." and "G." were two of a family of seven children, the eldest of whom—a girl fourteen years of age—was indeed earning 4s. a week at match-box making, an occupation that engaged her from six in the morning till six at night. The whole other earnings of the family were 5s., which was the most the woman could attain to by the most unremitting industry. This 5s., with the girl Mary's 4s., made 9s. Out of the 9s., 3s. went at once for rent. This left 6s. As Mary had to walk a distance to her work, she was bound to fare better than the rest, and I have no doubt that the larger part of her 4s. was used in food and boots for herself. Say she spent 2s. 6d. only on these, this would leave at most but 3s. 6d. for the maintainance of all the rest, mother and six children!

That mother, poor honest creature, struggling under this burden, grown at last too heavy for her exhausted powers, applied to the parish for a little outdoor relief. The wise, humane, and economical (oh, how wise and economical!) parish authorities informed her that unless she and all her children came into the house they could do nothing for her. The very thought of it was heartbreaking to her. What! Lose the little home, break it up, be separated from her children, give up the struggle, hard as it was, and enter the workhouse? NEVER! She and they could die but once; but they would rather die than that, and I for one cannot blame them for such a resolve. Note that, O ye wise and very merciful and humane parochial authorities. There are people still so blind to the advantage (?) of your "system" for checking pauperism, that they will really prefer to die, and often do die, in their poor rooms—which they, silly creatures, will call home—rather than go into "the House."

But her story was at length brought to my knowledge, and I am thankful to say I was able to make room for at least two of the children. Perhaps by-and-by I may take a third. Meanwhile, I have the poor woman under careful observation. She is being visited and wisely helped to keep a roof over her head, for I think it a nobler and better thing to assist her in her struggle than to relieve her altogether of all necessity for independence and self-help.

The sum of the matter is this. Wise and humane laws are doubtless needed. So also is a more stern application of existing measures as regards the condition of property now occupied as tenement dwellings by the abject poor. But let us not forget also the crying need of "bowels of mercy" in the administration of the poor law. And let us do all that in us lies towards the support and encouragement of institutions like the "Homes" under my own care, which have for years past been engaged in carrying on the most successful of all reforms, the removal of the children from evil influences, and their upbringing under Christian and industrial training.

Week of Prayer, 1884.

JANUARY 7—12.

IN addition to the circular invitation of the Evangelical Alliance to which we referred in our last, we have received the following call to prayer from the friends in charge of the meetings at Eccleston Hall, Eccleston-street, S.W.:—

"As time passes, many of the Lord's people feel more deeply their need of waiting on Him for guidance and power. There will be meetings daily from Monday, Jan. 7, to Saturday, Jan. 12, at 11 and 7.30, for waiting on our risen and glorious Lord for wisdom and grace for service. His heart goes out, not only to individual saints but to the Church, his Body. 'Christ also loved the Church and gave Himself for it, that He might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the Word, that He might present it Himself a glorious Church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing.'

"Therefore we hope specially to know his mind in the present time as to our relationship and connection one with another as 'Members of his Body,' indwelt by one Spirit, 'called in one hope of our calling.' All who love the Lord will be welcome."

We hope that in future other friends will share that privilege with Mr. Moore.

PERISHING LONDON.

THE LONDON SAMARITAN SOCIETY

AND

HOMERTON MISSION.

Appeal to all who love the Lord Jesus Christ for means to continue the daily Free Dinners to Destitute Children, and Boots and Clothing and Free Breakfasts for the Outcast and Starving on the Lord's Day mornings.

The following extracts, taken from the many letters we receive almost daily this time of the year, will describe this section of our work, and the widespread necessity for it, better than any general statement we can make:—

One says—"We know that many frequently come to school without breakfast, and remain the whole day without food, except that which is given them by the teachers."

Another writes—"Our children come from the poorest homes, and the tales I sometimes hear make my heart ache."

A third writes—"During the cold weather boys and girls have asked me to allow them to remain in school during the dinner-hour by the fire. They would get no dinner if they went home, and preferred to stay in the warm."

Our loving Master said, "Give ye them to eat;" and I earnestly ask his people to enable us to do so. Donations will be thankfully received by Mr. HENRY HICKS BOARD, Secretary; or the Director,

JOHN JAMES JONES,

57 & 59, Ludgate Hill, LONDON, E.C.

Donations for the LONDON SAMARITAN SOCIETY are also received by the Bankers, Messrs. Fuller, Banbury, Nix & Mathieson, 77, Lombard Street, E.C.; and by the Auditors, Messrs. Josiah Beddow & Son, Chartered Accountants, 2, Gresham Buildings, Basinghall Street, London, E.C.

NOTICE.—THE ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children"

(NOW SHELTERING, EDUCATING, AND TRAINING OVER 1,300 POOR BOYS AND GIRLS),

HAS THIS YEAR BEEN ALTERED IN CHARACTER;

Instead of a Sale at the West End, as before, all the Goods received have been made up into

£5 and £10 Boxes. These Boxes each contain a very excellent selection of at least the value of £6 and £12 respectively, and will be sent on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque to any part of the country.

Ladies ordering these Boxes will confer very great benefit on the "Homes"; for by this method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West End.

Many kind-hearted sympathisers have already expressed warm approval of this plan, and promised to purchase Boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold in their own houses, to which their personal friends can be invited during the present season.

If there be many articles left over unsold from the boxes, they can be disposed of at a Sale to be held the last week of January (D.V.), in the NEW HALL OF THE EDINBORO' CASTLE, which is expected to be opened by that time.

*Dr. Barnardo earnestly invites all readers of "THE CHRISTIAN" who love poor children to co-operate with him in this new plan to benefit the funds of the "Homes," by which also the disappointing and expensive drawbacks of a public Bazaar may be avoided.*

The Boxes, carefully lined and packed, are now ready for transmission, and can be despatched to any Railway Station in the Kingdom. Applications (PREPAID) with full instructions as to conveyance, &c., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

The TRADE MANAGER,
18, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

To those kind and faithful friends who for so many years have helped by contributions of Useful or Fancy articles, Dr. Barnardo desires to offer the expression of his very grateful acknowledgments.

Bands of Volunteer Helpers are being organised to undertake the kindly visitation of the homes of the very poor. Money specially given for relief will be used for providing food and clothing for the deserving, and in giving free dinners to poor children found to be in need of such assistance. Money sent to the General Fund will be devoted to the erection, purchase, or hire of halls or suitable premises which may serve as centres of benevolent aid as well as religious and moral instruction, and where medical advice may be gratuitously obtained, and those in real need promptly relieved.

The aim of the present movement is not sectarian. The object is to improve the homes of the poor, and to help them to healthier and happier lives.

N.B.—Clothes of every description will be gladly received by Mrs. Mearns, 25, Oakley-street, Chelsea, S.W.

THE WORLD MAGIC LANTERN.

To every purchaser before Christmas WILL BE GIVEN FORTY-EIGHT PICTURES for use with this lantern.

PRICE. 10/6

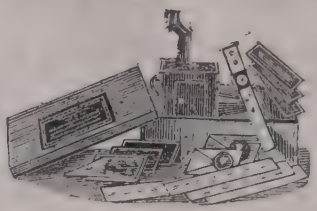
Size 11in. high by 12in. long.

THE WORLD MAGIC LANTERN is an entirely new shape and of the same principle as the magnificent invention of the powerful reflector for locomotive head lights, throwing strong rays of light ahead on the track.

The whole power and diffused rays of light is combined, concentrated and focussed in our cone-shaped reflector in such a way as to immensely intensify the brilliant light, and transfer every ray to the main reflector. Thus a light strong and piercing as a LIME LIGHT or ELECTRIC ARC is produced, so that a small ordinary lamp by this reflector increases the light as much as ten times than by the old way. Thus our improved MAGIC LANTERN will form clear distinctly life-like pictures on a radius of 3/4, and yet we can furnish it complete with lamp, chimney, and box at the astonishing low price of 10s. 6d. It requires no special aptitude or teaching, any lady, gentleman, or youth can manage one of the lanterns, and by providing themselves with descriptions of almost any subject, can project the pictures on the wall and amuse or instruct their friends or family with the happiest results. It is the simplest thing in the world to work this MAGIC LANTERN, the only magic about it is in its effects, that transport the gazers into other lands and among other people. The most sad scenes can be instantly contrasted with the most diverting. A child on his Grandmama's knee is as much pleased as his Grandma, the most ignorant is as much interested as the most wise; it attracts the school boy equally with his master; all kinds, classes, and degrees of folks are delighted by it. THE WORLD MAGIC LANTERN is the most perfect, distinct, simple in make, and altogether the very best magic lantern ever offered at the price. Remember, for 10s. 6d. we deliver one of these lanterns free at any address, and if ordered before Christmas, present each purchaser with forty-eight pictures for use with same. P.O.O. payable at Gray's Inn-road.

THE WIZARD'S CABINET.



This Cabinet contains some of the best tricks performed by the most celebrated magicians. The art of performing them can be easily learned by anyone, and with a little practice, one can amuse their friends, astonish an evening party, or create a sensation. Each of these tricks, when sold separately, are worth 1s each; but to supply the demand for something to instruct as well as amuse, and enable one to spend pleasant evenings at home, we are supplying sets of tricks in a neat box, with ALL THE NECESSARY APPLIANCES, also FULL DIRECTIONS for performing them, and send it carriage paid for HALF THE USUAL PRICE. No. 1 set, containing 3 tricks, price 1s. 6d.; No. 2 set, containing 5 tricks, 2s. 6d.; No. 3 set, containing 9 tricks, 4s. 6d.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE (Marked thus *).

The Irish Evangelization Society has now been at work nine years, and has had very great blessing. It has pleased God to use their Evangelists in the proclamation of the Gospel to bring a very large number into the fold of Christ. The Society's work is extending, and the Committee feel it to be right that the Church of God should more widely know of, and be invited to aid more largely in, this work.

EVANGELISTS.

The Evangelists of this Society may belong, as individuals, to many denominations, but as its Evangelists they represent none. They go out for this Society, not as members of any particular body of Christians, and without in any way taking part, publicly or privately, in questions relating to denominational differences, but only as Evangelists, to preach the glorious Gospel of Christ to perishing sinners, in its fulness and freeness, and to seek, under the constraining power of the love of Christ, to win souls to Him.

The Evangelists sent out by the Society are always anxious to co-operate heartily with the godly ministers of any locality in which they are called to labour.

MEETINGS.

The Society is prepared to receive applications for Evangelistic meetings, in any locality, from clergymen or laymen.

MEANS.

The work of the Society is maintained by voluntary contributions, and Christians are invited to share the privilege of this work for Christ. Those who are disposed to help are requested to do so at once. Contributions will be received by this paper, by the Hon. Sec., or by the Treasurer.

PAST WORK.

The Report of the year 1882 can be had upon application to the undersigned,

Dundalk, December, 1883. JAMES BARTON, Hon. Sec.

The Society is in very great need of Funds to carry on its work.

FRIENDLESS & FALLEN. PRAISE! PRAISE!! PRAISE!!!

1883 is now rapidly waning, and in this, the last number of The Christian, I thankfully avail myself of the opportunity of acknowledging the goodness and mercy of God in the work in which it has pleased Him to sustain me so many years. The Homes have been maintained, poor Young Women and Girls been welcomed, and all brought under the sound of the Gospel of the Grace of God, and in many instances with very happy results. Reader, Praise the Lord!

200, Euston Road, N.W. EDWARD W. THOMAS, Secretary.

Under the Patronage of H.R.H. the PRINCESS CHRISTIAN.

We also plead for gifts of clothing, toys, &c., for our Christmas and New Year's Festivals, feeling that we shall not in vain ask you to help to reflect the brightness of your surroundings on the little ones whose lives are cast amid the shadows.

AN EXAMPLE, AND AN INVITATION.

Our Lord was engaged in the glorious work of preaching and teaching, and there came unto Him a large company of "Outcasts," having with them those that were "lame, blind, dumb, maimed, and many others." Our Lord received them, and healed them, and blessed them, and the multitude "glorified the God of Israel."

Jesus said to his disciples, "I have compassion on the multitude.....I will not send them away fasting, lest they faint by the way" (Matt. xv. 32).

"Then Jesus took the seven loaves and the fishes, and gave thanks, and brake them, and gave to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude."

The sympathy and compassion of our Lord, and his care for the bodies of the poor, are worthy our imitation.

Every Sunday morning at the Seamen's Bethel, Old Gravel-lane, London Docks, a company of poor creatures, selected by the Missionaries of the Mariners' Friend Society, the Police, and Dock Officials, among the outcasts of our dense river-side population, are provided with a FREE BREAKFAST, after which the Gospel is spoken to them.

Like those of our disciples, our provisions are limited. They were privileged to give the Master, for the hungry people, "seven loaves." Will not some readers of THE CHRISTIAN help us to imitate our Lord in not sending them away fasting?

Donations may be sent to FRANCIS J. SHELTON, Hon. Sec., 19, Old Gravel-lane, E.; or JOSEPH MOORE, Treasurer, 9, Morgan-street, Bow, E.

LONDON ASSOCIATION IN AID OF THE MORAVIAN MISSIONS.

Patron—The Right Hon. THE EARL CAIRNS.

For 66 years this Association has been the instrument of making known some of the wants of the Moravian Missionaries, and soliciting the sympathy and support of Christians on behalf of the great work which God has entrusted to them.

We have now to present a very urgent appeal for two new and commodious churches in Paramaribo, South America.

The need of such is seen from the fact that out of a population of 23,000 in Paramaribo, 9647 are members of the Moravian Church.

There are no less than 6297 persons without a place in which to worship God.

The natives themselves are doing what they can, but it is very little, compared with what requires to be done.

Who will kindly help in this matter?

"The love of Christ constraineth us."

Contributions will be thankfully received for "Paramaribo Church Fund" by Messrs. HERRIES, FARQUHAR & Co., St. James'-street; the Secretary, Mr. G. E. ROBERTS, at the Office, 29, Ely-place, Holborn, E.C.; Messrs. SMITHS & Co., Lombard-street; Messrs. WILLIAMS, DEACON & Co., Birchin-lane; or THE CITY BANK, Holborn Branch.

PROTESTANT BLIND PENSION SOCIETY.

The attention of the benevolent public is respectfully invited to the claims of this Society, which may be briefly summarised as follows:—

The Society was founded in 1863 for the purpose of assisting the Blind poor of Great Britain and Ireland, by life pensions paid monthly at their own homes, through the agency of voluntary visitors.

This system of distribution, besides being the most economical to the Charity, is one that gives the greatest relief and gratification to the beneficiaries.

The Society has now upon its register 425 pensioners in receipt of allowances ranging from 10s. to 25s. each per month, and an approved list of 180 candidates seeking election.

In the selection of candidates no religious test is demanded, it being only required that they are in need of assistance, and their moral character is satisfactorily attested by responsible persons.

The only expenses of management are a nominal salary to the Secretary, a donation given to another charity for the occasional use of its board room, and the unavoidable cost of printing and postage. Hence nearly the whole of the moneys received go direct to the objects for which they are given.

Having barely sufficient funds invested to provide for one year's pensions, the Committee are compelled to rely from year to year upon the generous contributions of friends, and they appeal with all earnestness to those able to give for a share of their Christmas contributions.

Treasurer, N. J. POWELL, Esq., Devonshire House, Shortlands, Kent; Hon. Secretaries, Messrs. THOS. POCOCK and A. S. DODSON; Secretary, W. E. TERRY; Office, 235, Southwark-bridge-road, London, S.E.

BOYS' HOME, 185, Holloway-road, N.

Funds are much needed to carry on the work of rescuing poor neglected and homeless Boys, who would otherwise be in danger of entering upon a life of crime.

There are now 27 Boys in the Home. All but 4 attend a Board School, and are too young to contribute any earnings to the support of the Home.

THE HYGIENIC VALUE OF MAGNETISM.

It is a generally accepted fact that a negative or depressed condition of the human system, or any organ of the body, renders man especially liable to attacks of disease during a negative or depressing condition of the atmosphere. The body is then unable to repel the subtle effect of malaria, or poisonous atmospheric influence, i.e., is deficient of the necessary recuperative power for retaining and securing a healthy condition. Magnetism enables us to live constantly within the presence and atmosphere of a vitalising influence, known and admitted everywhere to possess properties more intimately allied to our health and well-being than any other yet discovered. These facts were recognised long before Magnetism was made so generally applicable. Now, science and art have enabled us to apply these forces so effectively as to produce a balance of power, and an evenness of circulation in the human system, which will restore and maintain a healthy equilibrium. They have not only proved efficient to restore, but valuable as preventives against epidemic diseases, because it is possible to carry with us an ever active agency, which pours into the system gentle currents of vitalising power to overcome infection, and strengthen the resisting forces of the system against its approaches. For this reason it would be a great advantage, even to those in health, to adopt our system of Magnetic protection. However incredible these statements may appear, we assert that our pen would never have been employed in the advocacy of the Odo-Magnetic method of healing if it had not been proved to be, in numberless instances, a more reliable tonic for debilitated constitutions, or over-wrought brains, than any prescription from the repertory of so-called orthodox medicine. Our successes have been mainly among that class of patients who were convinced that their chronic ailments would never depart unless they could realise an abiding energy which medicine does not give.

From Mr. A. HOLWELL, 10, Redcar-road, Guisboro'.

December 5, 1883.

"I am able to report a grand improvement from the use of your appliances in three months. All my nervousness is gone, all indigestion removed, and I can eat meat or pastry without any after suffering.

"I can rest much better at night now than I have done for years, and if the benefit continues through the winter, I shall be something like 'perfectly whole.'

"I had a heavy, sleepy feeling in the head all the summer, but it has quite disappeared lately.

"I find, to my great comfort, that I can bear the cold better this winter than before—circulation is kept up, and I do not feel the cold; from top to toe I just feel as if there were life and vigour running through me. These appliances would be very valuable to those who suffer at the chest in any way; the comfort to be derived is only to be understood by using them.

"I feel thankful to God for giving His blessing to the means made use of in my behalf, and wish you God's blessing on your further endeavours."

From Miss EDITH BUNGARD, 30, Mainsforth-terrace, Sunderland.

July 24, 1883.

"It is now eight months since I first wore your appliances for Chronic Rheumatism, and the result is, I have not had a single attack since last November, and taking into consideration that I suffered from an attack every few weeks, winter and summer, it is a plain and positive fact that there is a curative power in Magnetism. You have my best thanks for having been the means, by God's blessing, of doing me such lasting good."

Letters commendatory of Mr. Garratt's treatment by Magneto-Electricity have been received from hundreds of persons in all classes of society. A private list of 850 names as referees can be had on application. Consultation free, personally, or by letter. B. COPSON GARRATT, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

THE OLD YEAR: ASPECTS OF THE TIMES.

By Rev. WILLIAM GUEST, F.G.S.

OF the year now closing it may safely be said that there can have been few periods when the danger was greater than at the present time of erring on the side either of the hopeful or of the foreboding, in considering the movements that bear upon the great cause of Christ among men. That there will in the coming year be conflicts of empires, revolutionary agitations of violence and of lawlessness, and tremendous crises of perplexity, can scarcely be doubted. The air is rife with elements of trouble. The power of Satan is much more formidable and effective than it is the modern custom to believe. There is, however, a divine restraining and controlling. Our sinful world has a Redeemer. Man's Saviour is living and enthroned, and we must take this as a truth never to be forgotten, in our judgment of the times which are passing over us.

HOPEFUL SIGNS.

Let us not, then, overlook grounds of encouragement. We need these to sustain ourselves in days when newspaper reading is so full of alarm. Let us note first a very hopeful sign in the reaction which, among Christian believers, is setting in strongly against the exaggeration of the material in the professing Church. It is materialism that has brought a decadence of faith and of religious enthusiasm. Instead of an expectation "only from God," people have set their hope in the æsthetics of places and of worship. Faith in matter has killed faith in God. Now, in almost every congregation, there are those who are in protest against this materiality. They see that costly churches may produce spurious sentiment, but cannot keep men honest and that artistic music and harmonies cannot make men pure. They deplore it as worse than a mistake for Christian people to have been surrounded by the boastings of atheism, reckless licence, and deeply-seated alienation from the living God, and to have expected, by dead and unspiritual things, to melt men and women into contrition. If they are pointed to Nature, with her art and taste, they reply that it is the breath of the Lord that gives this loveliness to Nature, and they are declaring that they will tolerate no worship, however graceful it may be, that is not in obvious union with a predominant and coefficient dependence on the Life of the Spirit of God. I know no sign of the age that is better than this. May God make the protesters wise and strong!

Evidences of a Divine controlling meet us on every hand. Atheism makes no way, spite of the devil's lie there is in it—No God, no Master. Infidelity is becoming malignant, which is a sure sign of mistrust: prevailing unbelief is but a definite form of previous indifference, and may be more hopeful. Agnosticism—a Greek term, we are reminded, that is related to the Latin word ignoramus—is a transient conceit. Positivism makes no progress. A so-called Theistic church sends out a cry for help. Ultra-Ritualism is disavowed by the Tractarians who started the movement, while the Sacerdotalism, which is its root and essence, is loathed by five-sixths of the people. Evolutionism is coming to find that it has not discovered the methods whereby the First Cause has worked. A philosophy that seemed antagonistic, bows before Christianity as it enlarges its range of thought. Never did learning so surround with reverence the person of Christ. Even Secularism pays Him an unwonted honour. Among scientists there is appearing a sharply defined cleavage that separates them into the Christian and anti-Christian camps. Worldliness is doing its utmost in the way of reckless costliness and magnificence, but there are evidences that its gilded inanity wearies, or provokes, while it less and less satisfies. A literary authority said recently—"English people have almost ceased to feel joy, and are dropping the word gladness out of the language." As for persistent unbelief, it is "self-tormented beyond reach of doubt;" which means that these unbelievers are indulging a peace which is a living death without either fear or hope. Oh dreary desolation! Again the age is coming to the restless uncertainties of the world at the time of the Lord's First Advent.

MODERN PRETENSIONS TESTED.

The advancing years are testing modern pretensions. Blessed be the Lord, in a time of strange doctrines, theological fictions, and endless speculations and vagaries, there is a solid basis for our faith in the unchanging Word of Christ. "The Word of the Lord endureth for ever, and this is the Word which by the Gospel is preached unto you." Yes, out of an immutable Word comes the message of our salvation. The talk against the finality of the New Testament is refuting itself. Men who hold by the teaching of Apostles are said to be putting back the clock of time: but there is no clock with figures enough to tell the variations of these self-named "advanced thinkers." Let anyone follow their writings, or go and listen to their sermons. A chaos of bewilderment would come over him. He would find that the so-called leaders were not making clear one way to life, about which the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err, but a hundred ways. The pretence that inspiration is Spirit in every Christian man, will soon give to us a thousand and one religions, and make our very Christianity contemptible to men of real culture. I am certain that, as a rule, truly cultured Christian men despise these fictions, and will not "give place by subjection—no, not for an hour." The perfection of Christianity is not that it is a discovery, but a revelation. The discovery may be adapted to expanding intellect and increasing knowledge: but the revelation, while receptive of progressive learning and capable of a larger illumination, is fixed and final.

What, we may ask, is effective preaching? That which arouses from insensibility: removes remorse from the conscience; gives a sense of salvation which is union with God; takes the sting from death; inspires generous zeal for others; furnishes adequate motive and righteous incentive; overcomes evil conformity; sustains the spirit in adversity; converts the wretched and turns the sinful from iniquity. A man must be blind and deaf whom the years do not show that the preaching which does these things is not the preaching of the men who dream of an inspiration that supersedes that Gospel which Apostles tell us they received not from men, not from themselves, "but by revelation of Jesus Christ." The successful preachers, through all the ages, have been those who "continued in the Apostles' doctrine," and whose sermons were wrestling appeals to make men see and feel the solemn weight, infinite urgency, and transcendent grace of New Testament truths.

GOD'S WITNESSES.

While these tests are being furnished, these passing years are giving other proofs of Christian fidelity. I may illustrate by an incident. During the autumn, on a visit in a retired country parish to a clergyman of catholicity, genuine sympathy, and self-forgetfulness, I accompanied him to the village school-house. Being left alone with an intelligent schoolmaster, I inquired concerning some infidels in the locality, and what they made of the Vicar's life in their neighbourhood. "Ah, sir," he replied, "that to them is a great difficulty; they think they can get over Christianity by their arguments, but Mr. ——'s life is a stumbling-block to them." It was an unusual, but an expressive use of this word. In like manner there are ten thousand times ten thousand believers in Christ, who, unknown to the world, are living day by day in saintly consistency. I have travelled much of late in the northern, western, and midland counties, and have found in almost every circle these heavenly-minded and faithful followers of the Saviour. They are not disturbed by the unsettled opinions and theological controversies of the times. They put away from them the warring strifes and agitations that fill the columns of newspapers. To walk with God in lowliness and quietness is the prayer of some; to be courageous in rescuing the victims of sin is that of others. They move among the poor, but only speak of their work to God. They are continually lessening human suffering and augmenting human happiness, but they strive that their left hand shall not know what their right hand doeth. Alive to the enjoyments of life, they bless by their serene cheerfulness and rebuke vice by their goodness. They know too well who has said, "How can ye believe that seek honour one of another?" to make parade of their life-work.

I firmly believe that these children of God were never more numerous than at this present time. They are found in every social grade. They are trying to imitate the Great Example in mansions as well as cottages. They are in kitchens and work-rooms; in factories and workshops; in high places, and in traders' homes. Not a few of them are young men in warehouses, and others in official life. They are known to those who seek for them in the ranks of the ministry. Like their Master, they do not "strive nor cry," but, unacknowledged by the world, are diffusing blessings which He notes who will not let the giving of the cup of cold water go without its reward.

We are in danger of overlooking these hidden ones. The world is full of talk. Propagandism is ostentatious. Politics are noisy with their asperities. Church parties, denominational differences, and endless sensations fill the minds of men. Let us not, however, forget that the Spirit, who breatheth as He listeth, is everywhere glorifying Christ in the beautiful lives and unselfish benevolence of millions who are "the holy seed," germinating in obscurity, but from whom the great harvest is to come.

A PREPARATORY PERIOD.

On every hand the year closes with marks that it is a period of preparation. I have been privileged in other years to indicate, in this journal, that man's appearance on earth has, by geologists, been brought enormously forward. Last month an eminent scientist (the Duke of Argyll) thus spoke: "Man is a thing of yesterday." His "new birth—so recent, so fresh, and close at hand," was not earlier because "the home of man was not ready for him. The indispensable elements of his culture and civilisation had not been introduced." That same Almighty Power is now preparing the globe for 'The Day' to which all holy ones have looked forward. The signs of this preparation are thickening. They will grow in number, with wide offers of mercy, and with tones of warning. We are closing a year of such tremendous earthquakes and gigantic eruptions as have never before marked historic times. Volcanic energy has made day black as midnight, and has been heard, according to Mr. Norman Lockyer, at a distance of two thousand miles. Oh! what fearful rebuking have these last six months witnessed of the mockers who speak of "all things continuing as they were from the beginning of the creation." The earth in its spheres knows nothing of a continuity of sameness and uniformity. Unrest, changes, catastrophes, and unlooked-for cataclysms have been constant, though none have been equal to those of this year. The shaking will be repeated. The sure word of the Lord is: "I will make to tremble not the earth only, but also heaven." Surely in the dread cosmical uncertainties of the future, no one thing can claim an importance equal to this—to be "heirs of a kingdom that cannot be shaken."

THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD.

Alas! alas! what shall we say of that portentous change which is passing over many hitherto evangelical churches and their ministers? There are thousands of Christian professors whose sainted fathers condemned legitimate things as not right, and their children now count nothing wrong. If there was then rigidity, with these there is a licence of laxity. What shall be said of reputed Christian households, where separateness from the world has ceased? What shall we say of churches, where an unhallowed worldliness is no longer deplored, but defended; no longer confessed, but counted consistent? What shall be said when it is those "without" who are exclaiming: These Christians are just as gay, as sumptuous and convivial, with their feasts and wines, as fond of mingling in doubtful companies, as we are? The fiction is exploded that Christian believers are 'new creatures in Christ Jesus.' They have ceased the profession of it. Their religious soirées and bazaars are places for the same acting, laughter, and buffoonery as the paid caterers for the world provide."

We bow our heads in sorrow. The spectacle of the children of light going to worldlings to make them happy is one that may make fiends laugh and angels weep. The union of the Church and the world has been the ruin of one, and the deeper ruin of the other. The early years of the eighteenth century witnessed this spectacle, and a falser, more Godless, soulless, and unprincipled age was never deplored in British annals. Unquestionably, the recovery came when the early Methodists refused to be merged in the world, that they might better influence and elevate it.

There are great names now that would bridge over the godly separation that introduced the new era. But go into the churches where they have succeeded. Do they furnish an atmosphere where you can safely send the fresh converts of our modern evangelisation? Go into the households where this alliance has been perfected; you will find that religious joy has fled; the domestic altar has been broken down; the line of family conversion, that descended from pious fathers, has stopped; and prejudices, thick as weeds in a neglected garden, have sprung up against real New Testament Christianity. I have stood by death-beds in such households, and have, during a long ministry, known none at once so Christless and so hopeless.

In a second paper, for the New Year, I may speak to the faithful protesters against this new departure, which is a return to that which was an old peril to the great cause of Christ. Meanwhile, let] us close 1883 with appeals to our Divine Lord, and learn what He requires at an epoch when the alarming and the hopeful have come into such close conflict.

Ling Holme, Tunbridge Wells.

THOUGHTS FOR THE DYING YEAR.

LIFE, even at the longest, is so short compared with the issues dependent upon it, that the lapse of another year is a fact which thoughtful minds will regard with concern. There is no real break in the continuity of time's ever-flowing stream, but the close of the year furnishes an opportunity for pausing to consider and take note of the lessons to be learned from the past, and the steps to be taken for making the future more subservient to the great ends for which we live.

Every heart, duly affected with a sense of its own true state in the sight of God, will feel the necessity for making such a period a time for humble confession of failure, and contrite regard to the cleansing efficacy of the Saviour's precious blood. How many have been the mistakes, the omissions of duty, the heart wanderings from God, incident to the life of the best among us during 1883. As we review our path, how can we fail to bow our heads in lowly confession to Him of whom the Psalmist said: "If we have forgotten the name of our God, or stretched out our hands unto a strange God, shall not God search this out? for He knoweth the secrets of the heart." It is when we are conscious of and humbled by our own utter demerit that we best understand the blessedness of our union with Christ, and the sweetness and power of his advocacy before the throne on our behalf. As we bid farewell to the Old Year, let us part with all its faults and follies, not only by refusing again to be misled by them, but by earnestly betaking ourselves in view of them to the fountain, where the gracious permission is given: "Wash, and be clean." Bright will be our entrance upon the New Year, as we hail it, singing:—

"Not all my well-remembered sins
Can startle or dismay;
That precious blood atones for all,
And bears my guilt away."

Then, again, we do well to make the present season a time for grateful praise and truthful joy in God. How vast is our debt of thankfulness to Him for mercies daily received, grace so freely bestowed, patience and longsuffering so wonderfully exercised. In vain do we seek to recall the favours He has accorded us; "they cannot be reckoned up in order unto Thee," may, indeed, be our acknowledgment. Too slow have we been to give thanks, too ready often to complain, or look gloomily or despondingly on our surroundings. Let us learn from the past faithfulness and love our gracious Father in heaven has displayed towards us, to be more full of the spirit of praise, and to go forth into the untrodden paths of the future confiding with a firmer trust in his sure words of promise and of encouragement. It is our privilege to be sheltered under his wing, cared for by his special providence, and kept by his mighty power unto full salvation.

"In Zion's rock abiding,
My soul her triumph sings;
In his pavilion hiding,
I praise the King of Kings."

Once more let us be induced just now to reconsecrate ourselves, heart and life, to our beloved Lord. He has need of all our energies, and demands our entire surrender. Oh, how gladly should we lay at his blessed feet all our talents, all our powers, knowing that He gave Himself a ransom for us! Is it not here many of us have chiefly failed in the past; do we not need to search ourselves closely to see wherein self may have taken the place He ought to have had? The coming year must be one, for earnest Christians, of conflict with evil, of contention for the truth, and of contact with grave and complicated aspects of affairs, both in the Church and the world. Let us greet it with renewed determination to be whole-hearted and true-hearted in our devotion to the Master we serve.

It may be the year of our seeing Him as He is, of our entrance into his presence, and so of the termination of our earthly stewardship. If so, we shall desire to be found of Him in peace, diligent, blameless, and faithful to our trust. Whether the rest of our earthly time be long or short, let us in the strength of grace, and in dependence on the Spirit of God, yield ourselves unreservedly to the claims of Christ. Careless as to earthly sacrifice, worldly reproach, or human censure, be it ours to make 1884 a year of fullest consecration to life with and for God; our fervent song and practical resolve may well find expression in the forcible words of Miss Havergal:—

"Take my life, and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee;
Take my moments and my days,
Let them flow in ceaseless praise."

The Princess Louise and the Sheltering Homes, Liverpool.

SIR,—My kind-hearted friends amongst your numerous readers will be glad to learn that we are hard at work rescuing all we can out of the great mass of the homeless and starving children on the streets of our large cities. It is only a small fraction of the misery that we can touch with limited funds, premises, and human strength, but this is no reason why we should stand still and merely lament a state of things which we cannot appreciably alter.

It is a matter for gratitude that this rescue work has the entire approval and best wishes of those who are really acquainted with its methods, and more especially of those who have themselves been to Canada. We have pleasure in publishing a letter addressed to us by order of the Princess Louise, since her return to this country, with H.R.H.'s unsolicited testimony to the value of this rescue work:—

"Kensington Palace, Dec. 4, 1883.

"Dear Madam,—The excellent work that is being carried on by your Sheltering Home for Destitute Children has been brought under H.R.H. the Princess Louise's notice by more than one inhabitant of Liverpool; it is also a source of pleasure to know, as the Princess does, that the children you have taken out to Canada are doing well in that country. H.R.H. bids me send you a donation of £15 from herself towards the support of the Home, and wishes continued success to its operations.—Yours faithfully,

"Arthur Collins,
"To Mrs. Birt." "Equerry.

Last year we tried to make some 3000 of our poorest children happy at Christmas time by a dinner. This year we wish to be prepared for 4000 boys and girls; the dinners to go on at the same time in twelve different places, so as to prevent overcrowding. Louisa Birt,

THE ENCHANTED GROUND.*

By Rev. W. HASLAM.

THERE is never a privilege without a corresponding responsibility, and never a blessing without a danger somewhere near at hand.

Our Pilgrims have come a long way; they have much experience, have seen many sights, and they may esteem themselves strong; but Satan has a temptation for such, even if the flesh has not. When a man has attained much experience, and is far in advance of others, it is impossible not to feel a kind of superiority. The feeling rises spontaneously, and sometimes strongly, "I am not what I was: I am not as other men." We should guard against this feeling, and not give place to it, for it is an enchantment which lulls many into giving up watching, or to settle down into false security; it leads to an unconsciousness of present danger, which is very dangerous. We may set this down from the beginning as a temptation which is common to human nature.

It is true that man is prone to fall, but equally true that Satan is ever watching to make bad into worse. Under these circumstances, we must not be surprised that our Pilgrims, as well as others, are entangled in some or other of his devices.

Bunyan, with wonderful perception, places the Enchanted Ground after the Joys of the Delectable Mountains. He shows the effect of this delusive enchantment:—(1) upon Ignorance; (2) upon Turnaway; (3) upon Little Faith; (4) upon Christian.

. . . . . .

We have seen how the Enchantments prevail against Ignorance, the unsaved; against Turnaway, who is trying to save himself; and against Little-faith, who is saved, but does not lean upon the Saviour. Now we come to Christian and Hopeful, who do lean upon Him, and have taken Him, once for all, to be their Friend and Guardian.

Notice that, notwithstanding this, our Pilgrims were not more free on this Enchanted Ground than others. Somehow they had neglected the note of the way which the shepherds had given them, and also their warning against Flatterer. So when they came to a place where two ways met, instead of depending upon the Lord, their ever-present though unseen Guide and Friend, they too readily listened to one who said he was going to the Celestial City.

We are told that he was a black man, with white raiment. So skilfully and pleasingly did he talk, and so adroitly did he deceive, that, professing to lead them to the City, he actually led them from it. Soon they found that, in following Flatterer, they had their backs, and not their faces, towards the Celestial City. They not only made this discovery, but also another—namely, that their feet were entangled in the net.

Here Christian perceived his mistake, and said to Hopeful, "Now do I see myself in an error. Did not the shepherds bid us beware of the Flatterer? We have found it true to-day, that 'a man that flattereth his neighbour spreadeth a net for his feet'" (Prov. xxix. 5). Thus Christian and Hopeful bewailed themselves. At last they espied a shining one coming towards them, with a whip of small cords in his hand. He rent the net, and let them out. Then said he to them, "Follow me, that I may set you in your way again." This done, he chastised them sore, to teach them the good way wherein they should walk: and as he chastised them he said, "As many as I love I rebuke and chasten: be zealous, therefore, and repent" (Rev. iii. 19). He then bade them take good heed to the other directions of the shepherds, and go on their way. They thanked him for all his kindness, and went forward softly, singing as they went.

The same Flatterer comes to the man of God even now, and suggests, "You see where Littlefaith, who sat in 'Dead Man Lane,' was wrong: where Turnaway, in the 'Dark Lane,' failed: and how Ignorance, in his 'Crooked-lane,' went astray; but in your path there is no danger. You will get to the Celestial City for certain. It matters not which way you go. You are cared for, and He shall give his angels charge over you." In such a frame of mind as this, a Christian easily falls not only into the arms of the Flatterer, but of the Atheist too. Practical Atheism is very common. Men who fully profess to believe that God made the world, speak and act as if it governed itself, and as if things happened by chance. Christians, also, who profess that God has saved and created them anew, think and speak as if they had the ruling of themselves.

Atheist, whom the Pilgrims meet, laughs at them; but they hold on their way, and are not hindered by him. Then they come to one Temporary, but they pass him also.

By these figures and characters Bunyan represents the snares and dangers which beset the path even of advanced Christians; reserving the commonest snare—sleep—to the last. A drowsiness comes over even such a one as Hopeful, with all his brightness and cheeriness. Our poor nature is subject to heaviness and weariness: so that we easily subside into resting, and even into sleep, if we are not watchful. Well and skilfully does Christian suggest the remedy for this spiritual drowsiness, namely, to remember the way in which the Lord has brought us, and to tell of it. "Bless the Lord, O my soul" (said the Psalmist), "and forget not all his benefits: who forgiveth all thine iniquities: who healeth all thy diseases: who redeemeth thy life from destruction: who crowneth thee with loving-kindness and tender mercies" (Psalm ciii. 2—4).

It is the remembrance of these things which keeps our souls alive, and awakens our thankfulness even to overflowing.

They go on their way, conversing upon the work of the spirit under which Hopeful was awakened and converted at Vanity Fair. The remembrance of our first love is very cheering; and the telling of the story of our salvation is a greater help than most people imagine.

"Remember" (says Moses) "all the way which the Lord thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness" (Deut. viii. 2). We, too, are apt to be forgetful at every stage. This is another phase of the enchantment, caused partly by the infirmity of the flesh, and partly by the distracting temptations of Satan; but, come as it may, it is most dangerous.

The shepherds did well to warn the pilgrims against the Enchanted Ground: and we shall do well to take the warning, and act upon it.

The Bethlehem Shepherd Boy's Tale.*

SO happy all the day
Had I been without play,
And such good thoughts had come o'er my mind,
That I wondered what it meant,
Or for why it was sent,
As I ne'er had felt aught of the kind.

And the birds all day long
Had kept trilling their song;
And the sun had gone down, oh, so red!
We had folded the sheep,
And were talking of sleep,
But, somehow, we cared not for bed.

The stars were all drest
In their brightest and best,
And the moon showed a streak of her gold:
'Twas a glorious night:
And we thought of the sight
Of which David our father has told.

A sound struck our ear,
Sweet, joyous, and clear,
It seemed like a musical breeze;
But, ere we could gaze,
We were all in a blaze,
And found ourselves down on our knees.

A Bright One then said,
('Twas like life from the dead,)
"Good tidings, good tidings I bring!
Messiah's come down,
In your own little town—
You will find Him a Babe and a King!"

And then the whole Choir,
Rising higher and higher,
Sang of glory, sweet peace, and good-will;
The sheep seemed to dance,
And the mountains to prance,
And the stars could no longer stand still.

Then onward we sped,
To find out the bed
Where the Saviour in lowliness lay:
Near Bethlehem's inn,
(Oh, shame on their sin!)
We found Him 'midst cattle and hay.

But we saw the blest sight;
'Twas our Judah's delight;
And Mary and Joseph were there;
And soon we made known
To all in the town,
What we heard the good Angel declare.

And now, every day,
I sing and I pray
To the Babe, who is Saviour and all;
May his wonderful birth
Be known through the earth,
And cheer both the great and the small!

Gospel-Van Work.

MESSRS. WHARTON and Weaver lately completed a three weeks' work at Whaley Bridge, about seven miles from Buxton, which has been blessed to the conversion of souls. Night after night over 300 persons have been brought together in the Mechanics' Hall to listen to most stirring Gospel addresses. The earnest appeals made by these servants of God once more proved too much for those who were dead in trespasses and in sins.

At their last meeting, one woman stood up and said how she had been blessed in her soul through their visit. The previous day about seventeen were baptized, and testimony was given by members of different denominations of blessing received.

SHOREDITCH TABERNACLE MISSION.—Pecuniary help will be most thankfully received by Mr. W. G. Hayes, 121, Hackney-road, E., for the various branches of this Mission.

THREE LIFE PICTURES.

INSIDE.

TURN over the page, and look at this picture. It is Christmas Eve, and in a luxuriously-furnished drawing-room, bright with mirrors and gilded framework, sat a lady. Nestling by her side is a little girl of some six summers. Her golden hair floated like a sunny cloud around her pretty face, and her big brown eyes were full of intelligent wonder and delight over the story of "The Three Bears," read to her by mother out of a handsomely-bound volume. As the silvery tones of a tiny clock rung out the hour of seven, Nurse appears, and Violet is told to go to bed.

"Have you the sponge rusks, Thompson?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"And Miss Violet's lemonade—and a good fire?" Then, content with the affirmative answer, the lady kisses her precious little one, and watches her till the door has closed upon her.

Then comes the later hour when she stands beside Violet's snowy bed, and fills with loving hands, and a tender smile upon her face, the big white stocking hung up by the little one ere going to rest. Such toys! lavishly given, lovingly chosen—no expense spared to give her darling pleasure. Then a light kiss laid like a silent snowflake upon her child's brow, and an earnest "God bless and keep her," breathed softly, as she left the room.

OUTSIDE.

A little form wandered in the cheerless winter street, with blue chilblained hands and cold bare feet. The wind blew keenly and mercilessly, bearing on its blast half-frozen rain and sleet. It made its cruel, chilling way through the miserable clothing of the little child, who shivered and stooped as she faced the blast.

She would have been fair to look upon, but for her pinched, wan face; she had no one to kiss her or care for her, for father and mother had passed away, and were in the heaven-home beyond the stars. There was no one to love her, and she had no one to love.

Men and women passed by her in that busy street; childless wives, who little dreamt what a heartful lay in their path, had they but stooped and gathered one of the Lord's little lost lambs into their lonely bosoms, and lavished some of their wealth of love upon it. Strong men, bent on their eager quest for gold, never heeded the little one's hungry face and outstretched hand.

There were children housed by the hundred in that street, nestled at that hour in their cosy beds, dreaming of the happy Christmas dawning. One child more would have made but little difference in many a home, but no one thought of her; no one cared for her. Poor little waif! that Christmas Eve she was out in the cold; she wandered on till it grew so foggy and dark that even the gaslights were dim, rough men stumbled over her and swore at her; the shouts of drunken revellers on their homeward way seemed scarcely to pierce her ears, for a strange stupor and numbness was creeping over her limbs and heart. She clasped her cold hands over her breast, and tried to force her blue lips to form the familiar words:

"Our Father," with a sigh for rest, and then she laid her down—was it to sleep?

Hungry and chilled she lay. It was Christmas Day now, for the church clocks had chimed "Two." A carriage now and then rolled past her filled with gaily-clad forms returning from a merry keeping of that Christmas Eve.

ON THE "OTHER SIDE."

Straight from the throne of God flew a seraph form, his wings shining with heavenly light, his face radiant with God's own smile. Down through the darkness that shrouded the earth, until he reached a child's form asleep in death. Rich, warm robes of snowy whiteness were wrapped around the little one, and softly the star-crowned angel lifted her heavenwards—onward, upward, through the silver-lit heights of space until the golden gates are reached, and the angel lays the little child lovingly in its spirit mother's waiting arms. No longer outside men's houses, and hearts, and love, and sympathy, but on "the other side" of earth, and safe in heaven's great fold. In God's home and heart there is room for the outcast child of the London streets.

* * * * *

Dear little readers, what do you think of my three pictures? Many of you are in the midst of happy homes this Christmas time. Will you think a little of the children of "Outcast London?" What can you do for them, do you ask? God will tell you if you put the question honestly to Him; God will show you your duty and your privilege as little ministers to the wants of the lost lambs who lie at your very door.

EVA TRAVERS EVERED POOLE.

CHILDREN'S MEETINGS IN GLASGOW.

IN the south-east of Glasgow a remarkable series of meetings has been brought to a close. Night after night 1700 children were kept in quiet and rapt attention while the great leading truths of salvation were presented to them in a manner suited to their tastes and capacities. Mr. Mackeith, the well-known children's friend, assisted by Messrs. Pratt and Steele, was giving his lectures on the Pilgrim's Progress, with limelight illustrations. In these lectures the two great facts of sin in all, and salvation in Christ for all, were brought out with such simplicity and variety that the mass of the children could not fail to get a distinct idea of God's method of pardoning a sinner, giving him peace, and making him holy.

The lectures, the pictures, and the whole course, are this year different from those of last year, while an entirely new department has been added in the shape of a series of appropriate texts, and verses of Psalms and hymns, projected on the screen, and read by the large and youthful audience.

In the first picture the City of Destruction is represented, and poor Christian in an attitude of deep distress, with a great black burden on his back, and a book in his hand, surrounded by his wife and children, and neighbours, making a group of seven in all; but of these only one carries a burden. In a few sentences the scene is explained and the characters described. Then all of a sudden, as if by the touch of a magician's wand, the picture disappears, and in its room the following words appear on the screen, and are read distinctly, word by word, by seventeen hundred voices:—

"All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God" (Rom. iii. 23). "For mine iniquities are gone over mine head, as a heavy burden; they are too heavy for me" (Ps. xxxviii. 4).

When these texts are read, and the meaning lodged in the mind, again, on a sudden, the texts disappear, and the group re-appears, and the children are questioned:—

"What is the burden that Christian bears?" From a thousand voices the answer comes, "Sin." "How many persons are in the group?" "Seven." "How many of them are sinners?" "All." "How many are burdened?" "One." "How are the other six not burdened, since they are all sinners?" "They do not feel their sin." "Then does the burden mean a sense of sin?" "Yes." "And what are the wages of sin?" "God's wrath."

Then having the idea of sin and guilt clearly lodged in the mind of the audience, and associated with the picture, again the group disappears, and the following lines appear on the canvas, and are sung to a familiar tune—

> "Sense of sin and fear of wrath
> Make the burden Pilgrim hath:
> Art thou burdened with thy guilt?
> Look to Him whose blood was spilt."

After Christian had parted from Obstinate and Pliable, and been delivered from the Slough of Despond and the counsel of Mr. Worldlywiseman, he appears standing before the wicket-gate with his burden still on his back. This furnishes the occasion for explaining the nature and necessity of conversion; that is, the individual entering into living union with the Lord Jesus by simple soul trust, and entering into a new way of holy walking, that he had never been in before. Then, suddenly, the picture disappears, and the words of Christian's prayer appear on the screen, and are sung by the shrill voices of the whole audience:—

> "May I now enter here? Will he within > Open to sorry me, though I have been
> An undeserving rebel? Then shall I
> Not fail to sing his lasting praise on high."

Again the words disappear, and the gate and burdened Christian reappear. The children have no difficulty in understanding that the grave person, named Mr. Goodwill, is Jesus, and that his hand, by which He drew in Christian is almighty, and is ready to draw their hearts also into living union with Himself.

The great picture is the Cross, with Christian embracing it, and his burden tumbling into the Sepulchre. There was no representation of the Lord Jesus. His person is too sacred to be exhibited in a picture: but the children had no difficulty in understanding whence the virtue came that loosened Christian's burden, and sent it tumbling into the Sepulchre. "Was it the wood of the Cross?" From a thousand voices, "No!" "Was it the nails?"—"No!" "Was it the ground on which the Cross stood?"—"No!" "What, then, was it that removed the burden, and sent it tumbling into the Sepulchre?"—"It was Jesus." "Did Jesus Himself bear the burden?"—"Yes!" "Can anyone else remove it?"—"No!" "Why can no one else remove it?"—"Because no one else bore it." Then the idea of substitution being thus plainly lodged in the mind, the picture disappeared, and Isaiah liii. 5, 6, appeared on the screen, and was read word by word as before, "He was wounded for our transgressions; he was bruised for our iniquities," &c. While Christian is still at the Cross three shining ones appear. One gives him pardon and peace; a second gives the robe that heaven calls the best; the third puts the mark of a manifestly changed life in the forehead, where it is to be visible, and gives the roll of an assured interest in God's promises. He is now a Christian in full development, and he journeys over a thousand difficulties into the kingdom of God.

At the close of every public meeting an opportunity was given for anxious inquirers remaining behind for personal dealing; but the numbers who waited were so large that personal dealing became impossible. On the last night 116 boys and 140 girls wanted the second meeting. Many among them were evidently impressed, and we shall trust that the Shepherd of Israel who "gathers the lambs with his arms, and carries them in his bosom," will deepen impressions, and lead these young into his fold.

GOLDEN LANE RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION.—Funds are urgently required to alleviate the suffering. The poverty is most distressing. Contributions will be gratefully acknowledged by the Hon. Secretary, Mr. G. A. Robottom, 43, Alfred-street, Colebrooke-row, N.

The Children of Foreign Lands.

DEAR SIR,—After a long absence, during which Children's Missions have been held in many towns in North Wales, Devonshire, and Cornwall, attended by much of the Divine blessing, I have returned to spend a few weeks in London. I have been asked by the Committee of the Children's Special Service Mission to send out a special appeal for our foreign fund. We desire to raise a sum of £2000, to enable us to print about three or four millions of our Children's Picture Leaflets in between twenty and thirty different languages; perhaps one half in Continental languages, and the other half in Hindi, Hindustani, Oriya, Bengali, Telugu, Tamil, Punjabi, Marathi, Malagasy, and Arabic.

We have already issued two millions and a half in twenty different languages: French, German, Dutch, Swedish, Norwegian, Danish, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, Hungarian, Bohemian, Polish, Slavonian, Bulgarian, Servian, Arabic, Hindustani, Hindi, Oriya, and Bengali; and we have received abundant testimony to their usefulness. Many missionaries and other Christian workers abroad write to us earnestly requesting a larger supply. Our Feuillets Illustrés pour les Enfants are now being distributed at the rate of 8000 or 9000 per week to the children attending the children's services at Mr. McAll's eighty stations throughout France. We have a series of forty Leaflets, and we have promised one to each child every week for forty weeks: by the end of that time we hope to have others ready.

In January we are to commence a distribution of picture leaflets in Arabic—one each month—to the children in all the Christian schools in Syria and Palestine; as far, at least, as a monthly issue of 5000 will go. But already applications have come from schools of the Greek Church to share in the distribution; and so popular are the leaflets that we could probably circulate about three times the number.

Our Hindi and Hindustani leaflets, to the number of 140,000, have gone this year to as many as 180 different missionaries, Zenana workers, &c., in various places, and have been eagerly welcomed. We have just now earnest requests for editions in Oriya, Tamil, Telugu, &c.

I feel convinced there is no surer method of winning the teeming millions of India for our Lord Jesus Christ than by bringing plain Gospel truth before the children, and aiming directly at their conversion. These beautiful picture leaflets, conveying in simple language the story of the Cross, are eagerly read by the children everywhere, and by parents also, and the excellence of the engravings lends an additional attraction to them.

We earnestly appeal to your readers to help us liberally in breaking the bread of life to the famishing children of foreign lands. May the Saviour's words sound in many hearts, "Feed My lambs," "Give ye them to eat."

48, Paternoster-row, E.C. JOSIAH SPIERS.

A FEW OF OUR SCRIPTURE UNION MEMBERS IN INDIA

The Gospel in Spain.

DEAR SIR,—Through the kindness of a lady we get your valuable paper weekly, and we think it might be interesting to your readers to hear a little of the Lord's work in this part of Spain. We are in the North-west, and our work covers a considerable amount of ground; but this letter will speak only of the work here and a neighbouring village, some three miles distant, more or less.

Perhaps in no place where we have had meetings has the battle been so fierce as in this little town. The authorities and the Romanists have been up in arms against us, with a view to banish us from the place. By God's help we have kept our ground, and the evil intentions of the enemy have been so far frustrated. Thank God! they can no longer stand in front of our preaching place as before, to throw stones, dance and yell, more like demons than human beings. From all appearance a decided check has been put upon them, and to be able to continue the preaching in quietness is a great boon.

Happier days for Spain may be looked for. There are hopes at least that the new Spanish Government may clear the way somewhat for the Gospel. God grant it; it is much needed, for no less than five of our Spanish brethren, all intimately connected with us, have been put into prison for the Gospel under the last two Governments. One of these is a converted priest, whose case was concluded last week. He was put into prison a year ago last June, and after four months in gaol was let out on bail. He has won the trial, and the Papists, who hoped that he would be sentenced to a number of years' imprisonment, have been disappointed. We would fain hope that this signal victory may have a salutary effect upon the Archbishop of Santiago, our friend's persecutor.

We have received forty-two into fellowship in this place this year. Some of these are from the village-meeting. God willing, we hope to receive some more shortly. Besides those converted, many more since we came here, now a year ago last March, have given in their names as belonging to the general congregation, and some have even cleared out their images and destroyed them.

Interesting cases of the burning of gods of wood, &c., might be given. Where there has been preaching in this district the people are being waked up to the hollowness of image worship, to say nothing of its opposition to the Word of God.

Not only is God opening the eyes of the people and saving their souls, but those who are saved are endeavouring to help forward the work, which goes far to prove its genuineness. A happy instance of this will bring this letter to a close.

A young woman, poor as far as this world's goods are concerned, but rich by grace, has freely given her little house and garden to the Lord. She has put it all at our disposal to build a chapel or hall, and given nearly all the stone that will be needed. Not content merely by giving herself, she is stirring others up to the like grace; and others are willing to give wood towards the woodwork.

Besides the help of the people themselves, some £50 are all that is needed to put up the building with a little house attached to it. The chapel or meeting-place will be entirely undenominational, for we take no name in Spain. If the Lord should enable us to build it we believe it would give a grand impetus to the work in these parts. At present we can do nothing until our friends are moved to render us further help.

Yours, in Christ Jesus,
THOMAS BLAMIRE.

THE PHILO-JUDEAN SOCIETY has just issued its fifty-sixth annual report and appeal. The outlay is very small, but many poor men and women of Israel are relieved and comforted by it, and not a few have received Jesus. The Countess of Cavan, The Lodge, Weston-super-Mare, is the treasurer.

THE DESIRE OF ALL NATIONS.—The invitation published last March from the Melbourne Prayer Union to pray for our Lord's return has been reissued as a small penny book by Mr. J. Wright, Whitefriar-gate, Kingston-upon-Hull, with extracts from correspondence on the subject. Rev. C. Melville Pym, Rector of Cherry Burton, Hull, is Secretary for the English branch of the Union, which now numbers over 340 members. Other friends are invited to join.

ANOTHER DIALOGUE

BETWEEN

Mr. MOODY and Mr. RAINSFORD,

At Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth.

AT the closing after-meeting in Down Lodge Hall, Mr. Moody resumed his cross examination of Mr. Rainsford. "I have tried," he said, "to put the truth before you in every way I could think of; now I want to put a few questions to Mr. Rainsford that relate to the difficulties that some of you have." Mr. Rainsford, on taking his stand beside the evangelist, said he prayed God to give him grace to answer aright.

Mr. Moody.—About the last thing an anxious inquirer has to contend with is his feelings. There are hundreds here very anxious that this Mission should not close until they are safe in the kingdom; but they think they have not got the right kind of feeling. What kind of feeling should they have?

Mr. Rainsford.—I think there are several of those present who can say that they got a blessing in the after-meetings through one verse of Scripture. I will quote it as an answer to Mr. Moody's question, "Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his servant, that walketh in darkness and hath no light? Let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God" (Isa. l. 10). Some of you may be walking in darkness; that is how you feel. What is God's command? "Let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God." If I can trust God in the darkness, I can trust Him anywhere.

Mr. M.—You would advise them, then, to trust in the Lord whether they have the right kind of feeling or not?

Mr. R.—If I were to think of my feelings for a moment, I would be one of the most miserable men in this hall to-night. My feelings are those of a sinful, corrupt nature. I am just to believe what God tells me in spite of my feelings. "Faith is the evidence of things not seen:" I might add, "the evidence of things not felt."

Mr. M.—Some may say that faith is the gift of God, and that they must wait till God imparts it to them.

Mr. R.—"Faith cometh by hearing." The Word of God is the medium through which faith comes to us. God has given us Christ, and He has given us his Spirit and his Word; what need is there to wait? God will give faith to the man who reads his Word and seeks for his Spirit.

Mr. M.—What, then, should they wait for?

Mr. R.—I do not know of anything that they have to wait for. God says: Come now, Believe now. No, no; there is nothing to wait for. He has given us all He has to give, and the sooner we take it the better.

Mr. M.—Perhaps some of them think they have got too many sins to come.

Mr. R.—The Lord Jesus has put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself. "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath He removed our iniquities from us." Why do we not believe Him? He says He has made an end of sin. Why do we not believe Him? Is He a liar?

Mr. M.—Is unbelief a sin?

Mr. R.—It is the root of all sin.

Mr. M.—Has a man got the power to believe these things, if he will?

Mr. R.—When God gives a command, of course He gives the power to obey it.

Mr. M.—What do you mean by "coming" to Christ?

Mr. R.—Believing in Him. If I were to prepare a great feast in this hall to-morrow night, and say that any man who comes to it would have a grand feast and a five-pound note besides, there would not be any question as to what "coming" meant. God has prepared a great feast. He has sent his messenger to invite all to come, and there is nothing to pay.

Mr. M.—What is the first step?

Mr. R.—To believe.

Mr. M.—Believe what?

Mr. R.—God's invitation; God's promise. Let us believe the faithfulness of Him who invites us. Does God intend to mock us, and make game of us? If He did so to one man, it would hush all the harps in heaven.

Mr. M.—Suppose they do come, and fall into sin to-morrow?

Mr. R.—Let them come back again. God says we are to forgive till seventy times seven. Do you think the great God will do less than He asks us to do?

Mr. M.—If they truly come, will they have the desire to do the things they used to do before?

Mr. R.—When a man really gets Christ into his heart, he experiences the expulsive power of a new affection. The devil may tempt him to sin, but sin has lost its attraction. A man finds out that it does not pay to grieve God's Holy Spirit.

At this stage of the conversation Mr. Moody called on all who were willing to come to Christ for salvation to manifest their desire by rising. "It seems to me, he said," "that every one of you must either accept or reject the Saviour." Quite a number responded to the call. When Mr. Moody asked all who had received definite blessing during the fortnight's Mission to stand, almost the entire body of those occupying the large central reserved section rose en masse. It was a very stirring sight, and must have greatly rejoiced the hearts of Mr. Moody and his co-workers. Pointing to the great company of young disciples before him, Mr. Moody said to Mr. Rainsford, "What would you advise them to do?"

Addressing himself to the audience, Mr. Rainsford said: When you were little babes, if you had got no milk, no clothing, and no rest you would not have lived very long. You are now the result of your fathers' and mothers' care. When a man is born into the family of God he has got life, but he needs food. "Man doth not live by bread alone." If you do not feed upon God's promises you will be of no use in God's service; it will be well for you if your life does not die out altogether before long. Then you want to have exercise. If you only take food, and do no work, you will soon suffer from what I may call spiritual apoplexy. When you get hold of a promise, go and tell it to others. The best way that I get help for myself is by trying to help others. There is one great promise that young disciples should never forget: "He that watereth others shall be watered himself."

Mr. M.—How are they to begin?

Mr R.—I believe there are some rich ladies and rich gentlemen on the platform. When such persons are brought to the Lord they are apt to be ashamed to speak about salvation to their old companions. If our Christian ladies would go amongst other ladies, Christian gentlemen amongst gentlemen of their own class, noblemen among noblemen, and so on, we should see a grand work for Christ. Each of you have some friends or relations whom you can influence better than anybody else. Begin with them, and God will give you such a taste for work that you will not be content to stay at home; you will go and work outside as well.

Mr. M.—A good place to start in would be the kitchen, would it not? Begin with some little kitchen meetings. Let some of you get 15 or 20 mothers together; ask them to bring their young children with them. Sing some of these sweet hymns; read a few verses of Scripture; get your lips opened and you will find that streams of salvation will be breaking out all around. I always think that every convert ought to be good for a dozen others right away.

Mr. R.—Let me tell a little incident in my own experience. I was once asked to go and see a great man and tell him about Christ. He did not expect me, and if I had known that, perhaps I should not have had the faith to go at all. When I went he was very angry, and very nearly turned me out of the house. He was an old man and had one little daughter. A few weeks afterwards he went to the Continent and his daughter went with him. One day when he was very ill he saw his daughter looking at him, while the tears rolled down her cheeks. "My child," he said, "what are you crying about?" "O papa, you do not love the Lord Jesus Christ; I am afraid you are going to hell." "Why do you say that?" "Don't you remember when Mr. Rainsford called to see you, you were very rude to him; I never saw you so angry. And he only wished to speak to you about Jesus." "Well, my child, you shall read to me about Jesus." If that man has gone to heaven—I do not say whether he has or not—the only light he had he got from his little daughter. You set to work and you cannot tell what may be the result, by the blessing of God.

THE WORK IN STEPNEY.

THE week before Christmas is not a favourable time for holding Gospel meetings in a busy, industrial neighbourhood such as Stepney. It was scarcely to be wondered at, therefore, that the attendances should have fallen off on some occasions last week. Perhaps this was partly due, also, to the circumstance that in the early part of the week particular classes were invited to be present. On the evening of Monday week, for instance, the address was announced to be specially for sceptics. We can hardly suppose that the thousands who were present all belonged to that class; still, many others not wishing to be included in such a category, may have stayed away. So there was the unwonted spectacle of empty chairs. Those who did come heard some very stirring appeals from Mr. Moody addressed to those professing to hold varied forms of unbelief, and based on the words of Moses, "Their rock is not as our rock." We have heard some assert that they never knew of a single sceptic who was converted through argument. However that may be, those sceptics who were present at Stepney-green Hall were not treated to the dry husks of argument. They were appealed to as those whose mental and spiritual cravings needed a satisfaction that no form of negation could ever give, and that could only be had by a personal experience of God's love in Christ as the Saviour of the world. On Tuesday evening, to a large audience which presumably contained many drinking men, Mr. Moody spoke with great earnestness and power on "Deliverance."

The afternoon meetings have also been of peculiar interest. On the afternoon of Tuesday week the address was specially to parents, and a very solemn exhortation it was to heads of households, not only to teach their children the way of salvation, but to illustrate the saving power of the Gospel in their own lives from day to day. The subject was continued at the afternoon gathering on the following day. The prayer-meetings that followed were extremely touching, in the requests that were presented by parents for the conversion of their children.

Consequent on the holidays, we have to go to press with this number before the Stepney Mission closes. In our next we will give some account of the final meetings in this part of the East-end, including a meeting of ministers and workers in conference with Mr. Moody, held on Thursday evening.

By Mrs. G. S. REANEY.

The "Bitter Cry of Outcast London" has brought blessing to the East-end. Christian thought has been more earnestly directed to our needs here. The prayer of God's remembrancers has become supplication in "making known" requests before but dimly understood. It came naturally to many to associate the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey with the answer of blessing which prayer supplicated. Special blessing was expected, and it has come.

Much has been said and written of empty East-end churches; where in some exceptional instances the congregations were large, the small proportion of men in these gatherings has been remarked upon. One could therefore understand the frequent remark of strangers, "Mr. Moody has a wonderful power in attracting men." So it would seem, from the crowds of men who have thronged the meetings night after night, listening to Mr. Moody's pithy utterances—powerful, because often presented with a keen mother-wit which East-enders are particularly alive to appreciate. In these crowds there have been not a few who have confessed that, while regarding religion as good enough for women and children, it did not fit in with their turn of mind, so they "went nowheres of Sundays, but had come to the hall out of curiosity to hear the man that talked and the chap that sang!" To get such persons there at all was a triumph; though we must not forget that the clergy, ministers, and Christian workers generally, would be the means, directly or indirectly, of getting them to come. To keep them there was a greater triumph; for East-enders are independent in their ways, and prone to get up and walk out if not sufficiently interested to remain. To get them to come again was the greatest triumph of all.

This is the human side. What of the spiritual? Is this to be tabulated by names taken down in the inquiry-room? I venture to think, certainly not. Many a man has left the meeting with tears in his eyes, his heart tender, if not positively surrendered, who could not be persuaded to go into the inquiry-room. People might talk to him there as he sat, or as he slowly moved out with the crowd; but his heart was too full, and his nature too reserved, to make it possible for him to pass within the doors where others were flocking, to go through he knew not what beyond. When such were asked what had moved them so greatly, the answers would be various: "The hymn got hold of me;" "Mr. Moody made me think of mother, and the time when I was a youngster;" "I had a praying wife, but she's been dead years." In one or two cases it was, "I heard a sermon once, and it's stuck to me; Mr. Moody seemed to know all about me."

One man—a gentlemanly fellow, evidently a City clerk—when spoken with, said curiosity had brought him to the meeting. When asked if this was his first visit, replied, "No; I came yesterday." "What brought you then?" "Curiosity." "Ah! that is your way of putting it; doubtless there are some praying for you at home." "It is a matter of perfect indifference to me whether this be so or not." "You believe it to be so, but deep down in your heart you have an unsatisfied longing—now, own to it." Further conversation drew forth the fact that a praying brother and sister at home, by their earnestness, prevented his sceptical views from utterly destroying all belief in religion. The following evening the same young man was seen hastening from the inquiry-room with eyes from which the traces of tears had not been removed, with a strange light upon his face, which said plainly enough, "I have had a great surprise; I have found a secret joy."

The blessing has not been confined to the hitherto irreligious or undecided; many Christian people's hearts have been stirred, and numbers have rejoiced in the decision for Christ of members of their own families, over whom they have prayed and yearned, possibly for years. We are led to believe from personal contact and dealing with many, both inside and outside of the inquiry-room, that to a large extent the glorious work of the past ten days has been a harvest ingathering of labours which have gone on for years, on the part of earnest clergymen and ministers, city missionaries, and Sunday-school teachers. In saying this we do not detract from the greatness of the work done by these two God-honoured men, Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey; but it gives us hope for the future stability of each individual helped by them to decision. Many are already rejoicing in their homes over the work of this Mission, and many more will rejoice. Blessing was asked—was expected—and has come. If any lack blessing, will it not be those who neither asked, expected, nor looked for it?

THE YOUNG MEN'S HOUR.

It is Sunday evening. The place is the large iron building in which Messrs. Moody and Sankey are conducting a Mission in that part of outcast London from which the loudest wail of that bitter cry, of which so much has been written and said, is supposed to have come. Between five and six thousand people have been listening with rapt attention to the sweet songs and the earnest appeals of the evangelists. Mr. Moody has offered prayer, and a deep solemnity rests upon the meeting. Those who are anxious to obtain salvation are invited to meet Mr. Moody in a large room which forms part of the building. As they rise to comply with this request, Mr. Moody makes the announcement that "a men's meeting will be conducted in the hall by Mr. Thorne." A canvas screen is lowered, so as to divide off a portion of the building for this purpose. A staff of workers are on the alert, and soon a compact mass of men, of whom the greater portion are young men, are got together within the appointed space. A number of hymns are sung, and the audience is recruited by fresh arrivals.

The interest increases. New converts join with old veterans in singing, "Dare to be a Daniel" and "Hold the Fort." Mr. Frederick Charrington, of the Great Assembly Hall, offers a short prayer, and the meeting is fairly on the way. "Instead of reading a chapter," says Mr. Thorne, "we shall repeat a few promises of God's Word." And he requests the young men to repeat such Scriptures of this character as may come to their minds. Half a dozen men rise to their feet in a moment, but order is secured by the adoption of that rule of the House of Commons which allots the precedence to the one who meets the Speaker's eye. Some forty or fifty promises are given in a few minutes, and then it is announced that the meeting will be open for testimony. But there are certain restrictions, which are evidently intended to prevent sermonising and rambling. Nobody is to use more than a dozen words, and the testimony must relate to certain definite points.

"I want to know," says the conductor, "how long it is since you were converted?" The first response to this question is made by an old man, who informs the meeting that he has been a Christian for forty-seven years. Others speak of twenty-one years, twenty-five years, ten years; and at last a youth rises and says, "I was converted last night." This statement is an evident joy to the meeting, and, as the youth sits down, all join in singing, "Ring the bells of heaven," the chorus, beginning, "Glory, glory, how the angels sing," being repeated again and again. The next question asked is, "How were you converted?" and a quick succession of testimonies is given on this theme. One speaks of a tract, another of the faithfulness of a friend, another of a mother's prayers, another of the consistent life of a mate, another of Mr. Sankey's hymns, and another of Mr. Moody's words. "What are you doing for the Lord?" says the conductor, and the character of the testimonies is changed again. Sunday-school teaching, tract distribution, open-air preaching, and temperance work are found to be amongst the spheres of service. One youth announces that he attends a Mission-room and minds the door. "Work, for the night is coming" is then sung with heart and voice, a few words are spoken by Dr. Barnardo and Mr. Thorne, and Mr. Moody himself, appearing upon the platform, says, "Let me have a word just here." He says he has been sorry not to have had these young men's meetings before, that he has been delighted with what he has seen, and that he hopes the meetings will be carried on night after night. A hymn about the love of God is sung, and the meeting is closed with prayer; but there are many who appear to be anxious to find the blessings of which they have heard, and, long after the congregation has dispersed and the lights have been lowered, they may be seen in conversation with earnest workers, who are pointing them to the Lamb of God.

This is the kind of meeting that is being held night after night, and there can be no doubt that the abundant blessing of the Lord is resting upon the work. Mr. Thorne will join Mr. Moody in January at Clapham and Stratford, and will be glad to have the assistance of any of our members at these places.—Y.M.C.A. Monthly Review.

THE WORK AMONG YOUNG WOMEN.

The meetings at Islington, Wandsworth, and Stepney have been a means of blessing to large numbers of young women; there have been already accessions of members at the Cloudesley Y.W.C.A. Institute, 8, Upper Barnsbury street, and at the Cambridge Institute, Holloway-road. Meetings specially for women have been held at Wandsworth, conducted by Miss Octavia Jury, Miss Rainsford, Mrs. Edward Trotter, and others. Meetings of secretaries and members of branches in the S.E. and S.W. districts are being held for prayer and conference. Miss Barler, 31, Sibella-road, Clapham, S.W., will be glad to hear from any ladies willing to help. Preparatory meetings are being held also at the Girls' Institute, West Ham.

It is often my privilege to speak to young women at after-meetings. My first question, "Do you know the Lord Jesus as your Saviour?" having met with a bright responsive, "Oh, yes, I do!" I have next asked, "When did you first learn to trust Jesus?" and how often has the reply come, "In Mr. Moody's meetings at ——." I would urge all young women who can do so, to attend the meetings now being held in London, and I would say go, not only to hear the singing and preaching, but with a definite determination then and there to decide for Christ.—Our Own Gazette.

Young Women In Queensland.

WE are requested to publish the following extracts from the letter of a domestic servant residing near Brisbane, Queensland, in the hope that they may be useful to intending emigrants of that class:—

"I have now been in my present situation thirteen months, and feel quite at home. No doubt I could better my condition in some respects, but I am taken care of spiritually as well as temporally, which makes my mother at ease about me. I am sorry to say Queensland is such an immoral Colony. I think it very bad for young girls coming out here without friends, and knowing nothing of the Colony or its people. There are so many temptations to encounter, and so many false friends, that one is glad to accept any kindly offered help.

"On the first arrival out here, many of the Brisbaneites came to meet us at the depôt, some from curiosity, some to see if they might by chance meet someone from their native country, some to warn young girls against being drawn into hotels, some to give bad reports of good places. The first evening I spent in the depôt, about fifty girls came to see us. Some gave us good advice, which I afterwards found correct; others, pretending to be friends, draw away young girls—no one knows where. It is a fact that while I was at the depôt a young-looking fellow was trying hard to engage as a servant one of us girls. He came several times in vain. I would have nothing to do with him; we afterwards learned that he was an impostor.

"I am running into details too far, but I would like everybody to have a right impression of our adopted country. Of course, there are lights and shadows here, but it is a free and happy land; there is very little poverty, except what is caused by drink, which appears to be the curse of every land."

Notes and Comments.

THE exigencies of the Christmas holidays having obliged us to go to press some days earlier than usual, all communications reaching us after Thursday, Dec. 20, will be acknowledged in our next.

The complete deliverance of the Princess Alice from the doubts and mental conflicts concerning Divine realities which beclouded part of her life, is touchingly set forth in the following words taken from her biography just published in Germany. Speaking of a Scotchman, whose name is not given, but who gave her lessons in drawing, she says :—

"'To that man, who exercised so beneficial an influence on my religious views, of whom people said so many bad things and likewise of my relations to him, I owe everything.' I recollect her saying to me, 'The whole edifice of philosophical conclusions which I had erected for myself has dwindled down to nothing. Nothing is left of it, and what would become of us in this life if we had not the belief, the conviction, that there is a God who rules the world, and rules over every one of us? I weary for prayer; I love to sing hymns with my children, every one of whom has his favourite hymn.'"

How little we know the influence a calm, consistent life of pious devotion to Christ, mingled with clear testimony to his truth, may exert. The Scotch drawing-master probably was not aware of the deep impression made by his words and life upon his royal pupil, but it is now on record that God used him to lead her mind back to faith and joy in Himself. We may all be encouraged by such an incident to bear our quiet and faithful witness for our Lord wherever we are placed, assured that no seed sown by us in prayerful dependence on Him shall be lost. "Blessed are ye that sow beside all waters."

A writer in The Echo on Work among the Poor has made highly appreciative comments on the work of Mr. George Holland in Whitechapel, of Mr. George Hatton in Drury-lane, and of Mr. Aulay McAulay, of Latymer-road, Notting-hill, after visits of inspection for the purpose of reporting on their labours. Timid workers may derive profit from his words in reference to outdoor work for Christ, such as singing in the streets to attract passers-by to the Mission halls and other places of evangelistic resort. This the writer highly commends, and says of it:—

"Mr. Hatton laid so much stress upon this that I determined to try it. Let me assure philanthropic surburban residents that it is by no means difficult when the first plunge is once taken. The first line of a verse is like a plunge into the Serpentine in December, but by the time you have got into the second verse you do not care for all the Mrs. Grundys in London. If you can obtain an instrument to lead your singing, all the better."

One thing is certain, we can never do much in the way of laying hold of the outside and rougher elements of society unless we are prepared to meet them on their own ground. To go out after them, laying aside our prejudices, and braving the reproach and scorn of those who are proud of their gentility and lofty airs, is the only way to convince the rough and ready masses of our fellow-citizens and the hardy sons of toil elsewhere, that their salvation is really laid upon our hearts, and their souls sought after out of sincere compassion and concern. Many of us have yet to learn the true meaning of Heb. xiii. 13, "Let us therefore go forth unto Him without the camp, bearing his reproach."

The report of the Theatrical Mission in 1883 contains several facts of interest, both as showing the need for this work and the blessing which has rested upon it. There are at present over forty theatres in the metropolis, with a registered accommodation for the public of 46,785 persons; there are twenty-four of the larger music halls and a very large number of public-houses having music and dancing licences, where entertainments of the lowest class are provided. Five new theatres have been opened this year, three re-opened, and four more are nearly ready for opening. Thus it will be seen a vast field for work of a special kind, requiring special agencies and qualifications, is open. The employés at all these places, from the highest to the lowest, come within the scope of this Mission.

One of the saddest features of theatrical life is the number of children and young people brought under its pernicious influence. The report tells of children from three to nine years old who are known as "stars" in the profession, some of whom have become connected with the children's branch of the Mission. Meetings for these, together with a Youths' Institute, a Girls' sewing class, a "Learning by Heart" Union, Adults' reading-rooms, a Letter Mission, a Scripture Union, and special Temperance work, are the means employed for bringing the numbers of persons employed in the perilous and corrupting work of the stage and music-hall entertainments under the influence of the Gospel of Christ. With an empty treasury, but with faith in God, and no little encouragement as to results already gained, this important agency is renewing its toils.

One other reference to the report spoken of above we would make, in the hope it may meet the eye of some who plead for theatres as innocent, who seek to reform the drama, and to employ it as a means of education and social enjoyment. The committee say :—

"We feel that we cannot too widely emphasise the fact that in many cases the theatre and its surroundings, as a well-known agent of many years' standing said to us, is one great source of the prostitution of the country. A willingness to succumb to immoral temptations is at times more requisite as a qualification for employment than money or interest."

In the face of such a statement, so sadly borne out by numerous facts, surely any Christian will pause before lending his influence in any way to the support of the stage.

Canon Scott Robertson has just completed an annual summary of British contributions to Foreign Missions, which shows that for the financial year, 1882, they exceeded those of the previous year by nearly £100,000. The totals as published are as follows:—

"Church of England Societies, £500,306; joint Societies of Churchmen and Nonconformists, £154,813; English and Welsh Nonconformist Societies, £348,175; Scotch and Irish Presbyterian Societies, £176,362; and Roman Catholic Societies, £11,519. Total voluntarily contributed in the British Isles for 1882, £1,191,175."

Considering the wealth of our country, this is little enough for an object so vast in its requirements and importance; at the same time, considering the general depression that has been experienced, it is satisfactory to find increase rather than diminution reported.

Eighty waggons drawn up at a village church in Kuruman, for the purpose of bringing their owners to a prayer-meeting, is a sight that all lovers of Mission work would rejoice to behold. Such a scene Rev. J. Mackenzie assures us might have been witnessed there last New Year's Day. There are 400 in the membership of the Christian church in Kuruman; these are drawn from a wide circle, and cover a large district with the influence of their character and usefulness as genuine converts to the religion of Christ. Everywhere the prayer-meeting furnishes a test of earnestness, and a means of drawing together in one the hearts of the children of God. Ethiopia already stretches out her hands unto God.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe is expected to address the members of the Y.M.C.A. and other friends at Aldersgate-street some time in January, on the subject of Foreign Mission Work. Two points, which it is specially upon his heart to urge on this occasion, are: the vital importance of self-supporting Mission effort, and the desirability of reverting to the Apostolic method of speedily organising churches in the midst of the heathen. Due notice will be given of the place and time of meeting. Meanwhile, earnest prayer is desired that the visit of our friend may be fraught with great blessing to the Church of Christ.

An anonymous correspondent sends us this extract from a contemporary, which he or she is pleased to call "A wholesome scrap for The Christian":—

"I do not expect that everybody will agree with me, but I believe that the so-called undenominationalism is the bitter curse and utter ruin of Mission work in London. It is destructive of Church responsibility. It fails to give security either for the teacher or the teaching, and it fails to bring the taught, in order to be taught more fully, into immediate contact with the worship and life of the churches. It appears to me that the only way to reach these tens of thousands of poor miserable people is for the various denominations as far as possible to surround their different places of worship with a network of Mission rooms, with bands of workers penetrating the slums and alleys, and, within a given area, seeing that no part of the population is left untouched; and surely there is enough of Christian charity amongst the denominations to enable them to divide the work so that, while no part should be left unmissioned, no part should be over-missioned, and the work hindered by competing or overlapping agencies. But in order to do this the denominations must make large grants of money and considerable grants of men as well, veritable missionaries, to their representative churches, or the work cannot be done."

"Undenominationalism" is represented in East London by the work of Miss Macpherson, George Holland, W. J. Lewis, and all other such. Are these the bitter curse and utter ruin of Mission work in London? We reply, not only that these undenominational Missions are unsurpassed in usefulness by any agency in London, but also that the best work in the churches is being done by men who in spirit are the least denominational. What vitality can there be in denominational distinctions, if the Christian charity of each and all is best manifested by dividing the work among them, and each avoiding the other's district? If Denomination A holds its form of doctrine or of government to be so important as to require to be represented by a separate sect, with what consistency can it consent to leave whole districts unillumined by its rays? If, on the other hand, it makes no difference whether A, or B, or C carries the truth here or there, where is the advantage of these denominational divisions?

As we have a list of more than fifty Missions, among which we divide the funds that are entrusted to us for the poor at Christmas, it is impossible for us to insert a special appeal from each, and to insert a few would be invidious to the rest. We therefore hope that our general appeal will be liberally responded to. We should like to distribute £200; at present we have only received about a fourth part of that amount.

It is stated in The Rock that the permission to use the rooms of the English Church Union for discussions on Socialism has been withdrawn, Hon. C. L. Wood saying that neither the Council nor himself were consulted about the arrangement made. The ground alleged for withholding the rooms from further employment for this purpose is the conviction that nothing but spoliation and revolution can be furthered by such speeches as were made.

An article appeared in The Freeman the other day entitled "The Condition of the Richer Classes." It purported to record a meeting held in the East-end to consider what could be done to improve the spiritual condition of the upper classes of society. It was presided over by a shoemaker, and the speakers were all of the artisan and labouring class. The chairman remarked that the rich had souls as well as the poor, and that deep sunk as they were in worldliness and selfishness, hardened too by pride, yet in their case it was true that—

"Down in the human heart, crushed by the Tempter, Feelings lie buried that grace can restore."

The nobility were no more beyond the power of the Gospel than the poor. Another speaker said that having lived as servant in great families he knew amidst all the wealth there was an unhappiness, "an aching void the world can never fill."

We are so accustomed to hear the poor spoken of as the class most needing to be sought after and reached by Gospel effort, that it sounds almost like satire to read of a meeting held by the poor to consider what can be done to evangelise the rich. But there is nothing but sober truth in the statement that the grace of God is as needful in the West-end as in the East, and the difficulties in the way of its acceptance certainly seem to be as great. "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of heaven," is a statement true of our own age, and one that requires to be borne in mind. The class distinctions which with men are so much regarded, are in God's sight of no force in moral spheres, for "all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God."

Among the social evils loudly calling for redress is the long hours and physical hardship imposed on shopkeepers' assistants and others of a similar class. Mr. Thos. Suthers, President of the Shop Hours League, has made out a strong case on their behalf in an article contributed to The Daily News, entitled, "Death and Disease behind the Counter." The hours of shop assistants are from 75 to 90 per week, while those of artisans and mechanics are only from 56 to 60. Their meal times are neither regular nor adequate, they have no time for exercise, mental improvement, or recreation. Especially in the case of young women, the long standing is physically exhaustive, and often productive of disease and early death. A Bill has been framed for introduction to Parliament next session providing for remedying this; it will doubtless command a large share of support.

Among the questions occupying the thoughts of Christians in India, is that of the ministry of women as connected with the administration of ordinances. In Zenana work it is found that baptism is impossible unless it were administered by female missionaries, and the same difficulty exists as to the Lord's Supper. Under such circumstances, surely, seeing that "in Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female," it must be right and advisable for those who are the Phœbes of the churches to diaconise or serve the Master by helping their sister converts to obey his commandments. This appears to be the growing conviction among various Christian communities abroad, and we see nothing in it contrary to the Word of God, which is the only real guide and rule in all matters of faith.

Referring to this subject The Indian Witness says:—

"The difficulty with most persons in examining the Bible on this subject is, that they apply modern conventional notions to the interpretation of Scripture. They forget that 'divine service,' in the modern sense of the phrase, was hardly known in the days of Priscilla and Phœbe. Most of the assemblies were comparatively private, and in none of them was the ordinary programme at all like that witnessed in Calcutta churches, whether Protestant or Catholic."

Conventionalism lies at the root of many modern errors, and prevents the adoption in many quarters of plans and methods which would greatly facilitate Gospel work. The sooner we all get nearer to direct New Testament teaching the better.

We cannot depart from sound doctrine without danger; and there is perhaps no false doctrine at once more specious and more perilous than that which teaches the absolute eradication of sin. "If we say that we have no sin we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." Universal human experience attests the truth of this word of God. We have before us a shocking instance of it. One who had been, as we are informed, serving the Lord for many years, and had been very successful in winning souls in the counties of Kent and Sussex, has fallen into repeated acts of gross sin. He had professed that sin was eliminated, and that he was saved from making any mistake. He took up the idea of forming a holiness church of a very exclusive description, and from that time became another man. We understand that all the churches he formed have now repudiated him, except one in the centre of London, which remains to show that—

"faith, fanatic faith, once wedded fast
To some dear falsehood, hugs it to the last."

This fallen teacher has confessed his delusion and his sin, but one of the works meet for repentance in such a case is to retire from public ministry, for which he has become disqualified. This is far from being the only instance of the evil results of the heresy we have named.

A friend who knows Russia well has lately told us of the wondrous awakening there has been of late among the Russian peasantry in many parts of the land, in reference to the Gospel. It is said, and he confirms the statement, that whole villages are engaging in the study of the Word of God. A spirit similar to that which characterised the times of Luther, or of Whitfield and Wesley, seems to be developing in all directions. Weary of the cold and heartless ceremonies of the Greek Church, thousands are crying out for the living God. Earnestly should we pray that light may shine upon them, and means employed suited to guide their feet into the way of peace. The Holy Spirit is evidently moving upon the waters, and bringing forth life where only death and darkness have hitherto reigned.

We receive contributions from time to time, the object of which is not definitely stated. We shall be obliged, therefore, if donors will distinctly name the institution or Mission for which they intend their gifts. It would prevent confusion if societies would, as far as possible, refrain from describing their work in the same form of words as other societies.

From a letter of Mrs. Evered Poole, Enfield House, Southampton, we quote the following sentence:—"I wish some of the Christian people going to India would take boxes of tracts, &c., out for me, and thereby save much expense. I am inundated with petitions for tracts and papers, and Temperance literature, and hardly know how to meet the demand." Will any of our readers, in either of these needs, help one who, notwithstanding her fragile frame, is truly "always abounding in the work of the Lord"?

The Postmaster-General has published a request that those who have been accustomed to give letter-carriers and other Post Office officials drink at the Christmas and New Year seasons will refrain from doing so, and find other means of marking whatever appreciation of service they desire to show. He asks this on the ground that to give them strong drink is to put temptation in their way, such as is calculated to bring them into trouble and disgrace. Mr. Fawcett does credit to his own genuine manliness and good sense in thus dealing with a very common evil; it is to be hoped that the British public will act strictly on the suggestion, and yet see that a class of men to whom they are indebted as a whole for faithful service are not the losers.

This is our last issue for 1883. We are solemnised by the thought that the year's labour has borne into eternity responsibilities and opportunities not to be recalled. Thankfully let us record the gracious aid we have received from God. His blessing has not been withheld; his favour has been bestowed and his love continually displayed. As we take leave of 1883, we may all raise an Ebenezer, and say, "Hitherto the Lord has helped us." Experience serves to convince us that our wisdom, our joy, our all, is found in clinging closer and closer to the Saviour, in whom we trust, and in resolving still to make his name our boast. Let us hail the New Year with joy, and anticipate its unknown path with confidence. Come what may, we rest in the blessed assurance—"Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever."

WHITE CROSS MOVEMENT IN SCOTLAND.—Miss Ellice Hopkins has been, during the past few weeks, conducting a most successful series of meetings in Scotland. At Aberdeen she met with a warm reception, and created a deep impression on her audience. She was fortunate in securing the countenance of Lord Aberdeen, who with the Countess has undertaken to be the channel of communication for the extension of the cause in the rural districts. A branch was formed with over 400 members. Miss Hopkins also paid a visit to Edinburgh, where she addressed a large meeting of males. The following day she spoke to ladies, in Free St. George's Church, and in the evening addressed a meeting of women and girls. At all the meetings a deep impression was created.

NEEDY PLACES ON THE CONTINENT.

On Monday week Dr. Baedeker gave an interesting account at the Noon Prayer-meeting, Aldersgate-street, of a tour he and Mrs. Baedeker have recently made through Germany, Austria, and Hungary. He said it had been their privilege to search out lonely workers in barren places in these countries, some of whom had laboured long and well for many years. The Lord had answered prayer in opening many doors for the Gospel. In the history of some of the places visited there had never been known such openings. The educated and sceptical classes had listened to the Gospel, both privately and at public meetings, and were most attentive.

At Prague, a meeting was held at which the majority were men. These listened with profoundest attention, and were subsequently invited to the Hotel for personal conversation. At Gratz Dr. Baedeker found a Christian man at the head of a shoe manufactory, who gladly welcomed him, and granted him permission to go and distribute the Word of God among the men, and speak to them as opportunity offered. From there he proceeded to Bucharest, where there are many Greeks, but no restriction in matters of religion, as in Russia. Meetings were held here in a large hall taken for the purpose; many came together of all classes, and were most attentive. Among them were many Jews.

At Odessa a permit was given to hold meetings, which were also well attended. Such was the interest that the people came to the hotel to have private conversation. Mrs. Baedeker's room was sometimes nearly filled with women, and Dr. Baedeker's with men.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, as well as Dr. Baedeker, was at the noon meeting on the following day. On being asked to address the meeting, Mr. Radcliffe said: I came up to town from Liverpool last night to meet my beloved brother Dr. Baedeker, on his return from Austria and South Russia, that we might pray together, and see if it be the Lord's will that we should together go speedily to the north of Russia, and perhaps Finland and the Baltic Provinces. As Dr. Baedeker is fresh from South Russia, from Bohemia, Vienna, and other places, what he has to say will be very interesting to us all.

Dr. Baedeker: There was one request among those read by our friend [Mr. R. Burn], for a needy place where a man was wanted full of the Holy Ghost. When that request was read I could not help lifting up my heart to the Lord, not for one needy place only, but for the many needy places on the Continent of Europe. If only this prayer were multiplied, and men and women full of the Holy Ghost were called to go forth to all these places, what a blessing this prayer-meeting would bring down on Europe. Many of these spiritually needy places are the finest places on the face of the earth—most luxurious cities and countries; yet they are absolutely starving, because there is no one to go and speak to the people in the name of the Lord.

Some of these places I mentioned yesterday, but let me repeat them. If you take the steamer and cross the channel, you need not go very far before you will find needy places. You might go from city to city on the Continent, and you will find very few of them where there is such a thing as free evangelisation. Certainly churches and chapels are few; and, as I said yesterday, the great multitude who do not go inside these places of worship are not the ignorant masses, but the educated and refined. You must meet these people where they go. Yesterday I mentioned the case of a brother—a very simple-hearted man, who is full of love to the Lord—who has a room in Buda Pesth. It is at the corner of two streets. A small number of people gather there on the Sunday mornings. As they sing their hymns, the people from the streets are attracted by curiosity when the service begins. After a little time some of the people go away, but others come in, so that he cannot stop the preaching; it has to go on all day long. When he is tired, some other brother takes up the work. "What a happy work you have got!" I said to him. "Oh yes; if I had two or three to help me, we could open rooms in a great many parts of the city."

The same might be said of Vienna, a fine large city, where there are a very few brethren preaching the Gospel in a simple way. It was my privilege to call some of the pastors and workers together there, and they all seemed desirous to have something of the kind—to have rooms in the same style as those of Mr. McAll in Paris. That is the great need of all the Continental cities—little gatherings near the corners of the streets, where the people can be found. Mr. Radcliffe and I had some very happy work of the kind two years ago at Berlin. We hired a room for the Sunday afternoon, and though it was a very low room, still the people came in.

What I have said applies also to Odessa. There are restrictions in Russia, but they are not of so hard a kind that they may not be got over. In Odessa there is a very large field among all nationalities. Englishmen can go there and preach the Gospel in English, with plenty of people to listen. Not only are there English people there, but many Germans and Russians who understand English. A great many English sailors go there, and it would be a very happy thing if some suitable man would go there just to work amongst the sailors. There is scarcely a place on the Continent that we might not call a needy place—an empty place that might be filled, if there were but the men and women to go. What was the request I spoke of? "That a man full of the Holy Ghost may be sent." It is no use going to these places unless we are filled with the Holy Ghost. But why should there be any such crying need in the world? Why are there such empty places there, and such full places here? Why did not the two meet together as God intended them to meet?

I should like to engage your prayers for these places. As Mr. Radcliffe has been saying, we are contemplating a visit to the north of Russia. I have been several times in the Baltic Provinces, where there are very fine large cities. They are a fine race of people. There are several different nationalities—the Estonians, the Letts, and others—besides many Germans who live there. Having been there, and having found open doors everywhere, it will be a very great joy to me to have a fellow labourer in the field. Many of the people there are really hungering for the Gospel; it is marvellous how they come together. I have had meetings there in the very sharp winter, with the thermometer at 20 degs. below zero. A large hall was found too small, and they lifted out the windows, so that the crowd outside could listen to the Word. If you were to send out hundreds of young men from your Associations here, they would have plenty of work to do—joyful work for the Lord. In the highways and hedges of the Continent there has been no reaping yet. I do not despise the work of the churches, but, as I say, these highways and hedges have never been reaped. Let us remember the call of the Lord: Go out into the highways and hedges. Let us gather in those who have never been brought under the sound of the Gospel. May God in mercy press this matter upon every heart here as a heavy burden, and press you down on your knees so that you cannot get up until you have brought this matter definitely before the Lord of the Harvest that He may send forth more labourers into his harvest, and that He may send you too. Tell Him to send labourers, but be sure that you are one of them. Let us multiply the prayers for the needy, the dry and barren places, that God would send forth his vessels full of the Holy Ghost all over Europe.

A Russian Gentleman in the meeting expressed his joy at the prospect of these labourers going forth to his land. There was a time, he said, when the word "Protestant" was almost the same as the word "Christian." These days have passed, and now Protestants in Russia want to be called back again to the simplicity of the Word of God. In St. Petersburg the evangelists will find those who belong to the Greek Church. When I read in the Revelation, said the speaker, about the church in Sardis, I cannot help looking to our poor Western Church, sleeping with a deadly sleep. Oh, that the Lord would wake up this church, that she may come again to see as in the days of old, for she is the historical inheritor of the first Christians! Oh, that she would return to her first love! Then we would see masses of those who are called Christians seeking to bring others to Christ. Many of them tremble at the thought of death, and have only a faint hope that Christ will save them. They are sitting in the darkness of condemnation, and hardly understand the possibility of knowing Christ. There are many in Russia in this condition. I have been a military man. I was a Captain in the Crimean war, with 280 men under my orders. Typhus fever came, and in the space of six weeks we lost 160 of these men. Perhaps the half of these died under my eyes, and I was at the death-bed of each of the 160. All of them died full of preoccupation as to what would come after. They knew of condemnation, but they did not know a bit of salvation. Many think there may be salvation, but they do not know the Gift of God that has been revealed. Christ is sending you to these, my countrymen. Go on, and God will give you the Holy Ghost. I join my prayer with you in asking that these two brethren may be only the beginning of many who shall go to my country, and the Lord will bless them, as they go in his Name.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe spoke of the dark veil over all countries, while the Church of Christ was leaving her work to be done by deputies. The Apostle James says that "pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." If we leave this to ministers, city missionaries, Bible-women, and others, does it not imply that we give them a monopoly of pure and undefiled religion, and that our own is defiled and impure? Paul bids the saints (1 Cor. xiv.) to desire earnestly to preach. He is not speaking to bishops and elders, but to the saints at Corinth, and he bids every one of these to desire very much that he may preach. In the Greek, the Romish, and even in the Protestant Church, the idea prevails that preaching must be left to the priests; but this was not Paul's idea. Pray now, not that the e two men may be sent in the power of the Spirit to Russia, but that the black veil on all the churches may be removed, and that all the Lord's people may be prophets, preachers of his Gospel.

What a college there is in the slums of East London, and of all our cities, where our young men and young women may learn God's pure and undefiled religion, and may prophesy, with the missing link supplied of prayer without ceasing. London Christians are disgraced by the worse than heathen state of their guile gardens, and of their neglected destitute poort But yet the cause of the squalor is not in the slums; the root of the disorder is in Christians sitting down at ease while the people are so wretched. Let us fall on our faces before our God, and let our groan go up to Him, and He will give us grace and power to live out his pure and undefiled religion. God has made this a nation of commerce, and we must spread abroad over the face of the earth. Oh! that He may make us to prophesy, wherever we go, his good tidings of great joy to all people!

Prayer followed, out of the very depths of souls lying low before the Lord—such prayer as has power with God.

ORDINATION OF SPANISH PASTORS.—On Tuesday evening last week a most interesting ceremony took place at the French Protestant Church, St. Martin's-le-Grand, when two pastors were set apart, according to the fashion of the Hugenots of old. The service was conducted by the Rev. G. G. Dangars, and the two pastors ordained were Mr. F. Massis and Mr. Rodriguez. The former is to proceed to Brighton, to carry on the work formerly done by the late Pastor Gonin; the latter, as our readers know, is engaged at Figueras, Spain. Pastor Dangars delivered an earnest address, at the conclusion of which Mr. Massis and others spoke.

THE CHURCHES' DUTY TO WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

AT the closing of another year may I once again address myself to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN who have borne me so faithfully and generously on their hearts, and lay before them where I stand in need of their co-operation and, above all, of their prayers.

Thankful as we are for the great movements among men, the White Cross Army and the Church Purity Society, and for that great meeting of 1500 men at the Reading Church Congress, with the high and chivalrous tone that marked it, before the end of my last campaign I had the conviction forced upon me, that these movements could not be carried on unless we could meet the great want of good strong publications to circulate among men. The fourth obligation of the White Cross Army is "to spread its principles among my companions and help my younger brothers." But how can young men fulfil this all-important obligation if they have no papers to circulate thoroughly embodying their principles; and how can they help their younger brothers unless they are first taught how to help them, how to put things rightly to them, and how to take the right tone themselves?

"The question of remedying this evil," says the Bishop of Manchester, in his great ringing, out-spoken words, "seems to me to lie in this, 'Can the moral sense of men—not young men only, but old men also—not single men only, but married men also—can this moral sense of men be aroused to the magnitude of the crime they are committing in thus degrading women?" And what we want is a "White Cross Series," especially directed to that aim, especially appealing to the strong chivalrous feeling of men towards women, which, after all, is in every Englishman's bones, especially lifting up the true manhood of Christ, the manifestation of the true man, as well as of the only true God; the Man to whom even the poor lost girls could come out of the streets, and know that Man as One who could lift them up and not drag them down, believing in whom in their sinfulness, clinging to whom in their forlornness, trusting in whom in their weakness, they grew no longer lost and degraded, but splendid saints of the Christian Church.

I therefore gave up my summer holiday in order to issue such a series. Few can estimate the difficulty of the task. I can only say that every word has been written with prayer, and in that deep suffering of heart which in itself often gives spiritual vision.

"Blind me with seeing tears until I see."

They have been thoroughly criticised and revised by young men, and have passed with approval under the sounder judgment that England possesses; I think therefore I may say that they fulfil the first desideratum of being safe, and such as mothers need not fear to make use of. Others are beginning now to add to the series; and the whole is headed by a very fine address of Dr. Lightfoot, the Bishop of Durham, with whose movement the series is especially, though by no means exclusively, connected.

One of the series, "Letters to my Son," is addressed to public schoolboys, and I would especially commend it to mothers, as likely to prove helpful to them, with another little paper, "Schoolboy Morality," published by Messrs. Hatchards, but not in this series, as it is addressed to mothers.

The rest of the series I think will do for men of all classes. We sorely need in addition plain, strong, racy papers, addressed to village men and lads, and the especial evils in force in our villages, if anyone will supply them; though "True Manliness," "Wild Oats or Acorns," "Man and Woman," and one or two others, will be found applicable to both town and village. A paper for lads, I trust, will be shortly supplied.

The whole series is published by Hatchards, Piccadilly, whose unfailing patience and kindness in the innumerable alterations and modifications and additions which so difficult a series has necessitated, I would wish especially to acknowledge.

The firm has kindly issued them at as low a figure as possible—fifty for 2s., or a penny a single copy, as we want them scattered broadcast over England. The White Cross movement has spread to America, and these papers will be extensively read in that other great English-speaking country; and our English colonies are also waiting for them to start the movement in our world-wide empire. We shall also endeavour to get them well translated, in connection with the various movements inaugurated on the Continent by the National Federation against the legalisation of vice.

But it is to the women of my own land that I chiefly look to get the White Cross series into wide circulation. To the readers of THE CHRISTIAN especially I appeal, knowing that they at least will not fail me; to mothers, especially to mothers of sons, whether after the flesh or after the spirit, as teachers of Young Men's Bible-classes, &c. Get the whole series; read them quietly and prayerfully—there is nothing in them to wound a woman—and let the spirit of God in you choose those you think most useful for circulation. Keep a lot of them by you. Do not grudge the money, as this is the most important work of all, in which we are attacking the very citadel of the degradation of women and children. If you cannot do both you had better give a guinea to getting a higher tone among men than a guinea to a penitentiary to accommodate the results of a low tone. Do not leave the books about. Keep them in a locked drawer. To the men who belong to us, to the clergy and ministers, we can personally give them, and beseech them to become centres of distribution themselves. To others we can send them anonymously, and with each copy we can pray. With each copy of the White Cross series we can remember to make our own garments "white" through the blood of the Lamb: and humbly and faithfully take up the shame and offence and pain of the "Cross."

Perhaps to many it may seem anomalous that I should call so especially upon women to help in circulating a series of papers for men. But more and more I feel that we women must take the lead in this question of the sanctity of our own womanhood. We have got our own sons to save; we have got to defend the innocence of the children of our land; we have got to be true to the divine motherhood God has implanted in our womanhood. If the man is the head of the woman, the woman is the heart of the man, and here the heart must teach the head. If men don't see on this question, if they take a fatally low tone, if even in pleading for purity they plead more for their own sakes than for the sake of the woman who bears the curse and the shame and the degradation, it is largely our fault. We have not taught men that our womanhood is one; we have not taught men that its desecration excludes from our society; we have not said of this wrong in the power of the Christ in us, "Inasmuch as ye have done it to the least of these, my sisters, ye have done it unto Me."

But now our Christ stands in our midst, and once again gives us our woman's commission: "Go, tell my brothers" of a perfect manhood taken up into God, of which they may be partakers; of a Father whose will it is that not one of these little ones should perish; of his God and our God, who made us, not with the necessity that the man should destroy the woman, but in his own one and individual image of Love.

"Go, tell my brothers." And in his strength we will tell them, whatever it may cost us to take up this cross. We have been forced to face the fact that it is not possible to save our young girls without we can get a higher tone amongst men. When Miss Steer, in her last Record of her "Bridge of Hope Mission," which I would especially commend to the perusal of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN,* stated that of three lost girls who were questioned one had had £20 in a fortnight; another, £23 in one day; and another, £100 in three months; and when, as she points out, the choice between hard labour at nine shillings a week, with the handling of such sums of money as this, is presented to young girls of 14, 15, and 16, who have had much against them to start with in the way they have been brought up, I ask how it is possible to save our girls, in the face of the maddening temptations offered them by vicious men? And how can we get these young girls protected by the law till they are of such an age as to be able to reflect upon what lies behind all this money—degradation and disease and death—unless we can get rid of the present debased feeling among men, which refuses to protect the young, lest they themselves should run the danger of being subject to false accusation, a risk incurred only in doing base and cowardly wrong.

But do not let us lose heart, or get into the way of looking upon men and women as hostile classes, who are to be permanently set against one another. We can neither of us do without the other. If I may use a very homely simile, nature has rivetted us together like a pair of scissors, and one leg cannot move without the other. "Gagnez les femmes," the great Emperor used to say, when he wanted to gain a nation from within, and not only conquer it from without. Only let us women be thoroughly in earnest in maintaining the dignity and sanctity of our own womanhood; only let us pray about it, suffer over it, make any sacrifice in secret for it. Only let us have the courage to engage under the Captain of the Hosts of the Lord, in a silent crusade against its degradation, using the White Cross Series as our weapons, and following them up with our ever-living prayers and influence and example; and not only England, but our Colonies, America, the countries of Europe, will follow our lead.

In conclusion, may I express my deep thankfulness to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN for their generous response to my appeal in the summer for the Preventive Mission to Young Girls in Plymouth, a response which amounted to upwards of £100? In answer to much prayer, a capable lady has been found to take the head of the work. My secretary is helping her to organise it, and the Preventive Mission has made a capital start, though, owing to one legislation being practically withdrawn, and no other substituted, the place presents great difficulties, and I would earnestly ask prayer for the work.

Any cast-off apparel sent to Miss Kerl, Staddon House, Plymouth, will be most useful for the clothing club.

And if there are any whom my words perchance may have helped, may I ask them, in my great need, to help me with theirs, by pleading for me that the battle may not be too hard for me, but that I may endure, as seeing Him who is invisible.

Trips and Touring.

UNDER this heading an appeal was made last autumn for a Shop-girls' Home, which some friends of mine had established for sick or exhausted shopwomen in the City. It will gratify the many kind hearts who responded to it, to know that sufficient funds have been raised to keep it open through the winter; and the young ladies who have made this happy resting-place for over-worked, toiling girls, are very, very grateful.

At any time I shall gladly accept, for the Home, warm clothes, or contributions from 1s. upwards, and will forward details to anyone desiring to know more.

RAGGED SCHOOL.—The Committee of the Fox-court Ragged Schools appeal for funds for the relief the sick and destitute in the crowded courts about Gray's-inn-road. There are many distressing cases of genuine poverty at the present time. Contributions will be thankfully received by Mr. H. W. Elcum, 13, Bedford-row, W.C.

NOTES FROM THE UNITED STATES.—5.

By Mr. GAWIN KIRKHAM.

SOON after despatching my last, I received from the Mayor of New York the licence I had asked for to preach in the streets. It is the seventy-sixth thus granted.

BOSTON.

This city presents much of interest to the tourist, the historian, the philanthropist, and the Christian. But as I was advised by my small guide-book to purchase three other larger ones, and to spend seven days in examining the various objects of interest, I gave it up in despair. Saw the representatives of the City Mission, the Associated Charities, Y.M.C.A., and others. These Y.M.C. Associations seem to be ambitious in the matter of buildings. I went over the new premises, on the eve of opening, and could not but admire their completeness, though it was startling to be told they cost £40,000. Over the door is worked in stone a cross held by a hand, under which is inscribed "Et teneo et tenear"—(I hold and am held)—the motto Mr. Spurgeon selected for his college. I was delighted with a hearty prayer-meeting in Dr. J. A. Gordon's church. In this intellectual centre it was refreshing to find old-fashioned evangelical truth put so plainly as Dr. Gordon puts it. Three of his members afterwards accompanied me to an electric lamp, where we held an open-air meeting. I was so struck by the heartiness of one of these helpers that I gave him my "Coloured Teacher." It was not without a pang of regret that I parted with my silent friend. It had travelled with me more than 8000 miles, and had helped me to gather an audience in some of the cities when I stood alone, and I trust had also been made a blessing to souls.

LOWELL.

I spent a Sunday in this New England city of nearly 70,000 souls, and had a good time with the Y.M.C.A., an active organisation. An open-air meeting, under an electric light, was largely attended; but this Sunday will be chiefly memorable for the first Universalist sermon I had ever heard. The preacher took 1 Cor. xiii. 12 for his text, to which he never once referred after announcing it. He then read a long poetic extract relative to two women, one rich and the other poor. This extract formed his real text. He proposed to hand this poor woman over to four representatives of the future state, and hear what they would say to her, viz., "Those who deny a future state, those who hold the annihilation theory, those who believe in the eternity of punishment, and those who believe in the final restoration of all to eternal bliss." The latter is the Universalist's view. I presume he preached to the entire satisfaction of his congregation, for, as they left the church, they made great mirth. "How did you like him?" inquired one lady of another. "Oh, it was splendid; I like his way of putting it." Just so. His way of putting it; for beyond an incidental allusion to the prodigal son, there was not, as far as I remember, a single quotation from Scripture. It struck me that had he spent his breath in exhorting his hearers to seek the salvation of the poor woman now, it would have been far more sensible, as well as more Scriptural.

This service afforded an illustration of the prominence given to choirs, of which I had heard so much in connection with American churches. A printed "Order of Service" was laid in the seats, containing fourteen items, but only two marked "Congregational"—one "responsive readings," and the other a hymn. When this latter was reached, the minister professed to have discovered there was no time to sing it, so it was deleted; yet the choir, or rather quartette, sang four anthems, and the organ played a "prelude" and a "postlude."

CONCORD.

My visit here was chiefly noteworthy for three hours I spent in the public schools. The teachers seemed to make learning as pleasant as possible. The first grade sat at separate desks, and the others at dual desks. Boys and girls sat side by side in all the four grades, and in the high school also, where some were twenty years of age. All the education, even in the high school, is free. From what I saw and heard, I came to the conclusion that the scholars were quicker than English ones. The schools are opened each morning by reading Scripture, and reciting the Lord's Prayer. Hymns are also sung.

ANTRIM.

This village of 1500 inhabitants gave me a favourable impression of a New England village. It is in the State of New Hampshire, and is pleasantly surrounded by hills. The houses are of wood, each apart from the other, and chiefly painted white, with green shutters. While here I witnessed a New England funeral. The neighbours gathered into the house and filled four rooms, in one of which lay the remains in a casket, the lid of the upper half being removed. The service was impressive, the minister reading a selection of suitable scriptures, giving an address and offering prayer. Two hymns were also sung. There is no service at the grave.

NEWPORT.

In response to an invitation from George Needham, I went to this Rhode Island town, and helped him for four days in evangelistic services. He had been preaching for a fortnight in the Friends' Meeting House, where a deep interest had been awakened, and some souls had found peace. Both he and the workers were full of prayerful expectation that they should "see greater things." It was deeply interesting to see something like a thousand people gather night after night. Bible-readings were held each afternoon. Fruit remains of a Mission he held here six years ago. On Saturday and Sunday evenings open-air meetings were held, at which the people gathered very readily. On Sunday afternoon I was appointed to preach in a coloured church, but whether from a desire to imitate white folk or otherwise, the service was quite according to the modern notion, for the choir sang three times while the congregation sat still and listened. This town of 15,000 people is considered the first watering-place on the American Continent, and in the season large numbers of notables come, including, during the past summer, President Arthur.

NEWBURYPORT.

Friends at home will understand the satisfaction I had in visiting the grave of George Whitefield, "the prince of open-air preachers," who died at Newburyport, about thirty-five miles from Boston, on September 30, 1770, and was buried under the pulpit of the old South Church, where he still remains, awaiting the resurrection of the just. Over that grave I consecrated myself afresh to the work to which he so freely gave his life. At present another seraphic spirit like his is needed, for the place is cold and formal to the last degree.

My companion in this visit was Benjamin Needham, brother of George, Thomas, and William Needham, all preachers. Benjamin, as your readers will remember, was trained at Mr. Grattan Guinness' institute, and has been labouring among the Indians, near Brantford, in Canada, for some years. It was deeply interesting to hear him tell of his trials and triumphs, but sad to think that this Mission must be abandoned if monetary help is not speedily forthcoming. It is on my heart to send him a thank-offering from English Christians, if they will give me this privilege, as a memento of my interesting visit to the land of his adoption; or their contributions may be sent to the office of The Christian.

HOME AGAIN.

How welcome was the sight of England's green fields after an absence of ninety days save one. During that time I find I travelled more than 12,000 miles, gave 102 addresses to nearly 14,000 people, viz., 35 in the open air, and 67 indoors. After a pleasant passage of nine days the ss. Parisian landed us safely in Liverpool on November 26. The wind, which make it laborious for vessels going westward, was in our favour, and most of us, myself included, escaped sickness. We had a song-service on deck each afternoon, and I preached to the steerage passengers almost every evening. It now only remains for me to praise the Lord for all his tender mercies, and to thank those friends who have so lovingly remembered me in their prayers during the period of my wanderings in that wonderful New World.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

SAILORS AT HAMBURG.

FROM April 1 till Sept. 30, Mr. Windolf, the Harbour Missionary at Hamburg, visited 2534 ships and 157 families. In most cases it is not possible to have any lengthened conversation with the sailors, as they are at work. The seed is carried into all the Elbe Provinces, and through the large ships to all parts of the earth.

PAU, FRANCE.

Mr. T. P. Sinel writes: "I have been moving about a good deal lately. I am having a small Bible-carriage made, which will be ready about Christmas, but for this I shall want a horse. The Lord has enabled me to sell in this and neighbouring departments thousands of books, including Bibles, Testaments, Gospels, &c., but there is still much to be done. I shall be glad of the prayers of Christians for this work."

TYROL.

The foundation-stone of an evangelical church was recently laid at Meran, Tyrol, in spite of the protest against it by the Ultramontane majority in the Tyrol Landtag or Diet. For twenty years Christians have been collecting amongst themselves and abroad for this building, but they have not yet the full sum needed.—Evangelisch-Kirchlicher Anzeiger.

CENTRAL AFRICA.

Letters have been received from Lovedale, South Africa, containing an interesting account of the departure of three coloured students for Livingstonia. Accompanying them is a Scotchman, who was in business in South Africa, but who was so moved by hearing Dr. Somerville while on his visit to that country, that he gave up his business and devoted himself to Mission work.

GENEVA.

Messrs. Rappard and Stockmayer, with some other pastors, have been holding meetings at Geneva for the furtherance of Christian life. The meetings were excellent; we only regretted the large share which "I" took in some of the addresses. It was, without doubt, to humiliate and flagellate him that he was put in view; but he is a queer fellow, and repays himself in spite of the best intentions of the speaker: it produces the effect of a false note. But we must say this false note was heard only in a few speeches.—Journal Réligieux.

INTOLERANCE IN INDIA.

In the town of Indor, where the Maratha Prince Holkar resides, a distinguished young Hindoo was baptized in connection with the Canadian Mission. Immediately thereupon he disappeared, and there arose great excitement among all classes. Holkar had forbidden all public missionary work in his town; no Christian dared to preach in the streets, or distribute tracts, or to open a school; whilst Moslems, Brahmins, &c., could proselytise without fear. Already two Christian converts had been banished by the Prince, and this young man is supposed to have fled from fear of him.

The missionaries have complained to the Viceroy of the very small measure of toleration allowed to them, but without any result. Even the Hindoo papers recommend the Prince to show a more friendly feeling to the Christian Mission.—Der Wahrheitszeuge.

GREENLAND.

Mr. Martensen, a Danish Protestant Bishop, has lately consecrated two Esquimaux for the service of the Lutheran Church in Greenland.

SUNDAY OBSERVANCE IN GERMANY.

According to the Nord-Deutsche Allegemeine Zeitung, a society has been founded in the country districts against Sunday work. Count Bismarck-Bohlen is the President. The members bind themselves to do on Sundays no farm or husbandry work either in the field or barn, with the exception of milking and rendering help in case of accident or natural occurrences. They will neither buy nor sell; no payments, settling of accounts, or measuring of corn is to take place, &c.

EVANGELICAL SOCIETY OF BELGIUM.

The annual report of this Society gives, notwithstanding some drawbacks, encouraging accounts of the work done in the year. The new General Secretary, Rev. Kennedy Anet, takes the place of his father, who has retired, owing to declining health. There are twenty-six churches and stations, and meetings have been held regularly in eighty-three localities, besides occasional evangelistic work in ninety-two other localities. The report says: "Tracts play an important part in our field of labour. We owe to them much of our success, and many a conversion; often, through their sole means, a soul has been brought to Christ." Many of the converts have to endure much persecution from their Roman Catholic relatives. The work being carried on in a Roman Catholic country, and most of the converts being from among the poor (though they give liberally), the help of British Christians is much needed and valued.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

DENNISTOWN (GLASGOW).—A few persons who were brought to a knowledge of the truth at Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Circus meetings, have been doing a quiet work in connection with one of the churches in this district.

GREETLAND WALL NOOK.—Mr. and Mrs. Wiggan have been holding services at this place with considerable success. About forty persons professed to trust in the Lord as their only Saviour. The meetings were crowded to excess and much appreciated. Mr. and Mrs. Wiggan are now in Lincolnshire, for which county they desire prayer.

FALKIRK.—A very interesting series of meetings for the young has been concluded here by Mr. Mackeith, of Glasgow, and others. The attendance was remarkably good; they were by far the largest meetings that have been held for the young in Falkirk. At the close of each meeting numbers waited to be spoken to, and several professed to give their hearts to the Saviour.

BATTERSEA.—The Lord's work in Trinity Mission Hall, Stewart's-road, is prospering under Mr. D. M. Cameron, who continues to preach the Gospel from week to week, and visit the homes of the people. More than 200 are now in Christian fellowship, many of whom are engaged as teachers in the Sunday-school, tract distributors, and Gospel Temperance advocates. Mr. Cameron is now organising his fellow-workers so that every house and family in the neighbourhood may be visited and specially invited to the meetings to be held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

BOURNEMOUTH AND WESTON-SUPER-MARE.—After a month's Mission at St. John's Church, Wimborne, the Rev. Walter and Mrs. Bradbury and Miss Hain have been used at Bournemouth in Bible readings and visiting the sick. They have adopted a novel form of evangelising, that of giving short addresses at family worship in boarding-houses, when the servants, and invalids unable to go out, are often thereby reached. Mr. and Mrs. Bradbury are about to begin daily Bible-readings at 9.30 a.m., at 2, Claremont-crescent, Weston-super-Mare, which address will find them, should any be in quest of their services.

LADY HOBART ON EMIGRATION.

THE usual monthly meeting for workers at the Home of Industry took place on Wednesday last week. Mr. Edward Trotter, who gave the first address, read Psalm cxxxiii., and dwelt very profitably on the blessedness of the unity we have in Christ.

LADY HOBART, who is the Hon. Sec. of the East London Family Emigration Fund, next spoke on emigration and its advantages. I feel, she said, very thankful that the subject to-night has been one of praise. I do not think my heart has ever been so much drawn out in praise as it has in connection with the work in Canada.

The year 1868 was a terrible time of suffering in the East of London, which was visited with cholera, famine, &c. Sewing classes were established for the immediate relief of the destitute. In the autumn of the same year, a friend of mine, Lady Mary Fielding, said to me, "Can we not do something in the way of emigrating?" The funds had to be raised, and there were only three weeks to do it in. We told Him with whom are the silver and the gold, and He sent us the £500 that were needed. We had the joy of sending out our first party, consisting of eighty-four. God was so gracious in helping us in our efforts, that in 1869 we were able to send out 1035, and in 1870 our band consisted of 1011. In all, we have sent out 3430. God has wonderfully supplied our needs. When we have felt we could not take in one more, and some pressing case has come to our notice, we have asked the Lord whether that family should be sent, and He has never failed us.

This last year has been a year of very great blessing to me. God has allowed me to see something of the work in Canada, and I cannot possibly describe to you the difference between the state of the people here and there. I kept the addresses, and found all were down in the directory in Canada; so I had only to look for such and such a one. I used to go up to the door, without giving any notice of my coming, and see how they were getting on. I would ask such questions as these: "Where is that child that was twelve years old at such a time, when he went out?" "Are you glad or sorry that you came out?" Without exception the answer was: "We are glad." A man we sent out fifteen years ago, I found in his shop doing a good business, with a partner. There were two carts at the door. The children were all at work. "He was getting on extremely well," he said, and had everything to be thankful for. He was formerly a greengrocer, but had failed; all his resources had gone through some shipping disaster, and he would have been in the direst poverty. When he got to Canada, he took the first work that was offered to him, and had remained in the same town all the fifteen years.

I visited many in the outlying villages and could not help being struck with the wonderful contrast between what I knew them to be here, and what they are there. If you could only see one such home! A man whom we had sent out, we met in the road on his buggy. We arrived at his house at the same time as he himself did. There had been no notice of my coming. His wife was laying the supper table with a clean white cloth. In another room there were pictures on the walls, and many little comforts. The man was anxious to show me everything; there were his kitchen-garden, all stocked, his pig, &c. What a contrast such cosy families are to the crowded rooms of this terrible London! Here the poor feel they are not wanted, and there is the difficulty of rent, &c. What a joy when such families find themselves in Canada, where they are wanted, where they will have plenty to eat and drink, and plenty of work to do.

I think nothing is more satisfactory than this emigration work. The Midland Railway Company have always made arrangements for the comfort of the emigrants. They have everything they need on board; in fact, they are as comfortable as it is possible for anyone to be on board ship. They very soon lose the sad, hopeless look they have in London. On arriving at Quebec, the Goverment agent meets them, and they have a good meal. When they reach Toronto, Mr. Donaldson sees after them. I was anxious to watch an emigration train arrive, and find out how soon they got work! All the men had work offered to them as soon as they arrived. What a contrast to the sight of the men in our streets waiting about for work. While I was standing talking to Mr. Donaldson, some persons came up and said, "Are there no more workpeople? When are you likely to have more?"

The Canadian Government was anxious for me to see everything; they kept nothing back. Why should they, in that country all so bright? Of course they will not have all sorts of people—those who will not work anywhere. Our rules are that they must have a good character, a reference from previous employers, and one from a clergyman, minister, or Bible-woman. Our plan has been to send out families. We cannot be too thankful to God for all He has done. They have all got safely over without accident. We never entertain a case unless there are satisfactory references. We do not mind how large the family is, nor how poor, if the people are willing to work.

Again and again it has been said to me in Canada, "They cannot help getting on here, if they are only steady and willing to work, for there is plenty to do." A large family came to us week by week through one winter. The mother and eldest daughter were sack-makers. We told them they must endeavour to do something for themselves. Throughout the winter they hardly missed a week bringing us a shilling; but when the time came we had not the means to send them all. What were we to do? "Will some of you go?" "No, we would rather remain here in our poverty than be separated." Well, there is one resource. We prayed about it, and I was led to write to two or three friends. The response was far beyond what we expected. I saw them last August. Two of the married daughters came to see me. The health of the mother and father had given way, and they were no longer able to work; but, said the daughters, "We can afford to keep them, we have more work than we can do." One of the brothers was earning nearly three dollars a day. One of them said to me, "With father and mother like this, what should we have done if we had remained in London?" This message was brought to me from a member of the family: "Give my love to the lady, and ask her to tell the poor people in the East of London, if they wish to remain as poor as they are all their life, let them remain in London; but if not, let them try to do as we have done."

Seeing these little children here brings to my mind one of Miss Macpherson's boys that I went to see, while I was staying with Miss Macpherson's niece. He was traveller for a company. He asked us to go to his house. There were his books, his organ, and many comforts. To me it appears an impossibility to exaggerate the contrast between the homes in London and the homes in Canada.

Lady Ripon and I have kept up this emigration year by year. When one of us has not been in town the other has remained, and we have proved it to be a perfect success; but, of course, funds are wanted. Sometimes people will take up one case. We always endeavour to get those who have been emigrated to repay when they can, and to help themselves in the first instance as far as possible. We fix the sum we think each should raise. If any friends feel inclined to help new families we shall be glad to find the families for them. Five pounds is about the cost for an adult, and we endeavour to give them two sets of good clothes, second-hand.

Anyone wishing to help can communicate with Lady Hobart, Hon. Sec. of the East London Family Emigration Fund, 15, Eccleston-square, S.W. There are no working expenses; all the money sent goes to the people.

New Year's Eve.

"Thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee."—Deut. viii. 2.

OLD year slowly dying,
Fraught with tears and sorrow,
Will a brighter, happier one
Dawn on us to-morrow?
Father, Thou knowest best,
And on Thy loving care
We calmly hush our hearts to rest,
In child-like faith and prayer.

For all the good we praise,
Thou hast so freely given;
For mercies, and for needed grace,
And blessed hope of heaven.
For all the seeming ill,
For earthly joys laid low,
Lord, we would humbly praise Thee still—
'Twas love that dealt the blow.

When heaven's light shall shine
Upon our stormy way,
We'll trace the hand divine
That led us day by day.
So we will trust Thee now,
Though tears may dim our eyes,
Faith still beholds the promised bow
In all life's clouded skies. E. H.

A Remarkable Gathering.

A REMARKABLE assembly of women and girls living in the slums and rookeries of the Mint was brought together on Wednesday afternoon in the School-room, Harrow-street, Borough. Fully 250 people crowded the benches alongside clean tables, where a fairly substantial meat tea was spread for them. Tickets had been distributed through the agency of Mrs. Meredith's Mission, members of whose staff have been at work in the Mint for the last six months. The congregation consisted, admittedly to a very large extent, of depraved characters, discharged prisoners—some of whom were not ashamed to acknowledge thirty convictions—habitual drunkards, and the poorest class of unfortunates. Here and there amongst this essentially hard-featured assembly were gentle, kindly faces that seemed to betoken finer sensibility than the majority could be credited with. A sonsie young Scotch woman, apparently about twenty years of age, the wife of a labourer out of work, was one whom it was impossible to think ill of or not to feel sympathy with. She is a really respectable woman, driven into poor lodgings through the direst straits of poverty.

Half a dozen similar cases might possibly have been found at this tea-party. They ranged in age from about fifteen to fifty. Some of the younger, and indeed several of the girls and women of all ages, seemed to be utterly callous and indifferent to the hymns that were sung, and the earnest Gospel address given by an evangelist from the Evangelisation Society. In several instances, however, during the evening tears came into the eyes of girls and women, whose faces were bloated and battered by the associations of vice. The fact that, as as a rule, these women and girls looked the reverse of pinched or parched was attributable to their habitual indulgence in drink. All without exception were poorly dressed—some very poorly indeed. Yet it was clear that even amongst these, most of whom did not pretend to be of the most deserving poor, it had been a point of honour to make themselves as tidy as possible, and to come to tea without even a suspicion of having recently taken anything stronger.

By way of analysis, Mrs. Meredith put to her guests a series of questions, which she requested them to answer by show of hands or by standing up. When asked how many of them could read, about forty of the two hundred and fifty held up their hands. Three only of all that congregation, including perhaps ninety young women, were able to declare that they lived with their mothers. About thirty were mothers with children, and to these the ladies on the platform particularly appealed, assuring them that through Mrs. Cassin, who was present, the wife of the rector of the parish, something would be done, if they would accept it, to assist the most necessitous in maintaining their offspring without dishonesty. Only six women held up their hands in response to an inquiry as to how many were engaged in regular work at sewing or in any manufactory. Six declared that they had had good homes of their own.

The Nine Elms Mission, as our readers are aware, directs itself largely to the reformation of the criminal classes, and its work in the Mint may be regarded as supplementing and assisting other regular Mission agencies which, though unseen by the outer world, has all the while been active. In the course of the meeting a little girl four years old, sadly wan, diminutive, and emaciated, was taken on to the platform as a fair sample of the effects of poor living and bad lodging.—Daily News.

Notices of Books, &c.

Tom Telfer's Shadow (2s.); Troy's Message (1s.). Both by Robina F. Hardy. Oliphant. This author knows how to write about children for children; these well-told stories of Scottish life ought to find many admiring readers.

The Minister's Diary and Visiting Book. Hodder & Stoughton. Cloth, 2s.; roan, 3s. This handy pocket companion is already a favourite with a large number of ministers. Those who have not made its acquaintance will find it wise to do so. The issue for 1884 is fully equal to that of previous years.

The Pictorial Supplement to the Bournemouth Visitor's Directory (1½d., Mate & Sons, Bournemouth) contains thirty-nine first-rate engravings, with descriptive letter-press, of this favourite and fast-increasing watering-place and its neighbourhood. The London and provincial Press commend it highly.

Elder Logan's Story about the Kirks. 1s. 6d. Little Bluebird, the Girl Missionary. 1s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier. Two delightful books for the young, by the genial author of "Bits from Blinkbonny." The one rehearses, in the Northern dialect, a stirring chapter of Scottish Church history; the latter ought to implant in the heart of every youthful reader a love for the sacred cause of Missions at home and abroad.

Bijou volumes are the order of the day. Three dainty specimens of a series entitled The Jewel Poets come to us from Messrs. Macniven & Wallace, Edinburgh. They contain choice selections from the poetical writings of George Herbert, Henry Vaughan, and William Blake, with brief introductions, written, in the case of the two first, by Rev. W. R. Nicoll, of Kelso, and the last, by H. J. Nicoll.

The Little Horn of the East. By the Author of the "Great Roman Empire." Elliot Stock. This book is an exposition of Daniel viii. 9—26, and is written to discuss and support the theory that the little horn seen in the prophetic vision indicated Mohammed and the religious system he founded. The writer brings not a little historical research and argumentative skill to bear upon his theme, and to many students of prophecy the work will doubtless prove of much interest, whether it wins their consent to its conclusions or not.

A budget of new music is sent out from the well known house of J. Curwen & Sons. The most ambitious in scope and execution is a vigorously written Cantata illustrating the history of "Josiah, King of Judah (2s. 6d.) The music is composed by W. A. Ogden, while W. H. Martin is responsible for the selection and arrangement of the words. Sacred Quartets (Vol. I. 4s.) consists of forty-eight pieces in both notations, suitable for choir, choral, and family singing. As a rule they are simple and not marred by over-elaboration. Congregational Anthems (fourth series, 2s. 6d.) are more intricate, but well within the capacity of a trained choir; the congregations that would be able to follow them, generally, and with ease, must be few and far between. Sacred Music Leaflets (Nos. I. and II., 6d. each), and Temperance Leaflets (Part IV. 6d.) are simple enough for popular use in Sunday and day-schools; they give the music in both notations. Christmas Music Leaflets (Nos. I. to XII. 1d. each) are also in both notations. Practice for Singers (6d.) is a very useful little manual, containing an elementary course of graded lessons in the staff notation.

Joy in Sorrow. By Sarah Geraldine Stock. J. F. Shaw & Co. A small volume of sacred poems, full of the music of hope and consolation.

Busy Hands and Patient Hearts. By Annie Harwood-Holmden. 1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. A new edition of a translation from the German of Gustav Nieritz, of a touching anecdote. The young folks will do well to read it. We wish that the triumphs of the little maid of Dresden and her blind brother were more widely known.

How they Lived in the Olden Time. By Rev. Chas. Bullock, D.D. "Home Words" Office. The title of this book will indicate its character. It furnishes an interesting account of social and domestic life during the Anglo-Saxon and Anglo-Norman periods. Its quaint illustrations form a pleasant study, and present a singular contrast to the growth and advancement of home life in the present day.

Tom's Memorable Christmas; Katie's Christmas Lesson. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier. 1s. per doz. Well-written stories, with plenty of pictures and coloured covers. Marvels of cheapness, and sure to please. My First Pound Note; or, the Story of Jane Halifax, in paper covers; same publisher. A cleverly-written Scottish tale, showing what may be done by a working girl by means of thrift.

New Year Addresses (1d.), by the Rev. James Gall, and When Next (1d.), by Rev. George Everard, M.A., are prettily-got-up New Year's addresses teeming with Gospel truth, in the well-known style of the Stirling Tracts. Be Sure (1d.), by J. Forbes Moncrieff, is uniform with the above, but written specially for the young. Those who have formerly brought these little books, so tastefully bound in chromo covers, adorned with flowers and fruit, will find that these are no way inferior to the series of last year.

Victories and Safeguards. By Rev. Charles A. Fox, B.A. Partridge. The author's quaint, epigrammatic, alliterative style is not common in these days. His purpose here is to answer the important question: "What is the just balance of Divine truth in connection with the believer's spiritual life, when practically considered?" The following verse is an illustrative answer: "Because thou hast kept the Word of my patience, I also will keep thee." There are few writers who say in so little space so much that is worth saying.

If any friends are looking for g ft books or prizes suitable for boys, let them include two pretty volumes published by Gall & Inglis. How the Battle was Won, by Louis Bouchier, is a grandfather's story of his early life told to his grandchildren; the perusal of it ought to help many a lad in fighting and winning his own battles with sin and self. Life in the Eagle's Nest, by A.L.O.E., is a wonderfully interesting story of adventure, of Christian heroism and self-sacrificing obedience to the call of duty. Surely no young man could read it without being stirred to high resolves and noble deeds. As Miss Tucker has written it with the view of helping on her missionary work in India, purchasers will have a double satisfaction.

God's Timepiece for Man's Eternity. By J. B. Cheever, D.D. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. The design of the writer is to prove the infallibility and plenary inspiration of the Word of God. The Bible is God's timepiece, chronometer, and compass, to be kept by man in his heart for continual direction. Words and texts are to Scripture what moments are to Time and its seasons; take one away or add another, and you disturb the mechanism of the whole. The point is well sustained and proved; the style is somewhat heavy and verbose, but is relieved by the quaintness of the idea expressed in the title and interwoven with the whole argument. The book serves an important purpose in upholding the Divine authority of the Bible in opposition to modern assaults on it.

The Child's Bible, with 200 illustrations. Price, 7s. 6d. Cassell & Co. That which attracts to the thoughtful study of the Word of God is to be highly valued, and to make the Bible simple and attractive to the youthful mind is an object to be most earnestly aimed at. The publishers of the Child's Bible have really done much to secure this end, and this new and cheaper edition of what has been long known to some will be a boon to many. The illustrations are very numerous, and in most cases greatly assist a realising view of Scripture scenes and incidents. The questions and answers are simple and helpful to an understanding of many truths taught in the Sacred Word. Altogether, it is a companion we should be glad to place in the hands of children everywhere as pleasing, instructive, and calculated to inspire them with a love of truth.

"MIND YOU DON'T."

"WHY DON'T YOU?"

Dear Friends,—

Towards the end of this summer my health, which had been gradually failing for some time, suddenly broke down altogether, and I was ordered away for complete rest. After nearly two months' absence I prepared to return to my work. Kind, wise friends, from all parts sent me letters of counsel and caution. "Mind you don't attempt too much." "Mind you don't wear yourself out." "Mind you don't neglect your health." "Mind you don't go without your dinner." "Mind you don't increase your responsibilities," &c. &c. I felt the force of all this good advice, and firmly resolved to be more judicious, and to live more methodically in the future.

I got home on a Saturday, and was pleased to find how well things had gone in my absence. Everything seemed to augur well for my amended course of life, although now and then the first night I was back it cost me a struggle to repress my rising enthusiasm.

The next morning (Sunday) I was walking with my friend who had kindly been locum tenens while I was away and three or four of our elder Christian lads along the Thames Embankment. Leaning over the stone parapet, we had been watching the dull, muddy river ebbing out, and I had been contrasting it with some of the clear mountain streams I had lately seen away in Wales. Presently we noticed a group of four or five gutter-boys who had gone down some slimy landing stairs and were scooping up the filthy water in their hands, trying to wash their faces with it and to wipe them dry with their ragged, greasy caps, and using the fingers combwise to tidy their wild, matted hair.

I stopped to speak a few kind words to them. They were having a "sluice to revive us up a bit," one told me. Their general appearance betokened they had been sleeping out all night, and we soon learnt they had not had any breakfast. I tried to cheer them up with a little praise for their attempts to be clean and tidy under great difficulties; and, mindful of my wise resolves, prudently walked on. We had only gone a few yards when I heard a shrill voice calling after us—"Look here, guvnor, stop a bit." Turning round I saw the eldest of these street-waifs (about ten years old he seemed) pointing to our lads, in their neat Sunday uniform. "I say, guvnor!" he cried, "why don't you make some more of us like them chaps along with you?"

Let me confess, the street mannikin's shrewd challenge has been ringing in my ears ever since. That reproachful, indignant, despairing inquiry haunts me now. That weird voice crying out of the slough of despond for a helping hand in life, I shall never forget. The "Mind you don'ts" of my counselling friends convinced my head, but the "Why don't you?" of the gutter-boy reached my heart.

Again winter, with all its attendant miseries for our friendless and shelterless, ragged and ill-fed street-wanderers, is upon us.

For my part, dear friends, I am more determined than ever, while life and strength last, to do all that in me lies to "make some more of us like them chaps along with you." Will you not help me?

For some months we have been living from hand to mouth. Our Southwark boys (140) need new, warm clothes for the winter. Our little boys at Greenwich (80) are in sore want of a fresh supply of bedding, blankets, &c. In our Ramsgate branch (10) we have room for 50 more orphan boys if we only had the means to increase our family there. We require about £600 to settle up our quarterly accounts falling due, and close this year free of debt.

Will you give my three families of "Nobody's Boys" a warm place in your hearts this Christmastide? Would not an "In Memoriam" donation fitly honour the memory of some dear one who is sadly missed from your circle? Would not a "Thank-offering" collection well express gratitude for preserving mercies through another year?

With sincere thanks for all your kind sympathy and help in the past ten years,

I remain, dear Friends,

Yours faithfully,

J. W. O'Regan

No Room for Christ.

NO room for the holy Son of God
At Bethlehem's busy inn;
No room in the land of the priest and seer,
His mission of love to begin;
No room in the wide, wide world for Christ,
So crowded with self and sin!

He came to his own, but for place of birth
They gave Him the manger bed;
And all through his sorrowful path of life
The snares of their hate were spread;
And they nailed Him at last on the Cross to die,
With their thorn-crown on his head.

No room for Christ! yet enough of room
In the heart for all beside—
For spectres which dare not come to the light,
For shame even shame would hide:
Ay, room for temples to touch the stars,
If Christ is not inside!

No room for Jesus who comes to heal
The world of its deadly pain,
And to fill the void of the restless heart
With pleasures which never wane!
No room! and yet there is room for sin,
And the hell that is in its train!

No room for Christ? Shall we not make room
Before 'tis too late to pray,
Ere the Master arises and shuts the door,
And the soul is lost for aye?
We are late, my brother—yet not too late—
To repent this Christmas-day.

Make room, O Christ, in these crowded hearts!
We yield them up to thy grace,
All vile and helpless—but thou canst cleanse
And prepare for thyself the place;
We trust Thee for all; and there's room for Thee now
To enter our souls and bless.

Workers' Meeting in South London.

A THOROUGHLY enjoyable and profitable evening was spent on Tuesday, 11th inst., at the Penarth-street Mission Hall, Ormside-street, Old Kent-road. After partaking of an excellent tea in the "upper room" the little company, numbering about sixty ladies and gentlemen, adjourned to the large and commodious hall below.

The chair was taken by Mr. G. E. ELVIN, Secretary of Mr. Spurgeon's Evangelists' Association. Rev. J. T. BRISCOE gave an eloquent and appropriate address on Christian work generally. He dwelt upon the importance of workers being real, earnest Christians, frequently engaged in self-examination, in prayer, and in preparation. He urged upon all workers to adapt themselves to the persons—whether adults or children—with whom they had to deal, remarking that no one would think of setting a feeding bottle before a hearty man, or a rump steak and potatoes before a baby.

Mr. S. CLAYTON gave an interesting account of the work done at the Mission Hall since it was opened last July. Mrs. BUBB earnestly exhorted all Christian sisters to be thoroughly consecrated to God, and to wait on Him for all the instruction and help they needed in their work. Several other short telling addresses were given, interspersed with lively singing. Every worker, we think, must have realised that the time thus spent was indeed a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The next meeting is fixed for January 15, when all Christian workers will be heartily welcomed.

NOTICE.—THE ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children"

(NOW SHELTERING, EDUCATING, AND TRAINING OVER 1,300 POOR BOYS AND GIRLS),

HAS THIS YEAR BEEN ALTERED IN CHARACTER;

Instead of a Sale at the West End, as before, all the Goods received have been made up into

£5 and £10 Boxes. These Boxes each contain a very excellent selection of at least the value of £6 and £12 respectively, and will be sent on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque to any part of the country.

Ladies ordering these Boxes will confer very great benefit on the "Homes"; for by this method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West End.

Many kind-hearted sympathisers have already expressed warm approval of this plan, and promised to purchase Boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold in their own houses, to which their personal friends can be invited during the present season.

If there be many articles left over unsold from the boxes, they can be disposed of at a Sale to be held the last week of January (D.V.), in the NEW HALL OF THE EDINBORO' CASTLE, which is expected to be opened by that time.

*Dr. Barnardo earnestly invites all readers of "THE CHRISTIAN" who love poor children to co-operate with him in this new plan to benefit the funds of the "Homes," by which also the disappointing and expensive drawbacks of a public Bazaar may be avoided.*

The Boxes, carefully lined and packed, are now ready for transmission, and can be despatched to any Railway Station in the Kingdom. Applications (PREPAID) with full instructions as to conveyance, &c., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

The TRADE MANAGER,
18, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

To those kind and faithful friends who for so many years have helped by contributions of Useful or Fancy articles, Dr. Barnardo desires to offer the expression of his very grateful acknowledgments.

18 & 20, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY, LONDON, E.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT. LAST NIGHTS OF 1883.

On Tuesday, the 18th inst., a SPECIAL MEETING FOR PRAYER was held at 8A, Red Lion-square, to invoke the blessing of God on the METROPOLITAN MEETINGS and STREET MISSION WORK.

Many workers in garrison and seaport towns, &c., have applied for FREE GRANTS of the specially-prepared Letter-tracts for distribution in their respective localities, on the last nights.

A large number of earnest workers will go out and dive down into the DEEPEST DEPTHS to seek and save POOR OUTCASTS for time and Eternity.

Early in 1884 efforts will be made to hold Meetings, and Mission in some of those provincial centres where sin abounds.

£5 DONATIONS, or other sums to carry on the work, will be thankfully received.

Christian Friends desirous of co-operating by contributing towards the expenses of a Meeting (or helping by prayer), are invited to communicate with Mr. J. H. L. CHRISTIEN, Organising Secretary, at the Office. Donations may be sent to MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., or to

(RIPPINGILLE'S PATENT)
IS THE
MOST BRILLIANT AND ECONOMICAL DOMESTIC LIGHT EXTANT.

It equals Gas for simplicity, but surpasses it for illuminating power.

It burns without a chimney, a pine-shaped globe only being required, which has never been known to break from the heat of the flame. It will give more light than any other lamp with a wick of equal size. The combustion is so perfect that it deodorises the oil and burns absolutely without smell, giving an intense pure white and beautiful light. It is unrivalled for simplicity in lighting, cleaning, and trimming, and is, in fact, the perfection of artificial light.

Suitable for Cottage or Mansion, Churches, Chapels, &c.

Illustrated Catalogue, with full particulars, and giving valuable hints on domestic lighting and the management of lamps, free on application.

"SCENES FROM THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS."
— A Poem —
BY RICHARD BALL RUTTER.
ANTIQUE STYLE.
TRÜBNER & Co., LONDON.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"Treats some of the more striking episodes in Bunyan's Allegory in good and scholarly Spenserian metre," &c.—Graphic.

"The volume merits attentive perusal, and that and careful comparison will show that in pouring from an older to a modern vessel the essence is retained. The work is a fine specimen of typography by Mr. Bellows, of Gloucester, and is most handsomely got up in antique print and style," &c.
Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Chronicle.

"Even those who are most familiar with the Pilgrim's Progress, and who are most critical in their examination of such a work as that before us, will give Mr. Rutter's volume a warm welcome.
"Its pages have a sustained elevation throughout, and the various scenes have a distinct literary merit apart from the interest of the subject," &c.—Western Daily Press.

"'The Land of Beulah,' and 'The Description of the Celestial City,' are both very grand, and worthy of special notice," &c.—British Friend.

ALLEN & HANBURY'S
"Perfected"
COD-LIVER OIL
"Is as nearly tasteless as Cod Liver Oil can be."—Lancet.
"No nauseous eructations follow after it is swallowed."
Medical Press.
It can be borne and digested by the most delicate; is the only oil which does not "repeat;" and for these reasons the most efficacious kind in use. In capsuled bottles only, at 1s. 4d. 2s. 6d., 4s. 9d., and 9s. Sold everywhere.

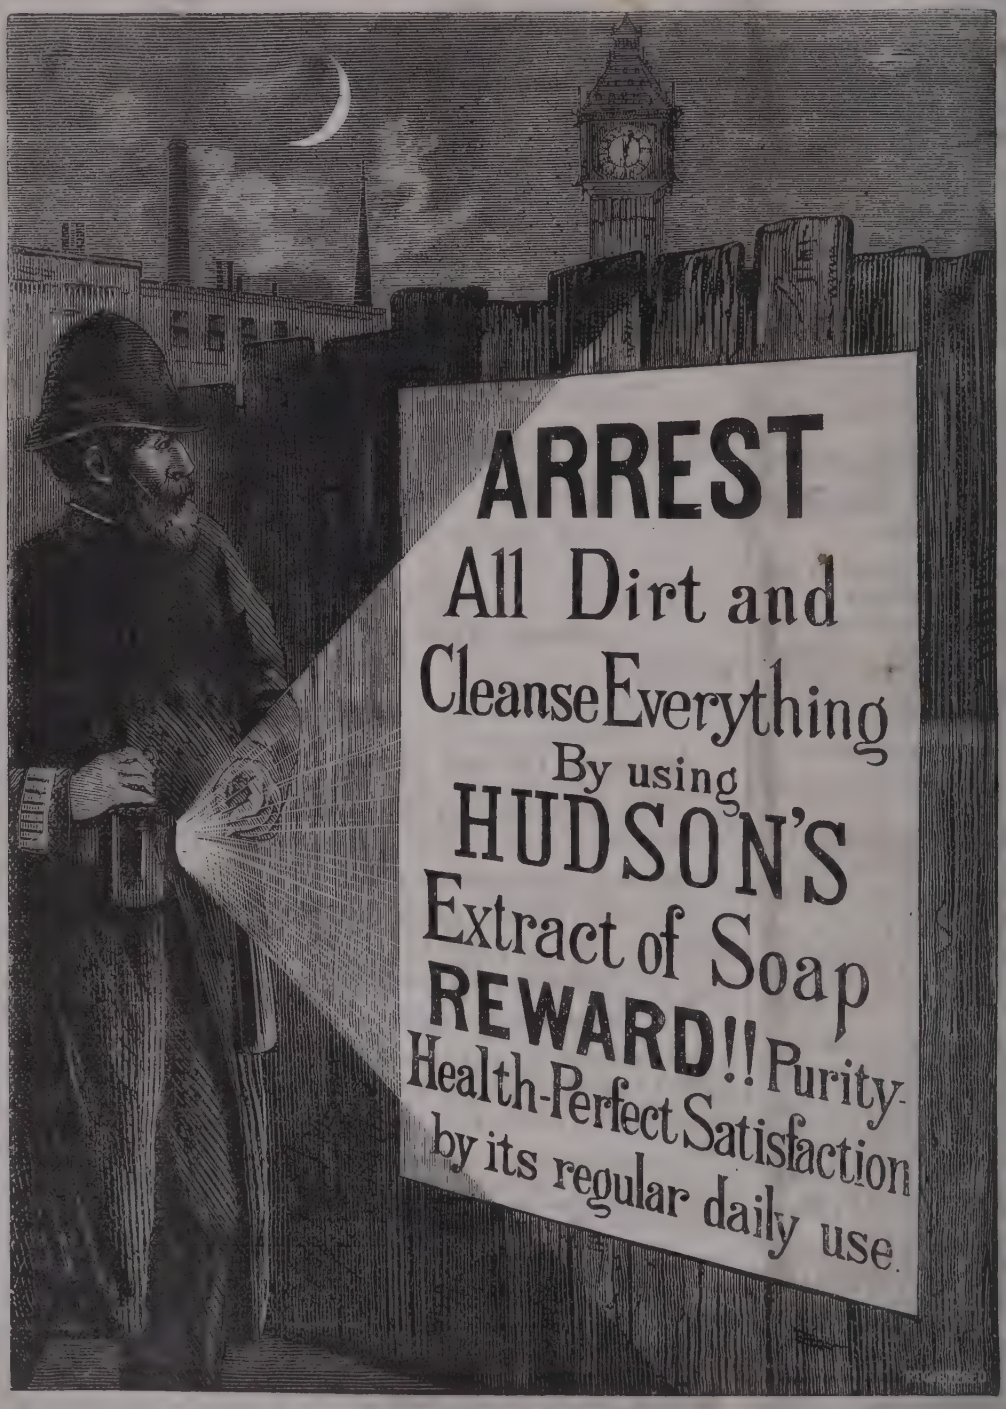
CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONSUMPTION—
BOTH LUNGS DISEASED.
CASE of Miss S. M. ROSCOW,
Hollins-row, Burneside, KENDAL.

This patient applied to me in November of last year. Several near relatives had gone in Consumption. Illness commenced with severe cold, loss of voice, flesh, and strength; night sweats, and pains in chest and side; cough very severe. Doctor's report at this time: Lungs both diseased, and to go and live in the South her only chance."

After a month's careful attention to my advice there was little or no manifest improvement. In two months however, she was decidedly better. In March and April she continued to make favourable progress, although somewhat retarded by fresh cold. Shortly after this she became so well as to discontinue my treatment.



On 9th October she writes me: "I feel that I ought to report what good your medicine has done me. Life was a burden to me before I took it. It has done me more good than anything else ever did. I have been better this summer than I ever thought to be. By the blessing of God it has been the means of saving my life.

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

"It is, perhaps, a work of supererogation, after the years that Hudson's Extract of Soap has been known to the public, for us to say anything in its favour; but still, as there are parts of the globe where wheelbarrows are still looked upon as dangerous innovations, so there may be corners of the civilized world where this invaluable compound is still untried. If so, we can assure those who feel any curiosity on the subject, that when they have once experienced the ease and rapidity with which it removes all traces of dirt from everything, they will never willingly be without it again."—Public Opinion.

It is a pure DRY SOAP in fine Powder, and dissolves immediately in HOT OR COLD WATER.
